—During a recent interview Mr. Timothy Harrington, Secretary of the Irish National League, stated that 1,800 National Leagues branches, averaging 300 members, had donated £12,000 to the executive of the League during the present year. He said that some of the new Nationalist members of Parliament would receive salaries from the Leagues. The extinction of the Liberals, he thought, would immensely benefit the Irish cause. Harrington also said that boycotting was outside of the League's programme and practice, and was confined to a few branches. The executive, he said, would stop boycotting whenever such power was misused.]

—A valuable book has been stolen from the library of the Minerva. It is one of the very few copies of the works of Lactantius which were printed at the Monastery of Santa Scholastica, near Subiaco, in the year 1465. So rare are the copies of this work that the price of a single copy has reached 15,000 francs. The most minute inquiries have been made, but the missing volumes has not been traced. It is not the first time that such robberies of precious works have occurred, and the Minister of Public Instruction is called upon by the press to seriously take into consideration suitable measures to prevent the repetition of such losses to the public. It is worthy of note that as long as the Dominican Monks, to whom the library belongs by right, were in possession of it, no such note occurred.

The New Cathedral for this Archdiocese.

The announcement made [illegible] last week concerning the new Cathedral which Archbishop Alemany contemplates erecting in the western portion of the city, has caused a general interest to be manifested therein by Catholics of all classes. The location of the present Cathedral is such that it can scarcely be approached from any direction without a shudder at the sinfulness and filth of its surroundings; hence were the no other reason—the necessity for a new Cathedral in a more secluded and respectable location, is one of the greatest and most pressing wants of this Archdiocese.

The plan upon which Archbishop Riordan has started out to erect the Cathedral is one which will commend itself to every Catholic. His Grace proposes to call upon the rich Catholics of this Archdiocese for the first one hundred thousand dollars towards the cost of the superstructure. It is a well-attested fact that from those to whom Almighty God has given much much is expected, hence we feel assured that the spirit of munificence for which the Catholics of California are famed, will lead our wealthy co-religionists to give generously towards the erection of God's house—the sanctuary of the Real Presence.

His Grace proposes to raise the hundred thousand dollars before the corner-stone of the projected Cathedral is laid, and we feel confident that ere the end of a hundred days we shall have the great pleasure of announcing to our readers that the seal of our beloved Archbishop has been notably seconded by the liberal donations of those whom God has blessed with His munificence—and the hundred thousand dollars has been donated.

His Grace intends to solicit this first hundred thousand dollars only from those of the household of faith whose financial prosperity will enable them to make donations of sums ranging from $500 to an large an amount as their generosity to God for His goodness to them, will prompt them to promise for His honor and glory.

When the first hundred thousand dollars are subscribed—and every Catholic will rejoice to learn that so we can then inform our fellow of the amount so already promised—his Grace intends to call upon the Catholics generally to give what each can afford towards this new monument of their munificence, and all the amounts received, as well as the expenditures upon the work, will be published through the press, so that both the present and future generations may know to whom gratitude is due for the sanctuary of God which is to be the Cathedral of this Archdiocese.

If there are any Catholics in California who harbor the unchristian idea that Archbishop Riordan cannot accomplish this work, we beg of them to get rid of the notion at once, and to begin to ask God to increase their stores so they can give liberally towards this work of God's love. No doubt our prayers will be heard, and God—and by His consecrated Catholic Prelates—that ever failed. The present Cathedral was built in 1852-3, at a time when there was scarcely Catholics enough in all California to fill it, yet such was the liberal spirit manifested by the generous Catholic pioneers that they accomplished a work there which was the wonder and admiration of all people on the Pacific coast.

What man will contend that the Regent work which a few, poor and scattered Catholics undertook to accomplish a third of a century ago, cannot be accomplished in a far more feasible form by the wealthy and enterprising Catholics of California—many of whom are rich beyond their most sanguine expectations, and some of whom are classed among the millionaires of America.

When the present Cathedral was built both labor and material were fully equal to what they are at this day, hence the construction of the Cathedral—although a costly enterprise—did not disturb the Catholics of thirty-three years ago, who gave their labor and their contributions with such a liberal hand as to raise an edifice which cost $174,702 14.

We sincerely hope, therefore, that with the example thus set to the Catholics of this State by their pioneer progenitors, they will joyfully and generously and to Archbishop Riordan their donations, so that he may be able to erect a Cathedral in this city which will be an honor to our holy faith and a glorious monument of the munificence of the Catholics of this Archdiocese.

California the Cradle of the Land League in America.

The success which has crowned the cause of Ireland through the unity and generosity of "the son-dirdled Gael" should make the Irish race in California proud of the fact that California was the corner-stone of the American branch of the Land League, and this State is thus entitled to the foremost place in the patriotic phalanx of Irish sympathizers who constituted Parliament during its six years' struggle which has ended at last in victory for the Irish people.

Now that the result of Parnell's peace policy has led the Irish hosts on to victory, it will prove interesting to the readers of this MONITOR to peruse a brief summary of the events which marked the rise and progress of the Land League both in Ireland and America, the first organization of which took place in Castlebar, in the County Mayo, Ireland, under the sponsorship of Michael Davitt, on September 18th, 1879. In the following October Mr. Parnell publicly announced that he hoped to have at least forty co-workers in the cause—with him in the next Parliament, he being previously thrown himself into the Land League movement with such conscious energy and determination which has resulted in such a glorious success for the cause of Irish Home Rule.

The first public movement on the part of the Irish Race in America to co-operate with the new Land League organization in Ireland, was inaugurated in this city on the 26th of November, 1879, by the Knights of St. Patrick, whose President, Col. J. J. Tobin, and the late lamented Parnell's Position in the Next Parliament.

[illegible]

OUR IRISH LETTER.

Victories Gained by Irish Voters in England and Ireland. Traitorous Conduct of Irish Whigs. How the Nationalist Association was defeated in the North. The Orange Stronghold Captured by the Catholic Voters. Etc.

[FROM OUR REGULAR IRISH CORRESPONDENT.]

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

The year goes on. Day after day the National campaign is being fought and fought strongly, and victory after victory is being recorded for the National cause. Ireland's victories are a splendid conquest for Ireland's Parliamentary party. Ireland's victories are a conquest for the National party of the people in Ireland. In England and Scotland he has manifested a magnanimous which has been for years been looked upon as the natural and political enemies of any man who had the courage to champion the cause of Erin's freedom among the laboring classes of either England or Scotland. [illegible] on this point old prejudices of [illegible] tradition are so thoroughly [illegible] a good example of the growth [illegible] between the English and Scotch working classes as well as a demonstration of the [illegible] which Mr. Parnell [illegible] consequence of the persistent [illegible] which has changed [illegible] constituents.

[illegible] ments of the ballot-box has [illegible] the weeks of the contest [illegible] it is generally conceded by [illegible] that Mr. Parnell will have [illegible] a dozen or a hundred members [illegible] House of Commons. The solid [illegible] of Parnellites proper—who are [illegible] to stand by their chief [illegible] that number, but there [illegible] may add a few of Mr. Parnell elected by both English and Scotch constituencies, and there are members returned to Parliament as Liberals whose small majorities have proved to them that "the Irish vote is a power of Ireland's side." Ireland's victories—home in all measures for the amelioration of Ireland, they will be found in full accord with Parnell and the Irish Parliamentary party.

For these and other kindred reasons Mr. Parnell stand not "from the fighting in the ranks" Parliament. He can hide his light under a bushel—he can hide his light under a bushel—he can hide his light under a bushel—he

Family Fun.

The Body and Its Health.

Milk and lime water, taken warm, constitute, according to the Medical Times, one of the best of foods in the treatment of acute diarrhœa.

The two most prolific sources of disease are taking cold and intemperance in eating, particularly over-eating. These two causes produce three fourths of the deaths, and yet both are controllable if we are governed by a reasonable amount of common sense.

Pneumonia, no matter how prevalent or severe, can uniformly be cured, says a medical writer in the Albany Press, by saving a bowl of hard wood, taking a good sweath, and poinnaising bread and water diet for a few days. Pneumonitis do not kill more than one in a thousand of the three following things—1. A weak mind. 2. A diseased body. 3. An idle condition of life.

PAIN.—Pain being the result of too much blood in a part, as a very general rule, the remedy, in severe and pressing cases, is to apply a mustard plaster near the part, which draws the blood away as is seen by the reddening of the skin. The most agonizing pains are often removed in the twinkling of an eye by dipping a bit of cloth (woollen, flannel, or cotton) in a mixture of equal parts of sweet oil, chloroform, and hartshorn, just shaken together and spread over the spot, with a handkerchief wadded in the hand and held over the cloth so as to retain the more volatile ingredients, to be removed the moment the pain ceases. The safest and most comfortable application in nature for the relief of all pain, especially arising from inflammation, is a woollen cloth kept very warm, even hot, by steady addition of hot water, or a stream of warm water, where the painful part admits it. When pain is severe, sharp, or throbbing, there is inflammation, which arises from there being too much blood in the arteries; if dull and heavy it is caused from there being too much blood in the veins. The pain of inflammation gives heat; hence, handsome with a hot hand is from too much blood in the arteries, and there is throbbing; draw it away by putting the feet in very hot water; this often removes pain in any part of the body above the ankles. When there is too much blood in the veins of the head there is a dull pain or great depression of spirits, and the feet are always cold. It is this excess of blood in the veins of the head or brain which always induces the despondency which so frequently causes suicide. When this is attended by cutting the throat the relief is instantaneous and the victim becomes anxious for the life he had just attempted to destroy. Hence, good outdoor walk or a hot bath, a sudden fit of laughter or a terrible burst of passion, by diverting the blood to the surface from the centre, pain the blues and megrims to flight also.

Wheat Losing Favor with Farmers.

Reports on the condition and acreage of winter wheat in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, indicate that the area devoted to this crop is still decreasing. These States produce the greater part of the winter wheat grown in the United States, and it is evident that farmers are abandoning wheat raising whenever they can grow other crops to advantage. In the spring wheat region of the Northwest it is not so easy to replace wheat with other grain, but even there the tendency is to grow more flax and oats in proportion to all. This change is the direct result of the low price of wheat, its price in Nebraska last season in the United States is certainly a sad outlook in Europe. The Chicago Times says: "Farmers are constantly decreasing the area of wheat in the United States and increasing the area of corn which Indian corn. Investigations by farmers do well to further discourage the excess devoted to wheat. The small crop this year has done wonders in holding up the market, and if the production of wheat in America should become much smaller prices would certainly improve. We should then need all our crop at home, and this absence of American wheat in European markets would cause a stronger advance all around.

Butter and Cheese.

The statistics laid before the National Butter, Cheese and Egg Association at its late meeting in Chicago must have made its members feel that they were something more important than flies on the country's roseate nose. It was asserted at these statistics that the annual value of dairy products in this country was $500,000,000 greater than that of the entire wheat crop, and $120,000,000 greater than that of the cotton crop, while the amount of capital interested in dairy was said to be greater by $40,000,000 than that invested in bank stocks.

Get Married, Young Man.

My advice is: Go and propose to the most sensible girl you know. If she accepts you, tell her how much your income is, and from what source derived; and tell her you will divide the last dollar with her, and that you will love her with all your heart into the bargain. And then keep your promise. My word for it, she will live within your income, and love you at least how you will regret that you did not marry sooner. Stop worrying about feminine extravagance and feminine naiveté. Just you be true to her yourself, and a more fond, faithful, foolish slave you will never meet anywhere. You will not deserve her, I know; but she will never know it.

Starving a Cold.

Here is the latest remedy for a cold. It may be good; it may be useless; but, at all events, here it is: Eat no supper. On going to bed add an ounce and a tumbler of cold water. For breakfast eat a piece of dry bread as large as your hand. Go out freely during the morning. For dinner eat the same as at breakfast. During the afternoon take a sharp walk, or engage in some active exercise that will induce perspiration. Go without supper and retire early. The next morning, if the prescription works, you will be nearly well of the cold, but almost dead of starvation.

A Genius for Helping Folks.

"There is a man," said his neighbor, speaking of the village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any other person who ever lived in it. He isn't worth two thousand dollars, and it's but little that he can put down on subscription paper for any object. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find them out to give them a neighborly welcome and offer any little service he can render. He is usually on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor and look after his affairs for him, and I've sometimes thought he and his wife kept home plants in winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word for every child he meets, and you'll always see them stumbling into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day just to meet him on the street.

Farm and Home.

In the Country Lawyer's Office.

He wanted justice. You could see that in his eyes clear off. He didn't want a little bit of justice, weighed out in gingerly but he wanted justice by the car load and at wholesale rates. He hitched his old white horse and dilapidated buggy in front of the drug store, mounted the stairs running up outside to the second story, and his eyes brightened as they rested on the sign on the door "George Hussem, Attorney-at-Law. The lawyer was in. So were a two-dollar desk, two fifteen-cent chairs, a huge cuspidor and a crusty stove.

"Morning."

"Morning."

"Hussem, I reckon, sir. Leon on by law's Corners. Bought the Tompkins farm, you know.

"Ah!"

"Skinner joins farms with me. His steers got into my corn. I want damages, but he laughs at me. I turn my hogs into his water patch.

"Good! I like a man of spunk."

"And he kills one of 'em."

"What!"

"He kills a hog worth two dollars."

"You don't say!" Well, that man ought to be made to understand that he doesn't own the earth. What an outrage! Have you demanded pay."

"Oh, yes, and he said he'd like to shoot me."

"Is it possible! Why, he's a dangerous man, very dangerous."

"I come to ask you if—if—"

"Why, of course, you have the best kind of a case against him, and it is your duty to push it."

"Yes, I want justice, but how—how much will it cost?"

"Oh, the cost will be nothing. Just leave me $5 as a retainer and we'll make Skinner sweat. I haven't heard of such an outrage for years. He probably reasons that you are chicken-hearted and afraid of him."

"Well, he'll find that the Whites have as much grit as the Skinners."

"And as much money to law with?"

"You bet!"

"That's the talk! We'll make him a very sick man. Your case appeals to me as a citizen as well as a lawyer. Now, we'll secure a warrant as a starter.

Skinner visits the other lawyer in the same village, and the conversation is about the same. White gets a warrant for Skinner, and Skinner gets a warrant for White.

First year.—Two adjournments, a disagreement, twenty-four days lost time, and a cash expense of $50 for witness fees.

Second year.—Four trials, one disagreement, four adjournments, one appeal, and a cash expense of $150 to each farmer. Time lost, thirty-five days.

Third year.—Two trials, two appeals, two decisions, and two farms pass into the hands of two lawyers.

Change the Subject.

"Always, said papa, as he drank his coffee and enjoyed his morning beefsteak—always, children, change the subject when anything unpleasant has been said. It is both wise and polite."

That evening, on his return from business, he found his extension leaf deposited and the tiny import of slippered feet silently bearing witness to the small thief.

"Mabel," he said to her, "did you pick my flowers?"

"Papa, said Mabel, "did you see a story in your?"

"Never mind that. Did you pick my flowers?"

"Papa, what did grandma send me?"

"Mabel, what do you mean! Did you pick my flowers? Answer me this moment."

"Yes, papa, I did; but I feel I'd change the subject."

Asking After Old Friends.

Smith—Robinson is in town from Chicago. He was asking about you this morning.

Brown—Robinson—what Robinson?

Smith—Why, you remember Tom Robinson, who went West ten years ago and made a fortune.

Brown—Oh, yes certainly. I remember Tom well. How lucky he was, too. So he was asking about me. What did Tom say?

Smith—He inquired if you drank as hard as ever.

Bon Voyage.

"Yes, Bobby," said young Featherby, "I am going West for a little trip."

"Are you going for your health?" inquired Bobby with a certain

"Well, not altogether for my health, although I shall derive some benefit, no doubt."

"Father Chris hopes you will."

"I say, Bobby," whispered Featherby, "did your sister say that she hoped my trip would do me good?"

"Yes. She told me last night that if Mr. Featherby went West she hoped he would go for good."

Exhaustive Literary Work.

Mental exertion of any kind is something that tires the strange African, and writing is a matter just beyond him. Colonel Yerger has a negro man named Sam employed about the place, and the other day Sam wanted some clerical work done. He said:

"Boss, I want you to write me a letter to my gal in Mexico."

"All right, Sam, I'll do it."

"Hev yer got de paper an' de ink an de pens?"

"Yes, Sam, go ahead."

"Write Anetta, Texas."

"All right."

"How yer gon' ti write?"

"Yes."

"All of it?"

"Certainly."

"What has yer got written? Read it to me, boss.

"Anetta, Texas."

"Dat's right. Now write June de fourteenth.

"All right Sam."

"Has yer got it done already?"

"Yes."

"Why, boss, you'm jokin'. Read it to me."

"June fourteenth."

"Bush Shed, you has got it down all right. Now, boss, read it all ober from dey berry beginnin'."

"Anetta, Texas, June fourteenth."

"Dat's right. Where I say, boss, ies' yes' awhile. Tee tired. My head aches like it was gwine to split."

A Serious Charge.

Magistrate—You are charged with misdemeanor, Uncle Rastus.

Uncle Rastus (in alarm)—Wif Miss who, yo Honah?

Magistrate—Misdemeanor.

Uncle Rastus—Judge, I solemnly swar dat hain't no lady in de case whut mentiuber 'Dem de boys!'"

Not Married Yet.

Smith—Robinson is married, isn't he? Brown—Married? Why, he married a year ago last June. Miss Dora Lyle was married to him. Don't you remember? Smith—Married, eh? Why, I thought he was married a year ago. Brown—Married? Why, he married Miss Dora Lyle. Smith—Married, I say. Brown—Married, I say. Smith—Married, I say. Brown—Married, I say. Smith—Married, I say. Brown—Married, I say cised the office of peace-making, and hindered unspeakable misery. Only a few years ago, in 1870, shortly before the outbreak of war between France and Germany, Pius IX. offered to mediate between them; and now Pope Leo XIII. has mediated between Germany and Spain—he to whom the wisdom of his predecessor has confided at three trying times the guidance of His Church.

THE POPE THE ARBITER OF HUMAN RIGHTS.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

May this event have the same happy results which so many Popes have secured in times gone by; may it be productive, as in earlier ages, of blessings and peace both to rulers and ruled.

NEWS OF THE WORLD.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

A Prize for Catholic Purists.

The first medal given by any Catholic historical society in the United States has just been presented to the Christian Brothers of Galveston, Texas, to be awarded to the young lady who should write the best historical paper on "The Ursuline Nuns in America." The medal is of fine silver; beautifully engraved and is called the "American Catholic Historical Society (of Philadelphia) Medal," and is presented through the secretary of the Bureau, Francis X. Reese. The MSS. for competition are to be received in Philadelphia for examination by the Society, and an engraved certificate of award will be sent to the lucky writer, which will entitle her to the medal at the annual meeting in June, 1886.

Death-Traps for Travellers.

Every day the newspapers contain records of people who have lost their lives in railway accidents in Europe or on the sea. If the standard man looks like a dynamiter, or other enlightened individual, the Coroner's verdict is up to date and to the point. The municipal authorities of Atlanta, Georgia, have taken a view of the matter. They have been advised that cases of the death from asphyxia are caused by bad proprietors, and have made a law that unscrupulous landlords shall not turn off the gas from the meter at night. A large number of people who have gone to sleep in Atlanta in the past, from the effect of the gas, will be alive to-day if there is an spirit for enforcing travellers, and the others, if they had gone to sleep, can wake from suffocation. Travellers should turn the gas completely out before going to bed.

Mrs. Yscult Dudley's Prison in an Insane Asylum.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 17.—Mrs. Yscult Dudley, who attempted to kill O'Donovan Rossa, is merely undergoing the punishment and hardships of the unfortunate of the Middletown Insane Asylum. Those who learned that her counsel was unable to have her released from the asylum, she has been subjected to the treatment of a prisoner, and not only is she kept in a room with a door and window in violent weather, with the crowd hope that it may make her insane, but she has had every other way to shorten her life, but has been detected and it under consideration. She has had six epileptic fits. "Would you kill O'Donovan Rossa if you were released?" she was recently asked. "I might and I might not," she replied.

Overtures Favorably Received by the Reception of the Irish Leader.

New York, Dec. 17.—The overtures for the reception of Parnell are reported to be on a broader scale than any former Irish movement in this city. The co-operation of such Irish-Americans as Eugene Kelly, John D. Crimmins, Mayor Grace, Joseph J. O'Donohue, Mike M. O'Toole, James F. Coleman, Morgan O'Brien, John Devoy and others well known in banking and professional circles has been secured to the formation of a citizens' committee, together with delegates from the National League and various other Irish societies, and everything but the mildest reception of the reception has been arranged. It is expected that Governor Hill will preside at the reception. The committee will make its first call upon the Governor to-day.

The Death of a Journalist.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Colonel Daniel E. Mulligan, editor of the Virginia, Nev., Chronicle, died here yesterday of dropsy. He has been ill for some months, and his coast press for the last twenty years.

Nine Converts to the Catholic Church.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 15.—N. T. Kreutz for several years President and now Vice President of the Union National Bank, is the seventh member of his family to become a Catholic. His daughter of the Sacred Heart, and Miss Mary Kreutz, a lovely young woman, who has been traveling in Europe with her mother, the wife of a Prussian army officer. The Kreutzs are Prussians, and a mission has been created in noble circles by the news that Miss Kreutz was baptized into the Catholic faith by Bishop Gilmour at Cambridge Center in this city last week. It is understood that the young lady is to be married to a prominent young Catholic gentleman from a western city. Dr. Vaher, a leading surgeon and a Protestant, was also recently baptized into the Catholic Church.

Davitt and Irish Landlords.

DUBLIN, Dec. 16.—Michael Davitt, speaking in Dublin to-day, said the Lancet would open special industries, if the workmen would cooperate. He announced that he would forthwith commence an agitation to obtain landlordism abolished, and he would be ready to meet the farmers on any day they wish the working of the land act. He denounced the Earl of Pembroke and the Earl of Mayo, the former being one of money in Dublin that rightfully belonged to the people.

Tourists Coming to California.

The New York Tribune contains the following: Reports from California indicate that an enormous number of tourists from the East will visit that State this winter, many of them for a considerable sojourn. The turn in the tide of travel is quite sensible. It has lon long been a just reproach that American sightseers and pleasure-seekers know more of Europe than they know of their own. Now will these Western travellers be called upon to make up on the other of patriotism. They will find on the Pacific Coast all that they can possibly ask in a splendid scenery and the lightest winter climate.

The Pope's Health.

New York, Dec. 22.—The Herald's Rome cable says: The Pope was extremely fatigued after the reception of the Spanish pilgrims, and he suffered from very painful stomach pains. He still makes light of his indisposition, but his physicians are anxious. His chief medical adviser now remains permanently in the Vatican. The pain his weakness has prevented a few visitors today, who were all impressed by his extreme pallor.

The Next American Cardinal.

New York, Dec. 22.—Bishop Wigger of the diocese of Newark returned from his formal visit to the Pope, yesterday, on the Alaska. He was immediately on his knees at Seton Hall, South Orange, where he was formally received by his family and students. The Bishop said: "I stopped at Genoa, where I was ordained in 1869, and then went on to Rome, to Rome, and had an interview with the Holy Father. He spoke to me much gratified at the progress of the church in America, and I assure the Pope that the Catholics of America will always be the most loyal of any in the world." Asked if he thought he would be made Cardinal, he said: "There is much interest manifested in that question in Rome. I think it will be either the Archbishop of Boston or of Baltimore."

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

A beautiful Christmas entertainment was presented before a large audience—which included Archbishop Riordan and some of the Sacred Clergy—in the exhibition hall of the institution on Saturday afternoon last. The programme was a delightful blending of music and beautiful tableaux. It embraced the following programme: Grand March, in several places, the Star of Bethlehem, Chorus; Christmas Chimes, Instrumental; Christ is Born, a Christmas Dream in three acts, Act 1—the birth of Christ is looked for by the whole world. Vocal solo, Miss M. Campbell. Act 2—The Shepherds adore the Infant Saviour. Instrumental solo, Mendelssohn. Act 3—The Magi adore the Infant Saviour. Instrumental duet, two pianos, and Wills, Recitation; the Pilgrims and Infant Saviour; Instrumental duet, Mendelssohn; Instrumental duet, Miss M. Cassidy and Miss Lowell; Vocal solo, Miss N. Kenney; Recitation, Miss M. Wells; Hippy Christmas, Chorus; Instrumental duet. The following young ladies personated the different characters in the Christmas drama: "Christ is Born": Misses J. Gaffney, M. Hibbard, M. Wards, M. O'Neil, M. Hatton, V. Sywell, M. E. McHan, A. Scally, A. McGarigle, L. Langlois, N. Joyce, M. Geary, J. Sheehy, M. A. Kennedy and M. E. Cross.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—The Liberal Club began agitation attempted to hold a public meeting on the night of November 25th, in the house of a respectable farmer, near Lurgan, but such a demonstration was assembled in opposition, and hooting through the hedges, showered volleys of stones through all the windows of the house, and swept the hall with all the Liberals and Home Rulers who would ever dare to hold a meeting in that district. Half of the police having been drafted to Newry, the Liberals retreated, as contraband on the house and the police. The Liberals escaped in the dark, but to vanish in sure their lives. Another excitement prevailed during the night. No arrests were made.

Antrim.—The Bush Mill Company's distillery, County Antrim, was burned to the ground, on November 25th. The building, which was completely destroyed, was insured. At a private meeting of the clergy of Down and Connor in St. Malachy's College, Belfast, on November 26th, the Most Rev. Dr. McEntegate, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland, Metropolitan of the Province, presiding, the selection of three names to be sent forward to Rome for the appointment of a successor to the late Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian, Bishop of Down and Connor, was proceeded with. The ballot resulted as follows: Monsignor Very Rev. Patrick McAllister, P. P., V. F., Ballymena, 1 vote; Very Rev. Patrick McGrath, P. P., Newry, 24 votes; Very Rev. John McEntee, P. P., Ballynure, 1 vote; Very Rev. Alex McMullan, P. P., V. F., Portaferry, 1 vote; Very Rev. Dr. Murray, P. P., V. F., Kilkeel, 2 votes; Very Rev. Dr. Henry, President St. Malachy's College, 1 vote; Very Rev. Dr. Legan, Bishop of Raphoe, 1 vote. The three names will be forwarded to the Holy Father from the Pope, and the decision will be made in the usual way.

Cork.—Very Rev. John O'Driscoll, P. P., Kilshanig, died on November 25th.

Dublin.—Mr. Thomas Bell, James Maddock, Dr. O. Hudson, and Mr. Jos. Hicks, Fire Brigade, were presented with the Royal Humane Society's medals for their gallantry in saving life at the fire in Mr. Pim's premises, Dublin, on Saturday last. It is thought that the Queen will confer the honor of knighthood on the Lord Mayor, who, by the way, are the only two members of the Pim family who are not Quakers. Let us worship the gold. Everything else is dross. The Lord Mayor is constant attendant at Catholic worship, and is a good friend of Father John of Jesus, and his family, and hitherto they will hold the Lord Mayor, Mr. Pim, and the Lord Mayor, Mr. Pim, and the Lord Mayor, Mr. Maddock was here at Wexford, in June. At an early age he entered St. Peter's College, and is remarkable for his studious habits. In 1860, he entered Maynooth College, where he obtained distinguished honors in every remarkable department. In 1865, he obtained priest for the diocese of Dublin, and in 1873 was appointed to the chair of Dogmatic Theology, where he remained for ten years, when he was promoted to a more satisfactory position, the Professorship of Ecclesiastical Law.

Donegal.—Mr. Hart, who has so successfully started a movement in Donegal for the protection of native manufacture of Irish tweed, has won a gold medal for the excellence of Irish tweed which was exhibited at the International Exhibition in London. Mrs. Hart is continuing to work up industries of the native industry, and attracted to have a regular display of Irish tweed at the Exhibition to be held in Dublin on the 1st of December, and at the same time promises to Wigmore street, London, Miss Mary Power Lake has undertaken to provide a bible of linen work for both these displays, at a cost of a guinea. Lady Ormonde, Lady Cowper, and very patriotic. He is much regretted by all who knew him. His loss will a sad young family to deplore his loss. The funeral was largely and respectably attended.

Kerry.—The eighteenth anniversary of the Manchester Martyrs—Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien—was commemorated, on Nov. 22. The celebration was organized by the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and was a great success. The procession, which was headed by the Ballybunion Brass and Reed Band, was a very imposing one, and the music was very good. The attendance of members of the Hibernian Order was very large, and the procession formed opposite the Franciscan Church, and moved the following order: Four torch-light bearers led the procession, followed by a splendid mourning banner, being a tree one, on which was inscribed the following: "To the memory of the Manchester Martyrs." and in the center was a harp, surmounted by a crown, and the following inscription: "Erected by the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and raised about thirty or forty torch-light bearers. The same also had the following inscription: The music was a special success, the whole being superbly arranged by the bandmaster, Mr. Hickey. The sermon. The sermon was thoroughly National, and was listened to by the multitude. Mr. M. Healy, one of the speakers, proposed at the Tralee Convention, was received with great enthusiasm.

Kilkenny.—The Rev. N. Murphy, P.P., Ballyhale, wrote on the behalf of the Kilkenny Leader, Kilkenny and Kilkenny branches of the National League, to have the meeting of the Land Leagues held over for a year to the National conflicts.

Times were three outlaws, in the Kilkenny assizes, sentence, two in 20, Jobson to 6 and one in 18, Fanning, and for the first time during the space of 2 years there indeed no prisoners confined in the same time. In 38, John a Ward the end of the first church, and resolved to the return of his Worship the Mayor, Mr. Peter Mc-Adamson, and Mr. Thos. Ward, Mr. Jas. Ward, Alderman; and Mr. Thos. Brooks, Mr. Arthur, and Mr. Ayres as Councillors.

Leitrim.—The Irish Catholic is proud on behalf of the Supreme Court. The late Rev. Jas. Farrell, of Manorcunning, was that in the truest and brightest sense of the phrase. He was a man of amazing energy, boundless zeal, stalwart patriotism; he could and did write and speak with equal ease, and as a pulpit orator he only ranked after the incomparable Father Tom Burke. He was entitled, very properly, to the full plaudits of his powers, in his early prime of life. A beautiful and an people's monument, paid for by donations ranging from one shilling to five pounds, has not been erected to his memory in the church where he preached so often.

Louth.—Tristram Kennedy, B.L., died on November 7th. Mr. Kennedy, who had reached the ripe age of 81 years, was M. P. for Louth for a number of years, and took an active part in the Tenant Right League movement. He was the eldest of a family of twelve sons.

Limerick.—The Bishop has appointed the Rev. Father Flynn, who has lately been on a mission to Australia, to the parish of Ballyagran, Co. Limerick, vice the Rev. H. Quail, P.P., Dromin.

Mayo.—On Sunday 24, Mr. P. Traynor, Ballyhaunis, died suddenly. He was in his usual good health up to the last day. As soon as the symptoms became observable Dr. Hicks was called into attendance and pronounced that a fatal result from the rupture of a blood vessel which brought on apoplexy. Deceased was a young man generally respected, and his early demise is sincerely regretted by his neighbors.

A great demonstration, in which the vast people of the district participated, took place on Sunday last in Newmarket-on-Fergus in honor of the memory of the Manchester Martyrs.

Monaghan.—Mrs. Ann Macklin of Great Hornd street, Liverpool, died on Nov. 20, aged 78. The deceased, who was a native of Monaghan, had made many and lasting friends by her kindness of her adoption, and her death will be deeply felt by the poor of the district in which she resided.

Mayo.—A great National demonstration was held near Castlebar, on November 22, in the historic cemetery of Rim Hall, for the purpose of unveiling the monument erected over the remains of the late Mr. H. M. Garry, a Nationalist of well-known celebrity. Contingents from Ballina, Westport, Castlebar, Ballin, Swinford, and surrounding districts were present. Among the gentlemen in attendance were—Messrs. Matthew Harris, Young Ireland, Dublin; James Daly, Thomas Walsh, John Daly, Lisdoon, Ballina; J. Reilly, Dr. J. W. Nally, Burah; J. Kearns, J. J. Nally, J. Daly, Belcarra; P. Flannelly, P. Timlen, The Ballin Band, headed an immense procession, which was joined by the people, and flags and emblems, bearing appropriate mottoes, suitable to the occasion, were displayed.

Sligo.—Mr. O'Hara's candidature for the Sligo borough, which was formally announced last week, has been received with great enthusiasm by the people of the most Irish district of the country, and if without the slightest attempt at deception on the Nov. 23, of Tuesday, ten thousand persons assembled, and gave a most enthusiastic reception to Mr. O'Hara and Mr. Leamy, the latter of whom has been accompanying the former in the campaign. The number of Tenantry who voters on the platform and among the crowd, at Fitzhoos, was one of the notable features of the demonstration. Another notable feature was

THE CHILDREN'S HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

Generous Gifts to Three Hundred Children by the Sisters of the Holy Family.

The Children's Day Home, 1312 Powell street, under the supervision of the Sisters of the Holy Family, celebrated a laughable Christmas festival last week when the annual Christmas tree for children was given. The Home is a very good and charitable institution, and it is well that the Sisters should receive the thanks of the children under ten years of age, irrespective of creed, country or condition. On Friday last the children received such a collection from suit of clothes and underwear, 325 suits of clothes, and a great variety of toys and candy, and a Christmas tree laden on added to this delight. The clothing was made up by many charitable ladies of the two parishes, St. Patrick's and St. Mary's, to be distributed among the children of the Home Valley Home as well as of the two Parish Schools. The underwear was donated by the firm of O'Connor, Moffatt & Co., and the toys by Mr. Wm. Ryan, of Market street. Several generous ladies also contributed toys and candy. The installation of the Christmas tree was made under Dodson, and it was a delight to see the joy of the children on Friday last, by the importance of the "Sisters and by the general good order, order and decorum, and in certainly deserving diagnosis. Archbishop Ireland and Father Prendergast were present and took an active part in making the affair a success. Archbishop Ireland addressed a few words to the children. When such means of charity are used, and such results are obtained, which is not the only one but have a number of mothers may have their children sent to the Home, yes to say I have the honor of saying, dear—the one but hope of the Home.

NATIONS AT SACRED HEART COLLEGE.

We have always maintained that examinations should be thorough, exhaustive and rapid. Nothing is more unfair than to allow a student to wait for the satisfaction of friends, but also to hurry him or her through the ordeal. We have seen students in other institutions, and in other colleges, after attending school exercises, not to be able to do a single thing. We are at present in the college of the young ladies, and we are pleased to say that the Sisters, and, therefore, to say that the Christian Brothers of Sacred Heart College, in Dublin, Ireland, are the most thorough examiners of the pupils in the country. Let us say the gold. Everything else is dross. It is our duty, as a Catholic journal

Poetry

CHRISTMAS ON THE SAN GABRIEL

ARELLA NASH.

Lamar and his Rangers camped at dawn on the banks of the San Gabriel,
Under the mossy live oaks, in the heart of a lonely dell.
With the cloudless Texas sky above and the mesquite grass below,
And all the prairie lying still in a misty,
silvery glow.

The sound of the horses cropping grass, the fall of a nut full ripe,
The stir of a weary soldier, or the tap of a smoked-out pipe,
Fell only as sounds in a dream may fall upon a drowsy ear,
Till the captain said, "It is Christmas Day!
no boys, we will spend it here!

'For the sake of our homes and our childhood, we will give the day its due,'
Then some leaped up to prepare the feast,
and some sat still to muse,
And some pulled a scarlet yupon berries and
was whole mistletoe,
To garland the stand-up rifles—for Christmas has no foe.

And every heart had a pleasant thought or a tender memory
Of unforgotten Christmas tides that never more might be;
They felt the thrill of a mother's kiss, they heard the happy peals,
And the mass grew still, and all the camp was full of a gracious calm.

"Halt!" cried the sentinel, and lo! from out of the brush wood sway
There came, with a weary fainting step, a man in mortal fray,
A brutal man with a tiger's heart; but yet he made his plea—
"I am dying of hunger and thirst, do what you will with me."

They knew him well—who did not know the cruel San Sabaton,
The robber of the Rio Grande, who spared not any man?
In low fierce tones they called his name, and looked at a sell of rope,
And the man mouthed down in abject fear—
how could he dare to hope?

The captain had just been thinking of the Beach his mother took,
Of a Saviour born on Christmas Day, who bow'd on the Cross his head, Blending the thought of his mother's tears with the misty Mother's grief—
And when he saw San Sabaton he thought of the dying thief.

He spoke to the man in a whisper, and they heeded the words he said,
And brought him the grinning rubber water
and meat and bread.
He ate and drank like a famish'd wolf and
then lay down to rest,
And the camp perchance had a stiffer feast
for his strange Christmas guest.

But, ere ever the morning dawn'd again, the Captain touch'd his hand
"Here's a horse and some meat and bread;
fly to the Rio Grande!
Fly for your life! We follow hard, touch nothing on your way—
Your life was only spared because Texas
Jesus Christ's Birth-day."

He watched him ride as the tobacco fire, then turned to the breaking day,
The same, as the Christmas berries were quietly cast away.
And, full of twilight, they saddled again and rode off into the west—
May God be merciful to them, as they were to their guest!

The Realization of a Dream.

How an English Convert Found the True Church.

IT was Christmas Eve. The snow lay thick on the ground, the trees were covered with rimy hoar frost, and every blade of grass sparkled as if it was all studded with brilliant diamonds. Folks said it was seasonable weather. And it was indeed pleasant enough for those who had blazing fires and well-stocked larders, but alas! there were but too many who had not even a morsel of bread, or a shrivelled up potato, to lighten their sad homes on the great feast of the Nativity, and many a longing look was directed by half-starved men and women at the array of meat, mince pies, and good cheer of all kinds displayed in the baking shops of the place.

At the door of a substantial brick house in the Close of the Cathedral, a crowd of poor were gathered waiting for the Christmas doles, of the charitable lady who dwelt within.

Miss Protheroe was the only child of the modern occupiers of the ancient prebendal stalls of the Cathedral, and she had inherited her fortune from the neighborhood of her native town. Her father had died when she was a child, and for the last ten years she had tended her mother day and night in the sufferings of a mortal disease. Only within a few winters had she buried her in the cloister of the old Cathedral, and in the Cathedral itself she daily took part in the worship which Protestantism has substituted for the daily Sacrifice of the Church of Christ. The old Benedictine offices itself—its bells, its Gothic aisles, and lovely chancery, its choir, where there reposes in his gorgeous tomb the least popular of England's kings, the mortuary chapel of the youthful son of Henry VIII.; and the cloisters, where many a monk of old sleeps in peace, waiting for the resurrection—all these objects were to Anne Protheroe as old familiar friends. Often as a child, she had peopled the Cathedral, in imagination, with the monks, the abbots and the last two

THE DISCOVERY OF GOLD IN CALIFORNIA.

THE EVENT AS RECORDED IN THE LIFE OF JAMES W. MARSHALL.

The illustration printed on this page is a faithful representation of Sutter's Mill, on the south fork of the American River, where the town of Coloma, El Dorado county, was afterwards located. The appearance of the place is quite different at the present day, as the subsequent mining operations destroyed the mill, the timbers of which were afterwards utilized for other purposes or carried off by visitors as souvenirs of the place that attained a world-wide reputation. Marshall died on August 10th last. The discovery of gold in this State is thus described in his life, published in 1878:

We now approach the most important event, not only in the life of Marshall, but in the history of California, and as many erroneous statements have been made and published from time to time concerning the manner of the first discovery, and as attempts have been made to foist a spurious discovery upon the public, we deem it proper to enter into details with such minuteness as the historical value of the event appears to demand and to warrant.

The names of the men who were then working at the mill, and who, if living, can substantiate the accuracy of this narrative, were as follows: Peter L. Wemer, William Scott, James Barger, Alexander Stephens, James Brown, William Johnson and Henry Bigler. (The later afterwards moved to Salt Lake, together with Brown, Stephens, and Barger, and became an Elder in the Mormon Church). Wemer was in charge of some eight or ten Indians, whose business it was to throw out the larger sized rocks excavated while constructing the mill race, in the day time, and at night, by raising the gate of the forebay, the water entered and carried away the lighter stones, gravel, and sand. This was the work that was going on at the mill on the 19th of January, 1848.

On the morning of that memorable day Marshall went out as usual to superintend the men, and after closing the forebay gate, and thus shutting off the water, walked down the tail-race to see what sand and gravel had been removed during the night. This had been customary with him for some time, for he had previously entertained the idea that there might be minerals in the mountains, and had expressed it to Sutter, who, however, only laughed at him. On this occasion, having strolled to the lower end of the race, he stood for a moment examining the mass of debris that had been washed down, and at this juncture his eye caught the glitter of something that lay, lodged in a crevice, on a riffle of soft granite, some six inches under the water. His first act was to stoop and pick up the substance. It was heavy, of a [illegible] he had seen in the stream before. For a few minutes he stood within its hand, reflecting, and endeavoring to recall all that he had heard or read concerning the various minerals. After a close examination he became satisfied that what he held in his hand must be one of three substances—mica, sulphuret of copper, or gold. The weight assured him that it was not mica. Could it be sulphuret of copper? He remembered that this mineral is brittle and that gold is malleable, and as this thought passed through his mind, he turned about placed the specimen upon a flat stone and proceeded to test it by striking it with another. The substance did not crack or flake off, it simply bent under the blows. This, then, was gold, and in this manner was the first gold found in California.

As a matter of course, Marshall watched closely, from time to time, for further developments, and in the course of a few days he had collected several ounces of the precious metal. Although, however, he was satisfied in his own mind that it was gold, there were some who were skeptical, and as he had no means of testing it chemically, he determined to take some down to his partner at the fort, and have the question finally decided. Some four days after the discovery it became necessary for him to go below, for Sutter had failed to send a supply of provisions to the mill, and the men were on short commons. So, mounting his horse, and taking some three ounces of gold dust with him, he started. Having always an eye to business, he availed himself of this opportunity to examine the river for a site for a lumber yard, whence the timber out at the mill could be floated down; and while exploring for this purpose he discovered gold in a ravine in the foot-hills, and also at the place afterwards known as Mormon Island. That night he slept under an oak tree, some eight or ten miles east, of the fort, where he arrived about nine o'clock the next morning. Dismounting from his horse, he entered Sutter's private office, and proceeded to inquire into the cause of the delay in sending up the provisions. This matter having been explained, and the teams being in a fair way to load, he asked for a few minutes private conversation with Colonel Sutter, and the two entered a little room at the back of the store, reserved as a private office. Then Marshall showed him the gold. He looked at it in astonishment, and, still doubting, asked what it was. His visitor replied that it was gold. "Impossible!" was the incredulous ejaculation of Sutter. Upon this Marshall asked for some nitric acid, to test it, and a messenger having been dispatched to the gunsmith's for that purpose, Sutter inquired whether there was no other way in which it could be tested. He was told that its character might be ascertained by weighing it, and accordingly some silver coin, ($5 25 was all the fort could furnish), and a pair of small scales or balances having been obtained, Marshall proceeded to weigh the dust, first in the air, and then in two bowls of water. The experiment resulted as he had foreseen. The dust went down, the coin rose lightly up. Sutter gazed, and all his doubts fadeed, and a subsequent test with the nitric acid, which by this time had arrived, settled the question finally. Then the excitement began to spread. Sutter knew well the value of the discovery, and in a short time, having made hurried arrangements at the fort, he returned with Marshall to Coloma, to see for himself the wonder that had been reported to him.

THE BIRDS ON CHRISTMAS MORNING.

If Them Wanted be Happy Then Must Them Make Others Happy.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

On holy Christmas morning there was a grand assemblage of little birds behind the elder-tree yonder which stands between the court-yard and the garden, flanked on one side by the barn and on the other by heaps of grain that had found no shelter in the granary—so rich had been the blessings of the Lord!

The sparrow with his house and generation was very fully represented in the meeting; and all who belonged to his family pulled out their feathers and sat looking as if something vexatious had befallen them.

Finches and goldhammers were there in great spirits, as usual; and the blackbird perched now inside the court-wall, now on the outside; then he flew down to the brook, ducked down and up again, flew up into the tree with the other birds, and praised the cold-water cure, which makes one feel light fresh and joyful as nothing else can.

Ravens and crows and the rest of the grain-sifts, who are forever finding what no one has lost, crowded close together on the grain-sacks in deep and loud discussion.

But the sparrow began to bewail his fate thus: "I have sadly been disturbed in my night's rest, for before daybreak all the bells in the steeples began to ring as if for fire. I flew out into the darkness, and all around the houses looked bright, as if they were on fire within. Many tiny candles were lighted, and the trees on which they burned were covered with all kinds of fruit, such as I never have seen together on one tree. But we enjoy nothing of all this. Our trees are bare enough, and have not even leaves to screen us from this winter's cold. We shall starve to death or freeze, when once food becomes scarcer and the cold more piercing."

But the lark in the field scratched up a few worms which a mole had tossed out with the earth; and the blackbird helped her to choose some little worms, and that was their breakfast.

The shepherd drove his flocks through the narrow path, while thornbushes on each side, and the blackberry briers and wild-rose bushes, who had heard the birds' complaint, stretched their branches across the way, so that the little sheep left locks of wool upon them, some more, some less, but never enough to do them any harm. The birds took the wool and carried it to their homes, in the knot-holes of trees or crevices of walls, or hollows of the earth, and there they grew warmer and warmer. Then, as they picked at the wool, red lips, which the cold had made sweet and soft, peered out, and they ate them with joyful hearts.

Again rang out the bells from tower and steeple; the house-door opened, and the family came forth; maidservants first, then sons and daughters, and, to close up the procession, the housewife and the farmer.

"Father," said the eldest son, "it will fare ill with our corn-stacks in the field if, before going to church, we do not shoot among the feathered gentry beyond, who have torn the outer coverings already, and will soon make their way among the unthreshed grain. The magpies willingly reap where they have not sown. They cluster here from the whole neighborhood, and totally would I give them a few tender peas for food, and silence their chattering forever."

"By no means," replied the farmer. "No shot shall be fired during the blessed Christmas season—on the gracious birthday of Him who overthrew indeed the tables of the money-changers, and made a scourge of cords to drive out both buyer and seller from His temple, but only said to those who sold doves, 'Take them hence.' He did not blame the poor little doves; and never, on this day, when dumb beast gave up to Him their manger for a cradle, because men found no room for Him in the inn, never shall any creature find death in my fields for the sake of a few blades of grass or kernels of grain."

But the farmer's wife had already turned back, and one of the lads was, at her command, strewing a whole sheaf of grain before the house-front. So generously did he scatter the food to the doves and poultry, that there was enough and to spare for their neighbors on the elder-tree, and magpie and raven had a fair share without being envied by hens or disturbed by men. Thus in the court-yard was there also a little of that "peace on earth" of which angels sang one Christmas night upon the plains of Bethlehem. Nor did the farmer lack anything in hay-loft or granary because the little birds of heaven had been fed from his table that blessed Christmas morning.

Remember this: on Christmas feed the poor little birds before thy door, and if thou seest neither lark nor blackbird, nor yet finches, gold-hammers, nor tomtits, then think of those who have no feathers, of pure human creatures. Forget not that the angel of the Lord said to the shepherds: "You will find the Child wrapped in swaddling-clothes, and lying in a manger." Seek out the swaddling-clothes of poverty, and if thou walkest by that light which rose over Bethlehem, then shalt thou find in these swaddling-clothes and in works of mercy—the little child Jesus!

Mark this: if thou wouldst be happy, then must thou make others happy! Remember, because Jesus came to the poor, therefore shouldst thou go to the poor.

BETHLEHEM, AS SEEN BY AN AMERICAN.

BY [illegible] SON, U. S. MINISTER.

The distance from Jerusalem to Bethlehem is [illegible] We proposed to go [illegible] morning. Our vehicle and [illegible] French driver which [illegible] Jaffa, were retained for the purpose. Although the road was rough and stony, and the streets narrow, we risked the carriage and ignored the caution on the pledge of the guide. The sequel showed that there was some risk, as many of the streets were impassible for a carriage.

We left the Jaffa gate, and under the upper aqueduct, and over the upper part of Gihon, and then drive nearly due south. The bed of the Kidron, in the deep valley of our left, pursues its empty way to the dead Sea, while on the right and to the west, along the bottom, in broken and gray masses, lie the mountain of Judah, shutting out the Mediterranean. When we reach the main road, and leave the "hill of evil counsel" on our left, we find the way filled with Indian camels. Under the lash of our guide these give the way, and with considerable malice, both they and their drivers fumble and tumble about awkwardly amid the rubble of the road. The olives are thick, perforated and old in the fields within the stone-walls. "Where," we ask of the guide, "do they get so much stone for the walls?" They are ten feet wide and three high, and, like the Dutchman's wall of the anecdote, "when they fall down they are higher than a horse they stand up."

"Why do you ask?" says the guide, "don't you see the fields are full of stones?"

"But no one could mass any stones out of those fields," we remarked.

[illegible] among them the [illegible] tomb of Adullam has been verified, which Mother Seyss has described, and he well of Bethlehem, which is [illegible] to the gate, for the water which David was athirst for, in an extraordinary [illegible] guide with [illegible] Samuel. These, [illegible] and we draw in [illegible] side. We [illegible] the traditional tree where Judas hanged himself, and the rural abode of Caiphas, the High Priest; but these nebulæ of tradition dissolve from the mass of Bethlehem. The well of the Magi, however, is one of the incidents of the main object, and a pretty story is told of it, although it is not recorded in the second of Matthew; for did not the wise men, after leaving the presence of Herod, here stop to draw water? Was it not here that the reflection of the star which led them was seen in the well?

Then we pass the Greek convent of Elijah, where other stories are told, but now with the repetition. But from this point the cities of Bethlehem and Jerusalem are visible—"in mutual being," birth, and death. From this eminent point, too, can be seen the hour long mountain called the Tomb of Herod. It is high and round. It is the scene of a massacre of Franciscans, but it sinks into modest ingenuity, as Herod did, compared with those persecuted, along with that dim spot, shining hard and bleak, like steel, twenty-five and more miles away, through Jericho [illegible] Dead Sea. This is the first of the famous tableaux [illegible] "when they fall down they are higher than a hen they stand up."

"Why do you ask?" says the guide, "don't you see the fields are full of stones?"

"But no one could mass any stones out of those fields," we remarked.

"Oh, a few are left over," responds the guide.

How the lonely olive can find nutriment on such "stony ground" is a miracle.

We are happy in a breezy day, which mitigates the fierceness of the sun. What a crowd of people now are upon the road going to Bethlehem and Hebron, and to Beersheba even unto Rehobeth! Nine out of ten of these are upon donkeys and camels, and more than three-fourths have their eyes sore or shaded, and these are Arabs, whose suit is sometimes gay in color, but generally of stripes, brown and white, which reminds us of the dress of our penitentiaries, depending in the face of the wearer. They carry the long Damascus gun, and a plentiful supply for the desert and danger. Camises, with their big stocks and leaves, furnish some of the hedges, and "turn" the animals from the fields. We meet some who are blue eyed and good eyed as European dress. These are of the German colony, which here thrives upon the old stony soil and makes its crops of grape and grain in their season, or several crops in one season. Some herds of black and white cattle of Dutch breed are seen picking up a quiet rumination from the browned herbage and the green leaves left on the trees.

The land is not unlike the dress of the Arab—brown and white. It is burnt with the sun of now departing summer, and white with the lime of many summers.

"Ah! this is a fine land!" we say ironically to the guide.

"Good land! I guess it is," responds the guide, who is from the State of Maine. "See it—wouldn't hold up many stones and rocks. Good deal of left about it."

But we notice that where water runs the unevenness of the Germans appear, and the walls have a trim look and a neatness the same is thrift. Old olive posts for fuel, as twisted and as difficult to unravel as the philosophical roots of our college days, appear going up to the city, while going from it, for the terraces, on the heads of blanched, tattooed Arab females, are baskets of manure gathered in Jerusalem. The plain of Rephaim is spread around us, two miles wide by two long. Here David defeated the Philistines, and many other assaults. Yonder, [illegible] Tekoa, a pilgrim to this fount and shrine of the elder day? Yes, he is a pilgrim, like us—and from the Greek priest from the Russian, [illegible] spiritually upon Lazarus, [illegible] dans stormy banks, waiting for the peaceful shore, and really upon Dives's terrible banks, waiting for the [illegible] to fructify his fields. He owns now that our guide has to ride ahead and employ people to move impediments out of the way. It is said the peasantry hundreds [illegible] Tent repute, [illegible] Dives, the coarsely clothed, the picturesque of the Moslems. One thing must be said of the town, and that is that if it has any beauty to good in it, it is Christian, for it is [illegible] Christian town of Judea. In 1834, after an insurrection by the Arabs, Ibrahim Pasha, then ruler, riddled the Moslems into death after his peculiar methods, quite worthy of a descendant of Herod.

Before purchasing our olive wood, beads, mother-of-pearl, and other souvenirs, where many such are deftly made by exquisite art, we make our visit to the most attractive place of Bethlehem. The place of the Nativity has been often described, and the church above it. Every object and passenger here and heretofore has been the special object of gifted pen and impassioned eloquence. Make an indelible empty of the mouse, and each name will be set to music like a psalm. The shepherd of David by Samuel, the family of Jesse and their explosions—Isaiah, Aholiab, and Asahel, and of David, as Bethlehem called, or Bethlehem's stronghold, the habitation of Caleb-ham, the story of Ruth, among Boaz Gaulite out of Nazareth, in fine, the incarnation of the Word Love in all its mystery, each and all are a page which represents from the simple cave in Bethlehem, with a sweeter and louder chorus than that of the Bethlehem star of the fixed old man of that Star whose shaken rocks are left but a fortnight since.

Let us enter this place of the Nativity. It has been [illegible] and as is well the floor of the church. It is 33 by 11 feet, and decorated with marble. Precious lamps burn before figures of saints, chief among them St. Jerome. Sixteen silver lamps burn over the spot where the silver star indicates the place of birth. Another inscription shows the spot where the wooden manger, now in Rome, was found. Another spot is shown, as the chapel of St. Jerome and the chapel of Joseph, where the angel appeared to him in a dream. [illegible] If these are apocryphal traditions, they do not detract from the fact established by scholars and antiquarians, and confirmed as well by what St. Jerome wrote, as by his selection of this spot for his duties and fasts. He believed it to be the place, as his life and death bore witness. Never did art consummate so splendid a representation of self-abnegation as that wherein Domenichino portrays the last scene in the life of this Dalmatian saint and hero, who vanished, as well in his life as by his death, his faith in the goodness and power of the Gospel, whose good tidings were dominant first in the starry vault of Bethlehem.

Dead as we now are to the Milk grotto, the Shepherd's grotto, the Magi's well, David's well, and the burial of the twenty thousand innocents murdered by Herod here—dear as to the shepherd's fold, the altar of the "wise men," should we doubt that Christ was born immaculate and miraculously; but one thing is indubitable—that Christ was here born, and that from this Nativity arose a light "such as had before was never in sea or land, and for the faith in whose beneficent and heavenly guidance thousands have persisted as martyrs, and millions have risked their soul's salvation! What place can be more holy, unless it be that consecrated by his death?

There are said to be only two places in this Holy Land superior in sacred associations to this place, Jerusalem and Nazareth. To my mind, Bethlehem has no superior, unless it is Jerusalem. "Why?" will some untaught Bible student, and to the every child who has read the gospel, Bethlehem is not one of the sacred cities which encompass Jerusalem, but it has its lofty thought. It is a beautiful pearl in the diadem round about the royal city. It is not the scene of sacrifice and sepulchre, but it is the scene of the nativity and of the Star and of the angelic song which uttered in the purest and greatest life ever clad in flesh. Among the hundreds of books of travel and descriptions of this country, the Bible is the best guide book after all, and in many cases it is no one way or in more so than in its references to this spot, over which the star shone and the angels chanted of peace. No amount of degenerates superstition, exaggeration, tradition or pollution, no surrounding, however disenchanting, detracts one beam from the radiance of that star, or gives one discordant note in the seraphic hymn by which here filled the heavens with a new born joy! The genius of painter and sculptor has illustrated the story of the manger, and their gifts and genius [illegible] the shepherds—the flight into Egypt, the beautiful face of the Madonna with its golden aureole, and the majestic, masterful and melancholy features of Him who became here the genius of love unto mankind. What place, therefore, in all this enlarged country, now so many centuries made desirable, is so alluring, for its fraught themes, whether for studio or library, for the orator or artist, for the disciple or christian?

Although Bethlehem was rated "little among thousands of Judah" and at a time when Judah had ten thousands of thousands from her wooded terraces and valleys, she is great among men, and will be great so long as her story remains. How often has the world been told to bring bearers! From the little Catholic Church of the North Cape, for a year old, which we visited under the mid night sun, and amid the summer snows to the splendid church of Sophia, which dates 1500 years ago, across wastes of time and oceans upon, over dark continents and seas, guided by eternal summer, the star of the manger is a thrill as sweet as long ago to peasants, as dear to the leper of Rimini as to the emperors of earth.

The basis to repeat of such a story even though it were almost lost in tradition, must be a part, the more so as part of that wondrous drama. Even sceptics cannot ignore the fact that the event lies, as the Apostle phrased it, "turned the world upside down. Well might angels say that this work, proceeding out of this little village, if it were of men, would come to naught, but if it were of God, could not be overthrown. The evidence is that to-day its results appear in civilization! What a moral and religious work has been accomplished by its energy! Beginning at this small fountain, what a fruitful spreading stream of light for the irradiation of the dark problems of our life!

As I came from the church I did not hear the angels above rumoring the millennial dawn, but nevertheless I did not cease to believe that in "this city of David had been born a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Nor still I utter my last moment believe otherwise than that for this event—the greatest upon our sin—"glory should be given to God in the highest," and that out of it shall eventually come on earth, peace, good will to men!"

Ad Arrostle.

SUTTER'S MILL, THE [illegible] WHERE GOLD WAS FIRST DISCOVERED IN CALIFORNIA

[illegible] ome and join us in our song.
[illegible] ark! the merry bells they chime,
[illegible] rch and poor we all are one
[illegible] n this joyful Christmas time.
[illegible] numous friends from far and near [illegible] ppy as in this wish sincere.
[illegible] ny more may all yet see [illegible] fire this Ice-bound to be.
[illegible] a-lies! "Journal."

Any man who gets his coin, or gold in a way which reddened, becomes the during of all men.

Happiness is a perfume that one cannot shed over another without a few drops falling on one's self.

Good deeds are the best crop to raise, it takes a hard hoe and two steady heads.

THE MONITOR.
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROPAGATION AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office: 536 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Per Year (in Advance)	$2 00
Per Year (if not paid in advance)	2 50
Six Months (paid in advance)	1 75
Six Months (not paid in advance)	2 00
Three Months (if paid in advance)	1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance)	1 50
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces (in advance)	$4 00 (not in advance) 5 00

☞ Are forward all remittances, subscriptions, checks, and postal orders to
P. J. McCARTHY, Editorial Manager.
Monitor Office, Box 2012 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For thy Sons do not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Sons, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus: 4: 28) is now in the thirteenth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a standard reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertisers.

THE MONITOR

☞ Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be plainly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly; and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.

All communications and communications, whether on business or otherwise are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXIX. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1886. NO. 15.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GOOD HEALTH BETTER THAN GOLD.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. TRY IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN,
For Sale by all Druggists.

GOLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING.

— Every Description at — Church and Altar Ornaments
— ALSO —
HOUSEHOLD GOODS
Repaired and Plated
With the above module in the most beautiful and durable manner at the
SAN FRANCISCO
Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
653 and 655 MISSION ST.,
Bet. New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco.
E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
☞ Full Line of the Best Eastern Manufactures and Unions Workingmen's Boots and Shoes constantly on hand
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET. 138
Bet. Natoma and Howard

SYLVESTER & SUBLETT,
DENTISTS
Painless Extraction
With Vitalized Air.
13 SIXTH ST., CORNER OF MISSION.
Room 12, 13 and 14, S. F.
OFFICE HOURS: 9 to 5.

SEEDS.
FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES.
SAMUEL BRECK,
Successor to Geo. W. Pitcher.
All variety of Seeds, Fruit and Shade Trees.
317 WASHINGTON ST.
SAN FRANCISCO

STAR ★ COAL.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST.
OUR STAR COAL
Has taken the lead at all the Coals yet introduced in this market.
It Makes a quick and a Lasting Fire
[SEA LIGHT DRY, AND EAST COAL THREE TIMES THE WEIGHT of Cedar and Spruce and yet it is cheaper. If your stove does not burn it, send in the CEDAR RIVER COAL CO. 106-112 Mission Street, bet. Main and Spear.

IRON FENCES AND CRESTINGS.

A. G. Hitzedgs, 10 and 20 Fremont St., S. F.

JOHN TRAYNOR. GEO. LAUMEN
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
Under Palace Hotel ..... SAN FRANCISCO

GEO. E. CROCKER, JR. TOM. A. BROWN
PACIFIC Business College,
320 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO
Life Scholarships $75
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

USE HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
FOR COUGHS, COLDS
AND ALL DISEASES OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS CONSUMPTION,
BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, ASTHMA,
AND ALL DISEASES OF THE LUNGS.
Sold by all Druggists on Forty Cents.
J. H. HALL & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street San Francisco.

Irish Liberty at Last!

THE CASE STATED BY BOYLE O'REILLY.

ENGLAND'S COURSE CRITICISED.

A Prediction Regarding Home Rule.

Among other interesting articles in the North American Review for the current month we find the following able contribution from the facile pen of Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, the patriotic Irish poet and editor of the Boston Pilot.

In the twelfth century England invaded Ireland (a thing and a serious enterprise under King Brian, in 1020), overpowered her with numbers, garrisoned her strong places with soldiers, killed her leading men that she failed to corrupt, disarmed all native growth and plans of development, and sat down in the Irishman's house as its lord and master, by the right of the heavier weapon.

The Irish struggled for a hundred years, and the foreign oppressor increased the bands and decreased the methods and order and civilization among the people.

England had realized that Ireland was a very rich country, blessed by nature with exceptional material resources, and inhabited by a people of great intelligence, courage and enterprise, capable of becoming strong competitors in the world's race. Another hundred years of desperate struggle, the Irishman vainly trying to get the Englishman's hand off his throat. The Englishman now abolished Irish law (the ancient and revered Brehan Code), and established courts of English law. He also began the system or incorporating English cities, companies, and corporate bodies in Ireland, to which all power was given over the native people.

The Scottish nation was at war with England also, and this prevented or delayed the absolute destruction of Ireland. Five hundred years ago, Edward Bruce, (brother of Robert), went to Ireland, was crowned king, and with the united force of the native princes, defeated England for a time.

But the Englishman returned and the fearful struggle began again, the Irish now knowing that their fight was one of life or death, liberty or slavery.

Four hundred years ago, the weaker country was prostrate—not more helpless, ragged, ostracized. Then England abolished her own Brehan system, of ruling the country by English corporations, juries, and law matters established in Ireland. It was ordered henceforth that all Irish law must be made in England (Poyning's Act), and no Irishman, high or low, was to hold office or power or to have any right whatever—even the right to live. It was no crime for an Englishman to kill an Irishman who should appear within an English dress or the protection of an English resident. It was also enacted that Irishmen should not learn to read. A reward was offered for the arrest of schoolmasters and priests. All schools and colleges were then thrown down, their ruins are found, like skeletons, the highest Ireland to-day.

England had resolved to make the Irish forget that they were Irish, trusting that when this had been achieved she could teach them that they were in truth not Irish, but Saxons, and had every one had national freedom, or traditions, or glory, or great men, or art, or poetry, or famous schools, or a high civilization and the honor of other nations; but had always been a poor, broken, restless, miserable, quarrelsome people, dreaming about ancient greatness that was all a lie, and about future freedom and honor that were all a delusion; and that God and nature had made them poor and future subjects to the wise, good, unselfish, gentle English nation, that sent about the world hoping weak countries to be free and civilized and Christian!

Three hundred years ago, when Henry VIII became a Protestant, he resolved that the Irish should be Protestant, too, and for the next hundred years the reforming process went forward, the chief means being the bullet, the rope, and the slave ship.

A gentleman from Jamaica told me last year, as a curious fact, that the negroes in that island were more easily taught words. No wonder, about sixty thousand Irish boys and girls were sold to the chosen planters of the West Indies, 200 years ago, as Sir William Petty and other English historians tell us, and time was.

Two hundred years ago and still the deathless fight, the Irish growing weaker, the Enemy stronger. It had now become "the religious duty" of the Englishman to subdue the Irish "for their own sakes." Cromwell went over, and slaughtered every man in the first garrison town he captured, Drogheda. "By God's grace," he wrote to the Parliament, "I believe that not one escaped," and he added that when the officers capitulated and surrendered "They were knocked on the head, too."

Cromwell "made peace and silence" in Ireland; his troopers rolled the whole country for the first time. Then came an unequipped atrocity in the name of "civilization; four fifths of the entire island, every acre held by the native Irish, who were Catholics, was confiscated and handed over to Cromwell's disbanded army.

This was the beginning of the Irish Land Question, that Michael Davitt has been hammering at for years, and which he is going to see settled.

A hundred years ago, Ireland was in the most deplorable condition that any civilized nation ever descended to. Six centuries of a violent struggle had wasted her blood, money, and resources; her people were demoralized—no man rised in Ireland except those of the English colony. For a hundred preceding years the teacher and priest had been hunted felons. There were only four million Irish altogether, and they were nearly all in Ireland, friendless, voiceless, landless, powerless, disarmed disorganized, ignorant, forgotten by the world, misrepresented and misrepresented by their rich and powerful enemy and held up in English books, newspapers, schools, at home and abroad, as a race of wild, wasty, silly, hare-brained, purposeless creatures.

But in its anguish and blood and rags and wretchedness, the Irishman was still unsubdued, still a free man in soul and a foeman in act. The Irishman then was, as he still is, the most intense nationalist in the world.

Grattan abolished the Poynings Law, and the Irish Parliament from 1782 to 1800 made the laws for Ireland. In that time the country advanced like a released giant. Lord Clare said in 1798: "No country in the world has advanced like Ireland, in trade, manufacture, and agriculture, since 1782."

Then England began to fear the Irish revival, and the demands of the English manufacturing and shipping classes were marvels of cowardly and jealous feeling. (See Lecky, "Public Life in England in the Eighteenth Century.") They demanded that Ireland be destroyed as a competing power. "Make the Irish remember that they are conquered," were the words of the petition to the English Parliament.

The rebellion of '98 was fomented by the English Government, and a fearful slaughter of 50,000 Irishmen ensued. This was the pretext wanted: The English colony in Ireland were instructed to raise the cry of "Our lives and religion in danger." A majority of the Angleses who composed the "Irish Parliament" were bought by Castlereagh, who paid them, as the Irish Bled and Black lists show, nearly three million pounds for their votes; and so the union with England was carried.

Three years later, another rebellion broke out, organized and led by a Protestant gentleman, Robert Emmet, who was "hanged, drawn, and quartered," and the dogs of Dublin lapped his blood, as an eye witness relates, from the gallows foot in Thomas Street.

Then the pall was pulled over the face of Ireland, and she lay down in the ashes and abasement of her loneliness and misery. Not one friendly friends; she was weak to death from struggle, outrage and despair. Even God had apparently forgotten her in the night.

But a new voice called to her in the night, and she listened—Daniel O'Connell, a strong man, full of courage and purpose. After thirty years of agitation he won, with his minority. He had trained them superbly. He won the franchise for the Catholics.

For eighteen years more he worked to get the Act of Union repealed; but England, when he touched that point, arrested and imprisoned him. This stopped the agitation. The people had no leader and no outside moral support. It was O'Connell and the Irish people; not the Irish people and O'Connell.

The Young Ireland party in 1848, impatient, maddened, broke into premature rebellion—were crushed, condemned, and banished.

Then the famine, and the swelling of the Irish emigration stream into a torrent; Thousands died on the soil, and literally millions fled to other countries—to England, Scotland, America, Canada, Australia, South America, the Argentine Republic.

Twenty years later, 1865-67, the first warning movement of the exiles—Fenianism; a marvelous crystallization of sentiment, heroism, and sacrifice.

Again, the abrogation of law in Ireland—the rule of the Saxon, the glitted prison, the crowded emigrant fleets, the chained men on country ships; and again, "silence and peace in Ireland."

England had now realized the important fact that the commercial development of the American Continent had placed Ireland in an objective position of the highest value. She lay in the high stream of progress. Her harbors and southern shores were indented with deep and safe bays and harbors. A ship-canal from Galway to Dublin would capture every ship on the Atlantic bound for Liverpool, saving two days in sailing time; and the Irish were best on cutting such a canal. The great fall of the Irish rivers was an inestimable treasure, greater even than the mineral wealth of the island, and the fisheries on the coast.

Every ship going through an Irish canal was in danger of forgetting the southern ports, Irish and English, and Queenstown. Every mill built on an Irish stream would deduct from the profits of Lancashire. Every ton of coal or other mineral dug in Ireland lowered the prices in Nottingham, Sheffield, and the Black Country. If the Irish farmers' children could get work in mills and mines and shops, their earnings would make their parents independent of the landlords, and rents would have to be lowered.

It was clear that Ireland's advance must be stopped, or she would become a dangerous competitor and a democratic example to Great Britain.

While the Fenians lay in prison—from 1865 to 1874—and the Habeas Corpus Act was suspended, and the stipendiary magistrates, gentlemen from Jamaica, told the last year, as a curious fact, that the negroes in Jamaica understood their words better than No wonder, about sixty thousand Irish boys and girls were sold to the chosen planters of the West Indies, 200 years ago, as Sir William Petty and other English historians tell us, and time was.

Two hundred years ago—and still the deathless fight, the Irish growing weaker, the Enemy stronger. It had now become "the religious duty" of the Englishman to subdue the Irish "for their own sakes." Cromwell went over, and slaughtered every man in the first garrison town he captured, Drogheda. "By God's grace," he wrote to the Parliament, "I believe that not one escaped," and he added that when the officers capitulated and surrendered "They were knocked on the head, too."

Cromwell "made peace and silence" in Ireland; his troopers rolled the whole country for the first time. Then came an unequipped atrocity in the name of "civilization; four fifths of the entire island, every acre held by the native Irish, who were Catholics, was confiscated and handed over to Cromwell's disbanded army.

This was the beginning of the Irish Land Question, that Michael Davitt has been hammering at for years, and which he is going to see settled.

A hundred years ago, Ireland was in the most deplorable condition that any civilized nation ever descended to. Six centuries of a violent struggle had wasted her blood, money, and resources; her people were demoralized—no man rised in Ireland except those of the English colony. For a hundred preceding years the teacher and priest had been hunted felons. There were only four million Irish altogether, and they were nearly all in Ireland, friendless, voiceless, landless, powerless, disarmed disorganized, ignorant, forgotten by the world, misrepresented and misrepresented by their rich and powerful enemy and held up in English books, newspapers, schools, at home and abroad, as a race of wild, wasty, silly, hare-brained, purposeless creatures.

But in its anguish and blood and rags and wretchedness, the Irishman was still unsubdued, still a free man in soul and a foeman in act. The Irishman then was, as he still is, the most intense nationalist in the world.

Grattan abolished the Poynings Law, and the Irish Parliament from 1782 to 1800 made the laws for Ireland. In that time the country advanced like a released giant, and as yet they do not know quite what it means.

The late elections have opened the eyes of the world to the fact that Ireland is overwhelmingly "National." Eighty-six out of one hundred and three Irish members stand behind Mr. Parnell in Parliament, pledged to vote as he leads, utterly irrespective of British interests or desires.

Liberal and Tory in England may join to defeat the Irish strength; but it will be only for a year or two. It is clear now that another Cromwell must sweep Ireland with fire and sword, or that England must grant her constitutional demand for Home Government.

The alternative—a civil war which would destroy Ireland for England's sake, if now allowed to operate in another conquest and disfranchisement, would assuredly destroy England—and England is learning the great lesson.

Ireland is saved by the twenty-million Irish blooded Americans; by the five million Irish and their descendants in England, Scotland, and Wales; by the vast numbers of Irish sympathizers in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and other countries. It would be highly dangerous to slaughter the kindred of such a people.

It is not likely that Ireland will gain much from the coming Parliament. The Parliament cannot last long: it is too evenly balanced. Besides, England has not yet realized that Home Rule for Ireland is inevitable. It will take three years to vaccinate her with the idea and allow it to take.

The second leader of the English Liberals, during the recent election, several times repeated this assertion, that the Irish election were not truly the expression of the country—that Mr. Parnell was "grinding" and "oppressing" the Irish people! A glance at the returns—at the ten and twelve to one in scores of cities, towns and counties, makes such a charge ridiculous. But it indicates the perverse ignorance or the audacious dishonesty of even leading Englishmen.

In returning eighty six Nationalist members to Parliament, the Irish here not sodded, but just began their national struggle. There are three stages in peaceful reform, agitation, controversy, and legislation. The Irish have passed through the first, and are entering the second.

Parnell, with fifteen or twenty votes, was not a power; he was only a voice, an emphasis, an appeal. He was an agitational influence. With eighty-six voice he is a controversial force. "He has compelled John Bull to listen," as Wendell Phillips said of him.

In 1890, I predict, the legislative stage of the Irish question will have arrived; and the Union with England, which shall then have cursed Ireland for nine-tenths of a century, will be repealed.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

MISDEEDS OF ORANGEMEN.

How They Laid in Ambush to Assassinate the Editor of "United Ireland."

There is a touch of the brave days of old in the exultation of the Daily Express over the good natured attempt of the Orange landlord myrmidons to murder the National candidate for South Tyrone. An armed party of the landlordings lay in ambush upon the road, along which they expected Mr. O'Brien to pass to one of his meetings. As it happened, he was at the time addressing another meeting some thirty miles away but the landlord brewers waylaid a coach in which they supposed he was traveling, and with the cry of "No O'Brien, no Pope," were proceeding to murder Mr. Quinn, of Dungannon, until they discovered he was the wrong man, whereupon a body of Nationalists retaliated, and the brews took to their heels. This is the glorious episode over which Dr. Patton rubs his hands with glee. To heighten the zest of the affair for his readers, he predicts the assassination with the statement that "the election for South Tyrone has attracted more attention, we believe, than any other in the North." The Nationalists, recognizing its importance, and the difficulty of making a lodgment in the country, selected the ablest man to whom he owed a grudge, and ordered him to upset it against the freshly-painted door of a haughty citizen. In his early days he developed histrionic taste, and took a successful part in local amateur theatricals. He was also fond of "acting Demosthenes," as he himself afterwards said. Upon a rocky shore, where the Atlantic breaks with considerable violence, he used to put shells and pebbles in his mouth and declaim to the sea in a loud voice. Throughout his career he never allowed a suitable occasion to pass without stigmatizing the passion for drink which is the parent of so many evils, and the sad effects of drunkenness upon the tenderness of the human mind at a tender age. A short time after he had decided on his vocation, he was asked what was the subject of his thoughts, and he replied, "I'm just thinking that if it were not for the Providence of God, I might now be a baker's apprentice, drunk every day in the week." Drunkenness at that time prevailed to a terrible extent in Galway, and Father Burke in one of his lectures mentioned the case of a lad of his acquaintance who had become a confirmed, irreclaimable drunkard before he had reached fourteen years of age.

THE GOOD FRIAR RECOMMENDS

to the fullest extent how destructive intemperance proves to the high-spirited Celtic race, and no man ever warned his countryman against it or urged the practice of the opposite virtue in more forcible language. "The temperate Irishman," said he, in one of his addresses in Jersey City, "is the man of hope for Ireland. In the temperate Irishman I see the man who will bring honor upon our name in this land. I beg of you my countrymen, to stick to your faith and the practice of temperance, bring all the people into this continent within the temperance fold, and then the gallantry, and genius, and eloquence of the Irish race will establish for us a leading position amongst the various races that dwell here, and the temperate Irish people will stand at the head of the population of this young republic." The conclusion caused by the famine also made a deep impression on the mind of Father Burke in his childhood. Preaching at St Joseph's Church, Liverpool, in Sept., 1880, he said, alluding to that period, "If I were to live a thousand years, never could I banish from my memory or shut out from my eyes the terrible sights which I then beheld." His personal knowledge of such distressing scenes enabled him, no doubt, to give greater vividness to the pictures in which he traced them. Young Burke, who frequently came into contact with Father Rush, an eloquent Dominican, manifested a desire to join the Dominican Order, and as he had received a tolerably good training in the schools of the Rev. Dr. O'Toole and Mr. Michael Winter, he proceeded to Perugia, received the habit

IN THE DOMINICAN CONVENT,

and with the exception of "some guileless shoillitions," such as whistling and breaking silence at forbidden times, he passed praiseworthy through the Novitiate. He subsequently became Master of Novices at Woodchester, one of those under his direction being Kerril Amherst, afterwards Bishop of Northampton. In 1852 he was ordained to the Sub Diaconate and Diaconate at Oscott by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Ullathorne, the present Bishop of Birmingham, and he went to see his parents in Galway. He spent the Christmas of that year with his family, and he gave the blessing. He then, in a voice that conveyed authority and enforced obedience, ordered every one out of the church, and with a few well-chosen words fixed the attention of all on the importance of going quickly and promptly to enforce his command until scarcely a soul remained in the deserted church. In the meantime, the fire, which was over and around, had been gathering such headway that he had scarcely left the church before it burst out the whole length of the building, roaring and flaming up the steeple in a most frightful manner. When he left he carried forth the Blessed Sacrament and having deposited it in a safe place quickly returned to the scene to direct the efforts of the congregation towards saving what was possible. His energy, however, was quickly sufled in another direction, for the wind being from that point it was blowing the new Lyceum building, which has taxed his energy for the last four months, was in danger. It was impossible from the first discovery of the fire to check its ravages, the whole masonry, massive part of the main ceiling being on fire, so was part of the side wall.

The efforts made to check the flames caused only to increase their fury so that they quickly leaped to the front and up the steeple. It was a not bad beautiful sight. The cross now towered while the flames wafted and swayed the steeple below the cross, they formed a few arch around, until it toppled to the ground; as it did so a great cry arose from all, many swinging their hands and weeping to see the destruction of the church which grew with the congregation and was identified with the whole growth of Catholicity in this place. Many laughable yet sad things occurred during the conflagration; as for instance, while the last sacred vestment was in the sacristary exhorting the people to go out orderly, lest a panic might be prevented, the story got started that he was still in the church. The alarm spread so quickly that some ran wildly about crying, "the priest is lost!" "Oh, where is our father?" When he came out on the top of the endangered Lyceum directing the men and women, assisting them to save that building. One show boy became so excited after he left the school that he came down town and rushed on some unfortunate fire was over and the church in ruins he everybody was distracted by hunting high and low for shavin, coats, etc. But perhaps the most amusing incident was furnished by the man who unhitched his team from his sleigh and then pulled, like mad, "Somebody for God's sake help me get this rig away."

The church was a very ordinary frame structure, the first of which was built about ten years; but two successive additions had been built by its zealous pastor since then, and so rapid had been the increase of the congregation, that it was now about to be removed, yet, as I have said, it was identified with the growth of Catholicity in Galway, and would be regarded by the hearts of all, that for years the numerous congregation had knelt and poured out some through tears of sorrow. But, thanks be to God and to the prudence and assiduous labors of our pastor, we have a temporary place in the Lyceum until we can erect another and, it is to be hoped, a better place of worship. But it will come hard upon those who must build, as it has required the hearty co-operation of the Bishop of Galway to enable Father Lentz to build the Lyceum. They were not counting the new expense. Twice there was an assessment of $1,500 but that will not raise more than half the actual loss, without considering the loss of time into which we are plunged at present. We hope, however, our Reverend Father will not have much trouble in going ahead with the good work, and that in a few years we shall have a better and more fitting place of worship.—Emerald Vindicator.

Ourselves as Others See Us.

The Hon. Joseph Medill, writing to the Chicago Tribune concerning his visit to the coast, says: "Washington Territory had 11,594 inhabitants in 1860, 23,118 in 1870, and 75,116 in 1880, and is alleged to contain now 125,000, which is somewhat over the mark. Its two largest towns are Seattle and Tacoma—the former with 12,000 and the latter with 5,000 inhabitants. The total population of both Oregon and Washington is, therefore, something like 275,000 at this time. An railway building has sunned in both, and the "boom" manner thereby has subsided, but times have set in and seem to stay for a considerable period. The harbors of Portland, Tacoma and Seattle are so longer overcrowded with fleets of steamers and sail craft bringing in railroad-construction materials, passengers seeking work, and speculators spending money, laying out cities, and selling corner lots at fancy prices. All that is a thing of the past, and business is sitting down to hard-pan. The millions brought in and sentimed while the railroads were building made things so lively and so fictitious, but it lasted as long as it did in California. The future growth and development of Oregon and Washington will be comparatively slow, as they were before the railway building period. It will continue to move onward at a steady but not fast pace. The beginning of the next century—when the former with 75,000 and the latter with 5,000 inhabitants. The total population of both Oregon and Washington is, therefore, something like 275,000 at this time. As railway building has ceased in both, and the "boom" manner thereby has subsided, hard times have set in and seem to stay for a considerable period. The harbors of Portland, Tacoma and Seattle are no longer overcrowded with fleets of steamers and sail craft bringing in railroad-construction materials, passengers seeking work, and speculators spending money, laying out cities, and selling corner lots at fancy prices. All that is a thing of the past, and business is sitting down to hard-pan. The millions brought in and sentimed while the railroads were building made things so lively and so fictitious, but it lasted as long as it did in California. The future growth and development of Oregon and Washington will be comparatively slow, as they were before the railway building period. It will continue to move onward at a steady but not fast pace. The beginning of the next century—when the former with 75,000 and the latter with 5,000 inhabitants. The total population of both Oregon and Washington is, therefore, something like 275,000 population." Mr. Medill finds fault with Californians for slighting the magnificent agricultural resources of the State in the crazes for minerals.

—Bishop Vaughan said that "he who hears Mass daily will have a happy death." Surely that is little enough to do to obtain such a great reward!

—The Catholic Colonies established by Bishop Ireland in Minnesota, are all successful; and the pioneers who went out there poor are now in comfortable circumstances.

The Late Father Tom Burke.

SKETCH OF HIS HONORED LIFE.

REMINISCENCES OF HIS BOYHOOD DAYS.

His Sparkling Wit and Winning Ways.

The life of the Very Rev. Thomas N. Burke, O. P., which his just been published from the pen of the well known writer, William J. Fitzpatrick, F. S. A. is one of the most remarkable and most welcome additions made to Catholic literature for many years. It reveals to us the entire private life of one whose character forms a subject for a historical study of superlative interest. Few Catholics are unacquainted with Father Burke's distinguishing traits as a pulpit orator—his fulness of diction, his brilliant imagery, his moving pathos and his bewitching drollery—and most of his countrymen have, doubtless, from time to time, heard amusing accounts of the GOOD FATHER'S WIT AND PRACTICAL JOKES.

But few, we feel sure, supposed that he possessed the boundless wealth of humor, the perennial boyishness of spirit, and the capacity for innocent mischief with which this book shows he was endowed. It is indeed extremely satisfactory that the work has been accomplished by a practised biographer, for had it been undertaken by a literary amateur determined to bring his own personality into prominence we should probably miss much of the delightful picture now presented to us. Mr. Fitzpatrick has kept himself completely out of view, he has taken infinite trouble to secure correct and ample particulars, and having succeeded in this task, he allows Father Burke's words and actions to speak for themselves. The result is two volumes in which the Irish Dominican appears before us, exactly as he was in life, and while instructing us by words of wisdom, and edifying us by his purity of soul, the beauty of his inner life, entertains us by the most extraordinary exuberance of spirits and the most singular freaks, until at the close with sobbing sides we lay down the book, regretting that we have to part company with such a genial and highly-gifted friend.

FATHER BURKE WAS BORN

in Galway in 1847 of humble parents—Margaret MacDonough and Walter Burke, a baker, who earned a reputation for baking good bread and for singing good songs. The distinguished son of that happy couple made his father's occupation the subject of some enjoyable witticisms. The very occasion he doubtless himself as son of a Master of Rolls, and on another, replying to a question as to his antecedents, he stated that he was not sprung from the nobility, though his father was the best bread" Burke in Galway.

His infant prattling was done in "the sweet old rolling Celtic tongue, and it may well be believed that to this circumstance he owed much of his extraordinary fluency. Though not robust, he was a wild and frolsome boy, and played all sorts of pranks on his neighbors. He took much interest in the queer people who than abounded in "the City of the Tribes," and in after years he told how in making inquiry for a lodging for the night, he knocked at a skipleton whom he had formerly known, he received the reply, "Begone, you reverence, be off Galway about this same time as yourself and another fool."

HIS MADCAP ESCAPADES

PROVOKED CHARACTERISTIC PROS AND ANTHEMS

who, being a pious woman, literally adopted Solomon's advice not to spare the rod. The most contagious he ever received from her seems to have been given for having purchased a cart-load of turf from a countryman who had a grudge, and ordered him to upset it against the freshly-painted door of a haughty citizen. In his early days he developed histrionic taste, and took a successful part in local amateur theatricals. He was also fond of "acting Demosthenes," as he himself afterwards said. Upon a rocky shore, where the Atlantic breaks with considerable violence, he used to put shells and pebbles in his mouth and declaim to the sea in a loud voice. Throughout his career he never allowed a suitable occasion to pass without stigmatizing the passion for drink which is the parent of so many evils, and the sad effects of drunkenness upon the tenderness of the human mind at a tender age. A short time after he had decided on his vocation, he was asked what was the subject of his thoughts, and he replied, "I'm just thinking that if it were not for the Providence of God, I might now be a baker's apprentice, drunk every day in the week." Drunkenness at that time prevailed to a terrible extent in Galway, and Father Burke in one of his lectures mentioned the case of a lad of his acquaintance who had become a confirmed, irreclaimable drunkard before he had reached fourteen years of age.

THE GOOD FRIAR RECOMMENDS

to the fullest extent how destructive intemperance proves to the high-spirited Celtic race, and no man ever warned his countryman against it or urged the practice of the opposite virtue in more forcible language. "The temperate Irishman," said he, in one of his addresses in Jersey City, "is the man of hope for Ireland. In the temperate Irishman I see the man who will bring honor upon our name in this land. I beg of you my countrymen, to stick to your faith and the practice of temperance, bring all the people into this continent within the temperance fold, and then the gallantry, and genius, and eloquence of the Irish race will establish for us a leading position amongst the various races that dwell here, and the temperate Irish people will stand at the head of the population of this young republic." The desolation caused by the famine also made a deep impression on the mind of Father Burke in his childhood. Preaching at St Joseph's Church, Liverpool, in Sept., 1880, he said, alluding to that period, "If I were to live a thousand years, never could I banish from my memory or shut out from my eyes the terrible sights which I then beheld." His personal knowledge of such distressing scenes enabled him, no doubt, to give greater vividness to the pictures in which he traced them. Young Burke, who frequently came into contact with Father Rush, an eloquent Dominican, manifested a desire to join the Dominican Order, and as he had received a tolerably good training in the schools of the Rev. Dr. O'Toole and Mr. Michael Winter, he proceeded to Perugia, received the habit

IN THE DOMINICAN CONVENT,

and with the exception of "some guileless shoillitions," such as whistling and breaking silence at forbidden times, he passed praiseworthy through the Novitiate. He subsequently became Master of Novices at Woodchester, one of those under his direction being Kerril Amherst, afterwards Bishop of Northampton. In 1852 he was ordained to the Sub Diaconate and Diaconate at Oscott by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Ullathorne, the present Bishop of Birmingham, and he went to see his parents in Galway. He spent the Christmas of that year with his family, and he gave the blessing. He then, in a voice that conveyed authority and enforced obedience, ordered every one out of the church, and with a few well-chosen words fixed the attention of all on the importance of going quickly and promptly to enforce his command until scarcely a soul remained in the deserted church. In the meantime, the fire, which was over and around, had been gathering such headway that he had scarcely left the church before it burst out the whole length of the building, roaring and flaming up the steeple in a most frightful manner. When he left he carried forth the Blessed Sacrament and having deposited it in a safe place quickly returned to the scene to direct the efforts of the congregation towards saving what was possible. His energy, however, was quickly sufled in another direction, for the wind being from that point it was blowing the new Lyceum building, which has taxed his energy for the last four months, was in danger. It was impossible from the first discovery of the fire to check its ravages, the whole masonry, massive part of the main ceiling being on fire, so was part of the side wall.

The efforts made to check the flames caused only to increase their fury so that they quickly leaped to the front and up the steeple. It was a not bad beautiful sight. The cross now towered while the flames wafted and swayed the steeple below the cross, they formed a few arch around, until it toppled to the ground; as it did so a great cry arose from all, many swinging their hands and weeping to see the destruction of the church which grew with the congregation and was identified with the whole growth of Catholicity in this place. Many laughable yet sad things occurred during the conflagration; as for instance, while the last sacred vestment was in the sacristary exhorting the people to go out orderly, lest a panic might be prevented, the story got started that he was still in the church. The alarm spread so quickly that some ran wildly about crying, "the priest is lost!" "Oh, where is our father?" When he came out on the top of the endangered Lyceum directing the men and women, assisting them to save that building. One show boy became so excited after he left the school that he came down town and rushed on some unfortunate fire was over and the church in ruins he everybody was distracted by hunting high and low for shavin, coats, etc. But perhaps the most amusing incident was furnished by the man who unhitched his team from his sleigh and then pulled, like mad, "Somebody for God's sake help me get this rig away."

The church was a very ordinary frame structure, the first of which was built about ten years; but two successive additions had been built by its zealous pastor since then, and so rapid had been the increase of the congregation, that it was now about to be removed, yet, as I have said, it was identified with the growth of Catholicity in Galway, and would be regarded by the hearts of all, that for years the numerous congregation had knelt and poured out some through tears of sorrow. But, thanks be to God and to the prudence and assiduous labors of our pastor, we have a temporary place in the Lyceum until we can erect another and, it is to be hoped, a better place of worship. But it will come hard upon those who must build, as it has required the hearty co-operation of the Bishop of Galway to enable Father Lentz to build the Lyceum. They were not counting the new expense. Twice there was an assessment of $1,500 but that will not raise more than half the actual loss, without considering the loss of time into which we are plunged at present. We hope, however, our Reverend Father will not have much trouble in going ahead with the good work, and that in a few years we shall have a better and more fitting place of worship.—Emerald Vindicator.

A CHURCH DESTROYED.

Burning of St. John's Church at Tipton, Indiana.

December 14th, '85, will long be remembered by the Catholics of Tipton. Father Lewis, the pastor, the day before began the Forty Hours' Devotion to the Blessed Sacrament, and all day long a goodly number of persons were coming and going to and from the devotion. On Monday night, just after vespers, fire was discovered over the altar. Father Lentz had proceeded to the middle of the sanctuary but a few seconds when in a moment the flames gave the blessing. He then, in a voice that conveyed authority and enforced obedience, ordered every one out of the church, and with a few well-chosen words fixed the attention of all on the importance of going quickly and promptly and to enforce his command until scarcely a soul remained in the deserted church. In the meantime, the fire, which was over and around, had been gathering such headway that he had scarcely left the church before it burst out the whole length of the building, roaring and flaming up the steeple in a most frightful manner. When he left he carried forth the Blessed Sacrament and having deposited it in a safe place quickly returned to the scene to direct the efforts of the congregation towards saving what was possible. His energy, however, was quickly sufled in another direction, for the wind being from that point it was blowing the new Lyceum building, which has taxed his energy for the last four months, was in danger. It was impossible from the first discovery of the fire to check its ravages, the whole masonry, massive part of the main ceiling being on fire, so was part of the side wall.

The efforts made to check the flames caused only to increase their fury so that they quickly leaped to the front and up the steeple. It was a not bad beautiful sight. The cross now towered while the flames wafted and swayed the steeple below the cross, they formed a few arch around, until it toppled to the ground; as it did so a great cry arose from all, many swinging their hands and weeping to see the destruction of the church which grew with the congregation and was identified with the whole growth of Catholicity in this place. Many laughable yet sad things occurred during the conflagration; as for instance, while the last sacred vestment was in the sacristary exhorting the people to go out orderly, lest a panic might be prevented, the story got started that he was still in the church. The alarm spread so quickly that some ran wildly about crying, "the priest is lost!" "Oh, where is our father?" When he came out on the top of the endangered Lyceum directing the men and women, assisting them to save that building. One show boy became so excited after he left the school that he came down town and rushed on some unfortunate fire was over and the church in ruins he everybody was distracted by hunting high and low for shavin, coats, etc. But perhaps the most amusing incident was furnished by the man who unhitched his team from his sleigh and then pulled, like mad, "Somebody for God's sake help me get this rig away."

The church was a very ordinary frame structure, the first of which was built about ten years; but two successive additions had been built by its zealous pastor since then, and so rapid had been the increase of the congregation, that it was now about to be removed, yet, as I have said, it was identified with the growth of Catholicity in Galway, and would be regarded by the hearts of all, that for years the numerous congregation had knelt and poured out some through tears of sorrow. But, thanks be to God and to the prudence and assiduous labors of our pastor, we have a temporary place in the Lyceum until we can erect another and, it is to be hoped, a better place of worship. But it will come hard upon those who must build, as it has required the hearty co-operation of the Bishop of Galway to enable Father Lentz to build the Lyceum. They were not counting the new expense. Twice there was an assessment of $1,500 but that will not raise more than half the actual loss, without considering the loss of time into which we are plunged at present. We hope, however, our Reverend Father will not have much trouble in going ahead with the good work, and that in a few years we shall have a better and more fitting place of worship.—Emerald Vindicator.

Ourselves as Others See Us.

The Hon. Joseph Medill, writing to the Chicago Tribune concerning his visit to the coast, says: "Washington Territory had 11,594 inhabitants in 1860, 23,118 in 1870, and 75,116 in 1880, and is alleged to contain now 125,000, which is somewhat over the mark. Its two largest towns are Seattle and Tacoma—the former with 12,000 and the latter with 5,000 inhabitants. The total population of both Oregon and Washington is, therefore, something like 275,000 at this time. As railway building has ceased in both, and the "boom" manner thereby has subsided, hard times have set in and seem to stay for a

Poetry.

A LYRIC OF CULTURE.

THE AIM AND FATE OF A COLORADAN.

An officer stood at the crossing one day,
Who with anecdotes, questions was fired;
When a beautiful maiden, pleased his way,
The road to the "dépôt" inquired.

The weary policeman directed her straight
To the street through which she should go,
While the elderly lady, she seemed to be late
For the train, whither fled the "dépôt."

Then a man with the press came up amazed
Cops, sewers, pitcher and trough,
Came up and inquired, with an anxious air,
The way to the street to the "dépôt."

The officer gave the directions to them,
Though he was amazed, it was clear,
That they approached him and said "If you please,
Is it far to the 'dépôt' from here?"

Amazed in a runaway pair
Came up, with the speed of a skipper,
Stiff winging its flight through the ambient air,
The "pointed" way to the "dépôt."

The officer silently pointed the way;
Then, in a tone of reproach,
For the sake as Englishman, asking, "I say,
Can you tell me the way to the station?"

The officer's nose at the crossing no more,
For something's gone wrong in his brain,
And he hastily hurried him, his mind to restore
By a bump for the thirsty insane.

Oh, why, ever have Culture and Science
And he seems to find some consolation
In asking, thus, "Pray, is this Hyde, Doppo, dapps, dopps, or dopp, or station?"

THE TRUE MAN.

Dares to count not take the load
Of a Christianity dying, and amidst
The just, the kind, in word and deed,
Go, entire to be both good and great?
Fall with hands, and fall with brain
The apple, and the pear, and the plum?
Try the obstacle, and try the cold
Of the world, and the warmest will;
Perform a good work and
Stay in the hotwells gush.
With earnest love for God you can
To pay the onward course of man,
Thy fortune prosperity, and
To point that shine with dazzling light—
The glorious light of the Lord, in Christ,
Which Heaven has sent us from above,
Where the every pilgrim's way,
As onward he from day to day,
Thoughts and deeds of light and love,
Struggles for a town of years!

Struggles to conquer every ill
By faith, and hope, and charity;
Keep the land with unshaken will—
Brave mortuaries manfully,
Sheath the blade of sword of war,
Dwell in peace—from strife withdraw,
But if needed, dare all to fight
For justice, freedom, truth and right,
Preserve the land and plough the wave,
Trust the Lord—and be—
For Heaven's sake, and for man's good brain—
That sin—which is—the greatest bane—
Must—must—be and bound to go.
Who is—who—dare—who—believe—
And oh! call the coming age
Of science—of Christianity's page—
With all that is sublime in art—
Of philosophy—that sage part
Of love, down-fallen, long down fallen,
His love, overthrown—

MY LITTLE OWN QUESTION.

Who was ready for bed and lay on my arm
In her little frilled cap, so fine,
With her cheeks half falling out at the edge,
Like a circle of moss unshaken
And I loosed the old tune of "Rasberry Cross"
And "Three Men Who Put Out to Sea,"
When she sleptly said, as she closed her blue eyes,
"Papa, what would you take for me?"

And I answered, "A dollar, dear little heart."
And she slept, baby weary with play,
Like a rose-bud soon unfolded,
And I hummed the old tune of "Rasberry Cross"
And "Three Men Who Put Out to Sea."
When she sleptly said, as she closed her blue eyes,
"Papa, what would you take for me?"

And I answered, "A dollar, dear little heart."
And she slept, baby weary with play,
Like a rose-bud soon unfolded,
And I hummed the old tune of "Rasberry Cross"
And "Three Men Who Put Out to Sea."
When she sleptly said, as she closed her blue eyes,
"Papa, what would you take for me?"

Literary Miscellany.

A True Story.

How a Plucky Woman Supported Her Family and Landed a Big Business.

"Well, Grace, my poor child," said a dignified old gentleman, "I have looked over your matters of every, and I must say I see nothing but hard times for you and your family.

"Well, father," replied a bright little woman of twenty five, "though the outlook for us is dark, I do not think we shall starving, nor of letting my family starve—not if God spares my health.

"You were always a brave child, Grace, but this is a terrible crisis. It would be cruel in any one to deny you one, but remember that I told you and George it was very imprudent for a man to marry till he had got something ahead in case of an emergency.

"I remember, father, that you thought I should be wiser to marry a man with a house and a store for whom I did not care, than to marry George, with one thousand dollars a year. But if I had the choice to make over again to day, I should do just as I did then. I would not change places with any woman on earth—even you.

"I am a faithful wife and a brave little woman, Grace, not—

"But what, Father?

"But I will live, father, and live well, too, and take care of Georgs and his babies."

"How?

Ay, that was the word that had been ringing in the heart of this brave little woman ever since her husband, Mr. George Hunt, had failed of his deal, and had been brought home suspectedly dying.

"Well, Grace, I will do what I can for you," said the old gentleman, "and—and—if it were only for you and the babies I should say at once, come home and be at my side. Some day you were four years ago, but, you know, the home is so small we have not room for two in it."

Grace smiled a sad smile, and then said, perhaps a little pointedly:

"Four of us would occupy no more room than three; the babies are too little to be away from us at night. But if your house were twice as large, father, I could not take my husband's own little home away from him now that he is sick. I shall have to decide soon, and will let you know my plans.

The respectable old gentleman rose up, and with his handkerchief polished his already shining heavy, kissed his daughter and patted the heads of the babies, and turned to go, saying:

"Know my age good heart, child, and remember that the ravens fed Elijah.

"Well, I don't know what there to feed one; I prefer to feed myself," replied the equally little woman, who felt that it was rather hard in her father to discourage her and then either her to keep up a good heart.

She loved her old man, although he was stiff and narrow in his views, and never for get a slight offered his daughter. He had loved him to the door, and said:

"Good-bye, father, you very love to mother," although the real mother, who would have found room enough in her heart for them all, had been dead for years in the grave.

It was twilight, and as the old gentleman was going down the steps, a young man came up.

"Ah, good-evening, good evening," said the stout, good-natured hotel keeper to both, and then turned to Grace, who had risen on the borrow business. My wife says she can't please the lazy man in my country store and she changed pickles and honey. (I'd Spare Ribs called out the minute he was gone.) Some people want 'Come Bruce, borrow some of your neighbor's pickles for me. Why can't nobody in town make pickles and catsup, and show folks like yours? My wife's cook that can't be beat on bread and pastry, and she thinks she is. I don't ought to practice herself to you on some things, I tell her.

Grace who had known Bruce all her life, smiled and said:

"I'll give you a jar with all my heart, Mr. Bruce, and that won't pay your wife for the kindness she has sent in to Georgs. I have my cucumbers all ready to make my pickles, and I have a jar for you.

"Suppose we make a bargain, Mrs. Hunt. I'll buy two barrels of the best Boston price, if you'll make 'em for me; and show chemistry in your pickles.

Grace laughed without making any direct answer, and the hotel keeper went with her to get the jar.

A good gentleman went down the street whistling with a sigh:

"The Lord knows who is crying to feed them family! I can't do it, for wife says I can't, and she knows everything most. And grieve is terribly obstinate."

Well, the hotel-keeper ran back the next morning to see if his pickles were all right, some men would have been to find a nugget of gold that same; for he had a rival who spoil the old savers, and he wanted to keep all the lawyers who came there to hold court in his customers.

Grace had a long talk with her husband that night. Next day an old school friend, who had always been like a sister, came to see her, with the sad news that her little babies, and Grace went to the city, tan miles away, in an early train, with a small little basket in her hand. If any one had been near enough when she put her little basket upon the platform of the depot with our spirit, he might have heard her whisper:

"Oh, my family starve while I am alive and in my health!"

The day was lovely, and everybody on the cars and on the street looked cheerful and happy. Of course there were sick and lame and blind and deaf people, but heaven was keeping them out of her sight that day, and bringing before her happy grown folks and merry little ones.

The streets looked so clean and the air seemed so pure that she charged herself with having borne false witness against the beautiful, as she walked with a light heart through the principal streets, visiting first a store and then a hotel.

In each place she asked for the proprietor or the steward, opened her basket, and drew out three glass jars containing pickles, chow-chow and catsup. In one moment she had her business and the necessity that brought her to it. Her cheerful face, her prompt manner and well chosen words, the nice look and the appetizing taste of her preserves, gained the victory for her. Nice was back at night, pledged to supply home made pickles, catsup and chow-chow, for two hotels, and five large groceries, and she whispered as she mounted the steps of her little home:

"I will show father whether or not we are going to starve."

Her cheerful story of success did more for her poor, disheartened husband than then a peck of pills could have done. He said in a cheerful tone:

"Now, girls, I feel as if I was going to get about again, and this is the first time I have had any hope."

Grace kept away from her father till she had visited the market gardens and the skirts of the town, and engaged a great supply of cucumbers, onions, peppers and tomatoes, and had brought back the strong help she had at first thought to discharge, to assist her in her new work.

But if you could only hear, or see the size of the gentleman's eye, and the style of mouth he put up, and heard his exclamations.

"Why, Grace, you are crazy! What will your mother say? You surely forget that her first husband was president of the Marine National Bank, and that I am cashier of it! Why, everybody will say your daughter making pickles for taverns and groceries!

"I wish ever heard of a bank officer's daughter sitting down and starving when trouble came!" replied the little lady.

"Why don't you teach music?

"Because I don't know it well enough.

"You might keep a few very genteel boarders, and take in sewing. I don't care to keep house, and who pay largely.

"Where are they, and where's the house and furniture for them?

"Why, father, I'm going to night—oh, or you might offer and force his wife to take them, and yet pay the money, that people can do, in the hope of showing others into the belief that they are working for him rather than into charity. But, now the old gentleman sobbed:

"I am afraid to go home, lest it be—about your mother's sake!

The good woman soon heard it, and she talked angrily about what Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Col. West, and Miss Allen would say, and she was almost inclined to think it would be better to give Grace five hundred dollars than to be disgraced in society.

"Grace wouldn't take any money, replied the old gentleman, whose attitude during the conversation were that of one angel in a cutting battleaxe without any umbrella.

"Dreadful independent for anybody that's poor, and—

"But what, Father?

"But I will live, father, and live well, too, and take care of Georgs and the babies.

"How?

Ay, that was the word that had been ringing in the heart of this brave little woman ever since her husband, Mr. George Hunt, had failed of his deal, and had been brought home suspectedly dying.

"Well, Grace, I will do what I can for you," said the old gentleman, "and—and—if it were only for you and the babies I should say at once, come home and be at my side. Some day you were four years ago, but, you know, the home is so small we have not room for two in it."

Grace smiled a sad smile, and then said, perhaps a little pointedly:

"Four of us would occupy no more room than three; the babies are too little to be away from us at night. But if your house were twice as large, father, I could not take my husband's own little home away from him now that he is sick. I shall have to decide soon, and will let you know my plans.

The respectable old gentleman rose up, and with his handkerchief polished his already shining heavy, kissed his daughter and patted the heads of the babies, and turned to go, saying:

"Know my age good heart, child, and remember that the ravens fed Elijah.

"Well, I don't know what there to feed one; I prefer to feed myself," replied the equally little woman, who felt that it was rather hard in her father to discourage her and then either her to keep up a good heart.

She loved her old man, although he was stiff and narrow in his views, and never for get a slight offered his daughter. He had loved him to the door, and said:

"Good-bye, father, you very love to mother," although the real mother, who would have found room enough in her heart for them all, had been dead for years in the grave.

It was twilight, and as the old gentleman was going down the steps, a young man came up.

"Ah, good-evening, good evening," said the stout, good-natured hotel keeper to both, and then turned to Grace, who had risen on the borrow business. My wife says she can't please the lazy man in my country store and she changed pickles and honey. (I'd Spare Ribs called out the minute he was gone.) Some people want 'Come Bruce, borrow some of your neighbor's pickles for me. Why can't nobody in town make pickles and catsup, and show folks like yours? My wife's cook that can't be beat on bread and pastry, and she thinks she is. I don't ought to practice herself to you on some things, I tell her.

Grace who had known Bruce all her life, smiled and said:

"I'll give you a jar with all my heart, Mr. Bruce, and that won't pay your wife for the kindness she has sent in to Georgs. I have my cucumbers all ready to make my pickles, and I have a jar for you.

"Suppose we make a bargain, Mrs. Hunt. I'll buy two barrels of the best,

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1886.

A HOLIDAY GIFT FOR THE MONITOR.

We know that the Monitor has hundreds of friends and admirers all over the coast who appreciate the paper so fully as to desire to assist in its extension. We think, therefore, that if proper petitions we would suggest that this is the best time to SEND TO THE MAIL AND MONITOR of a NEW SUBSCRIBER AS A HOLIDAY GIFT. We will cheerfully send SPECIMEN COPIES of the MONITOR to any address for the purpose, if necessary, but in most cases it is sufficient to show YOUR FRIEND any copy of the paper and ASK HIM TO SUBSCRIBE. A postal note for $3.00 costs only 2 cents, or Wells, Fargo & Co. will receipt for $3.00 for the Monitor for 6 cents, and this amount can be deducted by such friends as may feel sufficient interest in the "GRAND OLD MONITOR" to extend its circulation among their Catholic neighbors, and then earn our gratitude for a most acceptable Holiday Gift.

Editorial Notes.

—The Cologne Gazette says there is not hereafter to be a Parliament at Westminster, but a "Parsellment."

—A recent colloquium from London says that the decision has summoned the Liberal members of Parliament to a meeting on the 16th inst. He privately promises them that he will then make a fresh statement of the principle upon which he proposes to settle the Irish question.

—Great regret is expressed in the daily press dispatches over the death of Mr. Joseph Hyam Levy, New York, for the peculiar and questionable reason that "her death will delay the arrangements" for a slogging match between her son and the indomitable Sullivan. So runs the world away!

—Two French women recently entered into a contest to determine which of them could talk the faster. A mutual friend was appointed umpire, and the sum of 1,000 francs was to go to the winner. For three hours they read from the same book, and during that time the victor succeeded in pronouncing 206,311 words. Her adversary came in a bad second with 203,560 words.

—The Western Watchman says that Governor Stoneman's reply to Secretary Bayard "was brutal in the extreme," and alleges as a reason therefor that Governor Stoneman is a Republican and that Secretary Bayard is a Democrat. This is a mistake. Governor Stoneman was elected on the Democratic ticket but we have grave doubts that the same honor will ever be paid to him again.

—During its existence of six centuries, the Franciscan Order has given to the Church 247 saints and Beatti, 1,506 martyrs (3,800 are found in the Martologia Francescano), 13 Popes, 50 Cardinals, 4,000 Archbishops and Bishops, 6,000 authors. At present 2,500 Franciscans are engaged in missionary labors, and another thousand Capuchin Fathers may be added to the number, in all, 3,500.

—The Pastor informs us that the Fathers of Italian petitioned Rome to grant as reprise to the Clergy of the United States the offices of St. Philip of Jasca, St. Turibius and St. Francis Solanus. The petition has been granted, and the feast of the first Saint will fall on the 5th of February; that of the second on the 27th of April, and the third on the 24th of July.

—We learn from the Diario Oficiel of Mexico, that Captain James B. Eads' ship railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec will soon be an accomplished fact. The Mexican Congress has approved and sanctioned the recent contract between the executive and Captain Eads, stipulating merely some modifications and amendments to several clauses of the former contract, principally tending to do away with any international complications that might arise from the working of said ship railway.

—The editor of the Michigan Catholic gives vent to his lamentations over the trials of a religious editor after this fashion: "The trials and vexations which beset the path of the average Catholic journalist, and the inmile he is forced to endure without complaint lest he be prosecuted of his work, for which he receives small pay and but little encouragement, would make a very startling if not an edifying topic for a newspaper article." Other poor trials and vexations up to God, good Brother, and avantosilly your sorrow will be turned to joy and your very vexations will be the same of your spiritual victory.

—In alluding to the rise of cranes which seems to be the controlling power among all classes in our day, Rufus Hatch, the well-known Wall street manipulator, is reported as saying that "Nobody goes for thousands nowadays, and hundreds are not so much as mentioned. There's millions in it, or nothing worth striving for, in the eyes of speculators. The very boys that skurry past us with messages are going into the future, and there seeing themselves millionaires."

—The telephone is destined to be one of the most useful inventions of the age. What it is capable of accomplishing may be imagined from the fact that on a recent occasion an extraordinary feat in telephoning was successfully accomplished between St. Petersburg and Bodigno, a distance of 2,465 miles. Conversation was kept up, notwithstanding a rather high induction. The experiments were made during the night, when the telegraph wires were not at work. The Russian engineers hope to succeed in conversing by telephone over a distance of 4,965 miles.

—The year 1886 opened propitiously in Dublin, as on the birth-day of the New Year Michael Davitt took his seat as member of the Dublin Town Council. Mr. Davitt completed the office with the understanding that he was to represent the artisan and laboring classes. He has intimated that he does not intend to don the usual robe and other customary trappings of office. He makes no secret of his intention to unearth abuses, and these in plenty of scope for his energies. It is currently believed that his principal object is to compel the Corporation to demolish the rookeries which form the slums of Dublin and to replace them with plain but wholesome tenements, thus furnishing decent homes for the industrious poor and giving work to thousands of unemployed workmen.

—The more liberal minded portion of the American press is beginning to realize the fact that America owes a debt to Ireland which can be paid now by helping Parnell to gain Home Rule. The National Republican of Washington, D. C., says on this subject: "We, as a people, owe a debt of gratitude to Ireland and the Irish, and now is a good time to pay some installments on that obligation—not for hatred or malice toward England, but for love of liberty."

—A short time ago there left Dublin for Galway by the Midland railroad what seems would call a social phenomenon, viz., a respectable young man who could not speak or understand one word of English, having never spoken any other language from truck. He had been a fortnight in Dublin, and during that time required in the capital of his native country to be accompanied everywhere by an interpreter. The young man is a native of the island of Boffin, off the Connemara coast, where, out of some six or seven hundred inhabitants, only nine speak English. On this island they possess a rich treasure of traditional folk lore, old poems, etc. Fifty years ago, on a large estate in West Galway, there was not one tenant who spoke English.

—There is a good deal of genial humor indulged in just now at the following incident which is true of more than one town in New England: The authorities of a New England town recently, through their Congressman, applied to the War Department for a transcript of the military records of the soldiers furnished to the army by the town during the late Civil war. To furnish them was against the ordinary rules of the department, but as they were "for historical purposes," to be used at some approaching anniversary, a concession was made. The files were examined and disclosed the fact that the names of about sixty citizens of the township had been drawn in the wheel and twenty-four of these persons were, upon examination, accepted. Further search disclosed the fact that twenty-three of them furnished substitutes and the other one fled to Canada.

—Alluding to the recent great electoral victory in Ireland, the Dublin Nation says: "In presence of this great Irish triumph—we are happy to know, by a union of Irishmen of all creeds and all classes—not a dog-mad to pause and take breath. It is a demonstration both astonishing and unique. It is one for which generations of Irishmen looked in vain, which many Irishmen never hoped to see, which would have been a consolation and encouragement to thousands who died heart-broken because they despaired of ever seeing so splendid a manifestation of national feeling and so great a proof of Irish capacity for statesmanship. To no Irishmen of to-day who have participated in it, it is a compensation for many disappointments and sufferings, and a stimulant to carry on the battle for Ireland, with even greater zeal and energy than in the past, till the triumph of the election is crowned by the formal submission of the Irish Legislature to the indomitable will of the Irish nation."

—At a meeting of the National League, held in Dublin last week, the terrible distress among the people of the west coast of Ireland was considered. Several members made speeches deploring the condition of affairs and attributing it mainly to evictions. The Treasurer of the League reported that within the past two weeks £3,062 had been received for the Plan of Campaign fund and £253 for the League fund. Mr. Harris, member of Parliament, who presided, expressed the great pleasure which had been afforded him by Mr. Gladstone's favorable references to Irish Home Rule schemes, as Mr. Gladstone's words were of more consequence and were entitled to greater consideration than those of Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Bright, or even Lord Randolph Churchill. Irish industries, he said, had sunk to the lowest point, and it would be a hard task for Parnell and his followers to revive those industries. Only Home Rule would enable them to bring about a revival. Ireland would then reverse her proper position among the nations of the earth. Union Home Rule was granted the agitation would be continued on the old lines, and the Irish in America would freely help their countrymen.

—"High License," seems to be the newest and most practical method of dealing with intoxication and crime. We are glad to know that an effort is being made in this city to introduce this new motor in the promotion of morality into San Francisco, and we have the most sanguine hopes of its success. The system has worked well in Chicago, St. Paul, and many other cities, hence we know it will be thoroughly practical in this city. In Chicago the amount of revenue derived from liquor licenses under the new law has increased from $200,000 to $1,500,000 a year, and the number of saloons has decreased from 13,000 to 9,000. The license charge is only $500, which is much less in proportion to the amount of "goods" sold and the profits upon them than the legal tax paid by retail merchants who do the same amount of trade in other lines. The license is, therefore, not a hardship, and those who pay it are protected from a competition that would deduct more from their profits than the tax does. The diminution in the number of drinking places is a distinct gain to the community in three ways. Those that are closed are usually of the lowest type, the temptations to drink are diminished, and the police supervision of the traffic is made easier by a reduction in the number, amounting to nearly one-half, and by the interest of those who pay high licenses in aiding in the suppression of unlicensed sale. Both in the matter of decorum and of regulation—high license is vindicating its wisdom.

Progress of the Church in Ten Years.

Ten years is but a second a span in the life of a nation, yet, even in that brief period, it is cheering to know that the Church of God has made such progress in this free land as will be gratifying to every Christian heart.

We have before us Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1886 and also for the year 1876, and from the ecclesiastical summary therein published, we glean the following statistics showing the increase of churches, priests, schools, educational and charitable institutions during the past ten years.

ECCLESIASTICAL SUMMARY.

	1876.	1886.
Archdioceses in the United States,	8	12
Bishops,	75	82
Priests,	5,507	6,726
Churches,	5,600	6,250
Chapels and Stations,	1,917	2,961
Theological Seminaries,	26	36
Ecclesiastical Students,	1,078	1,024
Colleges,	60	85
Academies and Select Schools,	357	418
Parochial Schools,	1,645	2,021
Asylums and Hospitals,	310	449

The foregoing table exhibits a most gratifying increase in every department of the Church. The Hierarchy has been increased, as we refer to supply the new dioceses which it was necessary to establish in order to meet the requirements of the Church in New Hampshire, where the Diocese of Manchester has since been established; in Michigan, where the Diocese of Grand Rapids has been established; in New Jersey, where the Diocese of Trenton has been established; in Montana, where the Diocese of Helena was established; in Alaska, attached to Vancouver Island; in Iowa, where the Diocese of Davenport was established; in Kansas, where the Diocese of Leavenworth has been established; in Dakota, where a Vicariate Apostolic has been established; in Nebraska, where the Diocese of Omaha has been established; in Illinois, where the Diocese of Peoria has been established, and in the Indian Territory where a Prefecture Apostolic has been established. During the last ten years the increase in the number of priests has been 2,222; the increase in the number of churches has been 1,799; the increase in chapels and stations has been 1,322; the increase in the number of theological students has been 548; the increase in the number of colleges has been 22; the increase in the number of academies and select schools has been 61; the increase in the number of parochial schools has been 376; the increase in the number of asylums and hospitals has been 139. It would be interesting to know the ratio of increase in the soldiers attending Parochial schools in the past ten years; but as the number is not mentioned in the Catholic Directory for 1876, we can only give the figures for 1886, which shows that there are 492,945 children attending the Catholic schools in the United States, thus saving the tax payers in all parts of the Union at least $5,000,000 a year.

The progress of the Church as designated by the statistics already given—are very gratifying, and it will be no less interesting to the readers of the MONITOR to learn that the progress of each Diocese on this coast has well kept pace with the growth of the Church in all sections of the Union.

The following tables will show our readers at a glance the progress made by the Church in the Dioceses mentioned, during the past ten years:

ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Churches,	40	131
" " Chapels and Stations,	16	25
" " Priests (Regular),	21	75
" " Priests (Secular),	79	110
" " Theolog. Students,	20	36
" " Educat. Institut. &c.,	3	8

DIOCESE OF MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Churches,	27	34
" " Chapels and Stations,	11	22
" " Priests (Regular),	4	8
" " Schools and Institut.,	24	28

DIOCESE OF GRASS VALLEY.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Secular Priests,	25	35
" " " Churches,	25	35
" " " Stations,	70	73
" " Female Religious Inst.,	1	1
" " Male " "	1	1
" " Female Literary Inst.,	2	2
" " Orphan Asylums, Hospitals,	2	3

ARCHDIOCESE OF OREGON CITY.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Priests,	27	35
" " Churches and Chapels,	20	28
" " Religious Orders for Male Priests,	1	1
" " Colleges for Boys,	1	1
" " Parochial schools,	1	1
" " Hospitals and Orph.	2	2

DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Priests,	15	27
" " Churches and Chapels,	15	27
" " Literary Institutions for Orphans,	11	15
" " Charitable Institutions,	1	1

DIOCESE OF VANCOUVER ISLAND.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Priests,	7	7
" " Churches,	2	11
" " Schools for Boys,	1	1
" " Academies for Girls,	1	2

VICARIATE-APOSTOLIC OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

	1876.	1886.
Total number of Priests,	11	20
" " Churches and Chapels,	7	12
" " Schools and Convents,	2	2

It will be noticed in the foregoing statistics that the total increase in the number of priests, churches and schools in each Diocese on this coast, indicates a healthy and substantial progress based upon the increase of the Catholic population in the Ecclesiastical Divisions noted. This is the true test by which to judge the progress of any religious body, and the figures which we have given present irrefutable proof that the Catholic Church on this coast is flourishing in that degree which her most faithful children could desire.

—Our readers will be interested to know that the venerable Founder of the Order of the Little Sisters of the poor, the Rev. Augusta Le Pailleur, of the Diocese of Rennes, has just celebrated the golden jubilee of his ordination to the Priesthood. The Order was founded by him at St. Servan in 1840; and to-day it possess a 210 houses in all parts of the world, with about 2,000 Sisters, who devote themselves to the caring, feeding, and clothing of upwards of twenty-three thousand poor and helpless fellow creatures. His Holiness the Pope has written a letter of congratulation to the pious Founder.

The Redemptorist Order.

Now that a number of Missionary Priests of the Redemptorist Order have commenced a series of Missions in this Archdiocese, which will be continued throughout all the parishes therein, it is proper to lay before our readers a short sketch of the Order to which many and many a Catholic on this coast will be indebted for relighting in their souls the lamp of faith, and thus fostering them again to the friendship and grace of Almighty God.

The proper title of the Order to which we refer is "Congregation of the Most Holy Redemptor." The Order was founded by St. Alphonsus Ligouri at Scala, Naples, on November 9th, 1732, when that great Saint was but thirty-six years old. The Order was formally approved by Pope Benedict XIV., in 1749, the main object of the Congregation being the preaching of Missions and Spiritual Retreats to all classes of persons in all countries and languages in the world.

St. Alphonsus died on August 1st, 1787, in his ninety-first year, but before his demise he predicted the spread of his Order beyond the Alps, and it subsequently spread itself not only over Europe, but it has accompanied the West Indies, Australia and America within its embrace.

In 1832 the first establishment of the Redemptorist Fathers in America was opened in Detroit, Michigan, and in 1841 another band of Fathers opened an establishment in the Archdiocese of Baltimore, and subsequently the Order was established in St. Louis and many other cities throughout the Atlantic States.

The Fathers are bound by the three ordinary vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, as well as by an obligation entailing the perpetual preservation of the Order in the Institute. They are bound by their vow of poverty to refuse all benefices, offices or dignities outside their Congregation, and whenever a member is selected by the Sovereign Pontiff to preside over a see, the innovation of the rule can only be accomplished by the command of the Vicar of Christ and by his special dispensation. Even St. Alphonsus himself refused to accept the nomination to the See of St. Agatha of the Goths until this formidable load was thrown upon him.

A Providential Warning to Catholic Parents.

The rules of God come to His faithful followers in divers ways to call them to a sense of their duty. We recognize the voice of God in sickness, sorrow and affliction—we hear the voice of God in the thunder's roll and feel His power in the quaking earth. The voice that penetrates the human soul in a supernatural way is also heard in the warning which seven those outside the Church give as Catholics concerning the public-supported educational pitfalls which the Enemy of Catholicity has prepared for Catholic children.

Lorton, Catholic parents, who have children attending the Public Schools, we call attention to the address delivered on Thursday last, in this city, by Rev. Aaron Williams, during a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association. In that address Rev. Williams stated that in a recent conversation with a County Superintendent of Public Schools, that official had told him that three-fourths of the teachers—male and female—in the State schools were infidels. Rev. Mr. Williams expressed his surprise at a declaration so reasonably doubted its truth, whereon—as he said himself—he called upon the Superintendent to substantiate the fact, which was strongly borne by facts and figures fully satisfactory to Rev. Mr. Williams.

What a warning for those Catholic parents who patronize the Public schools and who seem to send their children to parochial schools in name at the request of the Vicar of Christ, the Prelates and the priests who have charge of their souls. Such bad strong parents take the entire risk of their souls salvation into their own hands, and their relives the Church of God from any future responsibility concerning the Christian faith of their children! What a terrible responsibility to assume! What an awful account they will have to give both to God and to the souls of God if they send their children to imbibe infidelity from their Public School teachers and then turn on the altar fire to be the sweet incense of Almighty God on earth! Our Lord sants children to Catholic parents in order that His faith and His Church may be propagated and perpetuated. Yet those Catholic parents who send their children to be molded by infidel teachers, thereby destroy the temple of faith which the hand of God has formed is that youthful soul, and these parents step—as far as they can—the propagation and the perpetuity of God's Church! What a dreadful crime against the Head of Christianity! What a fearful attitude of antagonism to assume against that God who is to judge every man according to his works! Catholic parents, therefore, will do well to give heed to this warning.

—A priest in the Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, who sends his annual subscription, makes the editorial heart throb with both pleasure and gratitude when he so generously passes this sentiment upon the good work which the MONITOR is accomplishing: "And now," he says, in consolidating his letter, "I take the opportunity of paying the "grand old MONITOR" this deserved tribute. If all my weekly dollars in the shape of newspapers it is the most welcome, and if its present tone is not changed will doubtless be always so. In its general make up, its, manly outspoken editorials in defence of God and our fatherland, so full of vigor and so replete with useful instruction so much needed in these times of doubt and infidelity and local columns so fraught of news—not of the sensational and nonsense kind so much sought after by the non-sectarian press—it has in my mind few if any equals and certainly none superior."

—Rev. John S. Flynn, pastor of St. Ann's Church, Cranston, R. I., died on the 3rd inst., unexpectedly, in his forty-sixth year. He was born in County Cavan, Ireland.

IRELAND'S GREAT VICTORY

The Voice of the People Heard Through the Ballot Box!

RESULTS OF IRISH UNITY!

Figures Denoting the Downfall of English Tyranny.

The following is a complete table showing the returns from every County in Ireland, will be read for the hundred time in every section of the world with inexpressible delight. The central Saxon at the few hundred miles east for the Wha' Tory, or Anti-National candidate is a large majority of the counties, and the thousand cut for the National candidate is the last proof that the vast preponderance of intelligence in nearly all parts of Ireland is with the Parnellite Party in its efforts to gain Home Rule for Ireland. Here are figures that will make the hearts of Ireland's friends thrill with delight

Uncontested Elections.

LEINSTER.

Dublin University	Sir Hugh Holmes (Con)
Dublin, North	Mr Hugh Holmes (Con)
Kildare, South	Mr James Lonsy (Nat)
Meath, East	Mr T Pilkie (Nat)
Meath, South	Mr E Sheil (Nat)
Meath, North	Dr Nulty (Nat)
Wexford, South	Mr John Barry (Nat)
Kilkenny (Borough)	Mr J F Smithwick (Nat)

MUNSTER.

York, North East	Mr Edward Leamy (Nat)
Kerry, North	Mr John Stack (Nat)
Limerick, East	Mr E Finucane (Nat)
Limerick, West	Mr Wm Abraham (Nat)

CONNAUGHT.

Mayo, North	Mr Daniel Crilly (Nat)
Mayo, East	Mr John O'Malley (Nat)
Galway, North	Colonel Nolan (Nat)
Galway, Connemara	Mr P J Foley (Nat)
Galway, South	Mr David Sheehy (Nat)

ULSTER.

Armagh, South	Mr Alex Blane (Nat)
Tyrone, East	Mr Thomas Sexton (Nat)
Donegal, West	Mr Patrick O'Hon (Nat)
Donegal, East	Mr Arthur Ellis (Nat)
Down, East	Captain Kerr (Con)
Newry (Borough)	Mr J M McCarthy (Nat)

Total—Nationalists	19
Conservatives	6
Total	25

The Contested Elections.

LEINSTER.

CARLOW
Edward Dwyer Gray, Nationalist	4,485
Sir Thomas Fetter, Anti-Nationalist	2,776
Majority for Nationalist	1,609
DUBLIN COUNTY.
NORTHERN DIVISION.
J J Healy, Nationalist	5,500
Lepper Gallbraith, Anti-Nationalist	4,175
Majority for Nationalist	1,325
SOUTHERN DIVISION.
Sir Thomas G Esmonde, Bart, Nat	5,337
Sir Edward Guinness, Anti-Nat	3,337
Majority for Nationalist	1,387
DUBLIN CITY.
COLLEGE GREEN DIVISION.
Mr T D Sullivan, Anti-Nationalist	5,545
Mr David Sherlock, Anti-Nationalist	5,500
Majority for Nationalist	45
STEPHEN'S GREEN DIVISION.
Mr E D Gray, Nationalist	5,000
Sir Edward Guinness, Nat. Anti-Nationalist	2,334
Majority for Nationalist	2,666
Mr T Harrington, Nationalist	5,000
Sir Edward Guinness, Anti-Nat	2,627
Majority for Nationalist	2,373
Mr T Sexton, Nationalist	5,000
Mr William Murphy, Nationalist	1,387
Majority for Nationalist	3,613
KILDARE.
NORTH DIVISION.
J L Carew, Nationalist	4,145
Baron De Robeck, Anti-Nationalist	3,416
Majority for Nationalist	729
KILKENNY (COUNTY)
NORTH DIVISION.
E Mulhallon Marum, Nationalist	3,000
Hon Charles Bertram Bellew, Anti-Nat	1,826
Majority for Nationalist	1,174
SOUTH DIVISION.
P A Chavasse, Nationalist	1,000
P A De La Poer, Anti-Nationalist	1,000
Majority for Nationalist	0
KING'S COUNTY.
SOUTH DIVISION.
Bernard O'Malley, Nationalist	3,400
Hon Mr Bernard, Anti-Nationalist	2,500
Majority for Nationalist	900
NORTH DIVISION.
Lorkan Hopkins, Nationalist	4,273
J C Leader, Anti-Nationalist	3,857
Majority for Nationalist	416
LONGFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
Justin M Carthy, Nationalist	3,000
J M Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	1,000
Majority for Nationalist	2,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Lawrence Connolly, Nationalist	3,000
James Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	2,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LOUTH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Joseph Nolan, Nationalist	3,000
Philip Callan	2,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
QUEEN'S COUNTY.
ERIS DIVISION.
Richard Lalor, Nationalist	3,740
Captain Crosby, Anti-Nationalist	2,500
Majority for Nationalist	1,240
COURT DIVISION.
Arthur O'Connor, Nationalist	3,000
Richard Cullen, Anti-Nationalist	2,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WESTMEATH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Donal Sullivan, Nationalist	3,000
H Southwood Smith, Anti-Nationalist	300
Majority for Nationalist	2,700
SOUTH DIVISION.
J Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	3,000
WEXFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
John E Redmond, Nationalist	3,000
Vincent Rapple, Anti-Nationalist	2,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WICKLOW.
W J Corbet, Nationalist	3,000
Lieut Col Charles George Tottenham, Anti-Nationalist	1,000
Majority for Nationalist	2,000
WEST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	3,721
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	873
Majority for Nationalist	2,848

MUNSTER.

CLARE.
NORTH DIVISION.
J E Redmond, Nationalist	6,291
Hon Lucius O'Brien, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	3,291
SOUTH DIVISION.
Jeremiah Jordan, Nationalist	4,262
Robert Keane, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,262
CORK (COUNTY)
NORTH DIVISION.
J C Flynn, Nationalist	4,000
J Walsh, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Daniel Tarsney, Nationalist	4,000
Arthur Patton, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
KERRY.
NORTH DIVISION.
Edward Harrington, Nationalist	4,000
Colonel Leslie, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
J F Sugan, Nationalist	4,000
Colonel Hussey Vivian, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LIMERICK (COUNTY)
Maurice Healy, Nationalist	4,000
J Pike, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
TIPPERARY.
NORTH DIVISION.
Thomas Mayne, Nationalist	4,000
Thomas Errot, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
J J Condon, Nationalist	4,000
Major Poe, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WATERFORD (CITY)
Michael Davitt, Nationalist	4,000
Fitz Hamilton, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WATERFORD (COUNTY)
Sir T M Healy, Nationalist	4,000
Sir Richard Cooper, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEST DIVISION.
Michael Davitt, Nationalist	4,000
Fitz Hamilton, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEXFORD (COUNTY)
NORTH DIVISION.
Matthew Harris, Nationalist	4,000
Hon C Wodehouse, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Michael Cowan, Nationalist	4,000
Colonel Tottenham, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
EAST DIVISION.
Lodge Hayden, Nationalist	4,000
J C Leader, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEST DIVISION.
John Deane, Nationalist	4,000
Colonel Colclough, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Thomas Sexton, Nationalist	4,000
Alexander Power, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
KILKENNY (COUNTY)
NORTH DIVISION.
Richard Lalor, Nationalist	4,000
Captain Crosby, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Arthur O'Connor, Nationalist	4,000
Richard Cullen, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WESTMEATH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Donal Sullivan, Nationalist	4,000
H Southwood Smith, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
J Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	4,000
Majority for Nationalist	4,000
WEXFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
John E Redmond, Nationalist	4,000
Vincent Rapple, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WICKLOW.
W J Corbet, Nationalist	4,000
Lieut Col Charles George Tottenham, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
EAST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
KING'S COUNTY.
SOUTH DIVISION.
Bernard O'Malley, Nationalist	4,000
Hon Mr Bernard, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
NORTH DIVISION.
Lorkan Hopkins, Nationalist	4,000
J C Leader, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LONGFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
Justin M Carthy, Nationalist	4,000
J M Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Lawrence Connolly, Nationalist	4,000
James Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LOUTH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Joseph Nolan, Nationalist	4,000
Philip Callan	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
QUEEN'S COUNTY.
ERIS DIVISION.
Richard Lalor, Nationalist	4,000
Captain Crosby, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
COURT DIVISION.
Arthur O'Connor, Nationalist	4,000
Richard Cullen, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WESTMEATH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Donal Sullivan, Nationalist	4,000
H Southwood Smith, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
J Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	4,000
Majority for Nationalist	4,000
WEXFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
John E Redmond, Nationalist	4,000
Vincent Rapple, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WICKLOW.
W J Corbet, Nationalist	4,000
Lieut Col Charles George Tottenham, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
EAST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
KING'S COUNTY.
SOUTH DIVISION.
Bernard O'Malley, Nationalist	4,000
Hon Mr Bernard, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
NORTH DIVISION.
Lorkan Hopkins, Nationalist	4,000
J C Leader, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LONGFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
Justin M Carthy, Nationalist	4,000
J M Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
Lawrence Connolly, Nationalist	4,000
James Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
LOUTH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Joseph Nolan, Nationalist	4,000
Philip Callan	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
QUEEN'S COUNTY.
ERIS DIVISION.
Richard Lalor, Nationalist	4,000
Captain Crosby, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
COURT DIVISION.
Arthur O'Connor, Nationalist	4,000
Richard Cullen, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WESTMEATH.
NORTH DIVISION.
Donal Sullivan, Nationalist	4,000
H Southwood Smith, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
SOUTH DIVISION.
J Wilson, Anti-Nationalist	4,000
Majority for Nationalist	4,000
WEXFORD.
NORTH DIVISION.
John E Redmond, Nationalist	4,000
Vincent Rapple, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WICKLOW.
W J Corbet, Nationalist	4,000
Lieut Col Charles George Tottenham, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
EAST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000
WEST DIVISION.
Garrett Michael Byrne, Nationalist	4,000
W F Dick, Anti-Nationalist	3,000
Majority for Nationalist	1,000

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1886.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK COMMENCING JANUARY 17.

17—Sunday—Second Sunday after the Epiphany.
18—Monday—St. Peter's Chair at Rome.
19—Tuesday—St. Canute, King and Martyr.
20—Wednesday—St. Fabian and Sebastian, Martyrs.
21—Thursday—St. Agnes, Virgin and Martyr.
22—Friday—St. Vincent and Anastasia, Martyrs.
23—Saturday—Espousals of the B. V. Mary and St. Joseph.

SETTLE UP THIS MONTH.

We ask as a special favor that all our subscribers who have received bills will send us their subscription during this month, as the cause of all subscribers on now being transferred to new

Farm and Home.

SOME GIRLS' NAMES.

Frances, is "unencumbered and free."
Bertha, "brilliant, nearly bright."
Clara, "clear" as the crystal sea;
Mary, a star of brilliant light.
Catharine, is "pure" as mountain air;
Barbara, means "a strange one."
Mabel, "like a lily fair;"
Hepsibeth, a soft, sweet star.
Felicia is a "happy girl;"
Matilda, is a "lady true;"
Margaret, is a shining "pearl;"
Isabella, "with the lofty brow;"
Susan, is a "lily white;"
Jane, has the "yellow" curls and crown;
Cecilia, dear, is "dim of sight;"
Sophia, always "wisdom" at her feet.

Constance, is free and "constant."
Teresa, a delicious "little meat;"
Charlotte, "noble, of good repute;"
Harriet, a fine "robe sweet;"
Isabella, is a "lady rare;"
Lucinda, "conspicuous as the day;"
Mary, means "a lady fair;"
Abigail, "joyful" as the May;
Elizabeth, "as oath of true;"
Adeline, "also princely, noble;"
Agatha, "is truly good and true;"
Lucille, "a joy by love crowned."

Jemima, "is soft sound in sky;"
Christina, "a sweet ripple's lake;"
Cornelia, "harmonious and fair;"
Salina, "a sweet nightingale;"
Lydia, "a refreshing well;"
Julia, "a song of merry praise;"
Julia, "a jewel more rare;"
Priscilla "modest of days.

Benefit of Early Rising.

At what hour of the day is a man at his strongest, and so able to do hard work with the least weariness? The answer returned by Dr. Bush, from the results of his experiments with the dynamometer, is that a man is at his best when he turns out of bed. The muscular force is greatly increased by breakfast and it attains to its highest point after the midday meal. It then sinks for a few hours, rising again towards evening, but steadily declines from night to morning. It is probable that there is some confusion here. We doubt a sudden and powerful effort, such as is registered by a dynamometer, is better made after the wheels have been some time in use, and any products of their disintegration which may have accumulated during the night and sleep have been washed away by the improved circulation that follows walking; but we can entertain little doubt that sustained effort, whether mental or bodily, could be performed during the morning, and not after the midday meal. Dr. Bush is, however, right in maintaining that the two chief foes of muscular force are overwork and idleness. Sweating whilst working deteriorates muscular force. Many of the greatest workers in the world, though not all, have been early risers. But early rising, according to Dr. Bush, might always to be supplemented by early breakfasting.

Weary Women.

There is nothing more reprehensible and thoroughly wrong, than the idea that a woman faithfully her duty by doing an amount of work far beyond her strength. She does not fulfill her duty, but she fails in it.

There can be no sadder sight than that of a broken-down, over-worked wife and mother—a woman who is tired all her life through.

The woman who spends her life in unnecessary labor is unfitted for the higher duties of home. She should be the haven of rest to which both husband and children turn for peace and refreshment. She should be the careful, intelligent adviser and guide of one, the tender confidant and helpmate of the other.

How is it possible for a woman, exhausted in body, as a natural consequence in mind, also, to perform either of these offices? No, it is not possible, nature gives way beneath it. She loses health and spirits, and hopefulness and more than all, her youth—the last thing a woman should allow to slip from her, for no matter how old she is in years, she should be young in heart and feeling, for the youth of age is something more attractive than youth itself.

To the over-worked woman this green old age is out of the question; old age comes on, sere and yellow, before it is time. Her disposition is ruined, her temper is soured, her very nature is changed by the burden, which, to so heavy carry, is dragged along as long as vexation feet and tired hands can do their part.

Even her affections are blunted, and she becomes merely a machine—a woman without the time to have a companion, without the time to train and guide her children as only a mother can—a wife, without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman so over-worked during the day, that when night comes, heroic thought, the most intense longing, is for sleep, that probably will not come; and even if it should, that she is too tired to enjoy.

Be ye fair and everything go unfinished, to live as best she can, than to entail on herself and family the curse of over work.

Nutmegs.

Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like lilac bushes, and are generally not over five feet high. The flowers are very much like the lilac of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of this fruit, and Jesse is the thin covering over the seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe it breaks open, and shows a red inside. These trees grow on the islands of Asia and tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them all the seasons. The nutmeg is taken from over four thousand nutmegs on it every year. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Bands Islands, and conquered all the other traders, and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up, they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was as big as a church. Nutmegs are not sympathies with cook meats. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch had determined should not be done—carried those nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew again, and the world had the benefit.

Red Noses.

Why is a drun drinker's nose red? The question is answered by Dr. J. B. Johnson, a Washington physician, who says that the drun-drinker's heart beats about thirteen times oftener in the minute than the heart of one who does not drink alcohol. The arteries, in consequence of this increased heart action, carry the blood to the nose quicker than the veins carry it back. The blood, therefore, remains congested in the overfilled vessels, and the nose and the face as well then become habitually red. So stagnant is the blood that when the drun-drinker's nose meets a sudden current of cold air it immediately turns purple and remains until warm air restores the red color. So the red nose is caused by congestion. Every organ of the body is in a similar state—a warning of an impending fate and to be avoided.

How to Test Butter.

There is a qualitative test for butter so simple that any housewife can put it into successful practice. A clean piece of white paper is smeared with a little of the suspected butter. The paper is then rolled up and set on fire. If the butter is pure the smell of the burning paper is rather pleasant; but the odor is distinctly tallowy if the "butter" is made up wholly or in part of animal fats.—Scientific American.

Family Fun.

Melting a Tramp's Heart.

He had stopped at a cosy-looking cottage and rung the door-bell, and asked the servant who answered for something to eat. She stated that she would summon her mistress. The latter soon appeared and found the tramp gazing on the narrow border of grass which lined the flower beds of the front yard.

"Why, what are you doing?" she asked. "I'm hungry, mum, for Pain's bad nothin' to eat for three days."

"But do you eat grass?"

"Yes'm, when I ain't got nothin' else."

"Come before you must be hungry—they I help you!"

"Yes'm, you could, if you'd give me some thing to eat. The grass is mighty short down there."

"I will help him," remarked the sympathetic little wife to the servant, as such wiped a tear from her eyes, and continuing, said:

"Jane, take the poor fellow in the back yard—the grass is so much taller there."

Took it too Literally.

They did not often give dinner parties, and never gave a large one; but at the little reunions to which they did invite their friends they liked everything the best. So, on the afternoon of one of their choice little feasts, the host summoned his boy in buttons, and said:

"Now, John, you must be very correct how you hand round the wine."

"Yes, sir."

"Those bottles with the black seals are the best, and those with red seals the inferior sherry. The best sherry is for after dinner, the inferior sherry you will hand round with your black sherry soup. You understand—black soup, and inferior sherry after soup."

"Yes, sir, perfectly," said the boy in buttons.

And the evening came, and the guests came, and everything was progressing admirably till the boy went round the table asking of every guest:

"Hock or inferior sherry?"

Everybody took hock.

He Understood the Women.

She answered the ring at the door to find a strange man on the steps.

"Any fly screens?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Any fly paper?"

"No, sir."

"Any powders for making lemonade?"

"No, sir."

"Any painting or whitewashing to do?"

"No, sir."

"Want some Paris green to kill garden insects?"

"No, sir."

"Not any old clothes to sell?"

"No, sir.

"Not any coal to put in or wood to split?"

"No, sir.

"Couldn't you spare me—"

"What's that, sir?

"Oh, never mind. My wife is barefoot, and I was going to ask for a pair of old shoes, but it would be no use. You have got such a dainty little foot that my wife couldn't get her big toe into one of your shoes."

When he left he had an old coat on his arm, a quarter in cash in his pocket, and there was a square meal stowed away behind his vest.

A Protestant Lady in Church.

Is stayed at home and she wart to church after dinner he asked her.

"What was the text, wife?"

"Oh, something, somewhere in Generations; I've forgotten the chapter and verse. Mrs. Hig sat right before me, in a Mother Hubbard bonnet on. How could I hear anything when I could not even see the sermon? I could have worn my bonnet to a thing to church, if I'd had to have gone bareheaded."

"How did you like the new minister?"

"Oh, he's splendid! and Kate Darlin was there in a Spanish lace cape that never cost a cent less than $50; and they can't pay their salaries, and I'd wear cotton lace or go without any first."

"Did he say anything about the new mission fund?"

"No, and the Jones girls wars all rigged out in their yellow silks made over; you would have died laughing to hate seen them. Sarah tests girls have a young a mother, without the time to train and guide her children as only a mother can—a wife, without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman so over-worked during the day, that when night comes, heroic thought, the most intense longing, is for sleep, that probably will not come; and even if it should, that she is too tired to enjoy.

Be ye fair and everything go unfinished, to live as best she can, than to entail on herself and family the curse of over work.

Nutmegs.

Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like lilac bushes, and are generally not over five feet high. The flowers are very much like the lilac of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of this fruit, and Jesse is the thin covering over the seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe it breaks open, and shows a red inside. These trees grow on the islands of Asia and tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them all the seasons. The nutmeg is taken from over four thousand nutmegs on it every year. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Bands Islands, and conquered all the other traders, and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up, they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was as big as a church. Nutmegs are not sympathies with cook meats. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch had determined should not be done—carried those nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew again, and the world had the benefit.

Red Noses.

Why is a drun drinker's nose red? The question is answered by Dr. J. B. Johnson, a Washington physician, who says that the drun-drinker's heart beats about thirteen times oftener in the minute than the heart of one who does not drink alcohol. The arteries, in consequence of this increased heart action, carry the blood to the nose quicker than the veins carry it back. The blood, therefore, remains congested in the overfilled vessels, and the nose and the face as well then become habitually red. So stagnant is the blood that when the drun-drinker's nose meets a sudden current of cold air it immediately turns purple and remains until warm air restores the red color. So the red nose is caused by congestion. Every organ of the body is in a similar state—a warning of an impending fate and to be avoided.

How to Test Butter.

There is a qualitative test for butter so simple that any housewife can put it into successful practice. A clean piece of white paper is smeared with a little of the suspected butter. The paper is then rolled up and set on fire. If the butter is pure the smell of the burning paper is rather pleasant; but the odor is distinctly tallowy if the "butter" is made up wholly or in part of animal fats.—Scientific American.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"THE GRAND OLD MONITOR"

FOR 1886.

TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS OLD

AND

Growing in Catholic Favor Every Week!

PRONOUNCED BY CLERGY AND LAITY TO BE

The Cheapest, The Freshest, The Best

CATHOLIC PAPER IN AMERICA.

$3. FOR A YEAR'S READING FOR A WHOLE FAMILY. $3.

Tested by Truth and Tried by Time.
The Friend of Virtue—The Foe of Crime.

The Monitor

—FURNISHES ITS READERS WITH NEARLY—

TWO THOUSAND COLUMNS OF READING MATTER EVERY YEAR !!!

IN EVERY DEPARTMENT IT IS

A Complete Catholic Family Paper

—CONTAINING SUITABLE READING FOR—

Young and Old in Every Catholic Household.

ITS WEEKLY CONTENTS INCLUDES

Catholic Stories and Poetry by Distinguished writers.
Family Reading for Farm and Fireside.
Family Fun. Complying Jokes for Old and Young.
Sketches of Catholic Shrines in all portions of the world.

—TOGETHER WITH—

THE LATEST NEWS FROM IRELAND,
THE NEWS OF THE CATHOLIC WORLD,
CORRESPONDENCE FROM ROME AND IRELAND,
EDITORIALS ON CATHOLIC QUESTIONS,
EUROPEAN CABLEGRAMS AND EASTERN DISPATCHES,
CATHOLIC EVENTS ON THE COAST, ETC., ETC.

ASK YOUR CATHOLIC NEIGHBOR TO Support the Press that Defends his Faith.

SEND IN THE NAME OF A SUBSCRIBER AS A NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

HOW TO SUBSCRIBE:

Go to the Post Office, pay three cents for a $3.00 Postal Note, and enclose it in a 2 cent stamped envelope, addressed to

THE MONITOR,
636 Clay Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Catholic Societies.

☞ Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are requested to send list of officers and other information desired to the Secretary of the Monitor Office.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARISH ASSOCIATION.—The Particular Council meets on the month, and a general meeting of all the conference is held quarterly. The Particular Council, to which each conference sends a representative, meets on the second Sunday of each month, at 1 o'clock, and the general meeting, which usually numbers a just proportion of members, is generally attended by the Archbishop of the diocese and clergy. Conferences, does of members and local visitors, meet at the following places: St. Mary's Cathedral Hall on the first Thursday of every month; St. Ignatius, Gonzaga Hall, on the second Tuesday; St. Joseph's, 1 President, Chas. E. Reed; Treasurer, Rogers Donnell; Secretary, Geo. Wm. Ward. Meeting on the second Tuesday of each month. The President and Secretary are members of all the conferences in the city and also of the Central Council of Charities.

The following list comprises the officers of the different Conferences: Cathedral, Thomas Ryan, President; Jas. Gallagher, Vice President; Geo. E. Cronin, 41 Mary; Cathedral, President, T. J. Walsh, 105 Fort; St. Peter's, President, J. J. Dolan, 1122 Bush st, and Jas. Hampshire, 1015 Geary street; Cathedral, President, Jas. Hampshire, 1015 Geary street; Cathedral, President, Chas. Lartigue, Mass. Cathedral, President, Chas. Lartigue, Mass. Cathedral, President, Jas. Hampshire, 1015 Geary street; St. Joseph's Palace—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Prendergast; President, Thomas Ryan; Vice President, Patrick Toole; Treasurer, Thomas Ryan; Secretary, Patrick Toole. Young Men

WHAT HOME RULE MEANS.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., Wants Ireland to be an Independent as Canada.

The Pall Mall Gazette published an interview with Mr. T. P. O'Connor. Referring to the recent elections in Ireland and the United Kingdom Mr. O'Connor said:

"The priests were with us to a man. We owe their help to Mr. Parnell's action. The cry of free education which he raised was instantly interpreted so death to Catholic schools, and it rallied the priests as nothing else could have done to the side of the Tories. No doubt, Mr. Chamberlain did not think of that when he raised the cry. It seems his custom to say a thing first and think it out afterwards. We, however, have no reason to complain. It helped us as we had never been helped before. It manoeuvred the Irish Catholics out from under the banner of Mr. Parnell, and gave us the co-operation of the Church.

"Then you have no doubt about getting Home Rule?"

"Do you doubt the rising of the sun? A solid phalanx of eighty-six pledged Nationalists in the centre of the House of Commons is the governing fact of this situation. The Liberals may go to the Tories may come out, but that makes no difference to us. We shall use both parties with a single eye to Ireland's well-being. We have a definite purpose, a resolute leader, and a party we solid as a stone wall. We hold the fortunes of the Conservatives in the hollow of our hands. As for the Liberals—well, Mr. Gladstone is enough of a statesman to wish to settle the Irish question, but when he is gone what follows?

"Then you are not in a hurry?"

"By no means. We are better than any party can afford to wait. At present both English parties might unite against us if we played a forward game. Time is on our side. Liberal sentiment will cool down. Mr. Gladstone, however, must do whatever he does quickly; no man knows that better. But if neither of them does anything in February we shall not force their hand. In course as a par ty policy is not framed nor even discussed; but, speaking for myself, I think we should maintain a reserved attitude, abstaining from framing any definite scheme of our own, keeping ourselves as evidence, and only interfering from time to time, in another way, to remind the parties we hold the balance in our own hands."

"But the cost. Can you stand the strain?"

"Certainly we have forty members to pay at £200 a year. That is less than £12,000 a year. We have spent far more than that many years in maintaining evicted tenants. We can get any amount of money. Only last week we got £5,000 from America. We shall get £100,000 from Greater Ireland beyond the sea with the greatest ease. Every Irishman abroad is for Home Rule. The richer chosen, who hold aloof from the agrarian agitation, honors of its supposed Socialist tendencies, will subscribe eagerly to the National cause. In my own lecture tour raised £10,000 when I went to America before. If one of our prominent members were to go he would raise £20,000 with ease. We shall not be pressed for cash, that you may depend on.

"Now Mr. O'Connor what do you mean by Home Rule?"

"Ireland like Canada. No Irish members in the Imperial Parliament. No contributions for Imperial expenditure. No share in the National debt. Ireland, in short, like Canada. That is my formula."

"And the leadership?"

"You may settle that question when you give us Home Rule. Otherwise the Sassenach will get Irish terms, or Home Rule. But whoever has to pay them, let the principle be—the sovereign, not the artificial, the just, not the unjust value of their property."

CATHOLIC NEWS IN BRIEF.

—Right Rev. Bishop Conaty of the Diocese of Kilmacud, Cork, Ire., is reported ill.

—The death is announced of Monsignor Gaia, Secretary of the Congregation of Propaganda at the College of the Propaganda, Rome.

—Rev. J. F. Sheehan, O. P., formerly of Louisville, Ky., is now at Kansas City, Mo., where he is to found a house of his order.

—Vicar-General Conway of Chicago will sail for Europe in a few days, to be absent about six months.

—There are now in Chicago, Ill., 61 Catholic Churches, of which eight were built during the year 1885.

—Prof. Pratt, Grey, late of New York, but now of Montreal, has abjured Protestantism and joined the Church of Rome. He is the nephew of Earl Grey, of England.

—Bishop Heiss of Portland, Me., proposes to spend the winter months in Naples for the benefit of his health, and says that he is in doubt about the middle of this month to return to Apolli. During his absence Rev. John M. Murphy, vicar-general, will have charge of the diocese.

—Rev. James McCarty, C. C., of Castlebar, County Mayo, on the 19th ult. The recipient of numerous presents, he was a popular priest. He had spent the greater part of his days in America, and was through many of the most dangerous scenes of the great Civil War. His death is very much regretted by Derry and over a wide district.

—Very Rev. R. J. Meyer, S. J., Provincial of the Western Province of the Jesuits, was in Chicago last week, on his way to the Rocky Mountains. Rev. Father Hoeffer, S. J., President of St. Xavier's College, is transferred to St. Louis as President of the University of that city. He is succeeded at St. Xavier's College, Cincinnati, as President, by Rev. Edward J. Hughes, S. J., who has already filled that post about ten years ago.

—Notre Dame University is not to be asked to participate in the Centennial celebration of the standing is not to the liking of the Graveyard Indiana. This is the highest possible honor to Notre Dame, whose alm has been to send out scholarly and practical young men to labor with a stern world, and not individual mole-hills in search of a niche of oratory that seems to darken even the fame of Mr. Clay.

—Father Walter of Cork, who was attacked by a band of cayenne near Waterby Cork recently, has since died from the effects of a blow he got in the fight. He had a rifle with him, and killed a number of the ruffians, who, it is said, were avenged by their comrades. He remained in the tree all night, slowly weltered by the coyotes, but was rescued in the morning by a party of hunters.

—The Catholic community at Rockwell, Miss., has now a beautiful Gothic Chapel the gift of a lady parishioner. It is of brick with stained glass windows of handsome design. It has a tower, at one side, which can be seen for miles.

IRISH PARLIAMENTARY FUND.

The Irish-American race in New York are manifesting great enthusiasm in subscribing to the Irish Parliamentary fund. Here is a sample montar as described by a New York paper of recent date:

Five hundred patriotic Irishmen and Irishmen assembled last evening in the old church of the Holy Cross Parish, Lexington avenue, and Forty-seventh street, to hear Rev. Father Dolan, Father Lynch, Father Quinn, Father Millan, Father Sheehan, Father Loftus, Father Mascarda and Jesuitical Jesuit unflingly down from the platform, laughed at the jokes the British Bull got from the speakers, and applauded with their hands every point made by the laborer vulture up and put his mite on the Secretary's desk. The American and Irish School were entwined on the wall above the platform.

Father Doyle said he had just returned from Ireland. He blessed Ireland to a race horse which has been turned over to Parnell, and which would lift with Dick Crowell's and Jones' horses the Irish Parliament. The Irish people had taken Ireland back and they would not take it from the rules of land. In a conversation with Mr. Parnell the leader said that after Ireland secured her independence a protective tariff would be necessary to enable her to get started in business. Finally Father Doyle took two $5 bills from his pocket and held them over. He said it was all the money he had in the world. The bills were a Christmas gift to him. He was glad it was this persecutor to do with them, that he deemed, as he would give them to Ireland.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Clare.—At Monmahilly, near Killaloe, on the night of April 20 men attacked the house of, men named James Cary, by firing several shots through the windows. None of the inmates knew about at the time, the hour being late, nor did any of them sustain any injury. Mr. Cary is a member of the National League, and the motive of the outrage is unknown.

A watchman named Walter, who was employed by the Board of Works, at the new quay, at Clare Castle, was, it is supposed, blown into the tide by the storm, on the night of Dec. 3, and traces of him have since been found.

Carlow.—The tenants on the Mortimore estate, Ballinacarrigy, Ballinkillen, Ballinvilly, and the Acres, Mr. Steward, recently, at the Clonhour, Carlow, for the purpose of paying their rents, have been granted a reduction. They demanded a reduction of 30 per cent. all round, and time to pay it. Mr. Steward replied that he would neither give a reduction nor time to pay the rent, only such time as Mr. Malcomson, solicitor, Carlow, could conveniently allow while preparing for his due recovery by law. The tenants left the Clonhouse without paying any rent.

Cork.—A National League meeting was held, on December 13, at Ballyhooley, near Fermoy, for the purpose of considering Lord Fermoy, for serving his tenants with writs. Dead loans and bares were granted early during the evening, and, on the arrival of Mr. Steward, he had to hold the intention of the people to prevent hostilities. The meeting was addressed by several gentlemen, including Mr. Lane, of Fermoy, Parnell, who is an ardent lover of Home Rule, present, been in a bee on the mountain, allowed to his late farm. A resolution was passed condemning Lord Listowel for his action. Lord Listowel occupied a position as one of the jurors, which commanded a view of the meeting.

Mr. R. G. Annesley, of Anagrom, near Mallow, has, quite recently, shot a white hare, a very rare occurrence in Ireland, while Mr. Ivory, of Bonthy Castle, Bandonvia, also shot a white rabbit, which he had taken home to his castle. Nothing had been added to this list by Mr. Michael Dunn, of Ballyhooley, of a description of a blackbird of white or of a similar species, with a number of white feathers over the body, one of the half feathers being quite pure white. A bittern was shot by Mr. J. A. Carthy, near Youghal. These birds are very rare so far south, and are sold on market with in Ireland.

A sale of the stock on the farm of Mr. John Cronin, Millstreet, President of the local branch of the National League, took place on December 15. The sale was held in consequence of a writ on Mr. Cronin for the non-payment of half one year's rent. A reduction of 30 per cent. had been demanded by the tenants, which was refused, in satisfaction of a decree of the Land Court office. The sale was attended by a vast number of people, who rendered every assistance possible for the speedy removal of the stock. Large prices were realized. Dr. Tanner, M. P., attended, and, in the evening, addressed a meeting in the town.

Dublin.—The Rev. Father Conlan, Adelaide, Catholic, Marlborough street, Dublin, has accepted the position of Chaplain to the Lord Mayoralty, T. D. Sullivan, M. P., during his term of office.

On December 15th, at the Convent of the Poor Clares, Harold's Cross, the reception took place of two religious lifts, under the name of Sister Mary St. Lawrence, of Miss Mary Ellen Campbell, daughter of William Campbell, Esq., of Gardenstown.

On December 17th, the remains of a noted artist—from the little Irish art colony in London—arrived in Dublin. Edmond Ribbon Byrne de Salter made a special mark in England by his noted pictures of "The Members of the Commons," also his great picture of Parnell. When he Since then he has been a regular and prolific contributor to the walls of the Royal Academy. Some years ago he was the popular second art master of the Royal Dublin Society.

Down.—When all our people on both sides of the Channel did as well at the general election it is not easy to single out any for special praise; but we do think that Irishmen all the world over will be well pleased to have special praise bestowed on the Ulster Protestant electors who returned Mr. T. Sexton and Sir Thomas Lucas, Bart., M. P. Small in South Antrim, and Mr. Dalzell in Westmeath, we believe, in very trickiest they ran the risk of permanently losing their employment by daring to vote for the National candidate; yet they cheerfully faced that peril for the patriotic cause. Let us be grateful to these patriotic duty. All honor to them! While Ireland has such men like them, who are ready to make sacrifices for her liberty, her cause can never be lost.

Derry.—The Rev. James McKay, D.D., died at the Cathedral House, Waterside, on Dec. 13th, after a brief illness. The rev. gentleman was a native of Tyrone. He had spent the greater part of his days in America, and was through many of the most dangerous scenes of the great Civil War. His death is very much regretted in Derry, and over a wide district.

On December 15th, a number of attacks of cattle lay in the barnyard of Thomas Gibson, near Presentable, midway between Coleraine and Ballymoney, when a number of the cattle were found to be suffering from a disease, which proved. There is believed to have been malicious, and Mr. Gibson intends prosecuting the author. Road Sessions for the amount of the damage.

Donegal.—Outrageous outrages again heard of in Donegal. The latest outrage, which is of a premeditated character, is the burning of the house of the landlord of Meenacladdy and Tory Island, a gentleman in the county of Donegal, named James of Rosapenna, John Rapidel Jones, may carry out some religious, which he was connected with all the ease and facility that the generous and enterprising Mr. Jones, who is a Protestant Meenacladdy to one of the poorest places in all Ireland and one of the most dangerous to land. Mr. Jones's property was totally destroyed by the efforts of the fire brigade, and it is generally believed that the burns of the Crown still continue to be given without effect for the protection of the landlords to work their wicked will upon the unfortunate people.

Galway.—On December 13th, at Ballinrobe, Mayo, Mr. Hannah Lewis, the resident of Mr. Hannah Lewis, the resident of the Ballinrobe Union, was fined £5 for the previous night all the inmates retired at the usual hour, and early in the morning a bale of oat was heard which shook the house from top to bottom. The greatest consternation ensued, and when the light passed away, Mr. Lewis, who was not with the servants, found what had happened, found the whole front of the splendid house in a blaze, and everything in the drawing-room broken. Fortunately none of the inmates slept in this part of the house, so the damage done is very great.

A meeting was held on December 13, in the Temperance Hall, Ballinrobe, for the purpose of taking steps for the relief of Mr. Hannah Lewis, the resident of Mr. Hannah Lewis, the resident of the Ballinrobe Union, who was fined £5 for the previous night all the inmates retired at the usual hour, and early in the morning a bale of oat was heard which shook the house from top to bottom. The greatest consternation ensued, and when the light passed away, Mr. Lewis, who was not with the servants, found what had happened, found the whole front of the splendid house in a blaze, and everything in the drawing-room broken. Fortunately none of the inmates slept in this part of the house, so the damage done is very great.

Kerry.—On December 17, outside Killarney, a most cowardly and cruel outrage was committed on the Victoria Hotel, Killarney, and another man named Hegarty, went to the gentlemen in charge of a horse and cart, for the purpose of taking home a large gun and ammunition belonging to the Hotel was lying there. After getting the gun in the body of the cart, they proceeded on their homeward journey, until they arrived within a quarter of a mile of their destination, when the horse became restive and refused to go forward, and commenced to plunge, when the pistol exploded, and the contents of both of the cartridges of the cart were lodged in the prostrate body of Foley, who was sitting in an unmanageable position on the shaft, and he had received terrible injuries, from which he died soon after. The other man is progressing favorably.

Kilkenny.—Mr. Michael Phelan, P. L. G., Slanore, County Kilkenny, died on Dec. 17, Dunmark, with a number of friends, met for a day's morning on the Bonbrough premises, when he became faint, and dropped behind. It was in effort to reach home, but was unable, and reaching a cottage he entered. Rev. Father Sherlock and Cahill were soon in attendance, as was Doctor Quill, but unfortunately he was unavailing, and in a short time after he passed away. Deceased was one of the earliest Land Leaguers, National principles who filled the office of Poor Law Guardian at Carlow on Sale Board.

Kildare.—At a meeting of the tenants of Mr. Gowan, Maxwell, Ballymore, a resolution was passed not to pay rents unless a reduction of 30 per cent. was granted.

The Duke of Leinster has tendered a substantial Christmas dinner to his tenants on the estate, in consequence of the great distress which prevails in the district, and which, it is feared, will be increased by the operation of the Land Act of 1881, it has been decided, in the interest of the tenants, to allow the benefit of the Act to tenants with such a benefit of being

THOMOND COUNTY.

Financial Report of the Ladies Fair at Ennis.

In submitting the financial report of the Catholic Fair, Father Hayes said the committee felt bound to make some thanks to the ladies in charge, to whose exertions the success of the fair was due, notwithstanding the great disadvantages under which they had to work. The committee had to pay the rent now coming due, but on the spot.

The official warrant appointing Laurence Kennedy, Esq., J. Clune street, Limerick, as High Sheriff for 1886, has been received. Mr. Kennedy is a prominent Nationalist.

Mr. James McMahon, City Sheriff, New York, has been appointed engineer for carrying out the Parliament Act, by the Guardians of the new Middleton Union, the number of new outdoor relief applicants at 300 to 400.

Longford. At the Connaught Winter Assizes, in Dublin, Mr. John Conlin was charged with the murder of Thomas Conlin, his father, and was sentenced to Penal Servitude for life. The object of the murder was to secure a sum of money which stood in bank on deposit receipt in the joint name of his father and himself, and which the old man was gradually diminishing the amount of.

Louth.—The last tenement has approved of the election by the Corporation of Patrick Hill, Esq., Q. C., Recorder of Dublin, to the High Sheriff of the county of Louth for the Dingbeda for the county of Louth, for the ensuing year, the nomination of Mr. James Walsh, stationer, Shop street, Drogheda.

Meath.—On December 16th, the remains of the Rev. Patrick McMahon were consigned to the vault in the Catholic Church, Navanville, his native parish, amid the prayers of the congregation. Father McMahon studied in Maynooth College, and was ordained priest at Paris. Subsequently, he was appointed to the curacy of Moyna, in the diocese of Meath, where he discharged the sacred duties of the priesthood with real up to last May, when he was stricken with what proved itself late consumption, and terminated on Dec 12th, a career of usefulness, in the 32nd year of his age and 6th of his ordination.

Mayo.—The unfortunate people of Clare Island, whose crops were destroyed by blight and storm last year, are still in great distress. Some of them, for little or no work, have received a few bundreds, yet they have offered to pay, in consideration of the circumstances, no full value of produce. Their landlords, the Misses McDonnell, have generously offered to take a fifth of a penny of abatement, and referring the tenants to the Land Commission for a judicial rent.

The tenants on the Earl of Mayo's property, are initiating a movement for a similar abatement of from 20 per cent. on the full year's rent due and payable at the present time.

At the bye-laws legal, late of Cloncoran, Ballinrobe, the following were marked out during the current Sessions for special sentences, under the Coercion Act, for the following offences, under these statutes, we learn that one of them, Mr. Thomas Higgins, is now in Manchester, where he recently delivered a lecture on "Reasons why Tenants should join the National League."

Queen's County.—All the tenants on Mrs. Cruttenden's property, Ballynagh, met his agent, Mr. Theobald, to pay their rents, if they could pay 20 per cent. abatement. He received them kindly, but said he only got permission to give them 15 per cent. At the suggestion of one of the tenants he took it upon himself to make it twenty. The tenants agreed to pay this one at that amount, although they considered it insufficient, but said they would consider it.

Roscommon.—A deputation of the Albin tenantry of Mr. Wallace waited on that gentleman, for the purpose of obtaining, in view of the very much depressed prices for farm produce, an abatement of 20 per cent. in their rents. Mr. Wallace said he could not grant the required abatement, and, furthermore, say the tenants who were present, he would not entertain the question of a fair or settled.

At the Connaught Winter Assizes, on December 15, John Hanley, a young Irish American, who killed his brother, by shooting him with a revolver, in his father's house in this county Roscommon, being jealous of the preference shown him by the latter, was found guilty of manslaughter, and recommended to mercy.

On December 16, a fire broke out in the stores in connection with the grocery of Mr. C. C. Flynn, T. C., R. L., High street, Athlone, and spread to the adjoining premises, occupied by Mr. Jacob Hyman, the clothier. The alarm was sounded throughout the town, and the fire brigade, with the hoses, were soon upon the ground, so this remaining but the smoldering and blackened walls to mark the origin of the fire, is not known.

A office constable, named Mulvaney, fell from a bicycle while assisting and had his leg broken.

The deceased agent of an absentee landlord, Mr. Joe Goache, is showing "sentences of death" to tenants on the estate, for the payment of Decimals. In every case these sentences carry Derry, and over a wide district, with the exception of the December 15th, Lord Carrdford tenants, the tenants complained of thinks was not granted offered of 15 per cent. inadequate rent to a whole half abatement, and represented that owing to the great fall in the price of stock and produce, they could not pay more than 15 per cent. made them to pay their present rents. In this refusing to make any further concession, the tenants left in a body, and at a public meeting which they subsequently held, it was unanimously resolved to stand by their present rents, and that terms are complied with, and a tenants' defence fund was thereupon opened, to which subscriptions accordingly to retire were handed in.

Parochial School in Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal., January 2.—The parochial school building, blessed by Bishop Mora this morning, was opened for school by the 4 o'clock, 600, without any help outside himself. The school opens on Monday. The building is brick, three stories, in its form of a Greek cross. It is located in Los Angeles street, corn Ninth street, in the rear of the cathedral.

Thirty-five years experience—Mother Graves' Worm Powders, 10 Montgomery street, San Bruno.

I owe my Restoration to Health and Beauty to the CUTICURA REMEDIES

INFINITE SUFFERING from Humiliating Eruptions, Blotches, Scaly Skin, Blood Poisoning, Rheumatism, Scrofula, and Hereditary Taints, are speedily terminated by the CUTICURA REMEDIES. Cuticura, a marvelous cosmetic, clears the skin and scalp, heals sores, restores the hair.

Dandruff and Humors, Tetter, Ringworm, Itch, Scaly and Pimply Skin, Scrofulous Sores, Blotches, Blisters, Redness, Soreness, Dandruff, Dry, Scaly, Shedding Hair, Pimples, Blotches, Blisters, Redness, Soreness, Inflammation, Itching, Burning, Scaling, Scurvy, Scrofula, Hereditary Taints, Contagious Blood Poisoning, Rheumatism, Kidney Pains, Weakness, Cuticura, the great Skin Purifier, Cuticura Resolvent, the new Blood Purifier, Cuticura, the great Skin Beautifier, Cuticura Soap, the Purest and Sweetest of Toilet Soaps, Cuticura Medicated Medicated Soap, the Only Medicated Toilet Soap

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

SAINT ANNE.

Virgin Spouse of Christ the Saviour, Dear Saint Agnes we salute thee,
With the tender love and reverence which thy peerless virtues claim,
Yielding to the holy maiden, homage rich and pure affection,
Echoing the praises sounding through long ages to thy name.

Child in years, in heart a hero, never heaven such a saint had known,
For thy spirit passed unscathed through temptation, Pure as when it first was given.
Face within thy purple frame found no trembling cowl concealing,
For thy free unhesitant courage was by heaven-ly fountains tint.

Wealth and power in vain allured thee with the shining gifts they offered,
Pleading words or threatening mandates could not make thee bend thy knee,
Then combat triumph said the veteran which the proud Prefect fashioned,
Wakened with a shout whose coming gave thee courage to thy Heavenly Queen.

Glorious Saint, pure virgin martyr in God's purpose never yielding,
By the Bridegroom's hand rewarded with the palm of priceless price and crown,
Thou who art as near and precious to the Sacred Heart of Jesus
Filled with Him that we may never fail His anger's deadful frown.

Win for us thy dauntless courage to resist the power of evil,
Thy God-given strength in trial and thy purity of heart,
Ask, dear Saint "love and innocence and unerring thy pleadings,
Thy shame flooes His bleeding to thy clients in the Heavenly Court.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD,
Mercy Woodland, January, 1886.

ONE SONG MORE.

The night is wearing on, boys, the day is dawn-ing;
Care and toil and trouble will be with us by-and-by;
But ere we part, one song more, boys, let them wait outside the door;
Draw your chairs together, boys, we'll have one song more.

One song more, boys,
One song more—
Ere our ship shall sail, boys, one song more.

But what is the best to sing of on such a night as this?
Flowers, love, or friendship, cheery or blue?
No! though we have sung of her many times before,
We'll sing of our lassie, boys, one song more.

One song more, boys,
One song more—
Ghosty have for Ireland dear, one song more.

T. D. B.

—Dublin Nation.

Literary Miscellany.

The Little Book-Keeper.

A Story of Real Life Founded on Fact

"Coward!"

There was a ring of infinite scorn in the voice, and the little book-keeper winced and shrank under it. He felt his insignificance then if never before. Why could he not be a man among men? He had asked himself the question mentally a hundred times, but he never felt his littleness so keenly as that night when that one word of contempt and scorn fell from the lips of Jack Lyon.

She was the acknowledged belle of the Michigan valley, the daughter of the most prominent member of the firm of Lyon, Haight & Co. Jack was not a child of fashion, but a strong, healthy child of the pine woods. Montague was the end of the world to her, and the time of which we write, was a mere village, with no connection with the outside world. It was yet the lumbering days of Western Michigan and rapidly growing pine forests.

It was at a dance in a log house near Mackinaw City that Jack Farnham received the rebuke described. A group of young fellows had trudged on the mirt of Janet's mahogany floor, and Jack had been the last to linger merely said, "Black the dram," and went on with his dancing.

"The insinuating puppy!" exclaimed Janet warmly, and the remark was heard by some of the young men from Mark Farnham, her recent admirer, who had been wooing her with desperate energy, and many of them were ashamed.

"Go ashore, boy, and get a lunch; the greatest danger is past! Wallington and I will hold the fort until you return."

It was Mr. Lyon who spoke. He had gone to the assistance of the crew with the nonchalance of an old log driver. The men obeyed. The greater part of the logs had passed, the principal danger being over. Half the river was jam blocked with logs piled to a great height, forming a jam that looked impregnable.

Scarcely had the last man reached the shore, when a wild cry arose above the roar of the foaming waters.

"My God! The whole jam is going!" Then with a loud crashing, a terrible roar, and the logs went with a mighty rush over the dam on the Ojibwa shore.

"Good heavens! They are lost!"

This cry went up, as all eyes were turned upon Mr. Lyon and his companions, now the only occupants of the jam. It did seem as though they were doomed, but they had prepared for the time as by a miracle. In the centre of the dam a few of the logs held firm, and soon all had swept through, but they were not in the middle of the stream. An eddy, the result of a jutting water-holed point on either side, and the narrow jam swayed and trembled as if it was suspended over the abyss; lodging, if I die the next minute."

But the little book-keeper was not paralyzed with the privilege of receiving a thrashing for Janet Lyon's sake. A strong hand appeared upon the scene in the person of Richard Wallington, a magnificent picture of muscular development, with the dress and air of a gentleman. He was Lyon, Haight & Co's foreman in the great mill at Muskegon, and a prime favorite with the senior member of the firm.

"The coward permitted that ruffian, River Dan, to insult me grossly. I'll be a man!"

A pallid-cheeked girl, with streaming hair, thrust aside the water's edge and stood with outstretched hands appealing to strong men for help. No one moved.

"Are you all cowards?" she cried, facing the multitude. Hewing man with red shirts were there, but none moved at the appeal from the girl's blanched lips.

"Oh, Jack, Jack, man!" and Rose Hunt, "That ye jam won't last many minutes. Nobody ye jam, you, they're goners, sure.

"Take pitcher and rope, and save the rescue."

Janet would have rushed to the reach herself had not strong arms held her back. Weak, moaning, almost fainting, the girl pleaded in vain.

"No one; a boat would go over in a jiffy. Then father can't be saved."

"There is one chance in a hundred."

"Are rose entered the words, and Janet saw a slender form glide past towards the bank. Above the man's arm was a coil of rope. When the man gained the foaming edge of the water he swung his arm aloft and cried:

"Some of you take an end of this rope. I am going to rescue those men if possible."

"Goodness! it is the little book-keeper."

"He'll drown, sure."

But Mark Farnham heeded not the comments of the crowd. He seemed to realize that time was precious, and at once pushed the light skiffs out into the river. Selling the paddle, and fixing his rope so that it would pay out from between his thin knees, the little book keeper began paddling up the stream. Strong hands had grasped the end of the rope and it began paying out rapidly, when Farnham turned and shot swiftly into the centre of the stream.

He remembered in that the canoe came down on the upper side of the swaying jam. Instantly the canoe was sucked under and lost, but Farnham sprang to the surface of the water, and, with long and quick strokes and fast to an upright log.

"Quick, Mr. Lyon! There's no time to lose."

The mill-owner remonstrated, and urged this book keeper to go ahead; this he absolutely refused to do.

Mr. Lyon was put forward, grasped the rope, and went hand over hand to the shore. A great shout rent the air when he landed.

Next came Dick Wallington. He was heavy, and the rope sagged badly. He was faint when he reached the shore, and Farnham's knees trembled at the sight of the young man's body. Suddenly the log to which the rope was attached gave way and fell. Instantly the rope flew for out into the stream. Dick was near the shore and was rescued.

The little book-keeper stood alone on the jam, which was now trembling and threatening to fall to pieces. Farnham's face blanched. He seemed to realize that he was doomed.

"Another canoe, quick! Go back, Dick Wallington, and save Mr. Farnham."

It was Jack who spoke, but the dripping Apollo turned away with a shudder.

"No! I'm a coward! I risk my life out yonder again."

He had called upon to do so.

A great crash and roar echoed the crowd as half of the jam with its lone occupant had disappeared.

"The man is past all earthly help. It was Dr. Gould who uttered the words as he rose from the contemplating the battered, bleeding form on the sand.

"Oh, he was a brave man, and a true man, and a noble man," sobbed the girl.

"Yes, he was a brave man, and a true man, and a noble man," echoed the crowd.

"Oh, Mark! Mark!"

A frantic terror moved his frame as the girl attempted to raise the little book-keeper's head, and Janet saw that she held a dead weight in her arms. The great soul of Mark Farnham had gone from the small body forever.

Unbow did itself prond at the funeral of the little book-keeper, and one gamine remarked that he was just like the bells of the Monkeyon. When Dick Wallington asked her hand two months later, he met with a cold refusal. Mark Farnham's widow, Janet Lyon never married. Does the reader wonder?

Turned Away.

"Wall, yes, I can spare you a dime, I guess," he said as he produced the coin and handed it to an old man, whom any other might, perhaps, go right on.

"What make you live do that, "queried a bystander when the mendicant had passed on. "Can't you know what a very cent given to that class is an encouragement to vice?"

"Wait a bit and you hear my story. I was only a boy when I left England. Little man ribbed boys I got into the habit of them life with the law, and, as a matter of fact, I was away. Father was terribly put out with me, and the last words he spoke were to disown me. I wrote several letters home after reaching this country, but never one was replied to, and I finally decided to consider myself as one cast off by my folks. I was 21 when I heard of my arrival here, and when living in Boston I stood in front of a theatre one bitter cold night, and saw a man come up and beam to tell me a pitiful story. I was waiting and looking for a party who was to meet me, and therefore paid little attention to the beggar. I did not even give him a quarter, but I took the fellow's address, and, as I could not sleep before midnight. Next morning, as I reached the corner of State and Nineteenth streets on my way to work, I saw a crowd standing before a door, and a boy told me that the body of an old man who had been frozen to death on the street was inside.

"It came to me like a flash that this was the one who had addressed me, and I answered the place. They had his face covered, but I removed the handkerchief. As I looked into the face I felt as if I was a brave beyond as that I learned in time that mother was dead, and that father, unable to forgive my boyish prank, had set sail for America to hunt me up. Tidings plundered him of his every dollar, and he had tramped a year this on his journey, only to find me. As I had not written to him for years he had no alias, but depended on my coming upon accident. Accident brought us face to face at last, but he expired him. He was penniless and hungry, and I refused him a paltry trifle. I tell you it went hard with me to sell my father's corpse for a pauper's grave, but I felt as the commander of the frigate. There was ships are running, but a boat was nevertheless, and I resolved to gather a little money, and then, if I could, I would go home and beg my father's pardon. Now, I am a man of my word. I had to do down for fear of falling off the vessel, and then subjugate myself to the cold and scraping at the hard wood for six days, during which time one man died, and I drank. On the sixth day they made a hole big enough to slide the body out of the barrel of bottled beer. On the eleventh day they put a barrel of pork, and I ate raw. With stasis and shingles used as dunnage, which they obtained out of the hold, they made a rude platform, and that platform, and that managed to obtain some of the mutiny, and on fourteen days, they were thrown into the Gulf of Mexico. The Norwich. They may be taken on the 15th day, and I was the last man on the records of human endurance and vitality. Then, again, there is who was second mate of a brig named the Ocean Queen, which sailed from Boston, and, when he shipped, he was a man of fine physique, and, when he left the vessel, he was a wreck. He was bailed, when rescued, he was in the suffering staggered on to his feet, and threw himself into an unfeeling grave. He was taken on board, and the wreck sent adrift. Three men, the Ocean Queen, had been washed overboard on the 14th of April preceding, and that has a stock of provisions consisted of three pounds of pork, two pounds of bread, and two kegs heads of water. "On the same, Mortimer says the chronicler," and without any means of dressing sores, he had prolonged his existence for the surprising period of seventy five days. He had lain on deck, and, to be accurately given the man, supposing him to have died, he had ordered his body to be thrown overboard, but, when the sailors came to the cabin with his clothes on when the vessel was about to be, he begged to be sewed up in a quilt, and in that position was stitch. In some wonderful way Purnell and the others who were below continued to keep cool. Their only boat lay keel up in the sea. They managed to right her, and the calm boy bailed her. When she was free of water they managed to stand up, and then begins a narrative of dreadful suffering. Suffice it to say that seventeen days, they died among Purnell, this man, twenty three days after he had been in the open boat, without food or drink, sighted a schooner which bore to, and anabled him to get alongside. Even at these scenes of misery of his perishing, for the schooner's people imagined the boat belonged to a sunk craft, and that deserters had run away with her, and they feared that if they took Purnell on board they would be punished. At last they allowed him to come over the side, and then the poor creature drank the rain water he had carried for twenty three days. He was taken, laying on the boat's deck, and seeing a stone bottle, which he imagined to contain rum, he took a hearty draught of it, and found it to be sweet oil. He was unable to stand, and, when he came, coming on the top of what he had suffered, seized his stomach, and died in agony. Purnell, but a sailor's stomach is hardened to strange usage, and all that the old fellow poor Mortimer had to do was to lie down and go to sleep.

THE CASE OF ROBERT MORTIMER,

ANOTHER INSTANCE OF THE TENACITY

of endurance at sea many still remember the touching and thrilling illustration given of "Tom Cringle's Log," where the still living skeleton of a Spaniard is lifted out of an open boat from off the dead body of his son. Few things are more affecting in fiction than the "dy, di mi" with which the suffering creature at the moment of his death, as he lies with his head over the ship's side, and his dying eyes riveted on the corpse below. It is presented as fiction indeed, but it might have been offered as a fact infinitely more credible than much that passes for truth. At all events, in spite of the closeness with which Michael Scott followed life at sea, there is the story of his frigate Amoth that whilst cruising in the Bay of Biscay, came across a derelict with her masts gone and a dangerous wreck. There was no signs of life on board, yet there was a look about the galley, which still stood, and which had the appearance of having been patched with old canvas, as if it intended to be a substitute for the hut to the commander of the frigate. There was ships are running, but a boat was nevertheless, and resonnoited by gaining alongside where the crew shouted at the top of their voices. In a few minutes an object described as resembling a bundle of clothes was seen to roll out of the galley. It was secured by means of a boathook, and dragged into the boat, and it then proved to be a man, bent head and knees together, and so wasted that a little boy could have raised him. The boat's crew returned with their deplorable burden. To the amazement of all, when placed on the deck it showed signs of life, it moved, and then muttered, "There is another man." In the galley they found two bodies, both dead, and the picture was made peculiarly dreadful by the hand of one of them being stretched to the fire as if to save a piece of raw salt beef about the size of a half dollar, which he had dropped. The rescued man recovered after a few days, and the narrative states that when he came on deck he was a mere skeleton with scarcely a trace of a man nearly six feet high. It is not a pleasant to dwell on the sufferings of the Gloud amongst those best able to support the physical sufferings and mental anguish of exposure to the sea. It will be remembered, in the case of the Kent's Castle, that the third officer, from sun of the Tories, and for many years Mr. Evans was a Reformist, and, holding at all occasions his high to the Whigs, and now and then a modified support to O'Connell. Mr. Evans was a Madame Roland to her husband on all his political work. When he died the children and several relatives cast about for means to perpetuate his memory, and his upon the singular idea of building a new Irish Round Tower precisely like the old. The shell was found standing for forty years on the summit of a hill by her husband's grave, and it became a place that dangerous coast. Left with a large sum of money (£20,000) it was reported, before her death, a sum of money was found in Eaton Square, Mrs. Evans devoted herself to the improvement of poverty and neighborhood. She built two hundred schools and gave the children of all tended them each a little garden. She founded industrial schools, and, by way, in every built great greenhouses. One of her pursuits was conchology. She succeeded in making the proprietor of a large shell-house, by means of which her beautiful shore was engraved with the "Mary Evans" on each of the black shells, are several impaging cases. In the Mary Evans Hall, which she built for a shaft, the ship which smugglers formerally carried up the Thames, Mrs. Evans at occasion gave a great luncheon party. The company were all in high spirits and merriment, enjoying the delicacies and champagne, when some one observed that the Mary Evans was in high spirits and replied that it was all right, there was plenty of wine and the weather was favorable. A short half hour, when somebody rose and said that the Mary Evans was a little late, and, as the weather was so favorable, it is one to wait for it, and, if it came, it would be a great pity to spoil the enjoyment of the present lunch. The tide had risen very rapidly, and, as the Mary Evans was expected to be at the Tower by 3 o'clock, the company, with the exception of the lady, left the house, and, as they were already beating at a formidable depth against both sides of the lock which shut in the dock. Consternation, of course, ensued, and, as the lady, in her anxiety, the further recession of that dangerous, even the lady herself, in the tide dat, was lost, and (which was very doubtful), afforded the lady a great deal of pleasure. The company got up through the shaft to the ship, which was now in the dock, by a ladder. But there were no ladders lying about the place; and finally everybody stood on the top of the ship, and looked down the mouth of their prison. Mrs. Evans all this time appeared quite happy, and, as she ministered a little encouragement to some of the almost sinking ones, she said, "I dance was at its climax Mrs. Evans' one yet was quite quickly recovered, and, in a few rocks, and was soon comfortably pushed up to the feet of the imprisoned party, who had nothing to do but to dance and sing. Mrs. Evans was the first dance, and, as soon as the ladders were all Cutler tongue)—the stream which the Mary Evans was expected to be at the Tower. The whole little incident had, it is, to be found, been prearranged by the bosses to the Mary Evans, and, of course, the company were country guests.

Mr. Evans, holding the opinions was have described (though keeping his wife's) was a perfect gentleman. Intendant at the village church. Carriage-horses, Mrs. Evans, in her carriage, followed his owner into the church and lay extended on the wooden floor of the pew, and, when the sermon was over proceeded to thump unmercifully with his tail, after the manner of a Newfoundland dog, and, as turbines was too much for the poor parson, he was obliged to leave the pulpit, and, modeled with the service and the raggings were completely spoiled, and, when he came way and he read out the extraordinary notices, which, in consequence, were, of course, Fenarissa stood and prayed that ann him well, Tom out that dog, if you please." It was a Mr. Fabbles (with a stock of Tories, and, in the Mary Evans was wont to be, and, in the Mary Evans, was, of course, conceded this by the audit of attendants. Mrs. Evans was a great lady, and, as such, by mortal disease she want to Paris to profit by the skill of a great surgeon. Her husband, who she had confidence, and there, with unshaken courage and calmness and a Mr. Evans, was left to the Mary Evans. With the big fellow seemed to wink mockingly at him. The big fellow, the bostswain, and the little Captain kept up courage. They found out from the lighthouse keeper, Mr. Evans, the Mary Evans, was a smaller light in an inlet to the northward. The Dane owned until his arms were swollen nearly to the shoulders and his hands were covered with blisters. They had reached the Mary Evans, and, in the Mary Evans, the little Yankee smack.—N. Y. Sun, January 11.

FROZEN TO THEIR BOAT.

Terrible Experience of Capt. Colvin and His Eleven Men. Their Little Craft Filled with Ice The Second Mate Freezes to the Tiller. They get Near the Lighthouse, then they Manned Six Miles to the Steven Wesley.

It was the storm, true little Yankee schooner smack Stephen Wesley that pick-ed up the half-frozen crew of the Captain Colvin and eleven of the crew of the British trawl schooner Hylton Castle, that went down on Monday morning off Fire Island. The Wesley was at sea about six miles southeast of Fire Island lighthouse Monday night. Mate Barnard Sweeney, coxsun of the smack's hardy, Down East skipper, N. S. Keeney, was on watch. The Wesley was bowling along in a gale, sea and a stingy, tiffed and, reflex of the big storm that sent the Hylton Castle to the bottom. The mate heard a confused murmur of voices directly under his lee, looking over the port bow in the direction of the sound, he discerned a long, white boat drifting toward him.

An English voice sang out, "Schooner ahoy!" A man on the boat attempted to pass the painter around the anchor shain, and make fast to the smack, as the boat drifted by, but he was so benumbed that he failed to do it. The painter was cast off.

"Throw us a line. The vigilant mate called to the men. The boat, as it rattled into the ice-coated boat, Skipper Keeney and his crew of six men came tumbling down on the deck of the big lugsail and ran. They were little Capt. Colvin and his three companions. They were nearly dead from exposure and hunger. Four of them were frozen fast in the bottom of the boat, garnetted in ice, and had to be chipped out. The little Captain's beard was a solid mass of ice crystals. No man was able to move without assistance. Skipper Keeney and his men had to chum up over the low rail of the smack as they could, and, when they had got safely into the little cabin. The smack men broke out a bottle of cordial and poured some of their clothes, and sigorously rubbed their bodies with them. They dare not rub them with cold their own clothes, put them on the shipwrecked man. Cups of hot coffee followed, and, when the mate's broad and meat, were set before them, the smacksmen were astonished at the heat of the coffee that brought the tears from the eyes and made the blood burst from every smacksnuse slept on the cabin floor, and every shipwrecked man, wrapped in blankets, had a bunk.

The morning the smack set sail for this city. She anchored off the High lands on Tuesday night because of the Sound ice in the bay. The boat was brought her up to Fulton Market yesterday morning. Capt. Colvin and his men were transferred from the smack to the tug Mill Creek, which was sent down for them by Messrs. Vatterot, Vickers & Co. They were landed at Coenties Slip and were taken to the office of the British Consul, who will care for them.

Attached to Capt. Colvin, Second Mate J. A. Scott, and Boatswain John Attridge, the English Cockle man, Mr. Scott, who just rail had been twenty-four hours under the water, and, when he came up, he was so thoroughly masked with ice and frozen sea that he had to have his clothes cut off. Mr. Scott, who is a corpulent phenomenon ship, far over the weight of Mr. Attridge, who is a little man. Monday. The mate, who is a little lighter, was detained the Captain's heavy weight, and, when he came up, he was the Captain's boat was broken in the heavy sea.

The men pulled in the direction of the light they had dimly seen burning at dawn. All day long they rowed through a driving shifting night of the lighthouse. Second Mate Scott had charge of the boat, and a can of soup into the boat before heavy sea. The soup was frozen solid, and could not be broken. Second Mate Scott was ordered to give up the tiller to Boatswain Attridge. He made an effort to move and found that he could not. He glowered, and, when he came to the tiller, and his arm, crooked at the elbow was as stiff as if it had been made of iron. Every limb and muscle was rigid. The boatswain and two seamen broke the ice from his wet clothes and helped him to exercise his hands and arms.

Theodore Lawson, a big Danish sailor of giant strength, kept at an oar constantly. With the exception of the mate, the Fire Island light. It remained their hope. Lawson and Attridge kept the boat pointed at it grew larger and larger, like their hopes, so, under the heavy strokes of the giant Dane, the boat rushed over the foaming the waves. When within hailing distance of the light the men set up a wild shouting. They waited for some response from the lighthouse, but none came. They shouted again, and there was no answer. Then they rowed around the tower.

The big light seemed to wink mockingly at them. The lighthouse was deserted, or so it seemed. The big Dane, the boatswain, and the little Captain kept up courage. They found out from the lighthouse keeper, Mr. Evans, the Mary Evans, was a smaller light in an inlet to the northward. The Dane owned until his arms were swollen nearly to the shoulders and his hands were covered with blisters. They had reached the Mary Evans, and, in the Mary Evans, the little Yankee smack.—N. Y. Sun, January 11.

THE CLAY-EATERS.

An Explanation at the Peculiar Habit of the North Carolina Mountaineers.

It has been a matter of speculation for years as to why the "great white trash" of central North Carolina at the clay that is found in that part of the country. It remained for a Philadelphia physician to solve the mystery. A short time ago Dr. Frank Hu. Gretzler, of 1432 Spring Garden street on a gunning expedition to North Carolina. His quest for game led him into the wild country back of Salisbury, which is inhabited for the most part by a race of beings with just energy enough to eke out a wretched existence. These creatures are of extreme skeleton, and, with few exceptions, are addicted to the habit of clay eating.

While shooting wild turkey and other game in this wild region, Dr. Gerthed made an incidental study of this peculiar habit of some among the inhabitants. It is a mountainous country, and in the spring little rivulets start out from the caps of snow on the mountains, and as the snow grows warmer the little rivulets become torrents and great washouts are being made along the mountain sides. The soil is of a certain clayey nature; but there are strata of clay that is heavier than the rest, and when the water rushes down this clay is formed into little pellets and rolls and accumulates in heaps in the valley. These little pellets are just as much as the clay eaters want, and with such avidity as if upper swallows a glass of water.

"Among the poor people of this section," said Dr. Gerthed yesterday, "the habit of eating clay is almost universal. Even the little children are conformed to the habit, and the appetite seems to increase with time. While investigating the matter I entered a cabin occupied by one of these families and saw a little chap tied by the ankle to the door post. I asked the reason, and, after a dish of bread and meat and potatoes within the cabin, I was taken to a little building, and I asked his mother why she had tied up the boy. She replied that he wanted him to eat some food before he went out to play with the children. She said he had eaten breakfast, but, when I asked the boy, he said he had not. The boy replied that he wanted

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—There will be few disposed to contradict the editorial assertion of the New York Sun that "Of all living politicians and statesmen, Charles Stewart Parnell is apparently the ablest."

—Michael Davitt's first act on taking his seat for the first time as a member of the City Council of Dublin was to ask the Corporation to give certain vacant areas within the city limits to be used for labourers' cottages, to be leased at nominal rents. His appearance and his proposition were received with cheers.

—Borrowers are among the worst borne of newspaper bills to contend with. There are hundreds of this class who could subscribe for the MONITOR, just as well as their neighbors, but who are too niggardly to do so, hence we occasionally receive a request like the following from a subscriber in the Northern portion of the State:

"Please discontinue the MONITOR because I do not have a chance to read it, as my neighbor borrows it before I have a chance to see it. I have never yet lost sight of a copy of the MONITOR when they can not see mine. Give the paper well, but I do not wish to furnish it free to parties that can pay for it better even than I can."

—The memorial stone of Oregon for the Washington Monument is on exhibition in Washington. A niche has been left vacant for it in the Monument. The Oregon stone is the most beautiful that has yet been sent by any State. It was designed and cut by Frank Wood of Albany, Oregon. The stone is twenty granite sandstones on hydrous alimite, and bears on its face a landscape, with Oregon's coat-of-arms surrounded by fruits and flowers, the whole enclosed with raised mouldings cut in sandstone. Surrounding the State seal are thirty-two stars of greenish syenite, and the four-capped mountains are represented by white marble from southern Oregon.

—When Cyrus W. Field was afflicted with Anglo-phobia, he very foolishly spent a lot of money raising a monument in New York State to the memory of the traitor Benedict Arnold. But some good citizens thought such a monument more of a disgrace than an honor, so they raised it to the ground with dynamite. And now, we are very glad to learn that Mr. Field has become partially cured of his Anglo-phobia, that he has had all he wants of the Andre Monument, and will not repair the damage done by the explosion under it a few months ago. He is now satisfied that the monument will not be permitted to stand undisturbed, and it has already cost him three times as much as it is worth.

Eugene O'Connell, first Bishop of Grass Valley Diocese, and now Bishop of Jopps. The venerable Prelate is at present making a brief visit to the Dominican Convent at Benicia, where, we presume, the recurrence of this important incident in his long and useful life will be duly celebrated. The MONITOR anticipates the recurrence of the occasion by wishing the venerable Prelate or whatever may be left of him for layman's life to celebrate the golden jubilee of that solemn occasion which took place February 3rd, 1961.

—New Hampshire is the one black spot of religious intolerance in America. It seems that the power "authorizing the appointment and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion and morality," stands in New Hampshire as it was adopted in 1792 from an old statute of the 13th of Queen Anne; and New Hampshire is the only State in the Union that bears on the page of her fundamental law the mark of an un-American spirit—a word indicative of narrow-minded bigotry. We sincerely hope that the Catholics of that State will never rest until they have expunged this stain from the State's escutcheon.

—The United Ireland attributes the recent resignation of the Earl of Carnarvon, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to his reluctance to do what he would have others do ordered by the Government, and which will render the Irish desperate. It implores the Cabinet to look before it leaps, and not to adopt coercive remedies, as the people will not submit tamely to being robbed of their homes. These remarks are assuaged by the sentiments of an Irish High Sheriff who has written to the Times that a famine is approaching Ireland, and with it will come acts of lawlessness. Violent men, he says, determined not to starve, will seize the necessaries of life, even at the risk of doing bodily harm to others.

—We here in California are so absorbed in looking towards the East that we seldom cast a glance across the Pacific to see what our neighbors in the Central Pacific are doing. Accordingly many of the readers of the MONITOR will learn with surprise that a Russian railway is projected from the Baltic to the Pacific ocean. The Moscow Pokrovsk says that "such an enterprise is the surest way to strike Siberia and to increase the influence of Russia among the other Powers. It will be the longest and the coolest railway in the world. Its buildings must not be delayed any longer." Such a railroad will open up a new world for the commerce of the Pacific coast.

—Some idiot idea of the strain which thousands of the shabby-genteel class in England are reduced to, may be formed from the following account which an English gentleman gives a London paper of the answers he received in three days to an advertisement for a janitor for a school. The advertisement stated that the position would only be given to a person who was sober, reliable and of good character; that a married person was preferred; that the wages amounted to £10 per week, with free living-rooms, gas and coal. He received in answer to this advertisement 548 applicants. Among them were fifty-seven graduates from English, Scotch, and Irish universities, two scions of noble houses, fifty persons who had been engaged in literary pursuits, twenty men who had been officers in the army, about the same number of clergymen, medical men, clerks, and men who had been engaged in business for themselves, and sixty three women. Many of them wrote very pathetic letters.

—It seems that one of the greatest stumbling blocks in the way of weeding out the Chinese is the impossibility of finding household "help" to take their places. The Carson Tribune says on this point that so long as girls refuse to accept situations as helps in private families, just so long will the Chinese remain, and the talk of getting rid of the plague will end in smoke. A truthful gentleman informs the Tribune that he could secure situations for twenty-five young women in respectable families, and that numbers who really need work are too proud to accept the employment, and some among the number are living partially at the expense of the county.

—We learn from a Honolulu paper that the King of the Sandwich Islands has shown his appreciation of the labors and sacrifices of the Catholic Priests and Sisters in his realm by conferring the decoration of Officer of the Royal Crown of Hawaii upon Father Lonorez, through whose influence several Panamanian Sisters were procured as nurses for the leper lazarettos of the Islands. The King has also decorated the Superior in charge of the branch hospital at Kalaoao with an insignia of distinction for the labors of herself and companions among the sick of the subjects who are shunned by all save those whose courage in the midst of contagion is fortified by the true faith.

—Alluding to the expected change which is to take place regarding the ownership of the land in Ireland, the New York Herald says that the ownership of land means conservatism, it means patriotism, it means ambitious industry. Large rentals, uncertain tenure, on the other hand, mean in the long run poverty and rebellion and bloodshed. England has wrestled with that problem, but she has never mastered it. Whatever else Ireland may gain—Parliament, legislative independence, control of police or of tariffs, or what not—she will never have peace either under British rule or under the leadership of Parnell until the farmer can own his cabin and his land. A man with a hut and a cow and a few acres all his own becomes a loyal and contented subject. Without these he is a nomad, ripe for rebellion."

—It is a singular as well as a shameful fact that the Protestant Episcopal sect in New York is the landlord of scores of the vilest dens in that city. Under the caption of "Trinity's Dens," the Herald of that city says: "Trinity Church Corporation is owner of the worst class of tenements in Manhattan, among the wretched people who are forced to live in such places, of being the hardest and meanest landlord in New York. The policy of the Trinity Church Corporation is never to make repairs on a tenement they own, but to let it actually fall to pieces, until no one, however wretched, can live in it. Then the Corporation bears it down and builds a store or warehouse on a comparatively expensive flat house. But it never spends its money to improve the condition of the poor." Such is the conduct of Protestant preachers who send ship-loads of bibles to the Fiji islanders and then sell themselves "Christians" while they are thus gridding the foes of the poor in New York city.

—The old files of the MONITOR seem to be very useful to some of our contemporaries in enabling them to strut their brief hour upon the public stage in borrowed plumage. No doubt our talented young friend "J. O.D." will feel greatly elated when we tell him that his contribution which appeared in the MONITOR of August 27th, 1884, has been converted into an editorial in one of our "patent-inside" contemporaries. The individual who thus tries to flourish on other people's brains had the good taste, however, to omit the last paragraph in "J. O. D.'s" contribution to the MONITOR, wherein he refers to that noble Christian mania, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you"—a lesson that is lost upon those who are seemingly Catholic in their professions but anti-Catholic in their practices.

—As the greeting of Home Rule is now inevitable, various surmises are being made as to the composition of the Irish Cabinet. Mr. Parnell, it is taken for granted, would be Premier. Mr. Justin McCarthy, Vice Chairman of the Irish Parliamentary Party, would fill the next most important position of Chancellor of the Irish Exchequer: Mr. Healy would be Attorney-General or Lord Chancellor; Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Minister for Education; Mr. Sexton, Home Secretary. Mr. O'Brien has been a prominent Irish member, but people find it difficult to name the office he would accept, thinking probably he would prefer to remain an independent member. As several members of the proposed Irish Cabinet have hitherto resided permanently in England, the granting of a Home Parliament would involve, it is presumed, the necessity of their living in Dublin. It is one of the most frequent and bitter complaints that the want of a native legislature has caused the banishment of Irish talent.

—So remarkable has been the change in English opinion concerning the right of Ireland to self-government, that the London Statist—the organ of the English commercial classes—has been compelled to make this admission: "Home Rule, which so short a time ago appeared utterly impossible, is to day secured. We did not doubt that the practical people like the English would sooner or later realize the meaning of the Irish elections; but we feared that for a while sentiment would be made sober, reliable and of good character; that a married person was preferred; that the wages amounted to £10 per week, with free

Christian Brothers for Oregon:

Only a few weeks have elapsed since we announced the opening of the first parochial school for boys in this city, under the direction of members of a Religious Order. To-day we sincerely congratulate the citizens of Oregon on the establishing of the Christian Brothers in the flourishing metropolis of Portland. We have since officially informed that on Monday, February 1st, the Brothers are to take charge of St. Michael's College in that city. Reverend Brother Aldrick of Mary, of Sacred Heart College, has been appointed Director; Rev. Brother Bertrand, of St. Joseph's Academy (Oakland, Sub-Director; and Rev. Brother Ysaias Michael, of Martinez, Assistant.

Thank God, the light of Christian education is spreading! The aggregate number of pupils under direction of the Brothers on this coast, including those at St. Mary's and the Sacred Heart Colleges, and St. Peter's Day School, in this city, St. Joseph's Academy and three parochial schools in Oakland, and the Sacramento Institute, at the Capital, is 1,965. The number at St. Michael's College will add nearly two hundred more to this phalanx of Catholic youth.

The Religious teaching Orders in the Catholic Church, may—like the Church herself—be likened to a city seated on a high mountain which cannot be hid. They are the light of the world. When we consider, on the one hand, that Adoration, Holy Eucharist, the earth possesses nothing more grand, more admirable, more worthy the contemplation of the Adorable Trinity than the Christian in the state of grace;" and on the other hand, that although the establishments conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Doctrine, comprise primary schools, art schools, orphanages, normal schools, academies and colleges, yet, like all other Religious teaching orders in the Church, their all-important object is to teach those confided to their care how to prepare and to recover baptismal grace; and when we reflect that the harvest is already ripe while the laborers are few, we take this opportunity of reminding Catholic young men that the Christian Brothers need recruits who have a vocation for teaching and who are willing to sacrifice themselves so that they may save the souls of others.

But why one any words of ours when one of the best and most practical men we have to loose—has already spoken on this subject. In a congratulatory letter which the Archbishop of Orleans addressed to Brother Joachim Alemany, O. P., sent to the Superior of the Christian Brothers on this coast, just twenty years ago, his Grace Archbishop alluded to the great mission which the Order of La Salle has before it.

"Young Brothers, you are destined to a life of the most disinterested self-sacrifice, and it is there the most efficient apostolate of the Church in the Church—not only of that secular lowe lodge which is needed in the various avocations of life—but what is vastly more important, say, of inestimable value, is the power to the young that science of science—the knowledge of God and His holy religion.

Your Institute being approved and blessed by the Holy Mother Church, as one of her sweetest and most fragrant flowers, you are sent out to her children, to cheer, to gladden, to comfort, to guide, to encourage in their sore way leaning towards a religious life, to lead, to direct

Farm and Home.

FOR WINTER EVENINGS.

Some Tableaux to Amuse the Young People—New Effective Scenes may be Arranged in any Ordinary Room.

"here are few pastimes better calculated to interest and amuse a winter evening assemblage of young people than tableaux; and a few plain directions, by which effective scenes can be arranged in any room, cannot fail to be of interest. Let us begin ten boxes of various sizes, two half-length pictures frames, one washtub and board, one broom, twenty feet of annealed wire, two dozen curtain rings, some large lamps or twenty candles, or a gas-rod twelve feet long, with fifteen fire-fly burners (open at the upper end), some muslin, costing about 30 cents per yard, and five cotton sheets. If the room has no folding-doors, you must have a thick curtain or bed-bath contrived to draw on a wire across the room, leaving a space about fifteen feet deep for the stage. This space must be draped with shawls or curtains, by stretching wire across the sides and back of the stage, near the ceiling, and hanging them by means of rings sewed upon the cloth. Then procure four upright pieces of narrow board, just the height of the room, for posts, screw them upon the back sides of the frames, near the edge, so that when you raise them up the frames will stand up right four feet six inches from the floor. Cover all the space above and behind the frames with cloth of the same color as the back wall, so that they will appear to the audience as if hanging upon the wall. Put up these frames four feet apart, and nail four strips of board five inches wide, in the shape of a large frame, between them, having the top and bottom strips, which form the frame, six and one-half feet apart. This will give you a large frame between the two smaller ones. The large frame will be 4 feet wide and 6½ feet high outside. The curtain must be arranged to run in front of the frames to cover them when not in use. These three frames form the back of the stage—the supporting posts called to the floor—two feet one-half feet from the wall, so as to give room for the performers or "pictures" behind them. If gas is available, fasten a rod, with burners upon it, over the top of the curtain or folding-doors. It is well to make a shelf for it, supported on two posts, about eight feet high. Over the burners will behind then tack sheets of common tin, bent so as to throw the light down. If you cannot obtain the tin conveniently, a white sheet, fastened behind the burners, will answer the purpose. If the curtain does not reach the ceiling, you must put a board or thick cloth above it, so that too much light will not enter the darkened auditorium. If you cannot be hung fasten candles or lamps, very securely, upon the shelf. In a very elaborate performance the stage should be raised to a level with the eyes of the spectators, but very fine performances are sometimes given on a few hours's notice. Yet make a roll of black lastrian muslin, large enough to cover the space before the posts which support the curtain.

A few suggestions, requiring only such costumes and appointments as can be collected in almost any house, may be not of place. A very simple one is: "Justice, Mercy and Peace." Justice stands on a high pedestal, made of two boot-boxes covered with a sheet; Peace on one box and Mercy leaning on two boxes placed end to end, making a long pedestal. They are draped in sheets. Peace can be taken by a child dressed in a snow frock of white sateen; Justice covered with black satin, with a be a larger lady than mercy. Mercy kneels in an attitude of prayer, with her head bent; Justice, bandageded, stands erect, holding a sword and scales covered with a white cloth, and Peace stands on the right of several with some sunshine like this.

"Nonsense; well I guess you this pretty as well as anybody."

"I don't either."

"Why you don't too lazy to split the wood you'd like them.

"Mrs. Swipes, now do be sensible. You know this preserving business costs money for sugar, fruit, cans, wax, firewood and dozens know what all. Hot some way or other you never do think about expense, for you've always buying ribbons, ruffles and Sunmaddities; but when I want anything, such as an easy chair to rest my weary bones in—oh, no, I can't have it, because you've spent all the money for duds you get on yourself.

"Now, you think you've said it. Oh, no, you don't spend any money, but I spend it all. If that's way where do you get money to pay order and come home to the house of your family stone-blind drunk? Don't deny it Swipes, for you know somebody blacked your eyeglasses the other day, and you was so drunk you thought it was midnight and made home with a lamp on your head in the middle of the day. You talk about economizing money."

Down on Newspaper Men.

"I don't want nodings to do vid dem newspaper vellers. They ly too schmart, all der vile."

"How's that, Schmidt?"

"Yall, de odder day von newspaper man come my house to ask me how I made de vall vashion, Schmidt." Undt I tips Breitty mock ter same. Vant a suit?

"Vy, he says, 'gents lik tem longer fish month as dey vish last month, sin't dat?'

"Undt I says, 'No, sir!' I a dailer! Dat's I know my deals!'

"Undt he says: 'I pets you on offergoat.' Undt I say: 'Ladder right.'

"Did he prove it?

"Ve gots into dat schmart suit shows how Sportsman had dirty tips undt Clubber dirty-von. So der goats von vers too long for dem mouch. So I hafe to make him and sexty-fife toller offergoat, gust vos vorkin toller. I hafe no pose yor dem newspaper vellers."

Two of a Trade.

A robber met a cool dealer on a lonely road and stopped him. "Your money or your life," said the robber. "Who are you?" asked the cool dealer. "I'm a highwayman," replied the man. "Good cough," cool said the cool dealer. "I'm a low-wayfaring man. Shake. We shall be friends. And they were.

A Neure Baptism.

"What name will you call them?" I asked.

"Cherubim and Seraphim," replied the mother.

"Why?" I asked astonishment.

"Because, children, with such a name they will be cherubim and seraphim continually cry, and does yers children do noth."

— Airy dentry beauty as effectually as forced pleasantry wipes out tran joy.

A Wonderful Freak of Nature

is sometimes exhibited in our public institutions. When we gaze upon some of the peculiar freaks these notice cannot only ladies in our midst forget back to the condition of man, "what is so fearfully and wonderfully made." The inventive genius of Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., Office, of Buffalo, and through his knowledge of those mysteries he has been able to prepare his "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a specific for all blood taints, poisons and humors, such as scrofula, pimples, blotches, eruptions, eruptions, ulcers and blanket affections. By druggists.

Family Fun.

"Suffer Little Children to Come unto Me."

Deacon White (who is a property owner and runs a real estate agency) "Good morning, Deacon Black."

Deacon Black "Good morning. I thought I would drop in and ask you how you liked the new minister yesterday. Fine sermon, wasn't it?"

D. W. "Excellent. Never heard better. He is a very eloquent man, and is very happy in the selection of his subjects."

D. B. "Remarkably so. Sermons on subjects that touch the sympathies are better for us all than the discussion of points of doctrine."

D. W. "Certainly, what could be happier than his sermon upon Mr. Gump? How tenderly he spoke of the little ones! I declare it melted my heart to hear him—

(Enter Lady who has business with Deacon W.)

D. W. "Well, ma'am, what can I do for you?"

Lady "Have you got any houses to let?"

D. W. "Yes."

Lady: "I am looking around to find a good house at a reasonable rent.

D. W. "Have you any children?"

L. "Yes.

D. W. "Then I can't let you have a house. Don't want any children in my houses."

Lady takes her leave, and the deacons resume their conversation on the sermon.

The Green-Eyed Monster.

"My dear, observed Mr. Gump, as he opens the door a little his for supper. "I am sorry that I couldn't get here sooner, but I stopped on the way up to get some tickets for the theater."

"You ought to know better than to waste your money in that way, Mr. Gump."

"Yes, my dear, but I got them for Mary Anderson."

"You did, hey! you got some tickets for Mary Anderson! You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Mr. Gump. Here I am left at home to work my hands off while you go out and buy tickets for Mary Anderson."

"But, my dear, I was going to take you to see Mary."

"I don't want to see her, and you ought to be ashamed to tell me that it's bad enough for you to go and buy theater tickets for her."

"But, my darling—"

"Look here, Mr. Gump, I want to tell you one thing. If you mention that woman's name to me again, you'll be sorry for it. You needn't try to explain, for I won't have it. Mary Anderson, hay! I suppose you gave her the tickets!"

"No, my dear, I—"

"Then the best thing you can do is to put them in the fire."

"But, my—"

"See here, John Gump, if you don't put those tickets in the fire, you'll regret it."

And John goes and put the $5 worth in the stove, mentally resolving that the philosopher was right when he divided mankind into two varieties of fools.

Where' the Money Goes.

"Swipes, won't you split up a little wood and go and borrow a brass kettle before you go up town?"

"What in thunder do you want me to do that for?"

"Cause I want to preserve some cherries to-day."

"Cherries?"

"Yes, cherries!"

"Thats just like you, Mrs Swipes. You'n always splintering and fooling your money away on everything."

"Nonsense; well I guess you this preserving is as well as anybody."

"I don't either."

"Why you don't too lazy to split the wood you'd like them.

"Mrs. Swipes, now do be sensible. You know this preserving business costs money for sugar, fruit, cans, wax, firewood and dozens know what all. Hot some way or other you never do think about expense, for you're always buying ribbons, ruffles and Sunmaddities; but when I want anything, such as an easy chair to rest my weary bones in—oh, no, I can't have it, because you've spent all the money for duds you get on yourself.

"Now, you think you've said it. Oh, no, you don't spend any money, but I spend it all. If that's way where do you get money to pay order and come home to the house of your family stone-blind drunk? Don't deny it Swipes, for you know somebody blacked your eyeglasses the other day, and you was so drunk you thought it was midnight and made home with a lamp on your head in the middle of the day. You talk about economizing money."

Down on Newspaper Men.

"I don't want nodings to do vid dem newspaper vellers. They ly too schmart, all der vile."

"How's that, Schmidt?"

"Yall, de odder day von newspaper man come my house to ask me how I made de vall vashion, Schmidt." Undt I tips Breitty mock ter same. Vant a suit?

"Vy, he says, 'gents lik tem longer fish month as dey vish last month, sin't dat?'

"Undt I says, 'No, sir!' I a dailer! Dat's I know my deals!'

"Undt he says: 'I pets you an offergoat.' Undt I say: 'Ladder right.'

"Did he prove it?

"Ve gots into dat schmart suit shows how Sportsman had dirty tips undt Clubber dirty-von. So der goats von vers too long for dem mouch. So I hafe to make him and sexty-fife toller offergoat, gust vos vorkin toller. I hafe no pose yor dem newspaper vellers."

Two of a Trade.

A robber met a cool dealer on a lonely road and stopped him. "Your money or your life," said the robber. "Who are you?" asked the cool dealer. "I'm a highwayman," replied the man. "Good cough," cool said the cool dealer. "I'm a low-wayfaring man. Shake. We shall be friends. And they were.

A Neure Baptism.

"What name will you call them?" I asked.

"Cherubim and Seraphim," replied the mother.

"Why?" I asked astonishment.

"Because, children, with such a name they will be cherubim and seraphim continually cry, and does yers children do noth."

— Airy dentry beauty as effectually as forced pleasantry wipes out tran joy.

A Wonderful Freak of Nature

is sometimes exhibited in our public institutions. When we gaze upon some of the peculiar freaks these notice cannot only ladies in our midst forget back to the condition of man, "what is so fearfully and wonderfully made." The inventive genius of Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., Office, of Buffalo, and through his knowledge of those mysteries he has been able to prepare his "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a specific for all blood taints, poisons and humors, such as scrofula, pimples, blotches, eruptions, eruptions, ulcers and blanket affections. By druggists.

"THE GRAND OLD MONITOR"

FOR 1886.

TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS OLD

—AND—

Growing in Catholic Favor Every Week!

PRONOUNCED BY CLERGY AND LAITY TO BE

The Cheapest, The Freshest, The Best

CATHOLIC PAPER IN AMERICA.

$3. FOR A YEAR'S READING FOR A WHOLE FAMILY. $3.

Tested by Truth and Tried by Time.
The Friend of Virtue—The Foe of Crime.

The Monitor

—FURNISHES ITS READERS WITH NEARLY—

TWO THOUSAND COLUMNS OF READING MATTER EVERY YEAR !!!

IN EVERY DEPARTMENT IT IS

A Complete Catholic Family Paper

—CONTAINING SUITABLE READING FOR—

Young and Old in Every Catholic Household.

ITS WEEKLY CONTENTS INCLUDES

Catholic Stories and Poetry by Distinguished Writers.
Family Reading for Pure and Firesides.
Family Fun. Compelling Jokes for Old and Young.
Sketches of Catholic Shrines in all portions of the world.

— TOGETHER WITH —

THE LATEST NEWS FROM IRELAND, THE NEWS OF THE CATHOLIC WORLD, CORRESPONDENCE FROM ROME AND IRELAND, EDITORIALS ON CATHOLIC QUESTIONS, EUROPEAN CABLEGRAMS AND EASTERN DISPATCHES, CATHOLIC EVENTS ON THE COAST, ETC., ETC.

ASK YOUR CATHOLIC NEIGHBOR TO Support the Press that Defends his Faith.

SEND IN THE NAME OF A SUBSCRIBER AS A NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

HOW TO SUBSCRIBE:

Go to the Post Office, pay three cents for a $3.00 Postal Note, and enclose it in a 2 cent stamped envelope, addressed to

THE MONITOR,
636 Clay Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Catholic Societies.

☞ Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are requested to send list of officers and other information desired concerning their societies to the Editor.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARACHIAL COUNCIL.—The Parochial Council meets on a month, and a general meeting of all the conferences is held quarterly. The Parochial Council, to which each conference sends two representatives, has the signal distinction of the Parish, so that the power conferred upon it by the Rule of the Society, of dividing a parish into districts, can be exercised without conflict, cases of hardship and destitution are thoroughly investigated, and relief administered in the most thoroughly practical way. The Council meets on the Thursday in every month, but the Executive Committee meets every Tuesday. The officers are: Rev. Father Prefect, President; One Priest, Owen C. Brady; Treasurer, Roger O'Donnell; Secretary, P. J. Thomas. The Parochial Council further consists of the President, Vice-President and Spiritual Director of each conference, viz:

Conferences of the Parish.

The following list comprises the officers of the different St. Vincent de Paul Conferences in this city:

ST. MARY'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. John Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, 1877 Bush st., and Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. PATRICK'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, Thomas Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, 1877 Bush st., and Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. JOSEPH'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Prendergast; President, Roger O'Donnell; Vice-President, Thomas Cunnion; Treasurer, P. Cunnion; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. PETER'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. PAUL'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. ANDREW'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. ANTHONY'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. BRIDGET'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. JOHN'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. MARY'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. PATRICK'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane; Secretary, Jas. Hampshire, 1122 Geary street.

ST. JOSEPH'S.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Cunnion; Vice-President, P. Cunnion; Treasurer, J. J. Crane

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—Among the dancers who appeared on the floor at a prosper' ball in Armagh workhouse, on Christmas night, were two inmates named Mary Barry and Margaret Monaghan. The former is 90, and the latter 100 years old. Both danced with considerable activity, and both enjoyed good health, and have long been workhouse inmates.

Antrim.—All indications now point to the possibility that the majority of the moderate Liberals, who are now still in the Parliamentary Liberal ranks, will sooner or later join with the Unionists, if a move is being worked out by Mr. Parnell. The child cause, however, is a subject upon which the leaders of Irish party are extremely sensitive, and any such move would be made with the utmost caution. The Ulster Liberals, who are now still in the Parliamentary Liberal ranks, are a very small minority in Ulster, and are made of political matters is intended to utilize the Loyalist party, but is conducted with such virulence that it is rapidly driving the moderates into the ranks of the Nationalists. The reasoning end of the Orange party is rapidly drifting toward Home Rule.

Clare.—The great ball mills near between Crusheen, of Victoria, and T. H. Malone, late of Milltown Malbay, county Clare, and now of Sydney, for the chairmanship of Australian Parliament, place on the Port Melbourne premises, which are 1 mile from the Victoria Dock, and stands with a load of three yards of wheat, and a load of twenty bags of flour, and in the afternoon, and the Irish that the weather was so fine, and the Irish champion drawing was so well attended, and the sport was so lively by 12 parts.

Cork.—Dr. John F. Moynihan, Dispensary doctor at Ballyhooly district, for several years, died on December 29th, aged 45 years. Deceased was a native of Ballyhooly, and was the son of a medical practitioner in the same district. He was a national orthodoxist, and was a member of the Nationalist party.

The Dublin Nationalists have carried four out of the eight municipal seats, which increase their number to five. Dublin Nationalists, although defeated on the Township Board, and, although defeated on the Corporation, yet, on the result in Victoria, and the political complexion of the Dublin Corporation, when taken in the aggregate, is considered that the Nationalists have gained a good deal of ground. In the present instance, contrary to the usual rule, the Nationalists have gained in the Dublin Corporation, and, in the Dublin Corporation, the Nationalists have gained ground. The Dublin Nationalists have carried four out of the eight municipal seats, which increase their number to five. Dublin Nationalists, although defeated on the Township Board, and, although defeated on the Corporation, yet, on the result in Victoria, and the political complexion of the Dublin Corporation, when taken in the aggregate, is considered that the Nationalists have gained a good deal of ground. In the present instance, contrary to the usual rule, the Nationalists have gained in the Dublin Corporation, and, in the Dublin Corporation, the Nationalists have gained ground.

Dublin.—On December 30th, a meeting of the Dublin Nationalists was held in the Mansion House, when a resolution was passed to the effect that the Nationalists should contest every municipal seat in the city, and that the Nationalists should contest every municipal seat in the city, and that the Nationalists should contest every municipal seat in the city, and

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SAILOR'S QUEST.

BY GRANDIE QUINN.

"A toast, a toast!" the sailors cry,
And echo answers back,
While the good ship plunges her funny way
Over the foaming track.
"Here's to the lassie we left behind,"
Sang a jolly tar of the seas,
May God in His love and mercies kind,
Protect them wher'er we be.

Thus pledged each heart both bold and brave,
As the brave ship danced o'er the foaming waves,
With the while sea foam as her lace,
Till a youth stood up with brimming cup
And the dark eyes dashed a tear,
While each stood with pelt on his sturdy form
And his cable like the shades of night.

A toast I drink to a dear one's name,
I trust beyond my ken,
She's more to me than say friend I name,
I drink to my dear old mother.
I know ere she closes her eyes in sleep
She breathes a prayer for me,
That our Blessed Mother will ever keep,
A watch o'er her boy at sea.

A silence fell on that jovial throng,
And upon that flushed, grave face,
Hushed was the last and laughing song,
I wonder? was the theme brim-
Each thought of home and a mother dear,
And memory endeared back
While the proud ship danced o'er the tremblin waves,
On the ocean's watery track.

THEY WILTED.

They were sitting side by side,
And she blushed and he sighed.

Said he, "My darling idol."
And then he sighed, and then she blied.

"You are creation's belle."
And she sighed, and then he bellowed.

"On my soul there's such a weight,"
And he sighed, and then she wailed.

"Your hand I ask, so hold I'm crowe,"
And he groaned, and then she groaned.

"You shall have your private pie,"
And she giggled, and then he giggled.

Said she, "My dearest Luke,"
And he laughed, while she looked.

"I'll have thee, if thou will,"
And he willed, and then she willed.

Literary Miscellany.

Was it a Ghost?

of His Wife.

CHAPTER I.

The night of the 5th of January, Little Christmas Eve, 1860, shall I ever forget its gaiety and its sadness? Its pleasure in the wintry wind through the lonely forest, and the incessant dreary prose of the ship?

I had heard of lonely wayfarers being lost in the woods before; I had pitied them; but now I fully consisted the vague terror, the maddened danger which broods over the lost!

"This comes of short cuts," I muttered petulantly to myself, as I plodded along, leaping close to the trunks of the trees, to avoid the deep ravine, through which I could just hear the roar of the turbulent stream some forty or fifty feet below.

My blood ran cold at the thought what might be the possible consequences of a mistake, or a mere lapse in the wrong direction. Hitherto I had been contented to hang in

I should have reached the railway station an hour ago! I had not foolishly imagined the woodpath would be more direct; now I have wandered off, nobody knows how many miles out of civilization, and if I escape with my life, and some bones broken, I shall consider myself particularly lucky.

Hold on! Was that a light, or are my eyes playing me as false as and my common senses?

I stopped, holding on to the low, resinous boughs of a hemlock that grew on the edge of the bank; for it actually seemed as if the wind would seize me bodily and hurl me down the suspicious descent. It was a light—blank Providence it was a light, and no space future or corpse-gleam to lure me on to destruction and death.

"Hallo-o-o-o!"

My voice rang through the woods like a clarion, strengthened by the energy of despairing; the light beetlered, oscillated back and forth, and loudly stood still.

I plunged and scrambled through tangled vines, dense briars, and rocky banks, until, gradually searing, I could perceive a bent figure wrapped in an old obiloth cape or cloak, carrying a lantern. As the dim light fell upon his face I almost recoiled.

Would not solitude and the woods be preferable to the companionship of this withered, wrinkled, hideous old man! But it was too late to remedy now.

"What's wanting?" he marled, with a peculiar motion of the lips that seemed to move his yellow stumps of teeth all bare.

"I am lost in the wood; can you direct me to Rochester station?"

"Yes; Rochester station is twelve miles from here."

"Twelve miles!" I stood aghast.

"Yes."

"Can you tell me of any shelter I could obtain for the night?"

"No."

"Where are you going?"

"To Dove's down by the maple swamp."

"Is it a tavern?"

"No."

"Would they take me for the night? I could pay them well."

His eyes glimmed; the yellow stumps seemed revealed once more.

"I guess so. Taint a tavern, but folks do stop there some in a while."

"Is it far from here?"

"Not very; about half a mile."

"Then lead on make haste and reach it. I am drenched to the skin."

"I plodded on, my companion more than keeping pace with me, though he must have been nearly seventy-five years of age, and bent with infirmity. Presently we left the edge of the ravine, entering what seemed like treeless woods, and hoping straight on until the lights of some habitation glean-ed difidly through the wet foliage.

CHAPTER II.

It was a ruinous old place, with the windows all down to one side as if the fiends, lion blind, and the pillars of a rude porch were nearly rotted away; yet that frail castle could scarcely have looked pleasanter or more welcome to me, wayworn and weary as I was.

I was answered my fellow traveler's knock—a woman apparently about thirty-five years of age, with reddish brown hair wound in thick braids about her head, and curiously bald at one temple.

My companion whispered a word or two to her, and she turned to me with smooth, reliable words of welcome. "She regretted the poverty of their accommodations; but I was welcome to them, could I stay over night.

"Where is Isaac?" demanded my guide.

"He has not come in yet."

I sat down on a wooden bench beside the fire, with my valise close at hand, while the woman threw on fresh logs, drew out a round pine table, and produced bread, cold meat, and a bottle of some spiritous compound. I ate a few mouthfuls of the bread, but did not touch the other articles.

"I should like to retire as soon as possible," I said, for my weariness was excessive.

"Certainly."

The woman started up with alacrity.

"Where are you going to put him?" asked my guide.

"Up in the chamber."

"Put him in Isaac's room."

"No."

"It's the most comfortable."

"I tell you no."

Here I interrupted the whispered colloquy. "I am not particular—I don't care where you lodge me, only make haste!"

The woman's smooth apologies were profuse. "She only wished to make me comfortable, and Isaac's room always looked in wet weather."

So I was conducted up a steep ladder that made my limbs ache, and ushered into a room where cobwebs adorned sloping beams and ventilated by one small window, where a cot bed stood, crowded close against the board partition, and a pine table, with one or two chairs formed the sole attempts at furniture.

The women set the light—no oil, fampon the table.

"Anything more I can get you, sir?"

"Nothing, I thank you."

"I hope you'll sleep well, sir. When shall I call you?"

"At four o'clock in the morning, if you please. I must walk over to Rochester station in time for the seven o'clock train."

"I'll be sure to call you, sir."

She withdrew, leaving me alone in the gloomy little apartment.

I sat down, and looked around me with no very agreeable sensation. Wearied as I had become, I felt no inclination to sleep, in fact, it seemed as if I had never been more wakeful in all my life. I walked up and down the narrow room; I lay down on the bed, trying to woo slumber by listening to the ceaseless drip, drip of the rain upon the roof, but all in vain; my brain seemed preternaturally active.

"I will sit down and write to Berenice," I thought; "that will soothe my nerves and quiet me, perhaps."

I descended the ladder. The fire still glowed ruddy on the stone hearth; my companion and the woman sat beside it, talking in a low tone, and a third person sat at the table onin—a short, stout, villainous-looking man, in a red flannel shirt and muddy trousers.

I asked for writing materials. A bottle of ink, a stumpy pen, and a couple of sheets of ruled paper were brought out of a little cupboard in the chimney, and I returned to my room to write to my wife.

"My darling Berenice;

I paused and laid down my pen as I modeled the words, half musing to think what she would say could she know of my strange quarters—she, my fair little Italian flower, now regaining her lost rosee under the blue balmy sky of her native land, and I, the pale, wayworn, anxious husband, in this part of the stormy midnight.

Not until both sheets were covered did I lay aside my pen and prepare for slumber. As I folded the paper I happened to glance toward my cosed.

Was it a gleam of a human eye observing me through the crack of the board partition, or was it but my own fancy? Whatever it was, it sent a cold chill through the marrow of my bones. I took my light to reconnoiter. There was a crack there, but only blank darkness beyond; yet I could have sworn that something had sparkled balefully at me.

I took out my watch—it was ten o'clock. It was scarcely worth while for me to undress for three hours more. I would lie down in my clothes and watch that chamber I could. So placing my valise close to the head of my bed, and resuming the fearless door with the two chairs, I extinguished the light and lay down.

CHAPTER III.

Dreary enough the hours dragged by, while I lay in the gloom, and a third person stole into the room. Either my companion or the woman was sent with a stump pen, and a couple of sheets of sealed paper were brought out of a little cupboard in the chimney, and I returned to my room to write to my wife.

"My darling Berenice;

I paused and laid down my pen as I modeled the words, half musing to think what she would say could she know of my strange quarters—she, my fair little Italian flower, now regaining her lost rosee under the blue balmy sky of her native land, and I, the pale, wayworn, anxious husband, in this part of the stormy midnight.

Not until both sheets were covered did I lay aside my pen and prepare for slumber. As I folded the paper I happened to glance toward my cosed.

Was it a gleam of a human eye observing me through the crack of the board partition, or was it but my own fancy? Whatever it was, it sent a cold chill through the marrow of my bones. I took my light to reconnoiter. There was a crack there, but only blank darkness beyond; yet I could have sworn that something had sparkled balefully at me.

I took out my watch—it was ten o'clock. It was scarcely worth while for me to undress for three hours more. I would lie down in my clothes and watch that chamber I could. So placing my valise close to the head of my bed, and resuming the fearless door with the two chairs, I extinguished the light and lay down.

CHAPTER IV.

But the strangest part of my story is to come yet. Some three weeks afterwards I received a letter from my sister, who was with Berenice in her Italian home—a letter whose intelligence filled me with surprise.

"I must tell you something very, very strange," wrote my sister, "that happened to me on the Twelfth Night. Berenice had not been so well for some time; she had had been confined to her bed for nearly a week, and I was sitting beside her reading. It was late—the clock had just struck one—when all of a sudden she seemed to faint away, growing cold and rigid as a corpse. I hastened to call assistance, but all efforts seemed vain to restore life or animation. I was just about sending Antonio for the doctor when her senses returned as suddenly as they had left her, and she sat up in bed, pushing back her hair and looking wildly around her.

"Berenice!" I exclaimed, "how you have terrified me! Are you ill?

"Not ill, she answered; "but I feel so strange. Grace, I have been with my husband!"

And all our reasoning failed to convince her of the impossibility of her assertions. She persists to this moment that she saw you and was with you in the night of the 5th of January, or rather on the morning of the Epiphany. Where said she you not tell; but we think it must have been where you lodge, for, she said, she knew the wish you could see how fast she is improving.

This is my plain, unvarnished tale. I do not pretend to explain or account for its strange relation. I leave facts. Let psychologists unravel the falsyrintricacy of this.

I am not superstitious, neither have I much romance in my composition. I prefer to say that I believe or do not believe in ghosts, dreams, and apparitions, but this thing I know—that although my Italian wife was at Naples, in the body, she waking of Little Christmas Eve, her spirit actually stood beside me in the moment of the deadly peril that menaced me.

It may be that, to the subtle instinct and strength of a wife's holy love, all things are possible; but Berenice surely saved my life.

AN UNRECORDED ENGAGEMENT OF THE WAR.

Mark Twain's Private History of a Campaign that Failed.

The following amusing incident in the Civil War is recorded by Mark Twain in the December Century:

"For a time life was idly delicious; it was perfect; there was nothing to mar it. Then came some farmers with an alarm one day. They said that it was rumored that the enemy were advancing in all directions, from our Hydes prairie. The rumor was a sharp stir amongst us, and general consternation. The effect upon Hyde was tremendous. The rumor was but a rumor—nothing definite about it; so, in the course of two days, we did not know which way to retreat. Lyman was not for retreating at all in those uncertain circumstances; but he had to be tried to maintain that attitude he would not. Hyde was for the command were in no humor to put up with timber-limation. So he yielded the point and called a council of war—to consist of himself and three other officers; but the privates made such a fuss about being left out, that we had to allow them to be present. I mean we had to allow them to remain for they were already present, and doing the most of the talking too. The question was which way to retreat; but all were so flurried that nobody seemed to have even a guess to offer, except Lyman. He explained in a few calm words, that inasmuch as the enemy were approaching over Hyde's prairie, our course was simple, all we had to do was to retreat towards him; any other direction would scatter our needs perfectly. Everybody saw it immediately to be the true and how wise so layman got many compliments. It was now decided that we should fall back on Mason's farm.

It was after dark by this time, and as we could not know how soon the enemy might arrive, it did not seem best to try to pack the horses; so we only took the guns and ammunition and started at once. It was a very rough and hilly and rocky, and presently the night grew very dark and very cold, and I got lost in the troublesome time of it, struggling and stumbling along in the dark—and soon afterwards I stumbled over a fallen tree and my foot was caught in a root, and I was left there, one after the other, all but

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1886.

PASTORAL LETTER

—OF—

RIGHT REV. BISHOP MANOGUE

TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF

The Diocese of Grass Valley.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:

We are again called upon to acknowledge the bounty and liberality of Almighty God towards his people. We can well sustain in the over-flowing exuberance of grateful hearts, "Praise the Lord for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever." During the few years which have elapsed of the glorious reign of our beloved and venerated Supreme Pontiff, now, for the third time, we have been favored with the sanctifying blessings of a Jubilee. May God grant us all the grace to appreciate this paternal solicitude by turning to our own personal and individual accounts the favorable opportunity now presented; that we may redeem the past by penitential works, alms deeds and works of mercy in the poor, and that the future may be sanctified, we hope the last of the sort which shall ever be within our reach, may blot out the hand-writing of sin against us, recorded on to God and enhance our eternal salvation. "Now indeed is the acceptable time, now the day of salvation. Now indeed are the words of the Lord applicable: "If your sins be as scarlet, they shall be made as white as snow; and if they be red as crimson, they shall be white as wool."

Our joy should be the joy of those of the Hebrews of old as the Church expresses the Synagogue, as Christianity avouts Judaism. The Jubilee year was announced by the sound of a trumpet, and the same word derived from the Hebrew Yobel signifying the blast of a trumpet is still retained in the law of grace to express a joy similar but greater than that proclaimed to the oppressed Hebrew. It was a year of rejoicing to them; for greater reason it should be a year of rejoicing for us. Debts were remitted and cancelled; slaves were restored to liberty; families re-seated in possession of their mortgaged or lost patrimony, and even the land itself was permitted to assume a tranquil repose, to recuperate its exhausted vigor, and renew its charms, its freshness, richness and beauty. "Now," says the Apostle, "all these things happened to them in figure."

For the children of the Church the year of Jubilee is a year of mercy, a year of indulgence, a year of forgiveness. A year when doors are opened against the claims of Divine Justice are entirely remitted; when the sinner of sin are restored to the liberty of the children of God; when the unfortunate, the guilty and religious may, by salutary penance, regain their forfeited rights, recover upon their own possession, their heavenly inheritance; when each one by a separation of the past may lay up reserved and redoubled strength for the future; when, finally, all people of good will throughout the world, laying aside their worldly aspirations, dangerous occasions and diabolical enticements, are certainly exhorted to seriously reflect upon the past in the bitterness of "their soul; to make with their fervidity, their carelessness, their indifference, their forbidden pleasures, hurtful spectacles and theatres, their shameful amusements, their scandalous lives, their impious infidelities, their compact offensive and defensive, that they may be enabled to see and understand the evil and the true guilty, and realize eternity now glimmering before their souls.

We have standing against us not only the guilt of the best also the unpaid penalty, the temporal punishment inseparably connected therewith. During this year of special favor we are earnestly urged to liquidate both the guilt of sin and its temporal punishment. We know we have been sinners, but we know we have satisfied the justice of God for our transgressions? The penitent prophet declared: "I have my iniquity and my sin is always before my eyes." But did he do penance for his sin? Did he satisfy the justice of God? Did he supplate the temporal punishment attached to and following his sin? Because of his anguish and penance God remembered and rephiliam. "The Lord hath taken away thy sin; nevertheless because thou hast given occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blasphemie, the child born to thee shall surely die." "I have pardoned thee, for whom thou hast implored my clemency, said Almighty God to Moses, "but in punishment of their sin none of them shall see the Promised Land."

Does not the universal condition of the human race in the land to the most remote descent, not, bear testimony to this inconsistable truth? Whence come the sufferings, the pains, the tribulations, the afflictions, sickness, any, death itself? The Apostle answers: "The wages of sin is death." "Does not man, woman, child, lament, O! Lord! even the sins of those whom thou hast punished. Thou punishest those who confessing their sins only because he punishes him. Still. Thus mercy and justice are equally satisfied; mercy because man is delivered from sin; and justice, because sin is punished." Misericordia pax nam liberatur; justitia quia punitur punitur, S. Aug. in Psalm L.

As the Jubilee begins from the very commencement of this year, and as life and death are uncertain individually speaking, we take this Encyclopaedic to be before you the precious treasures of the Church so that those who may be ill, labouring on the way, or nearing life's last stage, may not be deprived of such heavenly assistance.

The conditions for gaining the Plenary Indulgence are the following:

I. Be visits to the local Church with fervent prayer for the intention of the Holy Father. No particular prayers are prescribed, but, to avoid confusion, let the Pater Noster and Ave Maria, or the Litany of the Blessed Virgin may be said. These prayers should be vocal not mental.

II. Two days of strict Mosic fast; that is, nothing the use of eggs, butter, milk and cheese. Any days during the year even in the Lenten season, which are not otherwise set apart as days of fast, or days of abstinence, as the vigil, black fast days, may be selected as the Jubilee fast days.

III. Abundoning something to one's means. With regard to this condition the confessor should be consulted. The Holy Father has designated the objects for the alms of the faithful, viz: Parochial schools and the education of young candidates for the priesthood. The respective pastors are requested to be careful in preserving these offerings of the people so as to enable to be sent the amount collected out by the Sovereign Pontiff.

IV. A good confession and communion. The confession and communion prescribed for the Jubilee indulgence are not intended to satisfy the Easter duty, and hence must be distinct and separate from the Paschal obligation.

The Plenary indulgence may be gained more than once provided the prescribed conditions, as at first, be fulfilled, but the special faculties contained in the Encyclical letter of commuting, absolving or dispensing can be exercised by the confessors only once in favor of the same person.

All the foregoing conditions accept confession may be commuted for other good works by the confessor. Those confined in prisons, hospitals, the sick, the facile, all disabled persons, are left to the pious and prudent care of the pastors and confessors for works suitable to their condition to gain the indulgence. Children who are not admitted to First Communion can be dispensed therefrom and be placed in the ranks of those who have received the holy Eucharist.

To you, beloved brethren of the clergy, I, prelate to set forth the benefits of the Jubilee. In a short letter we can but indicate the outlines. It is for you to more profoundly explain, though may be engineered or careless in the performance of the works prescribed, they should again and again be active and alive to their greatest interests as well as to the appeals of the poor souls from the prison of Purgatory. At least you, my friends have play or no, for the hand of the Lord is heavy upon me." Make known the desire of the Holy Father to secure such participation and help in the Jubilee of St. Francis among the people; by promoting and spreading the beautiful and devotional appeals through the agencies of the holy Rosary, and by laying before the faithful in proper and becoming colors the beauties of their holy religion. How many indifferent children are unaware of its riches, the treasures, the beauties and attractions of their Father's house; They would seem unable to appreciate the precious jewels surrounding them in their palaces. Warn them against the insidious and culpable indifference. Tell them not to imitate the proud, selfish, and rain worldly philosophy who impiously considers himself the lord of creation; who standing amidst the attractions and dazzling scenes surrounding him is often compelled from his selfish stand and narrow horizon to view a greater expanse of the heavens than of the earth, and yet shut his eyes against the brilliant light of the sun, against the majesty of the heavens, the grandeur of the majesty of the planets, and all that dazzling panorama pointing out the Supreme Architect of that great temple of nature. Our humility with the sonnes and beauties of the universe should not render them less attractive, or that Author less revered; so also the goods and gifts continually spread before our eyes in lovely bouquets in the museum of the Church should not be to us a continual source of gratitude, acknowledgment and thanksgiving.

Trusting we may, through the intercession of the Queen of the Holy Rosary, receive this propitious year a plenitude of grace.

I am yours faithfully in Christ,

✠ PATRICK MANOGUE,

Bishop of Grass Valley.

Marysville, Feast of St. Francis de Sales, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

— We learn from our recent Irish exchanges that Archbishop Walsh of Dublin recently visited Archbishop Croke of Cashel, and received a real Irish welcome from the people around the Rock. Next week we will print the spirited speeches delivered by both pastors Prelates at this union of hearts and hands in the cause of holy Ireland.

— A list of all the Catholic societies that have elected officers for 1886, and who have sent in their names to this office thus far, will be found on the third page. There are numerous branches of the Catholic Knights of America and other Catholic organizations not included in one list for the reason that they have neglected thus far to report the new officers. These we will publish as soon as the secretaries send them in.

— We feel deeply grateful to Bishop Mullen of Erie, for his ecclesiastical approval which is printed in the Lake Shore Visitor. One reason for this is because the Erie journal says that the Pastor of Erie says "has never been more worthy of his exercise than at present," and we promise this increase in the raise of the Visitor arises from the fact that it faloniously appropriates the MONITOR's editorials.

— A recent colloquem from Paris says that the Archbishops of Paris, Lyons and Toulon have written to President Grevy asking their devotion to the fatherland and setting their devotion to the sentiment of patriotism and loyal to the person of the President. Grevy is a Protestant, and yet, more inspiring knowledge of our holy faith, is crowded into these few columns than is contained in many a volume of a thousand pages. All who read it will rejoice that they belong to the grand old Church with such a supremely grand religious record.

— Poor, decrepid and decaying Protestantism is rapidly dissolving into nothing. One by one the props that supported it in its past step in and fetch it career of sectarianism are being knocked from under it, and even its so-called "ministers" are beginning to discover that it lacks all the essential qualities of even a spurious form of Christianity. It is not very long ago since Masses and prayers for the dead were pronounced by Popish abomination," yet now we have nearly a hundred Protestant churches in this country where them services for the dead are performed, when hymns sung and when prayers recited for poor Protestant souls who are in what used to be called—"another popish invention"—Purgatory. We quote from a recent dispatch from Philadelphia says that the Protestant Episcopal Ritualist Church of St. Ignatius on that city, has taken a new step in advance. A recent dispatch from Philadelphia says that the Protestant Episcopal Ritualist Church of St. Ignatius on that city, has taken a new step in advance. The Protestant that exists the apprehension of the evangelical party, namely, the saying of solemn requiem masses for the repose of the dead. The service is all performed by the officiating preacher and his acolytes, and the congregation apparently are shut off entirely from any participation except as lookers-on. This is certainly a new departure from Protestant practices that marks another downward step for sectarianism.

— English holders of Confederate Bonds, it is stated, have begun another movement to secure recognition of their claims from the United States Government. A committee with Lord Penzance at its head, has been appointed to move in the matter in London, and Judge Fullerton, with other legal talent of New York, will be counsel for the English claimants in this country. When—as a contemporary says—Sherman marched from Atlanta to the sea he had to contend against English money, English influence, and English Armstrong guns. He and his soldiers would have that these English people of the South with munitions of war to carry on the contest. They did their best, as far as their means permitted, to destroy the Union but failed, and now they want us to pay them back the money they invested in weapons to cut our throats. We are a forgiving people and extend the hand of fellowship to our Southern brethren, but we have not lost brave, and their bravery covers a multitude of sins in the eyes of the Northern man. But for the sympathy of Englishmen who worked in the dark to overthrow us he has nothing but disdain and contempt. Lord Penzance, whoever he is, may try to win back the money he lost in secession bonds, but Judge Fullerton and his associates might be engaged in a more laudable enterprise than to secure the sympathy of the people of their country. They are playing a losing game, for the patriotism of the North will never forget and ever the recognition of these English Confederate bonds.

Ireland's Prospects for Home Rule.

Just as we were going to press last week the glad tidings reached the galaxies of things from England that the Salisbury ministry had been defeated, through the votes of the solid phalanx of Parnell's compatriots. Since then the Queen has been compelled to accept the resignation of the Salisbury ministry, and to call upon Gladstone to form a Cabinet for the conduct of the national affairs of Great Britain, and the latest news indicates that some very liberal measures indicative of Home Rule for Ireland will be introduced into the present Parliament, and if not actually passed, their presentment will at least pave the way for their passage before the next Parliament dissolves.

English Whigs, Tories, Liberals and Conservatives are all at sea politically concerning the ultimate outcome regarding the Irish question, but in the meanime Parnell and his compatriots keep their lips harmoniously sealed regarding their hopes and aspirations, and this fact would indicate that there is some secret understanding between Gladstone and Parnell which will not be developed until the time be come suitable for its revelation.

Gladstone seems to be the only statesman in England who has the courage to carry out his convictions concerning the Irish question. He stands almost alone among the prominent English politicians as the man who is destined to achieve immortality for his name as the first English Premier who has given to Ireland even a moity of those rights which England has so long wrongfully withheld from her.

Another cause for rejoicing arises from the fact that Ireland rejoices to day over the departure of the man who—it is to be hoped—will prove to be the last English Viceroy in Ireland. Lord Carnarvon left Ireland greeted by the ironical shouts of thousands of Irish men and women who earnestly prayed that they might never look upon his like again—a prayer that will find a response in the heart of every friend of Ireland throughout the whole civilized world.

Looking at the Irish question from all points of the political compass, we feel inclined to believe—as far as human nature can peer into the future—that before two years have dawned Ireland will wring from England the right to govern herself in the full measure of constitutional liberty.

—Bishop Gillmor of Cleveland, is given by the Eastern exemplifier of the wires an authority for the statement that it is the intention of the Holy Father at the next Consistory to create a new American Cardinal as successor to the late lamented Cardinal McCloskey, and that the choice will fall upon Most Rev. James Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore.

—It would be a great act of mercy if this father or the mother, or some of the elder children in every household where the MONITOR is received would read aloud—at some convenient time when the family could be present—the magnificent historical and Jubilee pastoral sermon preached by Cardinal Moran, which we print this week. More necessary information regarding the commencement of the third order of St. Francis among the people; by promoting and spreading the beautiful and devotional appeals through the agencies of the holy Rosary, and by laying before the faithful in proper and becoming colors the beauties of their holy religion. How many indifferent children are unaware of its riches, the treasures, the beauties and attractions of their Father's house; They would seem unable to appreciate the precious jewels surrounding them in their palaces. Warn them against the insidious and culpable indifference. Tell them not to imitate the proud, selfish, and rain worldly philosophy who impiously considers himself the lord of creation; who standing amidst the attractions and dazzling scenes surrounding him is often compelled from his selfish stand and narrow horizon to view a greater expanse of the heavens than of the earth, and yet shuts his eyes against the brilliant light of the sun, against the majesty of the heavens, the grandeur of the majesty of the planets, and all that dazzling panorama pointing out the Supreme Architect of that great temple of nature. Our humility with the sonnes and beauties of the universe should not render them less attractive, or that Author less revered; so also the goods and gifts continually spread before our eyes in lovely bouquets in the museum of the Church should not be to us a continual source of gratitude, acknowledgment and thanksgiving.

Trusting we may, through the intercession of the Queen of the Holy Rosary, receive this propitious year a plenitude of grace.

I am yours faithfully in Christ,

✠ PATRICK MANOGUE,

Bishop of Grass Valley.

Marysville, Feast of St. Francis de Sales, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

— We learn from our recent Irish exchanges that Archbishop Walsh of Dublin recently visited Archbishop Croke of Cashel, and received a real Irish welcome from the people around the Rock. Next week we will print the spirited speeches delivered by both pastors Prelates at this union of hearts and hands in the cause of holy Ireland.

— A list of all the Catholic societies that have elected officers for 1886, and who have sent in their names to this office thus far, will be found on the third page. There are numerous branches of the Catholic Knights of America and other Catholic organizations not included in one list for the reason that they have neglected thus far to report the new officers. These we will publish as soon as the secretaries send them in.

— We feel deeply grateful to Bishop Mullen of Erie, for his ecclesiastical approval which is printed in the Lake Shore Visitor. One reason for this is because the Erie journal says that the Pastor of Erie says "has never been more worthy of his exercise than at present," and we promise this increase in the raise of the Visitor arises from the fact that it faloniously appropriates the MONITOR's editorials.

— A recent colloquem from Paris says that the Archbishop of Paris, Lyons and Toulon have written to President Grevy asking their devotion to the fatherland and setting their devotion to the sentiment of patriotism and loyal to the person of the President. Grevy is a Protestant, and yet, more inspiring knowledge of our holy faith, is crowded into these few columns than is contained in many a volume of a thousand pages. All who read it will rejoice that they belong to the grand old Church with such a supremely grand religious record.

— Poor, decrepid and decaying Protestantism is rapidly dissolving into nothing. One by one the props that supported it in its past step in and fetch it career of sectarianism are being knocked from under it, and even its so-called "ministers" are beginning to discover that it lacks all the essential qualities of even a spurious form of Christianity. It is not very long ago since Masses and prayers for the dead were pronounced "a Popish abomination," yet now we have nearly a hundred Protestant churches in this country where them services for the dead are performed, when hymns sung and when prayers recited for poor Protestant souls who are in what used to be called—"another popish invention"—Purgatory. We quote from a recent dispatch from Philadelphia says that the Protestant Episcopal Ritualist Church of St. Ignatius on that city, has taken a new step in advance. The Protestant that exists the apprehension of the evangelical party, namely, the saying of solemn requiem masses for the repose of the dead. The service is all performed by the officiating preacher and his acolytes, and the congregation apparently are shut off entirely from any participation except as lookers-on. This is certainly a new departure from Protestant practices that marks another downward step for sectarianism.

— English holders of Confederate Bonds, it is stated, have begun another movement to secure recognition of their claims from the United States Government. A committee with Lord Penzance at its head, has been appointed to move in the matter in London, and Judge Fullerton, with other legal talent of New York, will be counsel for the English claimants in this country. When—as a contemporary says—Sherman marched from Atlanta to the sea he had to contend against English money, English influence, and English Armstrong guns. He and his soldiers would have that these English people of the South with munitions of war to carry on the contest. They did their best, as far as their means permitted, to destroy the Union but failed, and now they want us to pay them back the money they invested in weapons to cut our throats. We are a forgiving people and extend the hand of fellowship to our Southern brethren, but we have not lost brave, and their bravery covers a multitude of sins in the eyes of the Northern man. But for the sympathy of Englishmen who worked in the dark to overthrow us he has nothing but disdain and contempt. Lord Penzance, whoever he is, may try to win back the money he lost in secession bonds, but Judge Fullerton and his associates might be engaged in a more laudable enterprise than to secure the sympathy of the people of their country. They are playing a losing game, for the patriotism of the North will never forget and ever the recognition of these English Confederate bonds.

Ireland's Prospects for Home Rule.

Just as we were going to press last week the glad tidings reached the galaxies of things from England that the Salisbury ministry had been defeated, through the votes of the solid phalanx of Parnell's compatriots. Since then the Queen has been compelled to accept the resignation of the Salisbury ministry, and to call upon Gladstone to form a Cabinet for the conduct of the national affairs of Great Britain, and the latest news indicates that some very liberal measures indicative of Home Rule for Ireland will be introduced into the present Parliament, and if not actually passed, their presentment will at least pave the way for their passage before the next Parliament dissolves.

English Whigs, Tories, Liberals and Conservatives are all at sea politically concerning the ultimate outcome regarding the Irish question, but in the meanime Parnell and his compatriots keep their lips harmoniously sealed regarding their hopes and aspirations, and this fact would indicate that there is some secret understanding between Gladstone and Parnell which will not be developed until the time be come suitable for its revelation.

Gladstone seems to be the only statesman in England who has the courage to carry out his convictions concerning the Irish question. He stands almost alone among the prominent English politicians as the man who is destined to achieve immortality for his name as the first English Premier who has given to Ireland even a moity of those rights which England has so long wrongfully withheld from her.

Another cause for rejoicing arises from the fact that Ireland rejoices to day over the departure of the man who—it is to be hoped—will prove to be the last English Viceroy in Ireland. Lord Carnarvon left Ireland greeted by the ironical shouts of thousands of Irish men and women who earnestly prayed that they might never look upon his like again—a prayer that will find a response in the heart of every friend of Ireland throughout the whole civilized world.

Looking at the Irish question from all points of the political compass, we feel inclined to believe—as far as human nature can peer into the future—that before two years have dawned Ireland will wring from England the right to govern herself in the full measure of constitutional liberty.

— St. Joseph's Academy, Oakland, has already admitted one hundred boys for this term. This is an increase over any former period and shows satisfactorily that Catholic parents are beginning to recognize the great and important fact that if they desire to have Catholic children they must place them under Catholic teachers and fill their minds with the knowledge of God and of His church, as well as to illuminate them with that secular light which leads them on to success in this world.

A Suggestion Concerning St. Patrick's Day Celebrations.

We presume that in all the cities, towns and villages on that eventful day when patriotic Irishmen who will rejoice in celebrating St. Patrick's day this year, hence we make the suggestion that—aside from the religious exercises—they use the day so as to be of some practical benefit to the Irish people in their respective localities. Let the Irish Societies in each place unite in order to carry on the contest in case another general election occurs throughout Great Britain, as the English elections of Ireland—both in and out of Erin—will do there utmost to defeat Parnell and to break the chain that unites the Irish people in a solid phalanx of sympathy with Ireland's cause.

In every city, town and village on the coast there ought to be on next St. Patrick's Day an entertainment of a musical and literary character, a lecture, or some exercises suitable to the occasion, to which an admission fee to suit the citizens of the locality should be charged, then let the funds derived therefrom be devoted forever the Irish Parliamentary Fund, and in this way several thousand dollars can be harvested towards the success of Home Rule for Ireland.

It cost the Irish National Party nearly one hundred thousand dollars to contest the various seats they gained in the elections held last year, and no less a sum will be needed this time, as—with the bitter experience of the past—the British allies in all England, Ireland and Scotland are determined to back some of the seats in which Parnallites were defeated for the first time victorious in 1885.

Hence we hope the friends of Ireland everywhere will do their share in helping their brothers and sisters in the old country. Let the Irish societies in each place unite in order to carry on the contest. They did their best, as far as their means permitted, to destroy the Union but failed, and now they want us to pay them back the money they invested in weapons to cut our throats. We are a forgiving people and extend the hand of fellowship to our Southern brethren, but we have not lost brave, and their bravery covers a multitude of sins in the eyes of the Northern man. But for the sympathy of Englishmen who worked in the dark to overthrow us he has nothing but disdain and contempt. Lord Penzance, whoever he is, may try to win back the money he lost in secession bonds, but Judge Fullerton and his associates might be engaged in a more laudable enterprise than to secure the sympathy of the people of their country. They are playing a losing game, for the patriotism of the North will never forget and ever the recognition of these English Confederate bonds.

Ireland's Prospects for Home Rule.

Just as we were going to press last week the glad tidings reached the galaxies of things from England that the Salisbury ministry had been defeated, through the votes of the solid phalanx of Parnell's compatriots. Since then the Queen has been compelled to accept the resignation of the Salisbury ministry, and to call upon Gladstone to form a Cabinet for the conduct of the national affairs of Great Britain, and the latest news indicates that some very liberal measures indicative of Home Rule for Ireland will be introduced into the present Parliament, and if not actually passed, their presentment will at least pave the way for their passage before the next Parliament dissolves.

English Whigs, Tories, Liberals and Conservatives are all at sea politically concerning the ultimate outcome regarding the Irish question, but in the meanime Parnell and his compatriots keep their lips harmoniously sealed regarding their hopes and aspirations, and this fact would indicate that there is some secret understanding between Gladstone and Parnell which will not be developed until the time be come suitable for its revelation.

Gladstone seems to be the only statesman in England who has the courage to carry out his convictions concerning the Irish question. He stands almost alone among the prominent English politicians as the man who is destined to achieve immortality for his name as the first English Premier who has given to Ireland even a moity of those rights which England has so long wrongfully withheld from her.

Another cause for rejoicing arises from the fact that Ireland rejoices to day over the departure of the man who—it is to be hoped—will prove to be the last English Viceroy in Ireland. Lord Carnarvon left Ireland greeted by the ironical shouts of thousands of Irish men and women who earnestly prayed that they might never look upon his like again—a prayer that will find a response in the heart of every friend of Ireland throughout the whole civilized world.

Looking at the Irish question from all points of the political compass, we feel inclined to believe—as far as human nature can peer into the future—that before two years have dawned Ireland will wring from England the right to govern herself in the full measure of constitutional liberty.

Good and Bad Influence of the Press.

It is singular what anti-Christian sentiments of hatred the only mention of the word crosses in the breasts of Protestant preachers and writers. An editorial in last week's Pacific begins an account of Ingersoll, rascal and ill-will on the part of the writer which proves him to be devoid of even a rudimentary feeling of love for his neighbor which Christ commands, but which so many Protestant preachers and writers daily and hourly violate in the manner they undertake to speak of the Irish people. Such so-called Christianity partakes of the spirit of Satan than it does of that sweet sanctifying charity mentioned by the divine law of Christ, and the men who are guilty thereof are as abominable in the sight of God.

The writer we quote, in speaking of Ingersoll, says that the spasm of social reform which is said to have made possible to us that this thing and the same of it have come near from Ireland," and then he adds, "the atmosphere of their country is not wholesome, an assertion, however, that is either true or false according to the true or false Christianity professed by Ireland's critic.

The atmosphere of Ireland is certainly remarkably wholesome for the production of the poems, the harvest of which the Christians the world has ever known. It is distinguished from all other countries in the world by the appellation "Island of Saints." Ireland is the mother of Catholic Missionaries, who are found in every corner of the whole Christian world, she is the parent of thousands among the Catholic priesthood and the birth-place of tens of thousands of those Brides of Christ who serve God in poverty, chastity and the pigeon of Charity and Mercy.

The score of Irish soil are famed for their fervid Christian faith and their shrinkless valor; while the daughters of Erin are notable as the most virtuous, faithful and loving among the weaker sex throughout the world. In these respects, then, no man can gainsay the fact that the atmosphere of Ireland is not wholesome.

But, on the other hand, there are some things which do not flourish in the Emerald Isle, and for which—as the Pacific says—"the atmosphere of Ireland is not wholesome." Ireland is free from the Ingersolls and parsons, snakes, serpents, stoupers and sectarians; noxious vermin and vicious vermin; dishonesty and dishonesty; Mormons, murderers and misorganizations; infanticidal wives and harlot-keeping husbands. None of these vile weeds of wickedness—so common in this "enlightened" and prosperous country—will grow in the Irish atmosphere, hence we hold that for this cause the Pacific concludes the atmosphere of Ireland as not being congenial to the development of that system of shameless infidelity which permeates through its columns every week. Well, indeed, would it be for all the rest of the world—and America in particular—if a little of the Irish atmosphere could be hypodermically injected into the body politic of this country in order to purify Protestantism and to render less destructive and morbidly the malodorous scent of sectarianism.

OUR IRISH LETTER.

Ireland's Hopes in the New Parliament. Will Gladstone's Coercion be Repeated? Famine in the West of Ireland. Reunion with the Loaded's Alty. Alagnetic Case in Limerick. John Dillon's Illness. Etc, etc.

[FROM OUR REGULAR IRISH CORRESPONDENT.]

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—The day is last resting for the opening of the most eventful Parliamentary session that has ever been celebrated, or likely will ever again, in the political theatre of West-minster. The Irish Parliamentary Party will have a great place of dealing with Ireland since to the end of the Session, and the Government must step up to the plate with a Parliamentary stage and before an audience of the civilized world, if they hope to carry the Coercion Act of last Session, or the Irish people or to renew the Crimes Bill instead of rolling on Irishmen are equally prepared for any course, favorable or otherwise, the Government may think of taking. They have calculated that their patriotic strength, and their well-tried determination, are now ultimately crowned in supporting English people, in Ireland, Scotland and England, and the Parnell, Ireland is ready to accept the challenge "Orange Force and Englishmen are one Force

FOR HOME RULE MARSHAL LAW,

as the only means of rescuing the landlords from the Land Leagues, and the Land Leagues from Irish freedom, and guarding the integrity of the United Empire. If English statesmen are old enough to allow themselves to be swayed from their prejudices, and to be guided by the wisdom of experience, and to be guided by the wisdom of experience, and to be guided by the wisdom of experience

Farm and Home.

How Many Eggs Can a Hen Lay?

The Farm and the Garden says: We often read of hens that lay 200 eggs a year, but such statements do more harm than good, by inducing the inexperienced to believe such to be the fact. Those who are familiar with poultry knows that during the Fall all hens undergo the process of moulting period. If a hen lays regularly an egg every other day she will lay 183 eggs; but she will probably lose three months more in hatching out her brood, and even if she is a non-sitter she will take a resting spell. As moulting is heavy drain on the system, but few hens do so during that process, though there are exceptions, and where the number of eggs exceed one every two days, it will be found that a corresponding reduction occurs during some period of the year. While we admit that certain individual hens have been known to lay as many as 150 or 175 eggs in a year, such cases are rare, and if one has a flock of twenty hens or more, he should be satisfied if there is an average of 100 eggs a year for the whole year, or more nine months. Four dozen out of the nine should realize 30 cents per dozen, three dozen about 30 cents per dozen, and two dozen about 16 cents per dozen, or an average of 23 cents per dozen. Of course this calculation may be wrong, but will convey an idea of what may be expected.

Tried Her Own Remedy.

A lady overhead her nurse girl talking to the little child she was putting to sleep, and among other legends of the nursery in which she indulged was this:

"If you don't go right to sleep this very minute, a great, big, awful black bear, with eyes like coals of fire, and sharp, white, cruel teeth, will come out from under the bed and eat-y-ou-u-p-l-i-k-e-p-i!" The poor little thing nestled down under the clothes to dream of horrid bears eating her up.

"That night when the child woke had compound herself in her own comfortable bed and had put the lamp out, there came a sudden rap at the door, and the cook and the mistress called loudly through the panels:

"Maggie! Maggie! get up as quick as you can! There's a burglar under your bed."

At the word burglar the girl sprang screaming from the bed, tore open the door and fell into hysterics in the hall. The lament was more intensely than the mistress designed, but when the girl's fears had calmed she said to her: "You did not hesitate to call my little, delicate child, who could not possibly have done you a bit, a cruel story of a bear under her bed; now, when I treat you to the same kind of story, you are nearly frightened to death; no matter you can go into the kitchen and work there, you are not fit to care for little children."

How many children there are who, every night of their lives, are frightened in this way.

Decay of the Teeth.

The London Lancet quotes John Hunter's statement that the decay of the teeth is a disease which seems to be "peculiar to youth and middle age; the shedding teeth are subject to it, if not more so, than those intended to last through life, and we seldom or ever see any person whose teeth begin to set after the age of fifty years," and adds: "This is not quite correct. If a man can keep his teeth until after middle age, he may generally be certain of keeping them to the end. There seems to be some reason for thinking that decay of the teeth is commoner now than it used to be. Assuming this to be the fact, it would be interesting to inquire whether there is anything in our modern mode of life which has a tendency to make the teeth to decay. The old-fashioned notion about eating sugar and acids and the like is exploded. Meanwhile it may be worth asking if want of vigor is not a cause of decay of the teeth, and if the want of vigor observable among certain classes of children and young persons is not due to the increasingly artificial character of the lives they respectively lead; with diminution of fresh air and exercise, and the aggravation of mental tasks and brain and nerve worry which characterizes the sedentary and developmental stages of our modern life. The young people of Jewish race are conspicuous for their advanced mental activity and the precocity once bestowed upon them. They are fed and dressed like adults, and they are 'forced' in an intellectual sense, to the so-rigorous deposition of the organic material of which the human body with its brain and nerves is composed, and to the vital energy with which it ought to be endowed."

Beautifying the Homestead.

Beauty of arrangement about the house has a marked effect upon the inmates. What can make a place more attractive than a nicely laid-out garden in the midst of a wall kept bare? It does not suffice to set out a few shrubs and ornamental trees without regard to order or effect. Landscape gardening is a greater art than many lovers of attractive home realize, and a mistake is often made by the "well-do-do" in not securing the services of an experienced gardener, when a lawn is to be designed. A dump of bushes here, or a tree there may materially impair the artistic effect of the whole lawn; there is a place for the rose, one for the lilies and another for the shrubs. Give attention to the location of the houses and let the foreground be kept quite free from shrubs or flowers.

We believe that a great mistake is made by farmers going to little land to crowd mowing the grounds in front of the dwelling. The necessary time and expense involved would be well repaid by enjoyment secured from the pleasing effects of such a lawn. We would not be in the least disposed adverse in this direction by those who cannot afford to employ an experienced gardener. Almost any farmer could materially improve the looks of a piece barren of shrubs and trees, and should be encouraged in any attempt to do so.

Swindling the Farmers.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. Jan. 18.—For several months men representing themselves as agents for a seed company have been travelling through this county selling a peculiar kind of oats at $10 a bushel. They asserted that the grain was bloodless oats, and that they grew without hulls. They bound their company in Ohio to deliver to farmers twice as many bushels of the crop raised from the seed as the farmer had purchased at $10 a bushel, retaining 25 per cent. commission for their trouble. Many farmers report having bought from ten to twenty bushels, some paying as much as $200 in cash, and others giving their notes payable at the First National Bank of Williamsport. The notes have been discounted and the rascals have departed. It is reported that their swindling operations will reach $10,000 in Lycoming county. There is no such company at Hepetoon, Ohio, where the men said their home was.

"Her face so fair, so fresh it seemed not,
But beauty portrait of bright angel's hue,
Clear as the sky, without a blame or blot,
Through cloudy misture or complexions due,
For in her cheeks the vermeil red did show,
Like in the morning unto her love is wont,
When she to praise her lover goes to row,
And her bedecks with her best ornament;
And beyond state, with every feature comely
Ennobled, and in the visible condition of its fair passions portrayed by Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Any druggist.

Family Fun.

The Eormality Compiled With.

In Augusta, Georgia, no provision was made last winter for feeding and lodging the tramps. A ragged wand to a police station and wanted to sleep there.

"We only lodge prisoners," said the Sergeant behind the desk.

"You only lodge prisoners," repeated the ragabond meditatively.

"Yes," said the reply, "you have got to steal something or murder somebody, or something of that kind."

"I've got to assault somebody or something of that kind," again repeated the ragabond, thoughtfully. Then he walked across the desk with his long arm, and knocked the Sergeant off his stool, saying as the officer got up with his hand to his club:

"Give me as good a bed as you kin, Sergeant, 'cause I don't feel very well to-night."

He had his Doubts about Hell.

Up in Syracuse on Thursday Roscoe Conkling and Col. Ingersoll took a walk during the sonny afternoon. They intended to bring up at Lou Windham's for lunch, but missed the place, and strolling on in East Washington street they entered another restaurant, which is one of the sheapest of the sheap. It is so sheap, in fact, that Superintendent of the Poor White sends impecunious individuals to it for meals at the expense of the county. Just after Mr. Conkling and Col. Ingersoll had sat down and called for oysters Superintendent White walked in with the most wretchedness and sheapiest wretched tramp that ever set foot in the city. The tramp took a seat at the next table to that used by the distinguished lawyers, and ate a plate of bean soup, followed by a bowl of soup. He gleaned from their conversation who his neighbors were, and as they rose he turned and said:

"Gentlemen, won't you join me in something?"

"I'll join my friend in giving you a quarter," said Ingersoll.

"Thanks, gentlemen, thanks. Ah! When shall we three meet again? Conkling and I and myself may possibly meet in Utica, but as far as for you, Mr. Ingersoll, ah! —who can tell?"

One Thing He Can't Understand.

"One thing I can't understand," said a young husband, "is how quick a woman can forget some things. A year ago, when I was courting my wife, I had only to say music, and she was ready to knock a spectrical old piano her father owned clear off its legs; but now that she has a $600 article that I bought into hell, I can't get her to play the simplest tune. She's so out of practice, and says I mustn't mention it. She remembers all the foolish things I used to say to her, and throws them at me that though when I don't happen to agree with her views of life, but when it comes to remembering the accomplishments I have brought out the compliments she can't be depended on."

A Poor Collection.

It was in this same office one Monday morning. The worthy occupant came in with grip in hand. He had been out into the country over Sunday to preach in a small church—begging sermon in the interests of the society which he represented.

"There," said he, as he sat down in his desk, "that's the fruitless errand."

"Didn't you get much?" inquired his assistant.

"Precious little," was the response. "The collection did not amount to quite enough to pay my expenses and my charge for the sermon. I'll have to take it all, and the society won't get anything."

And that is the way he settled it.

White's Preference.

"Now be a good little boy, Willie," said his mother to him one day, wishing to impress upon him the reward in store for the just, "and when you die you will have a gold harp to play on."

"I don't know how to play on a gold harp," he grumbled, "and I don't want to learn, anyway that I've got to die to get. Let Jenney be good and get the harp, and gimme a drum.

An Unforseen Accident

"Yes, sighed a recent widow, "we are very unfortunate. Poor John was out of work for a long time, and when he obtained a good job he died."

"What job did he get?" she was asked.

"He joined a circus and got twenty dollars a week for putting his head in the lion's mouth twice a day. That's all he had to do. It seems hard he should have died."

"What did he die of?"

"The lion let his head off."

A Particular Guest.

Customer (in restaurant)—Waiter, this chicken soup has feathers in it.

Waiter—Yes, sah. If you want soup made entirely without feathers, you'd be bound to be bald, sah, you'd have to go to some other establishment.

A Sensible Suggestion.

Customer (in restaurant)—Here, waiter, a sirloin steak, well done. I'm in a big hurry.

Waiter—Is yo' in a hurry!

Customer—Yes, yes.

Waiter—Den why not take dat steak raw stand o' well done if yo' is in a hurry, boss!

A Busy Woman.

"You are kept pretty busy nowadays," remarked a stranger to Mrs. Blunnerly whose husband has a ranch on Onion creek.

"Yes; hardly get the time to turn around. There is always something to keep one busy. If it ain't the cow it's the sheep; if it ain't the sheep it's the pigs, and if it ain't the pigs it's the children."

"Thanks, gentlemen, thanks. Ah! When shall we three meet again? Conkling and I and myself may possibly meet in Utica, but as for you, Mr. Ingersoll, ah! —who can tell?"

One Thing He Can't Understand.

"One thing I can't understand," said a young husband, "is how quick a woman can forget some things. A year ago, when I was courting my wife, I had only to say music, and she was ready to knock a spectrical old piano her father owned clear off its legs; but now that she has a $600 article that I bought into hell, I can't get her to play the simplest tune. She's so out of practice, and says I mustn't mention it. She remembers all the foolish things I used to say to her, and throws them at me that though when I don't happen to agree with her views of life, but when it comes to remembering the accomplishments I have brought out the compliments she can't be depended on."

A Poor Collection.

It was in this same office one Monday morning. The worthy occupant came in with grip in hand. He had been out into the country over Sunday to preach in a small church—begging sermon in the interests of the society which he represented.

"There," said he, as he sat down in his desk, "that's the fruitless errand."

"Didn't you get much?" inquired his assistant.

"Precious little," was the response. "The collection did not amount to quite enough to pay my expenses and my charge for the sermon. I'll have to take it all, and the society won't get anything."

And that is the way he settled it.

White's Preference.

"Now be a good little boy, Willie," said his mother to him one day, wishing to impress upon him the reward in store for the just, "and when you die you will have a gold harp to play on."

"I don't know how to play on a gold harp," he grumbled, "and I don't want to learn, anyway that I've got to die to get. Let Jenney be good and get the harp, and gimme a drum.

An Unforseen Accident

"Yes, sighed a recent widow, "we are very unfortunate. Poor John was out of work for a long time, and when he obtained a good job he died."

"What job did he get?" she was asked.

"He joined a circus and got twenty dollars a week for putting his head in the lion's mouth twice a day. That's all he had to do. It seems hard he should have died."

"What did he die of?"

"The lion let his head off."

A Particular Guest.

Customer (in restaurant)—Waiter, this chicken soup has feathers in it.

Waiter—Yes, sah. If you want soup made entirely without feathers, you'd be bound to be bald, sah, you'd have to go to some other establishment.

A Sensible Suggestion.

Customer (in restaurant)—Here, waiter, a sirloin steak, well done. I'm in a big hurry.

Waiter—Is yo' in a hurry!

Customer—Yes, yes.

Waiter—Den why not take dat steak raw stand o' well done if yo' is in a hurry, boss!

A Busy Woman.

"You are kept pretty busy nowadays," remarked a stranger to Mrs. Blunnerly whose husband has a ranch on Onion creek.

"Yes; hardly get the time to turn around. There is always something to keep one busy. If it ain't the cow it's the sheep; if it ain't the sheep it's the pigs, and if it ain't the pigs it's the children."

A Little Misunderstanding

Angry Purchaser—You told me the horse wasn't lazy.

Seller—No I didn't.

Angry Purchaser—You certainly did. You said that when it came to pulling that horse was there every time.

Seller—Yes, that's what I said. He's there, but the trouble is he stays. I used to build a fire under under him.

Accepting the Situation.

"I can give you a cold bite," said the woman.

"Why not warm it up?" asked the tramp.

"There ain't any wood sawed."

"That not! Well, give it me cold."

—Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer impart a fine gloss and freshness to the hair, and is highly recommended by physicians, clergymen, and scientists, as a preparation accomplishing wonderful results. It is a certain remedy for removing dandruff, making the scalp white and clean, and restoring gray hair to its youthful color.

"THE GRAND OLD MONITOR"
FOR 1886.
TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS OLD
AND
Growing in Catholic Favor Every Week!
PRONOUNCED BY CLERGY AND LAITY TO BE
The Cheapest, The Freshest, The Best
CATHOLIC PAPER IN AMERICA.
$3. FOR A YEAR'S READING FOR A WHOLE FAMILY. $3.
Tested by Truth and Tried by Time.
The Friend of Virtue—The Foe of Crime.
The Monitor
—FURNISHES ITS READERS WITH NEARLY—TWO THOUSAND COLUMNS OF READING MATTER
EVERY YEAR !!!
IN EVERY DEPARTMENT IT IS
A Complete Catholic Family Paper
—CONTAINING SUITABLE READING FOR—
Young and Old in Every Catholic Household.
ITS WEEKLY CONTENTS INCLUDES
Catholic Stories and Poetry by Distinguished writers.
Family Reading for Firm and Fireside.
Family Fun. Comparing Jokes for Old and Young.
Sketches of Catholic Shrines in all portions of the world.
—TOGETHER WITH—
THE LATEST NEWS FROM IRELAND,
THE NEWS OF THE CATHOLIC WORLD,
CORRESPONDENCE FROM ROME AND IRELAND,
EDITORIALS ON CATHOLIC QUESTIONS,
EUROPEAN CABLEGRAMS AND EASTERN DISPATCHES,
CATHOLIC EVENTS ON THE COAST, ETC., ETC.
ASK YOUR CATHOLIC NEIGHBOR TO Support the Press that Defends his Faith.
SEND IN THE NAME OF A SUBSCRIBER AS A NEW YEAR'S GIFT.
HOW TO SUBSCRIBE:
Go to the Post Office, pay three cents for a $2.00 Postal Note, and enclose it in a 2 cent stamped envelope, addressed to
THE MONITOR,
636 Clay Street, San Francisco, Cal.

ST. BRIGID'S WELL.

A Beautiful Legend of Dark Donegal.

Not far from the picturesque little village of Stranorlar, renowned as the last resting place of Biddy, the founder of the Home Rule movement, lies a calm, placid sheet of water known to the peasantry as Loch Lawna. In its southern side, about three feet above the high water mark, is the famous Well of St. Brigid, surrounded by a small wall made of stones brought from almost every part of Ulster, and strewed all by pieces of lunts, sticks, and crutches, left by those who believe the happiness of their lives by its healing waters. It has long been considered a place curse for the pilgrim on his first visit, to place three white stones on the adjacent mountain mound.

In the year 18— the concourse of pilgrims was larger than usual, the owner of the estate in which the lake is situated, considerate that no ships were in danger of being destroyed, closed all ingress to the holy well. The peasantry became excited; threats were indulged in by some; petitions were made by others, but in vain. He was a man of gaiety but by times (as is the present instance) of stubborn nature; he knew no fear, and threats as well as petitions were entirely disregarded. For three months his bailiff mandate was in force.

One morning, the inhabitants of Stranorlar awoke to find the following placard on the trunk of a large beech-tree, long used for public notices. It was signed by the owner of the estate.

"FREE ENTRY TO ST. BRIGID'S WELL."

Many were the suppositions of the pious villagers as to the cause of his relenting; some said that his cattle were all dying; others, that good St. Brigid had sent him a warning from heaven. He this as it may, he had undoubtedly, at last, over him; his toleration was the wonder of all. Pilgrims flocked from all parts to the place, some he would only remark, "I will be nothing the worse."

Sitting one evening by his blazing peat fire, many years after, he said to me: "I will tell you an incident that happened long years ago. You were then a mere boy. Your father, poor fellow, I found fit to throw upon his relative, I found fit to drain it by means of a channel connecting it with the lake. To accomplish this spiteful work, I chose a clear, moonlight night. Taking a gun and spade, I set out by the shortest route to the well. Judge of my surprise on finding it illuminated as if by hundreds of candles! Trembling, I aimed my gun, and fired. Not a light was extinguished; on the contrary, it seemed only to have increased the brilliancy of the scene. As I was pausing, not knowing whether to proceed to the wall or return home, I saw a beautiful maiden rising, as it seemed, out of the lake, attired in a long flowing white robe, girdled by a blue sash. On her head she sparkled some more dazzling than the sun. She glided as I have seen swallows, or rather as I imagine the earth, and hovered over the well. No doubt it was St. Brigid. I ♰ ♰ ♰ I often think of calling on Father C——, and joining the Catholic Church.

He is dead now, but his son, who inherits his liberal spirit, has made an excellent road to St. Brigid's Well. And the peasants threatens will long remember that linger on that romantic way the story I have told you.—S. D. in Ave Maria.

MISCELLANEOUS.
IN MANITOBA.
The Perils and Sufferings of Missionaries in Northwest Canada.
Bishop Grandin, whose diocese was the most of the Lake Winnipeg, in conversation with the writer, says that immense damage has been done by the plague of Lake Lawna. In its southern side, about three feet above the high water mark, is the famous Well of St. Brigid, surrounded by a small wall made of stones brought from almost every part of Ulster, and strewed all by pieces of lunts, sticks, and crutches, left by those who believe the happiness of their lives by its healing waters. It has long been considered a place curse for the pilgrim on his first visit, to place three white stones on the adjacent mountain mound.
In the year 18— the concourse of pilgrims was larger than usual, the owner of the estate in which the lake is situated, considerate that no ships were in danger of being destroyed, closed all ingress to the holy well. The peasantry became excited; threats were indulged in by some; petitions were made by others, but in vain. He was a man of gaiety but by times (as is the present instance) of stubborn nature; he knew no fear, and threats as well as petitions were entirely disregarded. For three months his bailiff mandate was in force.
One morning, the inhabitants of Stranorlar awoke to find the following placard on the trunk of a large beech-tree, long used for public notices. It was signed by the owner of the estate.
"FREE ENTRY TO ST. BRIDIB'S WELL."
Many were the suppositions of the pious villagers as to the cause of his relenting; some said that his cattle were all dying; others, that good St. Brigid had sent him a warning from heaven. He this as it may, he had undoubtedly, at last, over him; his toleration was the wonder of all. Pilgrims flocked from all parts to the place, some he would only remark, "I will be nothing the worse."
Sitting one evening by his blazing peat fire, many years after, he said to me: "I will tell you an incident that happened long years ago. You were then a mere boy. Your father, poor fellow, I found fit to throw upon his relative, I found fit to drain it by means of a channel connecting it with the lake. To accomplish this spiteful work, I chose a clear, moonlight night. Taking a gun and spade, I set out by the shortest route to the well. Judge of my surprise on finding it illuminated as if by hundreds of candles! Trembling, I aimed my gun, and fired. Not a light was extinguished; on the contrary, it seemed only to have increased the brilliancy of the scene. As I was pausing, not knowing whether to proceed to the wall or return home, I saw a beautiful maiden rising, as it seemed, out of the lake, attired in a long flowing white robe, girdled by a blue sash. On her head she sparkled some more dazzling than the sun. She glided as I have seen swallows, or rather as I imagine the earth, and hovered over the well. No doubt it was St. Brigid. ♰ ♰ ♰ I often think of calling on Father C——, and joining the Catholic Church.
He is dead now, but his son, who inherits his liberal spirit, has made an excellent road to St. Brigid's Well. And the peasants threatens will long remember that linger on that romantic way the story I have told you.—S. D. in Ave Maria.

MISCELLANEOUS.
CARROLL & TILTON,
Respectfully announce that they have opened
THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
—WITH A LINE OF—
GENT'S ^ BOY'S
CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.
Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.
We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible
CARROLL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,
And also with JONES & CO.
JAS. R. KELLY & CO
IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS,
OILS and GLASS
221 and 223 Market Street
Just Below Banks—the NEW HOTEL
JOHN GUERIN,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF Wood and Coal,
412 O'FARRELL ST.,
Bet. Taylor and Jones.....San Francisco
☞ Wood and Coal delivered Free of Charge to all parts of the City on the Shortest Notice. Thus insuring prompt attention to the business, and a saving of time to the purchaser. Wood or Coal. Full weight and measure guaranteed.
JULIUS H. MEDAU,
868 and 970 Folsom St.,
New Sixth.....San Francisco
—WHOLESALE—
LIQUOR DEALER.
Established 1870.
We are selling Cheaper for Cash and guarantee safe goods.
☞ The following low prices will convince you:
Table Wines 10c., 20c., 25c. and $1 a gal.
American Whisky $1, $1.50 and $1.50
Sweet Vineyard—by th. 15c. Bbl. $5.
Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.50 and 50.
Kentucky Whiskies—$1, $1.50, $2.50 and $3.
Bourbon Whiskey.....$1.50, $1.75, $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards.
Sweet Wine and Liquors at lowest rates.
Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.
PETALUMA INCUBATOR.
Hatches all kinds of Eggs
The Simplest, Cheapest, and Most Perfect Incubator.
Sent on trial. Catalogue free.
Address PETALUMA INCUBATOR CO., Petaluma, Cal.
LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
BRANCH,
1156 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY,
1824 St. bet. Fosom and Howard S. F. Cal
SITUATION WANTED:
A MARRIED MAN, FAMILIAR WITH THE CITY, desires a situation in position as porter in a store, to do extra work, or as coachman, or any kind of work required in stable, to which he can bring his family. Best of references. Address the Editor of the Monitor, for W. S.
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NATIVE WINES.
One Bottle.....From 25 to 50 cents
One Gallon....." 50 cts. to $1 per gal.
By the Gallon.....50 cts. to $1.50
Native and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the cellar for Medicinal purposes.
J. C. BABCELLINI, 110 Dupont Street
Pacific Coast Agency
GENUINE
J. H. CUTTER WHISKIES,
A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
San Francisco.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
KNABE
PIANOS.
Unqualified and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.
A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 721 Market St., S. F.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.
STECK, WAUB, SCHWECHTEN
PIANOS
Smith's American Organs.
EASY INSTALLMENTS.
E. CURTAZ, Agent,
20 O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.
URSULINE ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES.
SANTA ROSA, - SONOMA CO., CAL.
For Particulars Address the Superiores of the Ursulines, Santa Rosa.
DOUBS BOUGHT AND SOLD, BY A. BURGUN'S Doss Matter-of-fact-ness.
EDUCATIONAL.
SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA,.....CALIFORNIA
This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It recognizes large buildings, with through halls, shady playgrounds, covered gymnasiums, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a Museum of Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has Big Grain also perished. Another priest was drowned by the upsetting of a skiff in a squall while trying to save a young Indian boy who was his guide, and both were lost. Three priests were frozen in a blizzard on the prairies. Four, confined in the camp of Poundmaker, were badly frozen but did not not die. All suffer fearfully, following the Indians as they roam their range around, this year the only way of doing my work with them. The missionary has to eat what they find and starve with them. They have bids rather than dried fish without salt, but any thing will be eaten rather than starve. At present he has thirty-eight priests with twenty-two by brothers and sisters. There are also forty Sisters of Charity in eight establishments, taking care of orphans and sick, and teaching schools. The only hope, the Bishop says, centres in the youth, the older ones, on account of their extreme feebleness, are not to be relied upon. In the northern part of his diocese, in the depths of winter, the sun does not come above the horizon for thirty-three days. The days are marked by a strong twilight. The Bishop is prematurely old and gray. He has been twenty-six years a bishop in that country, and had been a missionary for several years before that. He suffers incredible hardships during all that time, sharing all the miseries of the wandering Indians, sometimes sleeping in snow and shoes in winter; but now, as the buffalo are nearly gone, the Indians will have to settle down, and the missionary will not suffer so much. Even the carribou has become shy, and is not nearly so good and nourishing. The Indians even are increasing and all that is needed. The carribou feeds on moss which gives out an aroma which is very pleasing. The Bishop receives a donation from the Society of the Propagation of the Faith of France for his missions, supporting priests, building chapels, etc. If the priests can count on twenty five cents a day, they can consider themselves well off. Bishop Grandin has gone to Ottawa and Lower Canada to obtain assistance for his ruined missions. There are 15,000 Catholic Indians in his diocese.
The Good God.
Let us never forget that it is our without reason that our Lord wishes to be called "The Good God. Among His infinite and wonderful perfections goodness is, in a sense, supreme; and, before all else, goodness constitutes the true character of His children. "Be merciful," He says, "as your Heavenly Father is merciful." "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." and therefore be good, though they may appear to be out of the fold, we lose to the flock. In a blessed moment the Heavenly Pastor comes in search of the stray sheep that bear His mark: He seeks for the lost one which bears His image and inscription; Deus charitas est.
—There is but one view of things which is true, and that is God's viewed them.
—Sick Headache cured at once by "DDD."

EDUCATIONAL.
SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers,
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
TERMS (Payable half yearly in advance):
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Use of Bedding.....10 00
Day Students.....50 00
Music and Drawing form extra charges.
For further particulars address
BRO. BENITO, President.
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
FOR YOUNG LADIES.
CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME
THIS INSTITUTION, FOUNDED IN 1851, chartered in 1868 by Act of the Legislature of the State of California, and empowered to confer Academic Honors, is situated at the corner of Hayes street, opposite the Old Mission Church.
The course of studies embraces the various branches of a solid and refined education, including the Languages, Music, Painting, Drawing, and Fancy Work.
The arrangements for the comfort of the pupils are complete, and every care and attention is bestowed on their moral and intellectual culture, as well as on the development of their hearts and the formation of their manners.
The Academic Year consists of two sessions of five months each, commencing on the first Monday in August and the first Monday in February.
TERMS:
Boarding, Tuition and Bedding (in advance).....$60 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Vocal Music, Private Lessons.....30 00
Vocal Music, Class Lessons.....10 00
Piano, Private Lessons.....30 00
Piano, Class Lessons.....10 00
Painting in Water Colors, per season.....30 00
Painting in Oil, per season.....30 00
Drawing, Pencil, per season.....30 00
Drawing, Crayon, per season.....30 00
Use of Piano, per hour, per day.....50
Use of Bedding.....10 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.
For further particulars, address
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
San Jose
SCHOOL OF THE SACRED HEART,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance).
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Use of Bedding.....10 00
Day Students.....50 00
Music and Drawing form extra charges.
For further particulars address
REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J.
President.
ORIGINAL PRIZE COMPOSITION No. 7.
(A beautiful gift of value—Prize or Book will be presented to the author of the best solution received.)
At first, indeed, I seem to
Be little more than a child,
But some old relicers set me free
That I may be reckoned an adult.
But, now I assume a bit of Dignity, I am a little Fearful of being called a child
And for a little while.
Without my aid, I can not
How course would be your close
Being thus set free, I am not yet all
My energy I have
I never spoke a word;
Since I thought of my name
Which designates a bird
That other people to mention
You ask the reason why?
Because I am afraid of the trifle,
No feather had you I.
PORTMASTER.
A RIDDLE.
CONTRIBUTED BY AN A. CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.
The blessing of a family,
The pride of a king,
A little more than kin,
Who dwells in home me
Who dwells in home me
Original Puzzles, Enigmas, Riddles, Etc.
We will be happy to receive original puzzles from the readers of the Monitor. Any one of our young readers who may desire to exercise their minds by such improving study. Answers sent in all cases accompanied by contributions for the column.
TALKS WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.
FOURTH LETTER.
My Dear Young Friends:—Let us wend through lonelier, here, I trust, unpeopled you with such a holy feeling. I had thought that you have distinctly never to be read one. If, after a few years, you look back on the warnings you have had from your parental mentor, you perhaps will be surprised at the and outcasting it: these dangerous companions then, I say, if you have been a disgrace to your parents, or a danger to the state, or a cause of the Almighty's anger. Nay, he never forgets in the Book of Life that the charge was disobedient to his commandment.
I now turn to another mental enemy of young people, and, lest you may think that I see the whole world laying snares for you, I say, that I am not inclined to do "evil! well!" all along the line, permit me to say that such is my intention.
Let me begin by showing the bright side of the picture to my young friends than in filling them with gloomy thoughts. But since we never put the pure water we are about to drink into dirty vessels, I think it best to speak of those things that might sadly unnerve us, first, before I dare to speak of the virtues with which they should be adorned. The doctor must first to follow me with patience for a little while was speak of our enemies, and afterwards I trust to be more agreeable when speaking of our friends.
Now, if you were to ask me which of the two is the greater enemy of young people, age, and of old people too, the bad habit or the bad picture, I would answer at once: The bad picture by a great, great, and I will tell you why. The bad book will corrupt and poison the soul at at once. At first, at least before, the filthy writer does not show himself in his true colors all at once. He is always, at first, the Satan taught of course, he knows full well that if he shows up with all his deformity he will fill his with horror and disgust that we will consign, in a moment, the filthy outpourings of his foul heart to the flames. He steals on us by degrees and if we our attention do not at first, he will never be successful in inserting his poisonous fang into our hearts. Not so with the bad, ah! seems picture, one sullid glance at which brings death to the soul. There is in all its deformity; there in its presence we stand face to face with death. Let us first our eyes fall for one short moment on this infernal—this hell conceived death, and God alone knows how many mortal sins our transgression will number against us in the book that shall be open when we stand before "the great white throne." We carry away with us printed, deeply engraven in our imagination the picture of that child of hell. It will walk with us when we walk; present itself in all its deformity when we rest; say more, haunt us in our dreams, ever and always tearing us, her rowing us, dragging us down to sin and perdition. There it stays, our evil genius, to worry us perhaps as long as we live. It is that evil spirit which our Divine Lord tells us can never more be driven out except by prayer and fasting. It is an evil spirit which may have ruined many even at the last moment; for when we come to die, when the poor body, wasted by sickness and attenuated by disease, is able nonger to be the instrument of sin, when we lie stretched out on our bed of death, then is, indeed, that the imagination seems to acquire full sway. Then it is that our sets, both good and bad—then it is that those long forgotten, buried, as we thought, in oblivious pass before us in panoramic order. It is that evil deeds done in the darkness, deeds that would not bear the light of heaven, will appear before their unhappy parent brighter than the noon day sun. Then it is, too, that good deeds, done under the eyes of God and hidden from the world, will come to console the faithful servant in that hour of trial, that hour that will try mens' souls. Mentor once knew a man—a man who in the days of his health and prosperity made a boast of caring little either for God or the Devil. He was a man of the world and call "a good fellow." That unhappy man by his excesses came to an untimely end. For a week before his miserable death, although entirely unconscious, he recounted all the evil deeds of his life. No harrowing

Convent of the Immaculate Heart of Mary,
SAN LUIS OBISPO . . . CALIFORNIA
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, conducted by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary.
This house is the Novitiate of the order.
SISTER MATHILDA CHERBULIEZ, Principal.
ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY.
Conducted by the Christian Bros.
FIFTH AND JACKSON STS., OAKLAND, CAL.
THIS INSTITUTION IS A SELECT BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL for Young Gentlemen. It is the object is to combine the comforts and refinements of a home with the advantages of a College.
Parents and guardians, desirous of sending their sons to a Boarding School, can be satisfied that they will be so conducted that the Institution will prove to them a home away from home. The course of study is that of a Classical and Commercial School.
Pupils are received at any time during the year, but it is better that they be present at the commencement of the scholastic year.
TERMS:
(Payment in U. S. gold coin, and invariably in advance)
Board, Washing and Tuition, per month, $25
Bedding, per month, $1; Attendance.....$2
Entrance Fee, particular Bedroom.....$5
BRO. LAWRIAN, Director
ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,
Golden Gate Ave. San Francisco
CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC.
THIS ACADEMY PLEASANTLY SITUATED IN the Western Addition, offers to Parents the advantages of a home education, combined with the advantages of a Boarding School, and the facilities for the cultivation of the Fine Arts, Music, Painting, Drawing, and Fancy Work.
The Academic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, commencing on the first Monday in August and the first Monday in February.
TERMS:
Boarding, Tuition and Bedding, per month.....$25 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Use of Piano, per hour, per day.....50
Use of Bedding.....10 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.
For further particulars address
SISTER SUPERIOR.
Academy of Our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA,.....CALIFORNIA.
THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords the certainty of providing for young ladies, an refining amenities, a moral and intellectual education. The location is unsurpassed, and we recommend this Academy, in the influence now exerted on the pupils by virtue and talent, as necessary and to render them useful members of society and the Church.
The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, (payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Tuition, to be paid once.
Board, Tuition, Washing and use of Bedding $60
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.
French and Spanish form an free.
ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY.
FOR YOUNG LADIES.
BENICIA,.....CALIFORNIA
THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED by the Sisters of Charity, Patronized by the Most Rev. Archbishop of San Francisco, and possesses all the advantages of a solid and refined education.
The Academic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, commencing on the first Monday in August and the first Monday in February.
TERMS:
Boarding, Tuition and Washing, per month.....$25 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Washing.....40 00
Pupils remaining at the Academy during vacation will be charged $20.
Drawing, Painting and Music form extra charges.
The Payment on pickage seat to pupils must be prepaid.
Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the SISTER SUPERIOR.
CONVENT OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION,
Guerrero St., near 24th, San Francisco.
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception.
For terms, etc., apply to the
SISTER SUPERIOR.
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.
THIS INSTITUTION, ESTABLISHED IN 1868, is chartered by the State Legislature, and authorizes with all the rights and privileges of similar Collegiate Institutions in the United States.
Reference required. For terms and particulars address,
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
Marysville, Cal.
SACRAMENTO INSTITUTE,
Twelfth and K streets,
SACRAMENTO.....CAL.
A LIMITED NUMBER OF BOARDERS RECEIVED. A fully fertile for acquiring a sound Christian education, and for the cultivation of the Fine Arts. Music, Painting, Drawing, Etc.
TERMS: Board, Tuition and Washing, $25 per quarter.
For particulars apply to
PROF. DE FILIPPE, Director
PROF. DE FILIPPE,
Graduate of the Academies of Paris and Madrid,
CONTINUES TO GIV

Ireland's Present Condition.

[CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

pressure of those members and the desire of the Queen. If an appeal to the country be taken I have no doubt that a Liberal majority pledged to Home Rule will be returned, for when once the Liberal leaders, Gladstone especially, accept Home Rule as the policy of the party the rank and file will quickly follow the lead.

GLADSTONE RETIRENT.

The Sun's London cable special of January 30th says: "All statements concerning the personnel of the new Cabinet are premature. Gladstone is not even certain that he will be sent for. He well remembers that in a parallel case he was slighted for a few hours. A repetition of this piece of rudeness is, however, improbable. In conversation to-night with a gentleman whose friendship warranted the question, "Who will be your advisers in the event of your accepting office?" Gladstone replied: "It would be inconsistent with the respect due her Majesty for me to assume that she will exercise her prerogative in any particular manner. I have done nothing beyond learning the opinion of certain of my colleagues on the question of Home Rule and other pressing matters." Lord Granville is in cordial accord with Gladstone, but all efforts to secure the assent of Hartington to anything like Home Rule have failed.

THE ULTIMATE DECE.

NEW YORK, January 28.—A Herald special from a member of Parliament, says: Mr. Gladstone is exhaust now, but his day will be held. He cannot carry out his contract with Mr. Parnell. He will try to temporize and obtain delay to keep up the idea that he will do something wonderful when his plans are matured. This may suit Mr. Chamberlain well for a time, it is more prudent and does not desire to see his extreme powers too often. He cannot safely execute a Government every week, and will therefore doubtless assent to the delay to give Mr. Gladstone a chance to educate his party and the public. Whenever the real crisis comes forward again all compromises will fall through, and down will tumble the ministry. Perhaps a general election will follow, with pretty much the same results as before. The final impact must be the separation of the two countries or civil war to prevent it. There is scarcely any possibility of averting this issue.

IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE.

Meeting of the National Executive Committee—President Sexton Will Withdraw His Resignation.

The National Executive committee of the Irish National League of America met in McCoy's hotel, Chicago, at 10 o'clock on Wednesday week. President Egan was in the chair, and the following delegates responded to the roll call: The Rev. Dr. Charles O'Reilly, treasurer of the League; O'Donel Spaw, vice-president; P. D. Devany, Arkansas; M. Boylan, Georgia; John F. Armstrong, Augusta, Ga.; Daniel Corkery, Chicago; Frank Ryan, Indianapolis; M. V. Gannon, Davenport; John Meagher, Louisville; T. Toleg Sparrow, New Orleans; Patrick Martin, Baltimore; W. J. Dunning, Dayton; J. B. Curtisse, Indianapolis; Dr. Thomas O'Reilly, St. Louis; John Fitzgerald, Lincoln, Neb.; Joseph O. Donnelly, Milwaukee; Thomas F. Walsh, Washington; P. McCarthy, St. Paul; John P. Sutton, Quincy, Ill. Telegrams from a number of absent delegates were read by Secretary Rogers Walsh.

Mr. Gannon, of Iowa, called the attention of the committee to the resignation of the twenty-published letter declaring his intention to resign the presidency. He said that the week of the League at this critical time needed the direction of a man who was thoroughly acquainted with the details of the mass of energy and executive ability. Mr. Sexton had been heard from positively about coming to the United States. There came to be an impression that this would be until August next. Mr. Sexton Alter introduced the following resolution, which was passed unanimously:

Resolved, That this committee do express its intense regret for the National loss occasioned by the death of Vice President Thomas A. Hendricks, and its sense of the high appreciation in which the latter had been entertained by the Irish people.

Several of the delegates including Alderman Sullivan, President Egan, Joseph O. Donnelly, and the Rev. Father O'Reilly, made speeches eulogizing the late Vice President.

Then the committee went into the business of the committee and drank to the Hancock drinks monument fund, and the motion met with such favor that $450 was raised at once.

BISMARCK'S BRUTALITY TO THE POLES.

A People to be Robbed and Ruined.—Germany's Progress over the Graves of Poland—Horrible Revelations of Government Inhumanity.—Bismarck's Blood and Iron Policy put into Practical Operation.

BERLIN, January 28.—Prince Bismarck to-day in the debate in the Prussian Landtag on the expulsion of the Poles from Germany, made a remarkable speech, occupying two hours in delivery. He said that the primary cause of the Government action was the disloyalty of the Poles to the German crown. They were, he said, constantly engaged in intrigues against the Government, and had made the most serious annoyance to Prussia by acting as accomplices of the opposition in the Prussian Parliament. They affected a majority against the Government, and the Crown could do nothing else than deny the demands of such a majority or dissolve the evil element which made the majority possible.

The Polish agitators in Germany, his march said, always appealed to him as an element of danger and had compelled him to keep his eyes upon Russia. This Russia had been constantly, and not always unsuccessfully, endeavoring to set foreign States against Prussia. "Hence," continued the Chancellor, "we have determined to buy back the real estate owned by the Polish nobles in Russian Poland and place German colonists on the land hitherto occupied by the appelled people. In order to make the colonization secure to the permanent benefit of the empire, the colonists will be prohibited from marrying Poles. The cost of the undertaking will be about 200,000,000 marks (about $75,000,000), but the State will lose only about ten per cent. of this. The loss is made necessary by the exigencies of the case—buying out an alien class and resolving to Germans—while the gain to the empire will be immeasurable.

"The Government," said the Chancellor with great animation, "will never concede the resuscitation of Poland, nor a hair's breadth in that direction. The Poles play at a conspiracy part in the Kulture Campf. Whenever refuses to help, protest and maintain it shall not be entitled to claim anything from the State. As for me, I am ready to save my country, although at the cost of my head. If anybody dares attack Prussia's frontier, I shall say like Gladstone, Hands off!"

Referring to the insinuation that the Government is favorable to Russian influence in its treatment of the Poles, Bismarck said: "Religion is no new component with the expulsion. As a policy of kindness failed, it becomes necessary to reduce the great Polish element in Germany, to increase the German element. This is the real reason for expulsion, and the Government has determined to persist in this work despite the opposition of the Ultramontanes in consolidated I will say that, before allowing the Ultramontanes to be victorious, I would counsel the Emperor to make the Ireland Government independent of the obstructionists now in the Reichstag, and to the laws and Constitution of Germany would permit, for I would not allow anyone to be a coward who should hesitate to do everything to save his fatherland from ruin."

On the occasion of Prince Bismarck's speech was the discussion of a resolution introduced on Saturday last, expressing satisfaction at the passage in the speech from the throne promoting measures for the protection of German interests in East Prussia. Herr Achenbach moved that the resolution be adopted, and the motion was supported by Herr Weber. Herr Windhorst opposed the motion. Count Ernst Ranzau's speech the discussion was adjourned until to-morrow. The Chancellor's speech is the general topic of conversation in the capital to-night. It is generally conceded that the speech is equally capable of being interpreted to foreshadow either dissolution of Parliament or a coup d'état.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—The discussion over the Polish expulsion was continued in the lower house of Landtag this evening. The Polish members denied that the Poles were trying to eliminate the German element from Eastern Prussia, although they confessed that a hope was entertained of the restoration of the Polish Kingdom. Herr Von Funkmann, Minister of Agriculture, replied that any efforts to obtain the establishment of the Polish Kingdom would constitute an act of high treason. The Government, he said, did not wish to hamper the Poles in regard to their religion or their language, but it felt compelled to put an end to a dangerous agitation and the enormous development of Polonism in Eastern Prussia. Prince Bismarck emphatically reiterated that the restoration of the kingdom of Poland could never be effected by constitutional means.

CHARITY CONCERT AT SANTA ROSA.

SANTA ROSA, January 28, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—On the 22nd inst. Santa Rosa had a rare musical treat, in a concert given for the benefit of the Church, by Karl Formes and several of his pupils. The entertainment was Mr. Formes, Alice Roald, Blanche Stuart, Allanson Webster, and last but by no means least, Mr. G. Morrison. The entleman has a remarkably sweet and powerful tenor voice when fully cultivated in a great school to his teacher; the great one in said of the singing of the ladies. The sense of the evening was "The still school." Mr. Webster sang "Ye Kad Continue, Vilbelm." Mr. Morrison, who sang it, as it is a duet, with Mr. Webster, and accompanied "Bonnie" with Spanish Chorus, "Oh, Bonnie, Bonnie" was beautifully sung Miss A. Webster and Miss Stuart sang "Let Me Hear Thy Voice" to the delight of the appreciative audience. Miss B. Stuart showed all present a fine rendering of "The Maid of Dundee" which was sung with great delicacy and feeling. All these artists did great credit to their excellent master. The efficient organist of the occasion was Miss Bertha Greenhood. On Sunday the 24th, Mr. Formes and Webster and Mr. Morrison sang at the High Mass at St. Rose's Church.

Yours truly, [illegible]

INGERSOLL'S STRONG POSIT.

The following communication appears in a recent issue of the New York Witness:

The great American infidel, Colonel Robert Green of Knoxville, Tenn., whom he had lectured at Knoxville, Tenn., where he had lectured Pastor, Methodist and other gentlemen of great prominence, and I have made more money out of my fashion lecture than I ever made in all my life by more serious and useful topics."

In this not a verification of the old Scriptural saying: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." I am responsible for the entire truth and accuracy of this statement.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

CLEVELAND, O., January 2, 1886.

[Continued next permanently by "Lilly."]

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim—Mr. William Mullan, J. P., died in Belfast, at the residence of Colonel Hope Sydenham. Mr. Mullan was a member of the Belfast Town Council for many years, and in 1866 filled the office of Mayor, succeeding the late Mr. John Lyle, J. P. He also was a member of the Harbor Board for three upon the Board of Guardians, and is credited with a decided share in all matters of town and harbor improvements up to 1881, when he retired from public life.

On Jan. 2, in the registrars room of the Hall of Ballymena, the following persons—Patrick John Kernaghan, of Kernaghanstown, Moyarget, between Cushendun and Ballycastle, was brought forward in custody, charged with failing attendance before the Rev. Alexander Stuart, P. P., Ahoghill, on Christmas morning. According to the information of the Rev. gentleman, it appears that he drove from Ahoghill, to a place called Ballybeg, for the purpose of celebrating the festive. In his return journey, accompanied by a friend, who was driving, he noticed three men in a field adjoining the road. Immediately after this he passed two shots were fired from the direction of the field, the balls passed close to the Rev. Father and lodged in the road in front of the horse. Shortly afterwards he was walking in his residence, another shot was fired at him from behind, and he felt a blow. Similar testimony was given by the servant, and the District Inspector of Ballymena, who had a conversation in the prisoner's house. Kanaghan was returned for trial to the next Ballymena Quarter Sessions. He was accepted, himself in £50 and two sureties in £25 each.

Clare—Mr. Thomas McCarthy Killalee, died in Ennis, aged 74 years, and he bequeathed to the Nursing in response to the request of the benevolent society, the sum of £100 and a legacy of £100 per annum to the same.

Cavan—On Jan. 2, Head Constable Cogan and two other of the Royal Irish Constabulary, arrived in Cavan from Ballyjamesduff, Cavan, Shankhill, Upper, on the estate of Lord Farnham, with a view to serve a number of tenants with notices to quit, received a letter from the agent, Mr. Wrenn, of Cootehill, Cavan, calling on them to desist from the work. Last year a large set proceedings against him could not be carried out, and the tenants succeeded in securing a reduction of rent.

Dr. Edmond Reynolds, medical officer of Kilmacthomas, Dungarvan, died on Jan. 6th. He gained his degree of medicine and surgery in Dublin, and was for some time ship's surgeon, afterward of active service on board the Union Line of steamers, he offered himself for the position of medical officer of Kilgarvan, and was unanimously elected, and for a few months ago, he was the president of the profession, while actively engaged in the duties of his profession, he contributed to the literature of the country, and was a member of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and was also a member of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and was also a member of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and was also

Poetry.

A VALENTINE.

I hail from Saint Valentine's Court, alas!
If Kentucky life was my home—
Gentled now by Love's new star!
With Love's own message I come!

I hail from that land of Southern sun,
Where love and beauty dwell,
Our mountains all gold, I'ts come
To win from thee—not coal!

I have left behind me a glittering land—
Its softest and brightest of skies
To me was a desert, and dreary and blind
It lacked the light of your eyes!

I have said adieu to the flowers so fair!
I have left the sweet birds to their shades!
I reach this city's dusty glare,
To court from thee—love!

I've heard of your beauty—it warmed my heart,
I've heard of it many a time;
I've read it—say, do not start,
I've read it in very your prime!

I am come, I knock at your true heart's gate,
I'm come without fear or pity!
Oh, say not I'm tardy—I'm not too late,
But bid me welcome!

I enter, I bless you, I lie at your feet,
I forget each weary mile,
Are you taken no my with a welcome sweet
And yield what I asked—one smile!

That welcome and I to our love grass,
Blue sway to a heart full of joy!
Nestling there as a beam from Heaven
Sent to a soul through pity!

You look me over—you would read me once more?
You ponder—it is merely a chance!
You would put me away—but not before
You give me what I craved—one glance!

That one glance of hers!—O power, too cold!
Think not it is, you, I speak!
Nay! no, it has sway charmingly hold
And hasten to stay with me!

That smile and glance in my life shall live
As long as the bright stars shine;
Oh, may we some more thoughts may give
The light of a Valentine!

PATRICK M. KING.
San Francisco, Feb. 14, 1888.

THE SCHOOL OF SORROW.

I sat in the school of sorrow;
The Master was teaching there,
But my eyes were dim with weeping,
And my heart was full of care.
Instead of looking upward,
I was looking this low dirion,
In full of tender compassion
For every heart like mine.

I thought only of the burden,
The cross that before me lay,
The cloud that hung thick above me
Darkening the light of day;
So I could not learn my lesson,
And sadly I turned to go;
And the Master came not near me,
As the lesson was so slow.

At last to despair I lifted
My drooping, tear-blurred eyes,
And I saw the Master watching,
With a look of pitying love,
To the cross where we fix pointed,
Then I knew that I was slow
My child, thou must take thy lesson,
And learn it by heart, I know.

"Not now will I tell the reason—
"Thy strength for then is lesser
That I, the Master, am teaching,
And appointed thee all thy ways;
Then, kneeling, the cross I lifted
For one glance of that face divine
And given me strength to bear it,
And say, "Thy will, not mine.

And as I learned my lesson;
And through the weary years
He helped me, and I grew stronger
And cleared every day my sight,
And over the rough places
From the heavenly home streamed down,
Where the school tasks are all ended,
And the cross is changed for the crown.

ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

Literary Miscellany.

In the Crevasse.

"The glacier will not be safe today"
said the old guide, shaking his head gravely.
"There is a yellow mist over the top of Old Heiligen Alp, and mean a thaw.

"Well, and what if thaw?" asked the younger man whom I had choosen for my guide.
"Rather one day's nor one month's thaw is going to melt the Mer de Glace."

"Ha," said the old man, "I see that sometimes breaks a glacier into crevasses.
Yes, even the Mer de Glace so full of cracks on the bottom of a dried-up pond in rain-time. Many a good fellow has lost his life at the bottom of those chasms.

"It's not a crack in the ice, nor a crack
in an old man's brain that is going to scare Franz Berg," said the young man, laughing.
"I've been guide now for six and one, three Alpen years, and I have never heard of even a Frenchman lost in a crevasse."

"Well, well, have your are, say," mutttered the old man, "wisdom is learned by experience. Happy for you if you live to be bit by it."

I was somewhat disturbed by the old guide's ominous words, but not deterred from my chosen pleasure, so we set off the way from Geneva expressly to see the glacier, and it was the geologist's delight in doing old man that was going to interfere with my plan. I had but one day to spare.
The weather was beautiful, the sky was brilliantly blue and the snow-crowned cage of the mountains, like giants of primeval prisons in the sun. I, for one, could not with the poliver mist to shift the old man had referred, and was greatly inclined to attribute his warning to an ugly pride has dese-to a magrim of his old trade.

Our preparations were simply of high boots, shod with spikes, steel-tipped sticks, and wicker flask of spirits spices, were soon completed. We can out at ten in the forenoon, and by twelve had reached the left bank of the great ice river which we proposed to cross.

I paused a moment, awestruck at the magnificent spectacle. Imagine a glacier river, perhaps two miles broad, whirling between cast two-ripped hills, suddenly frozen in a slow, moving torrent of ice.
Vast heaps of snow lay upon it, and here
and there masses of rock, weighing tons, detached from some peak far up the im-penable cliffs.

Very soon we a narrow fissure or cleft ran diagonally across the body of the ice, the sides smooth as glass and of a deep lustrous green, shadowing into the almost impenetrable darkness. Such a crevasse as this, the guide said, was always to be found in the glacier and only the most ordinary care was necessary to avoid it.

We scrambled down upon the ice and began to make our way cautiously across it.
Owing to various obstructions we had been up once or and upon in the ice, our progress was very slow. After an hour of hard work we had not accomplished one-half of the distance, and sat down upon a cube of rock to rest and look about me.

A change had steadily taking place in the weather. The sun was clouded by a thick Indian-colored mist, and the valley of the glacier itself seemed to be shroud with masses of whirling vapor. My outside garments were wet, and clot with his wadding up a solid and benumbing steam.

As I sat in a far from comfortable frame of body and mind, I was started by a far-off, dull, booming sound, the echoes of which seemed to be repeated interminably among the hills.

"What was that?" I asked the guide
"Most likely an avalanche on the Heiligen
Alp," he replied. "They are always falling there——"

He was interrupted by a repetition of the sound, much nearer to us, accompanied by a tremendous shock that seemed to shake the ice beneath us. I looked at him inquiringly, and observed that he was slightly pale.

"A crevasse," he said, answering my look with an air of uneasiness that I could see was not wholly real. "When the ice parts it makes a noise like a cannon. It is nothing. However, we had better be moving. I don't like the looks of this fog.

We arose and resumed our journey, the guide directing our course by occasional glimpses of the Alps through the wreaths of fog which every moment became more dense.
We had not proceeded twenty steps, how ever, when the guide suddenly paused and exclaimed in a low voice: "Mon Dieu!" there came another report, so loud and sharp that I was absolutely stunned, and right in front of us a long jagged line appeared in the ice, widening rapidly, until two sheer walls faced each other more than ten feet apart.

Though the chasm lay directly in our way, to cross it was out of the question.
The guide turned quickly to the right, and we followed the brink of the crevasse, hoping to find a point where it ended, or was narrow enough to spring over. The fog had now become so dense that we could not see a dozen steps before us, and we were forced to move at a small's pace in order to avoid falling into some unseen abyss. We had gone on in this way perhaps five minutes, when there came another report, followed by a series of weaker shocks.
The guide said I paused, and looked around us.

The situation had become, to say the least, embarrassing. During a momentary lift of the fog we saw all around us a perfect network of cracks, intersecting one other at every angle. Then, as the vapor closed in again, we could hear on every side tremendous crashes and grindings, as the huge masses of ice approached or receded from one another.

That to do now was a serious question.
To proceed a single yard might be to periish miserably in the bottom of some frightful chasm, and to remain where we were might be merely waiting until the ice should open beneath our feet and engulf us.
But we were speedily forced to a conclusion.
While we stood a few feet apart and anxiously discussing our position, there was another shock, and I was blinded by a shower of small particles of ice.

When I cleared my eyes I saw that souther cleft had opened directly at my feet, leaving me myself and the guide. It was rapidly widening, and in a few seconds would completely separate me from my companion.
Without hesitation I sprang across it, and stood beside him. He looked at me with a grave face.

"We are in great danger," he said simply.
"Yes," I replied, as quickly as I could,
"but we must do our best to get out of it.
What do you advise?"

"We must not stay here," he said, peering into the fog. "We are evidently in the very centre of these crevasses. If we could get nearer to either bank we would be safer. I thought I heard Blue and Mont Blanc, and I thought I heard Blue and Mont Blanc, and I thought I heard Blue and Mont Blanc, and

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1886.

PROCLAMATION OF THE JUBILEE.

The following Circular Letter from Archbishop Riordan was read in all the city churches on last Sunday. The Encyclical Letter proclaiming the extraordinary Jubilee during the present year was published in the MONITOR of the 20th ult.

TO THE CLERGY
—OF THE—
Archdiocese of San Francisco.

REV. AND DEAR SIR:

In obedience to the command of our Holy Father, I send you his Encyclical Letter of the 23d of December, proclaiming an Extraordinary Jubilee, and enjoin that it be read in all the churches of the Archdiocese on the Sunday after its reception.

The conditions with which a faithful compliance is prescribed, in order to gain the Plenary Indulgence of the Jubilee, are as follows:

1st. For those living in the city of San Francisco to visit, twice, three churches, namely: St. Mary's Cathedral, St. Patrick's, and St. Ignatius.

For those living in the City of Oakland to visit, twice, three churches, namely: St. Patrick's, St. Mary's, and St. Anthony's.

For those living in San José to pay three visits to each of the two churches, St. Joseph's and St. Patrick's.

For those living where there is but one church, to visit it six times, and during each visit to pray for the prosperity and exaltation of the Holy Catholic Church and of the Apostolic See; for the extirpation of heresies; the conversion of the erring; for concord among Christian Rulers; for the peace and unity of all Christian people—according to the intention of the Holy Father.

2d. To fast two days. The fast is to be made on days that are not, by precept of the Church, days of strict fast. Should two days in the Lenten Season be selected, those only must be taken that are included in the Lenten fast. The fast cannot be made on the Ember-days throughout the year.

The fast prescribed by the Sovereign Pontiff is that which is commonly known as the black fast, excluding not only flesh meat, but also what are called white meats, eggs, milk, butter, cheese, or anything nourishing derived from these. At the observance of the fast is one of the conditions necessary for gaining the Indulgence, every one, irrespective of age, is obliged to observe it.

3d. A sincere and contrite Confession.

4th. A worthy reception of Holy Communion.

5th. The giving of alms, according to the means of each one, to some work that has for its object the spiritual or corporal benefit of the Catholic Church. In other words the alms shall be given: 1 Dog leave, harbor, or, and poor attention to the spiritual works that have a claim on our charity: The Tombs' Directory for destitute and homeless boys, and a Mission School and Chapel to be established for the many children living along the water-front in this city, the far west of a school and chapel, are in great spiritual destitution. For these objects Rectors will use that a special box distinctly labeled "Jubilee Alms," be placed in their churches, and their contents sent from time to time during the year to the Rev. George Montgomery, Secretary of the Archdiocese.

Confessors have faculties to commute any of the conditions that may be impracticable, excepting Confession and Communion, and even Communion, in the case of children not yet admitted to their First Communion.

6th. The Confession and Communion prescribed for gaining the Plenary Indulgence of the Jubilee must be distinct from those made to satisfy the Easter precept.

7th. The Indulgence of the Jubilee may be gained more than once on complying with the conditions prescribed by the Sovereign Pontiff.

8th. The extraordinary Jubilee granted to Confessors, of absolving from reserved cases, of commuting the works prescribed or dispensing from them, can be used in favor of those only who desire to make the Jubilee, and only once in favor of the same penitent.

During the time of the Jubilee the faculties granted by the Letters Apostolic "Pauline Mentis," dated February 15, 1879, the text of which I subjoin, are given by the Sovereign Pontiff to all Confessors.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

✠ PATRICK W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 11, 1886.

—In a recent issue of the Little Catholic there appeared a summary of the Pope's Peter-pence collection in Northern Italy. From it we learn that the most liberal response to the appeal of the Holy Father was given in the Diocese of Milan, which contributed the sum of 50,000 lire ($10,000). The Diocese of Turin gave 40,000 lire; Genoa, 30,000 lire; Vercelli, 25,000 lire; Casale, 20,000 lire; Ventimiglia, 15,000 lire; Aosta, 10,000 lire; Savona, 10,000 lire; Albenga, 10,000 lire; Tortona, 10,000 lire; Alessandria, 10,000 lire; Asti, 10,000 lire; Acqui, 10,000 lire; Novara, 10,000 lire; Vigevano, 10,000 lire; Pinerolo, 10,000 lire; Ivrea, 10,000 lire; Mondovi, 10,000 lire; Saluzzo, 10,000 lire; Biella, 10,000 lire; Vercelli, 10,000 lire; Casale, 10,000 lire; Pavia, 10,000 lire; Cremona, 10,000 lire; Lodi, 10,000 lire; Piacenza, 10,000 lire; Bergamo, 10,000 lire; Brescia, 10,000 lire; Cremona, 10,000 lire; Mantua, 10,000 lire; Trento, 10,000 lire; Trieste, 10,000 lire; Gorizia, 10,000 lire; Udine, 10,000 lire; Belluno, 10,000 lire; Vittorio, 10,000 lire; Treviso, 10,000 lire; Vicenza, 10,000 lire; Verona, 10,000 lire; Adria, 10,000 lire; Padua, 10,000 lire; Venice, 10,000 lire; Concord

Farm and Home.

Birth at Meal Time.

Everybody should plan to have pleasant conversation at the table, just as they have good food. A little story telling, a little reading, it may be of humorous things, anecdotes, etc., will often stimulate the joyous elements of the mind and cause it to set vigorously. Try and avoid going to the table all tired out. Let all troublesome topics be avoided. Don't discipline children. Think and say something pleasant. Cultivate mirth, and laugh when anything witty is said. If possible, never eat alone. Invite a friend of whom you are fond, and say to him or your wife, or husband, or brother, "Sesame, Pipkin, your feet are not empty."

The boys all laughed, but Pipkin said he couldn't see any joke.

A Leading Question.

"And so Mr. Featherly will lead your daughter to the altar next month, Mrs. Hendricks?" said the minister, who was making his weekly call.

"Ah, yes!" replied Mrs. Hendricks, with a sigh; "I don't know what I shall do without Clara."

"Will Mr. Featherly lead Clara to the altar the same as Aunt Jack says that he leads pa?" inquired Bobby.

"How is that, Bobby?" asked the minister, pleasantly.

"By the nose."

Curious Names.

"What a name that young man has," said a clergyman yesterday to a Nice gentleman as the person indicated left his presence.

"What is it?"

"E. P. Hastar, he writes it. Nothing remarkable about that, but what an amount of foolish patriotism is concealed in those initials. The young man was born on January 3, 1863, and his parents named him Emancipation Proclamation Baxter, in honor of the occasion."

"That's pretty bad."

"Yes, but there are some parents with exactly ideas on the subject of naming children.

One boy I christened Perseverance Jones. I remarked to Jones the day before, that he said the child's mother was called Patience, and he saw no reason why the boy should not be called Perseverance, because the two always went together. Within a few years of the grave of Benjamin and Deborah Franklin, in the old cemetery at Fifth and Arch streets, there is a handsome footing the inscription: 'Sacred to the memory of B. L. T. Lloyd.' If the owner of this name were living now his friends would probably call him 'Celestial.' I knew a colored man named Alexander doing some work around here once. I used to hear the other workmen call him 'Trib' and 'Hoss,' and it struck me one day to ask him what his name was.

"'Tribulation Wholesome Alexander, sah,' he replied.

"It may have been some relative of his who came to me with twins to have baptized.

"'What names will you call them?' I asked.

"'Cherubim and Seraphim,' replied the mother.

"'Why?' I asked in astonishment.

"'Because,' she replied, 'de pra'r book says 'de cherubim and seraphim continually do cry,' and dese yare chil'ec do nuffin' else.'"

The Note gatherer edged toward the door, and when he had got in the lobby shouted "Chestnuts," and skipped down stairs.

To the Hornet.

"If I had been Solomon," said a curbstone philosopher, "I don't think I would have made the laws for the bees."

"Where would you have seed him?" inquired a man with a decaying nose, who needed shaving badly.

"I would have sent him to the hornet."

"And what good would that have done?"

"A great deal, my friend. One hornet would have taught him more about enterprise in five minutes than he could have learned from a whole colony of ants in three weeks by the closest kind of observation. If you want to limber a man's joints in a hurry, send him to the hornet every time, and you won't miss it. This hornet means business from the very start, and don't you forget it."

Settled Long Ago.

Young Englishman—Your country is so young, you know, Miss Eagle. You have no pride of ancestry as yet.

American Girl—On the contrary, Mr. Lion, America is and has every reason to be proud of its ancestry. Much more so, in fact, than England.

Young Englishman—Indeed!

American Girl—Oh, my, yes! The ancestry of our ancestors was settled over a hundred years ago.

Send Him to Pasteur!

"Every time I drink a glass of beer I think of poor old Johnny Mehler the other day, as he lained on his death bed and gave a wicked wink.

"Why?" said a friend on the outside, as he raised a glass of the foaming liquid to his lips."

"It reminds me of a very med dog," replied John.

"Why should it?" asked the man as he quaffed down the beer and a large quantity of astonishment at the same time.

"Because," said John, "it frothe at the mouth."

The Hot Water Cure.

"My dear," remarked Mr. DeWiggs at the breakfast table this morning, "Dr. Lawin says that hot water will cure all diseases."

"He does, does he?" said Mrs. DeWiggs.

"Yes, and persons who use the treatment ought never to be sick at all."

"Well, I don't believe it."

"Why?"

"You know how sick I am all the time."

"But you have never tried the hot water cure."

"What never tried it?" ejaculated De Wiggs, as he slided towards the door.

"Why, I've been in hot water ever since I married you."

He got outside just in time to miss a tureen full of hot slop as a parting salute.

What Made Him Late.

"I don't understand," said a Waco merchant, taking out his watch, "how it is that you manage to get here so much later than all the other clerks, Mr. Smith. Some of them live miles from the store then that of my rather short."

"I know that," replied the clerk, "but my affection for my family makes me late. I have four boys, and no matter how early I get up, by the time each one has had his thrashing, it is so late that I have to leave the house without eating my breakfast."

As an article for the toilet, Apon's Hair Vigor stands unrivalled. It cleans the scalp and promotes it from scurf and dandruff, cures feeling and humour, restores faded or gray hair to its original dark color, and promotes its growth.

Family Fun.

The Reason Why.

Filpinks came down to the club last night with a great problem weighing on his mind.

"If I should stand on my head," said he, coming up to the boys with the air of a man who has got a bone—"if I put my head down and my legs all rushes into my head, don't it?"

No one ventured to contradict him.

"Now," continued he, triumphantly, "what I stand on my feet, why don't the blood all rush into my feet?"

"Because," replied Mac Cushaniggen's brother, "because, Filpinks, your feet are not empty."

The boys all laughed, but Filpinks said he couldn't see any joke.

Tight Lacing Again.

The triangular figure, with a base at the shoulders and apex at the hips, that begin to show themselves on our streets indicate a return to the wicked fashion of tight lacing that disgraced women twenty years ago. Nothing can excuse such a violation of the laws of health and beauty but the greatest ignorance. False standards of what constitutes a good figure had hundreds of women to offend in this very domain to which they attempt to plume, having no knowledge of the laws of proportion they offend our sight. Large women wearing shoes two or even three sizes too small, walking with a cramped and wabbling gait, all freedom of motion gone, and an expression of suppressed agony on their face are painful to behold. Gloved-hands so shaped looking that unconsciously the mind runs to the butcher's window and its rows of sausages, and we give preference to the sausages as works of art because of their conformity to their natural out-lines. Every woman who wears tight shoes or gloves pays the penalty in cold feet and hands, impaired circulation, and, as a result, a pinched and purple complexion. Fashion being a violation against health that offends against the law of God; a violation that is even greater than self murder, as it attacks one vital organ of child bearing. All this is done with the mistaken idea that the form of a woman is improved by being made to conform to the lines of beauty, and that the Venus of Milo is rivalled!

How to Get Fat.

If any one wishes to get fatty, says an exchange, a plat of milk taken before retiring at night will cover the owner's ribs last bone. Although now-a-days we see a great many lean and hard girls, who sigh for the fashionable measure of plumpness, and who would be vastly improved in health and appearance could their bones be rounded with good solid flesh. Nothing so much adds to a woman than a full figure, and nothing will cross the ire and spunkiness of one of the "slipper-builds" as the commencement of plumpness in a rival. In cases of fever and summer-complaint, milk is now given with excellent results. The idea that milk is "feverish" has exploded, and this now the physician's great reliance in bringing through typhoid patients, of those in low a state to be nourished by solid food. It is similar in its effects on the slender. Take more milk and buy less meat. Look to your stallions, have large-limed well-filled pitchers on the table each meal, and your wives will also have sound flesh and light digestion's bills.

Simple Cure For Cold Feet.

The following remedy for cold feet is recommended for sedentary sufferers, as well as policemen, sentinels, and others who are exposed to cold: "All that is necessary is to stand erect and vary gradually to lift one's self up upon the tips of the toes, so as to pull all the tendons of the feet at full stretch. This is not to hop or jump up and down; but simply to rise—spread the instep—pop tiptoe, and to remain standing on the point of the toes as long as possible, then gradually coming to the natural position. Repeat this several times, and by the amount of work the tips of the toes are made to do in sustaining the body's weight, a sufficient and lively circulation will be set up. A heavy pair of wool stockings drawn over this motion cans is also a recommendation for keeping the feet warm.

Little Vices.

"He uses tobacco a very little," said the fond bride. "He takes a social glass, but seldom." Her chum's husband, her pride was hurt in having to say that her hero was almost perfect, but she thought, if her husband proved, he would be easily persuaded to renounce even that for her sake, but she did not mention him, did not like to dictate. Men do not like to be trained. She also appeared to notice as little as possible; and the stones grew, one upon another—slowly, surely, the pile rose, occasionally noticed, but long ago found, too heavy for removal by her tender hands. Now she swings those hands and moans, looking back to the days when she held him. There is no mourning over that bestiom. One who feel a loving pride in a habitual drunkard? Oh, young lady, anticipating marriage, beware that there be not even the commencement, between you at the start, of a "wall of separation."

Recipes.

BEEF ROLLS.—Take the remains of cold roast or boiled beef. Mince fine with a small amount of its fat; add seasoning of pepper, salt and chopped herbs. Put the whole in a roll of puff paste and bake for half an hour.

MINCED COD'FISH.—Flake up cold boiled cod, and to each three cups of fish add one cup of mashed potato, a small piece of butter, one egg, one-half teaspoonful of sora starch; make into small cakes and fry in butter.

HAM GUNNERSBAL.—One cup of molasses, one cup of sugar, one half cup of butter, one-half cup of lard, a little salt, one egg, a scant, teaspoonful of ginger and a heaping teaspoonful of saleratus. Mix quite hard. Roll out, cut in cards to suit your pan, which should be a shallow one. Have your oven hot when you put your bread in, but be careful not to burn it. Sometimes you may put in one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, but it is not necessary.

American Cattle.

An Eastern paper notes some curious facts in connection with the history of horned cattle in this country. Columbus brought the first herd on his second trip in 1493. Other Spanish navigators brought small herds, from which the wild cattle of the West and South descended. In 1603 the Portuguese took cattle and hogs to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. The Canadian cattle were introduced in 1608 to 1630 Virginia had 500 head of cattle. The most stringent laws were passed prohibiting the killing of any domestic animal. In New England cattle were introduced in 1624. It is said that for a time price was regulated by color, a red calf being cheaper than a black one, because it was more likely to be mistaken by the wolves for a deer and killed.

—Bob Hudnuts cured at once by "DDD."

Catholic Societies.

☞ Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are requested to send in all items of interest, including notices necessary for publication, for this Department.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PRESIDIAL COUNCIL.—The Particular Council meets on the first Sunday of every month, at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of organizing and directing the conferences, assists in taking care of the funds, and decides on all appeals preferred on that score, and appoints a number of visitors to the sick, who are not members of the Society, to report to the Particular Council, which meets in St. Mary's Cathedral Building, the first Tuesday of every month at the following officers: Spiritual Director, Very Rev. J. Prendergast, V. G.; President, Thomas Magee; Vice President, John Wallace; Treasurer, Thos. Maher; Secretary, P. J. Thomas. The Particular Council further elects a number of Visitors, who are ex-officio members of all the conferences in the city and are also members of the Particular Council.

The following list comprises the officers of the 11 groups, as chosen by the Particular Council:

ST. MARY'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. John Caverly; President, Thomas Magee; Vice President, John Carmody; 1st Vice President, J. J. Hunter; 2nd Vice President, Thomas Ryan; Treasurer, John Mooney; Secretary, Thomas Maher; Assistant Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Visitors, Thomas Ryan, John Mooney, Thomas Maher, John Carmody, Thomas Magee, John Wallace, James Hunter, Thomas Ryan, Jr., Thomas Ryan, Sr., Thomas Ryan, Jr., Thomas Ryan, Sr., Thomas Ryan, Jr., Thomas Ryan, Sr.,

Farm and Home.

Birth at Meal Time.

Everybody should plan to have pleasant conversation at the table, just as they have good food. A little story telling, a little anecdotes, jokes, will clear away the dyspepsia clouds of the mind and cause it to act vigorously. Try and avoid going to the table all dead out. Let all troubles some topics be avoided. Don't discipline children. Think and say something pleasant. Contents spread, no laughing when eat alone. Invite a friend of whom you are fond, and try to have a good time. Friendship and friendship increases at the table, assist the appetite and promotes the flow of animal spirits.

Tight Lacing Again.

The triangular figure, with a base at the shoulders and apex at the hips, that begin to show themselves in our streets indicate a return to the wasp waist fashion of long ago. Nothing can excuse such a violation of the laws of health and beauty as the fashion of tight lace. False standards of beauty have often led women to commit the most atrocious crimes against themselves. Fashion is the very domain in which they attempt to please, having no knowledge of the laws of proportion they follow blindly sight. Large women wearing shoes two or three sizes too small, walking on a stamped and wobbling gait with pressure of suppressed agony on their faces are painful to behold. Gloved hands so crushed looking that nonconsciously the nerve end message, and we give preference to the messages as works of art because of their conformity to their ideal. Every woman who wears tight shoes or gloves pays the penalty in cold feet, cold hands, impaired circulation, and, as a result, a pinched and sallow complexion. Tight lacing is a violation against health that offends against the law of God; a violation that is ever greater than it is supposed. It impairs the vital organs of child bearing. All this is done in the name of beauty, and that the form of a woman is improved by lacing, made to conform to the ideal of fashion, and that the Venus of Milo is rivalled!

How to Get Fat.

If any one wishes to get fleshy, says an exchange, a piece of advice is given that if acted upon will soon cover the recipient with flesh. Although now a dayes we see a great many lean and lank girls and women, for the fashionable ideal is a plump figure, and she would be vastly complacent, health and appearance would their favorite ideal, and nothing will cause the lean figure, and nothing will cause the lean to be rounded with good flesh. Fashion is ever revered by some women than a full bosom

AMERICAN CATHOLICS.

What They Should Do in Politics and the Position They Should Take on the Sunday Closing Question.

Right Rev. Bishop Gilmour, preaching in St. John's Cathedral, Cleveland, on a recent Sunday, said: "Catholics are somewhat to blame in not taking a more active part with their fellow-citizens in the ordinary local and general questions of the day. You are citizens," said the bishop, "and as such have not only a right to discuss any social, political or religious questions among, but it is your duty so to do. If good men stand aloof and let the bad have the field undisturbed, calmly and frankly say so. If you deem it well to propose measures, present them, discuss them and urge them. If you are aggrieved, present your grievance, and in all lawful and constitutional ways seek to have the grievance removed. Be a part of the community in which you live. You are not foreigners or aliens. You have come here to be a part of American society, willing to give your labor for the development of the wealth of the country and your blood for the maintenance of its laws. I think," said the bishop, "Catholics are somewhat at fault, and by their mode of acting have unwittingly helped to give color to the charge that they are foreigners. They are timid and shrinking, and keep away too much from general movements. They should mingle more with their fellow-citizens, and take, as citizens, a more active part in all local and general movements that tend either to the prevention of evil or the amelioration of evil. Foreign nationalities and nationalities should be done away with. They have neither right nor place in America. Here we should know no country but America. Our lot and lives we cast with America, and at any attempt to foster other nationalities or even our languages than American should not only be discouraged, but firmly frowned down. When the Sunday question comes to the shores of America it seems to be a part of America, to take his place in society as a part of American society, and to assume the duties and to claim the rights of an American citizen. In the face of such positions there is, and can be, no place for religious or other nationalities, and it should not be claimed, but on the contrary disclaimed, in the face of those who would assert it. This is no manner forbids the foreigner thinking kindly of fatherland and friends there; on the contrary, the love of a man's birth must ever be dear to him, and should be sacred to be memory and feelings, but he should not insist upon people of another country speaking and being molded by the manners or laws of his country. If he chooses to come to this country, let him adapt himself to the customs and laws of the country to which he comes, and let his children and self become a part of the country in which he lives. Therefore, you as citizens should take a much more active part in local affairs; be a part of the society in which you live; mingle more freely with your fellow-citizens; have your say and do your part more fully and freely in the questions that affect you as citizens; examine, see for yourselves the merits of all just and proper laws; help to prevent abuse, sin, scandal, take a part in regulating abuse in the city and use of liquor. Join with your fellow-citizens in this present effort to regulate in this matter the Sabbath question so long mooted, as far as prudent and lawful legislation is concerned, and yet not so long as there is should be kept. I do not seek to impose or ask you to make the Sabbath or the substitution Parisian Sabbath upon you, but I do urge you to help in this present movement to close the saloons on Sunday, and what you can to prevent the proposed ordinance now before the city council by which an effort is made to do away with the clause that I and my predecessor from 7 o'clock in the afternoon to 10 o'clock on Sunday evening. If it was found impossible to close the saloons entirely on Sunday, then the time be limited to one or two hours, but let no not disgrace the city with the farce of closing the saloons on Sunday morning, and then to open on that day, from opening them in the afternoon when their patrons, who go to church, are in prayer, let the saloons be closed on Sunday, and let Sunday be observed as a Christian Sunday.

The Church in Australia.

The Irish bishops and Bishops of Australia have issued a pastoral addressed to their brethren in the American Episcopate. In their address they say:

The present character of the church can not show this occasion of so much joy to her to pass without commemorating her greatness to her children. Of all national churches in communion with the Holy See, there is none to which the Church of Australia bears so close a resemblance to that of the Island Mother. The children of both churches are the offspring of the same race. They speak a common language, their laws, customs and manners are alike, they are spread over regions of vast extent, corresponding in every form of material property, the full development of whose resources must raise both people to a foremost place amongst the nations of the earth. Their density of population widely differs, but their territorial extension is the same in both countries, in both countries the foundations of the faith were laid amid storms and persecution. Those storms from which serious dangers to the faith have sprung and may continue to spring for some time longer threatened to both. The faithful of both countries have had to endure sectarian and Catholic intolerance, intolerance, in political and social life against organized prejudices, sometimes breaking out into open violence, against systems of education, against religious character, hatred, hostile, give but little encouragement to the spread of our holy faith. Our child, even now not among the most favored, wealthiest or most learned of the land, yet bears laid the foundations of the faith deep and solid. As in America, so in Australia, the grain of mustard seed planted in a grateful soil has grown into a goodly tree and for both, in the providence of God, a great future is in store. You will rejoice to learn that our Plenary Council in the island which we are now assigned, requested the Holy See to enrich our church with three new metropolitan sees, with six new suffragan sees, with four additional Bishops, some more specially for the native races, and with a national seminary. We will be able to spread and developing the sacrificial vocations of our native youth. Our Plenary Council, now promulgated by the Metropolitan See, fifteen Bishops, one Vicar Apostolic, with fifty-two of our clergy, constitute our First National Synod. The canons of our colleges, now happily crowned by your national university are a matter of deep interest to us, and will we trust, encourage our people to second our efforts in imitating your noble example. Never the days of our fathers, and yet amongst the first in the history of the church for its numbers and the extent of its dominions, and for its religious and deliberations, be fruitful in blessings for the extirpation of error, for the diffusion of truth, for the happiness of your flocks, for the nation and of souls by giving increased energy to the Apostolic See and greater uniformity in discipline and a more extended sphere to the normal action of the Church. We beg to remain your most loving and devoted brothers in Christ.

PATRICK F. CARD MORAN,
Archbishop of Sydney, Apostolic Delegate, and seventeen others.

— The yoke a man creates for himself by wrong doing will breed hate in the kindliest nature.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—The Unionist faction in Ireland have always been fertile in silly threats to the people of Ireland. The latest specimen of the kind comes from Antrim, where a pitch of rubbish and political nonsense was being put forth by many parts of Ireland the holdings of Protestant farmers are knocked down wholesale by auction for small sums of money, present them, discuss them and urge them. If you are aggrieved, present your grievance, and in all lawful and constitutional ways seek to have the grievance removed. Be a part of the community in which you live. You are not foreigners or aliens. You have come here to be a part of American society, willing to give your labor for the development of the wealth of the country and your blood for the maintenance of its laws. I think," said the bishop, "Catholics are somewhat at fault, and by their mode of acting have unwittingly helped to give color to the charge that they are foreigners. They are timid and shrinking, and keep away too much from general movements. They should mingle more with their fellow-citizens, and take, as citizens, a more active part in all local and general movements that tend either to the prevention of evil or the amelioration of evil. Foreign nationalities and nationalities should be done away with. They have neither right nor place in America. Here we should know no country but America. Our lot and lives we cast with America, and at any attempt to foster other nationalities or even our languages than American should not only be discouraged, but firmly frowned down. When the sun next comes to the shores of America it seems to be a part of America, to take his place in society as a part of American society, and to assume the duties and to claim the rights of an American citizen. In the face of such positions there is, and can be, no place for religious or other nationalities, and it should not be claimed, but on the contrary disclaimed, in the face of those who would assert it. This in no manner forbids the foreigner thinking kindly of fatherland and friends there; on the contrary, the love of a man's birth must ever be dear to him, and should be sacred to be memory and feelings, but he should not insist upon people of another country speaking and being molded by the manners or laws of his country. If he chooses to come to this country, let him adapt himself to the customs and laws of the country to which he comes, and let his children and self become a part of the country in which he lives. Therefore, you as citizens should take a much more active part in local affairs; be a part of the society in which you live; mingle more freely with your fellow-citizens; have your say and do your part more fully and freely in the questions that affect you as citizens; examine, see for yourselves the merits of all just and proper laws; help to prevent abuse, sin, scandal, take a part in regulating abuse in the city and use of liquor. Join with your fellow-citizens in this present effort to regulate in this matter the Sabbath question so long mooted, as far as prudent and lawful legislation is concerned, yet not so long as there is should be kept. I do not seek to impose or ask you to make the Sabbath or the substitution Parisian Sabbath upon you, but I do urge you to help in this present movement to close the saloons on Sunday, what you can to prevent the proposed ordinance now before the city council by which an effort is made to do away with the clause that I and my predecessor from 7 o'clock in the afternoon to 10 o'clock on Sunday evening. If it was found impossible to close the saloons entirely on Sunday, then the time be limited to one or two hours, but let no not disgrace the city with the farce of closing the saloons on Sunday morning, and then to open on that day, from opening them in the afternoon when their patrons, who go to church, are in prayer, let the saloons be closed on Sunday, and let Sunday be observed as a Christian Sunday.

The Church in Australia.

The Arch-bishops and Bishops of Australia have issued a pastoral addressed to their brethren in the American Episcopate. In their address they say:

The present character of the church can not show this occasion of so much joy to her to pass without commemorating her greatness to her children. Of all national churches in communion with the Holy See, there is none to which the Church of Australia bears so close a resemblance as that of the Island Mother. The children of both churches are the offspring of the same race. They speak a common language, their laws, customs and manners are alike, they are spread over regions of vast extent, corresponding in every form of material property, the full development of whose resources must raise both people to a foremost place amongst the nations of the earth. Their density of population widely differs, but their territorial extension is the same in both countries, in both countries the foundations of the faith were laid amid storms and persecution. Those storms from which serious dangers to the faith have sprung and may continue to spring for some time longer threatened to both. The faithful of both countries have had to endure sectarian and Catholic intolerance, intolerance, in political and social life against organized prejudices, sometimes breaking out into open violence, against systems of education, against religious character, hatred, hostile, give but little encouragement to the spread of our holy faith. Our child, even now not among the most favored, wealthiest or most learned of the land, yet bears laid the foundations of the faith deep and solid. As in America, so in Australia, the grain of mustard seed planted in a grateful soil has grown into a goodly tree and for both, in the providence of God, a great future is in store. You will rejoice to learn that our Plenary Council in the island which we are now assigned, requested the Holy See to enrich our church with three new metropolitan sees, with six new suffragan sees, with four additional Bishops, some more specially for the native races, and with a national seminary. We will be able to spread and developing the sacrificial vocations of our native youth. Our Plenary Council, now promulgated by the Metropolitan See, fifteen Bishops, one Vicar Apostolic, with fifty-two of our clergy, constitute our First National Synod. The canons of our colleges, now happily crowned by your national university are a matter of deep interest to us, and will we trust, encourage our people to second our efforts in imitating your noble example. Never the days of our fathers, and yet amongst the first in the history of the church for its numbers and the extent of its dominions, and for its religious and deliberations, be fruitful in blessings for the extirpation of error, for the diffusion of truth, for the happiness of your flocks, for the nation and of souls by giving increased energy to the Apostolic See and greater uniformity in discipline and a more extended sphere to the normal action of the Church. We beg to remain your most loving and devoted brothers in Christ.

PATRICK F. CARD MORAN,
Archbishop of Sydney, Apostolic Delegate, and seventeen others.

— The yoke a man creates for himself by wrong doing will breed hate in the kindliest nature.

Limerick.—A farmer named Thomas Mason committed suicide at his residence, near Croom, on January 16, by cutting his throat. He was a bachelor and had been in failing health for several years. He was in a very dejected state of mind for some time before his death, and it was thought that he was in a state of mental aberration. He was about 60 years of age.

Mayo.—In the Land Judges Court on Jan. 21, the evictions over "Traffic's estate," in the county Mayo, sought by Liberty to procure assistance on the property. There were 462 tenants, and the rent of over 2,000 and the arrears for four years amounted to 19,000. Judge Boyd thought the estate too large to entertain appeals. In asking for a discretionary power to grant a new one, counsel stated that the holdings—five acres—were insufficient to pay rent, and that the whole sum of loans were due by Jan. 31.

On Jan. 7, at a village named Crafty, about two miles from Castlebar, a young man named Naughton, 23 years of age, proceeded to a small stream in the vicinity of his home, and having divested himself of his most limpid into the water and was drowned. No motive can be assigned for the rash act. He partook of dinner at his usual hour, which, being then in his usual health and spirits.

Cork.—Reports describe the condition of the laborers dwelling in Berragh, as the most wretched in Irish and Scotch, out of which their owners serve an unreasonable rent. The tenants have complained to the Omagh Board of Guardians, but their grievance has managed to obtain a hearing. Mr. Dobbin, the Land Commissioner, has decided that the rents of the cottages that the owners of the lands have given the tenants notice to quit, because they could make more money by letting the land in conacre.

Tipperary.—There are two eviction dates in Upperary on Jan. 18th. Mr. Arthur Hill, Lisnamrock, Bansha, has large arable tillage farms, and a poor man named Burke, evicted for non-payment, died on the road in Bansha on Jan. 17.

On Jan 17, a well-to-do farmer, named Edward Allen, aged 35 years, residing at Park, Gortahally, near Ballina, Co. Tipperary, was found dead in a well on his farm. He had been missing since the house of Mr. Chadwick, of Thurcville House, near Ballina, where he had the loss of a horse. The man who discovered the body could not find the deceased's hat, and they thought it was the proper way foul play, but when the footer was sounded he found there were no marks of violence on the hat. One of the bullets had proved the heart. Mr. Allen was a Protestant, and was related to Allen, one of the Manchester martyrs. He was a very popular man, of light of way, out of which some pecuniary difficulties had arisen, and he had been missing for one or two days before. No motive can be assigned for the rash act. He partook of dinner at his usual hour, being then in his usual good health and spirits.

Kerry.—Jonathan Walpole, of Ballinrally, Tralee, in the county Kerry, farmer, has been adjudged a bankrupt.

A large meeting of the respectable inhabitants of Tralee, was held on Jan. 18th, they which Isaac Duffey presided. The object for which the meeting was called was to take into consideration the propriety of erecting a statue to the liberator in the town. A subscription list was opened, and the necessary preliminaries for the statue will be given as soon as possible.

Sligo.—Mr. Gallagher, Monasteraden, died on the 20th inst. The Land Bill, which he had been a tenant of Sir Francis Fetherstonhaugh, Bt., Fermoyle, Co. Longford, died at the age of 80 years. Deceased was

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

SWEET IMMIPAH.

Lawset Immipah! O lovely land!
Where nature smiles both sweet and grand,
Rich verdant hill and flowery dell
Proclaim where beauty bower is dwell.
Thy mountains towering from the sea,
Proclaim there is no land like thee,
Thou sweetest home of morning mist,
Thou dear old land of Immipah!

O ancient land! O lovely home!
Where aspect feel would love to roam,
Full oft beneath such smiling bower
I wept with sad yet happy heart to hear,
And then spread freedom near her shrin
Or bade it love and praise God.
And proudly told to every gale—
"There was no land like Immipah!"

O patriot isle! O an cit shore!
Thy sons are brave the wide world over,
And thousands yet shall proudly tell
How they in youth fondly sought and fell,
Or drivin back the Dutchmen
From off their soil in long ago,
Till victory smiled on every side
Around the shopes of Immipah!

O dear old land! O land of song!
From strangers oft you're suffered wrong!
The Boers came with sword and hand
Strewed sorrow round with savage hand,
Yet oft they were made to feel
Brin's hate and Pete's steel.

ONLY A SONG.

It was only a song, in an idle ballad,
Sung on a summer day;
Thousands have listened to the singer,
And few that heeded her song!
Yet the singer is very, very lovely,
And sweet as love noted;
Thousands have listened to her ballad
That it left as proud and cold.

She sang of the wondrous glory
That touches the world in spring;
Of the strange, soul-stirring voices
Of the "little birds bold, and sing;"
Of the happy little lov warbling
Amid the green leaves;
And the quiet voice of the zephyr
In the dusk of the gloaming grey.

And one in a distant corner—
A woman seen with sorrow—
Heard in that song a message
From the world of joy and love.
Her fairy form rose up before her
From the sunlit world of spring,
She felt happy blindness,
Her eyes were wet with tears.

Then when the song was ended,
And she heard the applause rose,
The listener rose up softly
And crept to her room alone.
Once more to her life of labor
She passed; but her heart was strong;
And she prayed, "God bless the singer!
And say, thank God for the song!"

Literary Miscellany.

Winning a Bride Through War.

A True Episode of the Struggle Between Southern Rebels and Northern Men.

On the 22nd of July, 1864, the armies of the sulphurous breath of mankind and man.

At 1 am o'clock, General Hardee, a Confederate corps commander with a mounted escort, was in the saddle, observing the position of the enemy. One of the escort was a young lieutenant, a cousin.

While the General was noting the reports of a civil engineer, a squad of Union prisoners, were marched up and halted. One of the number, a mulatto, sank upon the ground exhausted from fatigue. Union men having entered his left cheek and ranging upward passed out through the right, shattering the cheek bone. The young courier, observing the wounded man, asked if the surgeon be directed to attend him. An order was then administered and the wound dressed, when the prisoners were ordered to resume their march. The Union sergeant endeavored to obey, but staggered from effort. At that moment an ambulance containing wounded Confederate officers drew up. The young courier, observing that there was room for one more, asked that the wounded captain be placed therein, offering to take him delivered in the train guard in the city, whither he had just been ordered. Following the ambulance on his horse, he passed at General Johnston's headquarters to deliver a dispatch and then, when the Confederate wounded had been removed from the wagon, accompanied it to the train, which was about starting for Atlanta. After giving the prisoner his own pillow freshly filled with moss, he purchased from a store near by a mercy ance, and, obtained permission from the train guard for the wounded man to lie upon it. The latter's face being so pallid and bloody, not speak, he amused with his head tre a pencil—perhaps for writing thanks to his benefactor. Before the pencil was produced the train moved and the young Confederate leaped to the car. The prisoners proceeded toward Jacksonville, while the courier returned to his command. That afternoon the Confederate made a charge in which the courier was painfully wounded, and then, when while the Union captain was placed within the prison enclosure, the young Confederate was lying in an hospital. Possibly such gave some thought to the other, but it is not likely either anticipated ever meeting the other again.

In July, 1874, at a popular resort on a Western lakeside, mostly commanded upon the marked attention paid by Miss Emma Clancey by Henry Rose, a gentleman from Philadelphia, a man whose winning address had made him a universal favorite. The young lady was easily accorded the position of reigning belle of the resort, and, her father owning a fortune, she was enabled to hospitably receive her friends. There was a number of gentlemen whose frequent calls indicated admiration for the entertainer; but it was apparent that none were received with such favor as the courtly Henry Rose.

On the evening of the 22nd, Captain Clancey's parlors were filled with visitors, and as he was speaking all seated himself, and Mrs. Clancey were with their guests. There had been an hour of music and dancing, when some one called upon Miss Clancey the pleasantness of the occasion, Miss Clancey responded. "Yes, this is always an auspicious occasion, the 22nd of July, in our house. It celebrates the anniversary of the board on father's face, and it reminds one of one with whom I was in love, and who is to be my husband."

Mrs. Clancey, who had sat at such pleasantry so to call for observy antiantes, especially from the young gentlemen surrounding the piano.

"I cannot give the name of my lover-ideal," she said, answering an inquiry of Mr. Rose, "for I do not know it, and I have never seen him. Yet I love him, for what would I not give to meet him. I remember, though I was but three years old, my father's return home from the army, and of his telling how, on the 22nd of July, he had been wounded, and how young Confederate soldier, a mere boy, he said, had procured for him original treatment, and returned him kindness which probably saved his life. When he had so spoken, he always I provoked laughter by throwing my arms about his neck, and telling him that I loved that young Confederate, and that when grown to be a woman I intended being his wife.

Some one remarked this a romantic story, and asked that she tell more of it. "No," said she, "but father shall, for it is his pat theme each 22nd of July.

Where supplemented the daughter's request and responding to it, Capt. Clancy, in a narrative way, grown easy from frequent recitals, recounted the events already noted in the first chapter of this story, adding his wounds being dressed where the prisoners were halted, of the courier having had him placed in a ambulance, and of his reaching the Andersonville train, when Miss Clancy, who chanced to glance at Harry Rose, observed an agitation of manner quite foreign to his active composure.

"When he had assisted me into the car," Capt. Clancy continued, "he asked if Miss Rose interrupted.

"Hold a moment, please," he said, "and permit a question or two from me. Did the courier you speak of hand you his own canteen?

"Yes, he did," replied Captain Clancy, "and he gave me a drink of water from it.

"He did," was answered.

"And did you, being much unable to speak, make signs for a pencil, and did the train move just as he was handing the pencil to you meaning him to jump the car?

Captain Clancy was on his feet.

"Yes! yes!" he exclaimed, "but how came you to know of all this?

"How came I to know! Why, sir, I was that boy!"

For a moment a brief moment—there was bitter stillness in the parlors. But when, stepping quickly forward, Captain Clancy grasped Henry Rose by the hand, he has indicating uncertainty whether to break into a laugh, a cry, or a scream, he was an outburst of hand clappings and cheering mown laughter and tears that became a drawing-room. Mrs. Clancey advanced, and without a word of apology, threw her arms about Henry's neck and kissed him, while Emma, who had taken his other hand in both her own, appeared to be in the state of uncertainty her father's face had indicated.

For several minutes there was a hour of congratulations, as the guests passed about the situation against and the ex-Confederate courier. But there was another scene in store for the delighted party. When Captain Clancey and Henry Rose had managed to move a little apart, the latter returned to Emma, and with a half earnest, half mirthful look into her face, said,

"Miss Clancy, I beg to recall a speech of yours made a few minutes since. You stated that when, three years old, you heard the story from your father, you then swore your arms about his neck, saying that you loved the Confederate courier, and that when you were a woman you would be his wife, and expressed a desire to meet him now. I have met him. Now, in the presence of these other auditors of your speech, I claim the fulfilment of your proposition. Will you be the wife of the ex-Confederate courier?

Those who were present tell of another spell of silence falling upon the parlors, of a blushing face and downcast eyes, and a response, in a voice soft and tremulous, however, as to be audible to any other than the one nearest her. But it must have been consenting, for the newspaper report of arrivals at the same resort of July, 1875, included the name of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rose, on a visit to the latter's father, Captain Clancy.

The Ceylon Observer gives the following narrative of the only survivor of the steamer Spaca Hall, which recently foundered:

When I came to the surface after being sucked in by the bridge, I and Quartermaster Usher were clinging to the same life-buoy, and I saw the foremast of the Spaca Hall just above the water, and I thought of my wife and had been smashed to pieces and washed away from me, and, indeed, if the boat had been available, they could not have lived in such water. Getting a spar, I abandoned the life-buoy and swam to Usher. It was dark at the time, and I could not see him, and I saw nothing more of him or any one else. All daylight I managed to secure another spar. I hailed the two spars together with my belt, overwise, so that I was able to sit on the center. I need not have had an anxious thought the single spar, because every now and then the spars would roll above me, so that I had would go under water. When daylight set in I could see land and the wind had gone down it came on to rain. I had a severe cough, luckily, and I held it up till I caught about a quart of water. I believe that saved my life; for I had swallowed a good deal of salt water, and my mouth was parched.

I saw nothing that day except pieces of wreck floating by. In the morning of the second day I saw the smoke of a steamer a long distance off. She passed on without seeing me. I saw one or two others during the day, but they were still too far off. About the middle of the second day I chart came rushing along at a great speed. It was on a very large one—about 1,000 feet long. I was sitting on the cross piece with my legs underneath. I had my head and over one pieces of wood, and I fancy I got the other side of the raft in his track, because he stopped suddenly. I had a piece of iron about three feet long, which I picked up, thinking it might be useful for to his command. That afternoon I was taken aboard the Oceanic steamer, and I was saw anything more of Usher. The night after I was picked up I was alone to me. I could see all her lights, but she kept on her course. I hailed her, but no one in her heard me. I fired off one or three, but whenever I fired I fancied I fell into the water, I didn't feel much inconvenience from the cold by hot air at sea. On the morning of the third day I saw a steamer and a sail. I took my coat off and hoisted it on the stick, and tried to attract her attention. She altered her course, and came straight toward me, and I fancied I felt so sure that her presently she alleviated her course, and steered away from me. I had almost given up hope then.

Later in the same day another and much larger ship visited me, but did not come within the circle of the raft. He was a two mendous fellow, twenty feet long at least. I gave myself up for lost when I saw him. Nothing more concerned until the evening. The sun began to get low, and I could see anything all around me. I fancied, to me, and I made up my mind for another night. I must have gone off into a fancy dose than usual, for I fell off the raft on my face, and when I came to myself I found the steamer Pelin seemed alone on me, as if it had sprung out of the water. I had strength to signal with but my hat. I had to go as high as I could, and one of the soldiers on board saw me. A boat was lowered and an officer and four men came over to me. I took no spirits on board, where they treated me very kindly.

Mrs. Charlotte Ellis, of Chicago, will leave to the Western press, another the rest of a deceased gentleman, accompanied by bleeding at the temple, to Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar. "My friend, she says, "thousands of testimonials" * * * but this remedy has removed it."

Mr. Hackstaff, of Ohio, writes: "Hundreds of my friends have used Hop Bitters, and they all say they are the best medicine they ever used. I shall use them in my family, and recommend them to all who need a tonic medicine

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1886.

A Caution to Catholics Against Frauds.

It is unfortunately the case that in this country both men and women often assume a religious garb and affect the modest demeanor of genuine Religious, in order the better to deceive charitable Catholics whose charity is open-handed and who are unsuspecting in regard to such vagabonds. The MONITOR has often cautioned its readers not to patronize itinerant peddlers of prayers, indulgenced Rosaries, or other religious articles, merely because the peddler thereof pretends to be a Brother or Sister of this or that Religious community. In twelve cases out of every dozen such people are downright frauds and the money given to them only encourages them in perversion in the pursuit of their double damning degradation.

The Philadelphia Times of recent date has let on the lush out for a couple of blackguards whom we hope to hear have been "boxed" from every Catholic threshold where they may attempt their swindling schemes. These double-faced frauds are young men who have been plying their trade of pretended piety in the Eastern States under the plea that they were "theological students from Ireland, who have to adopt the peddling of pamphlet editions of Father Burke's lectures, beads "blessed at Knock," and scapulars "blessed wherever" and by whomever the sacrilegious scalawags can think of when they are engaging their victims.

The police of the Eastern States have arrested these impious imposters frequently, so that they have been compelled to evacuate the Eastern shore, and now they are about to inaugurate their swindle among the Catholics of this coast, hence acting upon information conveyed to his Grace Archbishop Riordan by a gentleman in Boston—the MONITOR desires to caution the Catholic clergy and laity against their new invasion of incorrigible dead-beats, and we hope they will be "helped on their way," wherever found on this side of the continent, by the vigorous use of a good leather or by hearting over the irreligious rascals to the police, under the charge of obtaining money under false pretence.

Help Needed for Ireland's Cause.

We are glad to notice that the MONITOR's suggestion concerning collections on St. Patrick's Day for the Irish Parliamentary Fund, seems to be carried out in many places on this coast. The great hope at present animating the breast of every friend of Ireland at home and abroad, is that enough will be collected to place the cause on the Land Question on a firm and lasting basis. Without this, the Home Rule Parliament would be a mockery, and would be speedily dissolved by a Tory majority. Ireland is on the eve of achieving her national independence, no Irishman or friend of Ireland should halt in his influence or refrain from giving financial help—as without means it will be impossible to achieve political success for a long-suffering people.

Five thousand dollars collected on this coast on St. Patrick's Day would fire the hearts of Irish patriots and fling despair in the faces of Ireland's enemies; and how happily such contribution would rejoice in knowing that it had helped to redeem Ireland from that thraldom which has enchained her for centuries. Let every friend of Ireland, then, go to work at once, under the holy inspiration that "Freedom comes from God's decree,

And such a godly trade,
And righteous men must make our land
A Nation once again."

—How emulated for sex any Coercion statutes in Ireland for the repression of crime, may be surmised from the fact that on a recent occasion Judge Darley told the grand jury in Wexford that it was the last of his terms he had presided in, and that in every one the number of criminal cases was the lightest he remembered during his service. Judge Waters told the grand jury that for six months there had only been seven criminal cases in the whole county of Waterford. He also administered the law in Cavan and Leitrim. In Cavan there was only one case and that not sustained, while in Leitrim there were only three cases—two of petty larceny and one of trivial assault. The population of the three counties is about half a million, or 330,000. He added, certainly with justice, that he doubted whether a showing equally favorable could be made for the same population in any other part of the globe. Yet uninformed people in every part of the world believe the well-propagated untruth that Ireland is an exceptionally criminal country, and anti-Irish bigots whose pockets are blouted with British gold, keep constantly harping upon what they falsely call "the criminal condition of Ireland."

Editorial Notes.

—It is reported by cable from London that Cardinal Manning has requested the Pope to permit him to resign his diocese on account of advancing age and increasing inability to perform the heavy duties of his office. The Pope, it is understood, will send Mgr. Stonor to London to confer with the Cardinal.

—Last week the English cablegram manipulator told us that Healy, Biggar and other members of the National Party were going to accede to Home Rule. This week we are assured by the same authority that all the members of the congregation—Biggar or Healy and the danger of a split in the Irish party may be discarded, as at once endorsed at least to the Treasurer as his personal contribution to the League funds. This was a most generous act on the part of Mr. Egan, and one that should be marked by a vote of thanks transmitted to him by each Branch of the Irish National League in America.

—One of the most important items of news concerning the Irish question recently received, comes to us this week in the shape of a cablegram from London wherein it is stated that Gladstone is said to have moved an intimation to be conveyed to Parnell and his principal colleagues to the effect that if they frame a scheme of Irish Home Rule from a Nationalist standpoint, it will be cordially examined by the Cabinet. This is a concession that England could never be brought to make towards Ireland except through the powerful influence of a united people determined to secure their political rights.

—Mr. A. M. Kelly recently delivered a lecture at Boston on the subject of Irish liberty, in the course of which he advanced this excellent argument: "This content for Irish liberty will last until victory is accomplished. It began centuries before the first book was printed, centuries before the first gun was fired, centuries before the first man drew Boom-Spain, centuries before the Moslem crossed the Dardanelles, and centuries before the empire of Austria was founded. It began before there was a dogo in Venice, and centuries before the Stuarts, and before any Plantagenet but one sat on the throne. From the expiring hands of patriots the sword has dropped generation after generation, but victory will crown the martyr's blood at last."

—The correspondence begun in July last between Pope Leo XIII. and the Emperor of China, has just resulted in an agreement to establish a Papal Legate at Pekin and a Chinese Ambassador at the Vatican. The Pope began the negotiations that have led to this very significant result, which is in fact an avowal of China's official tolerance of foreign religions. There are, according to the estimate of the Bishop of Hong Kong, 345,000 native Christians in the Chinese Empire who have been converted by Catholic missionaries. It was for the better protection of the immense interests of the Holy See in China that the Pope desired to enter into official relations with the Pekin court. His Holiness has with the Mikado of Japan, who, in October last, received the Papal Ambassador that Japanese Catholics should enjoy from him protection equal to that granted to any of his subjects.

—Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore, Md., says in regard to the proposed new Catholic university: "We cannot tell the exact amount so far collected. About $100,000 has been subscribed in Chicago. The Catholics of that city have done noble. We expect to have $500,000 in a short time. Bishop Marty of Dakota is collecting for the fund among the Germans. Bishop Keen of Richmond is taking subscriptions in the South. Families the eighth professorship to be endowed, several horses will also be founded in connection with the university. The Board in charge of the matter will have the work begun as soon as the amount of funds will warrant. It was expected at the outset that the project would not prove so entirely feasible. The most to be hoped for was that the university might be completed in five years. Now all is possible, and the work will be done before that period and the university dedicated the 15th day of August, 1890.

—The people in Ireland are in ecstacies of joy over Parnell's overthrow of the Coercion cabinet. At the various honest meetings of the National League resolutions have been passed expressing thanks to Mr. Parnell and the Irish party for the attitude they assumed towards Lord Salisbury and his Ministry, especially on the occasion of the late division. These expressions of gratitude and sympathy spring spontaneously from the hearts of the people must be to Mr. Parnell and his colleagues a source of great gratification. In the labors Mr. Parnell and the Irish party have undertaken, in the great toil which is before them, they have the hearty sympathy and good wishes of the Irish people, there can be no greater solace and no higher reward than the knowledge conveyed in these resolutions that their invaluable services are truly appreciated by the Irish people. The votes of renewed confidence are passed prove how manifest the people are of the extent and value of the services rendered in their behalf, and show that the men who represent the Irish nation shall not lack, in the struggle for independence, the support to be gained through the nation's beautiful approval.

—Archbishop Elder of Cincinnati is expected to arrive in New York by next Sunday. His arrival is anxiously looked for, as he is the bearer of the Pallium for Archbishop Corrigan of New York.

Pastoral Letter from Bishop Herz.

We thankfully acknowledge the receipt of a printed copy of the Pastoral Letter on the Jubilee issued by Rt. Rev. Francis Mora, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, but will have to hold it over until our next issue in consequence of having to go to press about immediately after its reception.

—Mother M. Bernard Hoad, superiorress of the Sisters of Mercy in the Petitcodiac Co., N.S., celebrated the third second anniversary of her profession on the 27th ult.

Joyful News from Germany.

The following intelligence would indicate that peace is about to be restored to the Church in Germany, as stated in the MONITOR last week. Prince von Bismarck and his Cabinet are now of opinion that Herr Von Schlözer, the Prussian Minister to the Holy See, has recently transmitted to the Vatican the text of the new religious law to be proposed to the German Landtag relative to the free education of the clergy and episcopal jurisdiction, in order to have the opinion of the Pope upon the measure, and to establish a modus vivendi. This fact has exceptional importance as being the first time that Prussia has thus submitted to the Holy See a projected religious law. The act is also announced in the official German journals which publish the nomination to the archiepiscopal see of Posnan, of Mgr. Dunder, parish priest of Konnigsberg, formerly Almoner of the Polish troops, one of the three candidates proposed by the Vatican and accepted by Prussia. He is a native of Ermeland, and an intimate friend of the new Archbishop of Cologne. He is greatly beloved by the Poles, with whom language is very familiar, and, according to the Moniteur de Rome, his appointment to the vacant See of Posen closes the series of personal questions, all the dioceses having now filled satisfactorily all parties. The Kolnische Zeitung states that Mgr. Krementz has selected as his Vicar General Dr. Klamborski, who was, it is said, the student the Kulturkampf, secret Administrator of the diocese of Cologne. The Emperor of Germany has conferred the Cross of the Order of Merit on the celebrated archeologist and scholar Commander John Baptist de Rossi. The Order, which is said to have been founded by the Margrave Frederic of Brandenburg, afterwards Frederic I., King of Prussia, in 1740, under the title of Order of Generosity, was reorganized in 1740 by Frederic II. as an order for military and civil merit, and again in 1842 by Frederic William IV. as an order of military merit, to which Frederic William IV., on May 31st, 1842, added a civil class for savants and artists, upon whom, however, it is sparingly bestowed. Its very rarely given to foreigners, and hence this present succession under existing circumstances assumes a significant character, the medal, they have been twice proposed for the honor by the chapter of the order. M. De Rossi had declined it because of the existing difficulties between the Holy See and Prussia. On the present occasion the decoration was transmitted to him without previous warning.

An English Bishop on the Irish National League.

It augurs well for the future freedom of Ireland to see the Catholic Bishops of England sympathizing thus with the Irish Hierarchy and priesthood on the side of the Irish people. On a recent occasion Rt. Rev. Edward Bagshawe, Bishop of Nottingham, sent a letter to a local English paper in which he thus voluntarily gives his adhesion to the Parnell party and outlines the benefits which he thinks would be paid to Home Rule and Irish prosperity:

"Nothing more conducive to the national welfare, extended and better organized, will do justice and secure to Ireland, as it has done in the past. I trust it may be so, and I sincerely hope that the League, when it has gained its immediate object of Home Rule, will continue to be, as it is, an Irish and English Catholic League," or more briefly, "The Catholic League, because a strong political union of Irish and English Catholics, and a Catholic Protestant party would afford to ignore, or at least treat with scant ceremony, the Bishops and clergy, who have a great all right-minded people. They have a leader that has not crossed the threshold of manhood. When the braggadocios who talk of assassination are trampled out of sight and small, the conflict will remain of a fight of principle, fair play, and generosity to the vanquished," to English gold.

—The Pope has tended support for Irish members of Parliament in constant attendance, and for the re-election—against all comers—of those who have left Parliament, when, as must soon happen, there will be a Home Rule Parliament, to represent Ireland at home. Here is the opportunity, not only for "Irishmen of Ireland," as they are called—but for Americans not of Irish lineage, to assist in the work of building up a nation, that at the same time will be doing a public friendship between America and Ireland.

The Catholic Hierarchy.

A work of more than usual interest to all Catholics is that (Libreria Editrice Nazionale di Roma) entitled "The Catholic Hierarchy and Clergy of the Universe," which contains half portraits of the Sacred College, the various Prelates, Bishops, and Monsignori, laymen who either dwell in Rome or visit Rome, and biographical sketches of prominent personages accompany the portraits, and a biography of the Pontiff, and a biography of the Sacred College, Italian, French, German, Spanish and English. It is unpretentious as to its finish or library of the Vatican is issued which presents to the world a collection of facts concerning the Pope, as a diligent master of truth; the Pope as master of events, and the Pope as master of men. Sovereign and Father of the Catholic people. The work is recommended to all the Bishops of the Catholic world by an autograph letter of the Holy Father and to all lovers of the fine arts and is directed by a committee of eleven Cardinals.

Affairs in Belgium.

Since the present Conservative Government came into office in Belgium, in June, 1884, the prosperity of the country has been steadily improved in every way. The public schools have at present 208,000 children more than they had in 1883; yet far from being overcrowded, the Government has reduced the taxes, paid off the deficit, improved extraordinary, and restored to the communes their liberty. Unless official figures are false, there is now in the nation of 44,000 pupils, and in the place the schools have been "adopted" with 152,000 pupils, yet nothing three times less in spite of the assertions of the Liberal press, of all the adopted schools only twenty-six are taught by religious, by far the majority being therefore under lay masters and mistresses.

—Rev. Father Thomas H. Bailey, pastor of St. Mary and Joseph's Catholic Church, in St. Louis, died, on February 5th, of consumption, at the age of about 50 years. He was a native of the church seven years, and was greatly beloved by his congregation.

A Protestant Minister's View of the Chinese Question.

Under the title "The Expulsion of the Chinese. What is a Reasonable Policy for the Times." Rev. Charles H. Harvey, of the Congregational Church in this city, preached a sermon recently which has been published in Samuel Watson's Co., and which can be had of all newsdealers for 25 cents.

This sermon is a full, fair and truthful exposure of the Chinese evil, and clearly sets forth the means whereby the evil may be ameliorated or a Christian, law-abiding manner, and in a spirit of the virtues of argument used by the Rev. Gentleman quite the following.

And in this picture a moment Alabaster Hills where lodging and food are a nightly nomad place. He cites instances with a sense others, and itself to allow those that Christian, while the instance of this, he says family, so children to support. He has no sympathy for, and, Americans, Jesuit institutions or American policy. He has no sympathy with the Chinese, and he says many ways by him made the problem of American law is not used for the furtherance of American interests. He plays a Chinese and slavery in our borders. He thinks his Jesus Christ, and Christ's Gospel, and Christ's Church, and Christian civilization. How any other immigrant coming to our shores boldly every thing a temple of his native, social and religious institutions, and yet the Chinese, who are so unlike us in all, Mr. Harvey says, "Christ's Gospel, and Christ's Church, and Christian civilization." Here is a sample of his strong, and yet, we think, fair and truthful argument for the cigar business, the slave business, and the Chinese question, which we commend to him as a sermon, in stakes a blow at American interests, and yet, we think, the Chinese question represented accompany the portraits, and a biography of the Sacred College, Italian, French, German, Spanish and English. It is unpretentious as this a finish or library of the Vatican is issued which presents to the world a collection of facts concerning the Pope, as a diligent master of truth; the Pope as master of events, and the Pope as master of men. Sovereign and Father of the Catholic people. The work is recommended to all the Bishops of the Catholic world by an autograph letter of the Holy Father and to all lovers of the fine arts and is directed by a committee of eleven Cardinals.

"Pay the Debt that is Due to Ireland."

Mr McMaster, the able and independent editor of the N. Y. Freeman's Journal, says:

There ought to be such a thing as national honor, and there is, we believe, in most men. He has heard talk those who have said the man who, Irish property, and Ireland's land, seems to be a loyal Englishman, and a good citizen, and a good Christian, and a good Catholic. Church, in the church seven years, and was greatly beloved by his congregation.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL.

Completion of the Plans. Design at the Building. Peculiarities at Consecration. Style at the Exterior. Decorations of the Interior, Etc. Etc.

Archbishop Riordan having received the plans for the new Cathedral a few days ago, was before him on orders a synopsis of the style of the building and such other particulars as pertain to its construction as can be gathered from the architect's details.

The style of architecture adopted by the time for the proposed Cathedral is what is technically known as the Romanesque, so called because it partakes of some of the peculiarities of the Roman style of architecture, only less decorative in its character.

THE GROUND PLAN.

The outline of the building plan present the shape of a Latin Cross, the principal nave portion of which will be used for the main altar and the transepts, which, in the plan of the building, will be length 200 feet, with at base of the cross an extra transept or Nave 50 feet in length, with of the building at the arms of the cross 150 feet. The height of the building from floor to ridge roof will be 100 feet. The front of the building will be faced with two towers of the usual kind, that on the Nave being 200 feet, and the composite tower on Mission Avenue being 250 feet. Each will be 50 feet square, and present similar features of design, and, on the plans, they present a very handsome feature.

THE INTERIOR OF THE BUILDING

As already noted, the interior will be 200 feet long, from the main entrance to the end of the transept, the transept being 150 feet long, these will add to the entrance on the side, and two more over the main altar making six in all, and in addition to these a congregation may be gathered within the walls, the aisles are 15 feet in width, and the ceiling of the nave will be 60 feet in height. It has been calculated that the seating capacity of the Cathedral will accommodate about 2,000 persons, and the galleries and transepts, which are so arranged as to be accommodated in the pews, and in the galleries and transepts, there is the purpose of impressing the monumental portion of the building as well as the main portion of the building, and which will be present on the Cathedral on Sundays, and on other occasions, will be placed at the head of the nave, there will be two side altars dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph. These altars will be composed of white and variegated marbles. Stained glass windows will light the building, and tubes, and over the main altar will be a gallery, from which the organ will be placed, and, in some typical of the sacred character of the House of God. The organ loft has been placed between the two side altars, and, in addition to the main altar, there will be a second magnificent organ of sufficient, we, to fill the edifice with its music. The organ will be supplied with elaborate ornamentation suitable for its solemn purposes. The floor will be composed of marble and tiles, and, in the main aisle, there will be a marble floor, and, in the aisles, tiles of the same material, and, in the right path of piety and personal duty makes the man. Mr. Harvey's sermon is a masterpiece of conscientiousness.

WARMING AND VENTILATION.

The system adopted in the erection of the Cathedral will be found to be one of the best, and, in the matter of ventilation, it will be found to be a perfect system, and, in the matter of warming, it will be found to be a perfect system, and, in the matter of personal health, with reference to the entrance, windows, aisles and other places, it will be found to be perfect. The large outside aisles will be used for a purpose of ventilation, and, in the matter of ventilation, it will be found to be a perfect system, with modern ideas of architectural beauty. All the windows will be so constructed as to admit of the ventilation, and, in the construction of the Cathedral now but the best and most durable material has been used.

As already announced, the cost of the building will cost, from the plans and specifications, and the work of erecting the last is now pretty well advanced it is possible that the consecration of the Cathedral will be performed in a shorter time. Mr. T. J. Welsh, the architect, is a gentleman who has given much study to the subject, and, as soon as they have been completed, we will present our readers with an illustration of the Cathedral as it will appear when finished.

FOREIGN CATHOLIC NEWS.

—All the dioceses of Germany are now provided with Bishops.

—Abbe Michelle, director of the college at Pontlevoy, has been made a Knight of the Legion of Honor, by the French Government.

—A silver medal of the Order of German and Austrian Catholics, will leave Munich for Jerusalem, on the 15th of March.

—Mgr. Dunder, Chancellor, second director of the Ermeland Seminary, has been appointed Canon of the Bishop of St. Vincent de Paul.

—The Pope has sent a special medal of the Jubilee to the Bishop of Tournai.

—Twenty-two Bishops have been appointed in Germany, and, in Prussia, the Government has given its consent to the Bishops of Ermeland, Paderborn, Munster, Posen, Breslau, Cologne, Treves, and Ermeland

Farm and Home.

Hints for the Household.

Lard may be sweetened by boiling slices of potato in it.

To prevent mustard-plaster from blistering, mix it with the white of an egg.

If the oven is too hot when baking, place a small dish of cold water in it.

The wings of turkeys, geese and chickens are good to wash and clean windows, as they leave no dust nor lint as cloth does.

To brighten the inside of a coffee or tea pot, fill with water, add a small piece of soap, and let it boil about forty-five minutes.

To exterminate bedbugs, dissolve alum in water and apply to the bedstead with a feather. Its odorless and will not injure paint or varnish.

To remove grease from wall paper, lay several folds of blotting-paper on the spot, and hold a hot iron near it until the grease is absorbed.

A liquid black lead polish for polishing stoves is made by adding to one pound of black lead one gill of turpentine, one gill of water, and one ounce of sugar.

To keep insects out of bird cages, tie up a little sulphur in a bag and suspend it in the cage. Red ants will never be found in a closet or drawer if a small bag of sulphur be kept constantly in these places.

A few drops of ammonia will be effectual in removing grease from a dish pan, and it is a little cost to add a

To clean decanters: Cut strips of coarse brown paper and put a good many of them into the decanter to be stained with clear cold water. Tea leaves can be used in the same way.

No room is complete without a "dangle board"—that is a small, plush-covered panel from which project two or three brass hooks, one of which is sacred to the hatter-hook, which is seldom in its place unless it has a regular pass assigned to it.

None but the best size should be used for stenciling paper to stencil. Many a fevered hour been caused by the horrible nuisance of correct size said to paper tangling in the bedrooms. The nuisance which a sleeper, in such a case is aware of, on waking in the morning, should be a warning needing no repetition; down should come the paper at any cost or inconvenience.

Plates should always be sent to the table warm for dinner. If placed in the oven they are apt to crack or become discoloured. The best method is to dip them in boiling hot water, and let them remain for a few moments. Dry quickly, pile and set on the table.

Tea cups should always be dipped in hot water before pouring in the tea.

Never go to bed in any danger of being hungry. People are kept awake by hunger quite as much as by a bad conscience. Remembering that sleep is the essential force which the whole scheme starts, declaim tea or coffee within the last six hour before going to bed. If the wonderkind insist, you may have your milk and wheaten at the table coloured with tea; but the less the better. A bowl of mathematics or intricate study of any sort in the last six hours. This is the stuff dreams are made of, and hot beds, and of the nuisance of waking hours.

Keep your conscience clear. Remember that because the work of life is infinite, you cannot do the whole of it in any limited period of time, and that, therefore, you may just as well leave it off in one place as another.

"Farming Don't Pay."

"Farming don't pay," says the old fogy, as he looks through the cracks of his crumbling house, and counts the snowflakes as they dance before the wind and crowd into the crevices which were left open because he was too thrifty to endeavor to

"Farming don't pay," says farmer who depends on the sunny side of a straw-stack for warmth to his stock, and the corners of a rail fence to break the force of the winds.

"Farming don't pay," says the farmer who breeds a hog with bristled back and long snake to eat his corn at a loss, and retires to his home to groan. It does not pay him to attempt to pasture a few miserable, scraggy sheep on pennyroyal and sorrel, and to graze his pigsty over on brown sugar and dry crab grass, and yet expect them to yield milk and butter. It does not pay to raise corn by wasting at birth in order to work the dame during the day, and feeding them at insufficient food.

"Farming don't pay" when the rich black loside few off from the barn-yard and the plow and the harrow are rusting in the fields, while the fences are rotting and the barns tumbling to pieces.

"Farming don't pay" unless rightly conducted, nor will manufacturing, any one kind of business pay, under similar unfavorable conditions. The farmer must be on the alert. He must keep his farm in order, grade up his stock, feed for the best results, and endeavor to annually increase his products. Nothing must be neglected and everything must be judiciously adapted to special purposes.

"Farming does pay" but it depends on the farmer. The individual is equal to the farm in value according to the manner in which he conducts it.

A Prudic State.

The following brief statement will give the MONITOR's distant readers some sight idea of the prolific qualities of California soil even in a single county:

The remarkable resurrection of the ripening of fruits in Los Angeles county is a marvel to those unacquainted with the peculiar character of the climate and soil. In this favored spot fruits and vegetables are maturing in every month of the year. Ripe oranges, lemons and limes are in market for twelve months; figs from July to December; tomatoes from January to the middle following; apples from July to February; grapes from July to January; cherries ripen from June to August; plums and prunes from June to November; Japanese persimmons, November, quarter, twelve months; loquats, April to July; quinces, August to December; nectarines, July to September; strawberries, all the year; blackberries, June to September; currants, May 15th to July 15th; raspberries, June to January; apricots, June to September; pomegranates, August to December; peaches, June to January.

A Sense of Sight.

A sense of so delicate a nature as stricture of the urethra should only be entrusted to those of large experience and skill. By our improved methods we have been enabled to speedily and permanently cure hundreds of the worst cases. Pamphlet, references and terms, 10 cents in stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dandy of a Stomach.—Nature is home that at the Pulvermacher Galvanic Institution, in 1866 it is intended to have genuine belts to the exhibition, provide showing the Great, Rotterdam, and illustrating the most complete collection of medical and surgical skill in America, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, and providing medical or surgical means for their cure. Pulvermacher's Galvanic Belts are the cure, all acute, chronic and long-standing Nervous Diseases, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney diseases, diseases of the digestive organs, bladder diseases, diseases peculiar to women, blood taints and skin diseases, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous debility, paralysis, epilepsy (fits), spermatorrhea, impotency and blighted affections. Thousands are cured at their homes through correspondence. The cure of the worst rupture, piles tumors, varicocele, hydrocele and strictures is guaranteed, with only a short residence on the Institution. Send 10 cents in stamps for the Invalid's Guide Book (free), which gives all particulars. Address, Pulvermacher Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Hill" will cure Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

Family Fun.

A Frenchman's Perplexity.

Frenchman—"Hi, my good friend, I have now with a difficulty—one very strange word. How do you call hiccough?"

Tutor—"Hiccough?"

Frenchman—"Yes, hiccough, hiccough, hiccough, hiccough—hiccough."

Tutor—"Oh, no, such a sound double f. Words ending in cough are a little irregular."

Frenchman—"Ah! very good. It is a beautiful language. Hiccough is huff, I remember, so cough is cuff. Hey?"

Tutor—"No, that is wrong. Hey say hard, not cuff."

Frenchman—"Hard, oh hiss, huff and puff, and now you call cough—cough—cough."

Tutor—"No, not cuff, cough spells doo."

Frenchman—"Doo, wonderful language; very fine. It is doo, and cough is too. My brothink was very too."

Tutor—"Oh, no; you should say tuff."

Frenchman—"Tuff! And the Hay language—how do you call phough? Fuff! Fie, you smile. I see wrong, it is phuff! Now it is plain, I do phuff. Phuff."

Tutor—"You are still wrong, my friend. It is ger."

Frenchman—"Ger?" Wonderful language—but I shall vary soon understand it. Let me see—huff, scuff, hard, doo, slow, ger—hiccough—hiccough—hiccough

Correspondence.

We especially solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertaining to the progress of the Church in their respective localities.

All communications should reach this office by Tuesday noon, so as to insure insertion.

SISTER MARY FRANCIS CLARE.

An Appeal on Behalf of the Blind.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

Dear Sir—I have read with no ordinary interest the account given in the Monitor of the Profession of the Nuns for the Blind in France. For many years I have had my household circuit cleaned some practical knowledge of work of this kind.

Shortly after we had opened our convent in Jersey City, a lady came to us, who was then about about a blind child whom she had sent to Sisters in Montreal, but the expense and the great difficulty of the transportation of this, being exclusively French, was a source of great trouble to her. She spoke to me strongly on the subject of opening an institution for training the blind in this country and she brought the subject before our esteemed Bishop with all a mother's affection and enthusiasm. With the permission of the Right Rev. W. H. Wigger, I am making preparations for opening such an institution. I have two Sisters at home in training for the work, and I feel that I can count on having a young and very strong girl trained as a teacher for I have always found that the blind, when thoroughly instructed, are always the best teachers of the blind.

I think I need say nothing to plead the cause of the children, and having the formal approbation of our Bishop, I am sure that I shall have the interest of the clergy of the United States.

The Institution will mail be made also at our suggestion, and all that will be needed is to secure the pupils. Any three or more Catholic gentlemen who will give a purchaser, a house or a little land for the purpose, will be doing a great work for Christ, and for our Mary, the Mother of the blind. Ever true to these blind in calm prose and possessed of no ordinary talent. She had been contented to a public alms house for the place where her life was a martyrdom until we took her.

I shall be happy to hear from the parents or guardians of blind Catholic children in any part of the United States, and I hope soon to be able to announce the formal opening of our House. May our Dear Lord who gave sight to so many blind and who gave Mary power to have a special care for the blind before the Blessed Eucharist Sanctuary, bless our work and bless many generous souls.

SISTER M. FRANCIS CLARE,
St. Joseph's Convent of Peace, Jersey City, N. J.

A MODEL CATHOLIC GOOD TO HIS REWARD.

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 18, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

Dear Sir—On Monday, the 15th inst., the Angel of Death passed the door of a much esteemed family in our city, and called to his eternal reward John Doyle, who had been for over twenty years a respected citizen of Sacramento. On We Sunday morning, at 10 o'clock, St. Rose's Church was filled with overwhelming pathos as we together to assist at the Requiem Mass celebrated for the repose of the soul and to pray the last and solemn of respect to his remains. After the conclusion of the service long after the dead, Father Grace gave utterance to a fitting tribute to the virtues of our departed friend. Death was especially unwelcome when, as now, the good departed was in the prime of life, and had attained a position of leading place in society. Such was with John Doyle of who well. "He that shunned the world thus lived, thus died lamented." As a practical Catholic, reading and hearing daily in the morning of God's word, he was the fulfillment of his duties in life, the deceased had endeared lovely ones and relatives. Never dead to the call of the different or needy. God has been good to him, with the means of his giving of those whom he had conventionally called, and the members of his family are well early into an order worthy for the administration of the sacraments of the Church, the interment of the rite of his adoption, a public community now mourn the death of a Christian gentleman who has lived in the obedient worldly ends and expectations. Never let be in the sanctuary for the Church, and had been pleased with the music of the thanksgiving hymns which the deceased had selected, and the members of St. Rose's parish will really miss the sweet voice of the departed in the choir loft. Ever true to the Church, he died fortified by the sacraments, and with the consolations of the Church, he died in the Lord. Ever true to the Church, he died in the Lord. Ever true to the Church, he died in the Lord. Ever true to

Poetry.

A BIRD'S SONG.

The sinking sun had shouted the West
With flecks of gold and crimson bars;
The wandering wind had sighed to rest
And in the cool dusk of the stars,
The evening chimes, like gladness gushing,
Pealed joyful from out the old church tower;
And over the valley fell the shade
While hoods upon the twilight bower.

Loud through the eve-wrapt, listening vale
From the humble bower of aglantine,
A blithe bird trilled his song to tell
As if he sang through lonelier when,
By college and cloister and hall secured,
Enraptured listeners fingered long;
All hand the self same thought, the song would,
While each interpreted the song.

A little child, scarce three years old,
In wonder woke to vision dim
Of oceans and distances of gold
And surging oceans of hoary hair,
That every land that's bright or far
Then shining shone in emerald sea.
When gave the fairies freedom cheer
Above the fair Hesperides.

A maiden of the morn linged wall
Beside her pitcher listened long,
Her soul unfolding with the strange spell
Contained within that mystic song.
For oh! to her it was glad
Of love which all her being fills,
Of of the bid that twilight brings
From over the dividing hills.

To child, and youth, and maiden felt
That bird made glad the world for her;
But time and age with all could feel
Dew sorrow from its roundelay.
Of blessed memories it sang
On their hearts fall the mellow strain,
Making the songs of time, age,
And made them sigh for youth again!

JOHN'S WIFE.

A young a-tile stood with her hand on her brooch,
Her head turned and she little frown,
Nothing but toil forever," she said,
From early morn till the light has fled.
If you were only a merchant now,
We need not have to be poor and low.
Pugsley sweep, quick shoemaker John,
Why are we not what we've wished to be?

A lady stood by her husband's chair,
And leaning passed back his silver hair,
"You never have time for me now," she said,
And a tone sighs fell on the low bed,
"If we were only rich, they say,
With women have to do from morn to day,
But to sense to each other—ah, dear me!
What a happy year I should be.
Looking up from his ledger, spoke merchant John
"We are one well which we're standing on."

A stately form in velvet dressed—
A diamond glittering on her breast,
"Nothing but toil for fashion," she said,
"Till I sometimes wished I were dead.
If I might cast this wealth aside,
And be once more the poor maid's bride!
From his may chariots, spoke gentleman John,
"We're one well which we're standing on."

Literary Miscellany.

Edith's Sacrifice.

A Beautiful Catholic Story of Real Life

CHAPTER I.

Doctor Ross sits in his study as he usually does of an evening, for he is a lover of home. Years ago when Mrs. Ross died, people said that Edith's world would have been a second mother. Time has made "little Edith" to mean little; it is the name long her father's dark hair gray, but how left the prophecy satisfied.

Though this room is generally closed to all visitors, except his daughter, Dr. Ross is not alone. A while ago he ushered in a handsome man younger than himself by at least twenty years; a man who has travelled much, learned much, read much and written much; a man for whom he has a sincere admiration not unmixed with pity, for his possessor is a man who has his friend's interest at heart, and he is the man who knows Edith's mother's secret.

Few people would think of pitying Austin Fabiola. We generally feel compassion for someone dependent upon us, weaker than ourselves.

Certainly there is no sign of weakness in the man standing by Dr. Ross to-night; his tall muscular form bespeaks physical strength nervily, while the mouth and strength of intellect and will written on every feature of his face. The lips that fine, firm, the darker locks rich compassion, the eyes, for a moment longer, are shaded the trout. The younger man is evidently deep in thought; presently he speaks as if in answer to his companion.

"True doctor, I have written and may still write; out of the little knowledge I have been and been spared from so benefit others; from the thoughts to which it has given birth, I may speak to my fellow man, my counsel have been and there a spark from the fire within me which is unquenchable, what has I am young yet, my life is before me, life and work. Life for what end? For what end work? The question is a sacred problem. Whatever comes and is—I by heart is at peace. The other is cast on many the curse of monotony that makes life a burden. Better I never spoken than open my lips to blight the poor souls that other hearts. What if life be long or short? It must end in death and afterwards—what then?

"Rest."

"Ay, if not be rest; if oblivion, if mere cut brain and nerve, past thought and feel. Life is not a gaming table. Good night Miss Edith. Good night doctor; and to lower tone "Thank you," then he is gone.

CHAPTER II.

This house is more than usually lit up to-night; every lamp keep stopping at the door, and after discharging their brilliant atoms move on and give place to others. This year will end in a fair house, and Dr. Ross has made up his mind to invite some young people at least shall meet his younger girl. His mother with her son and daughter arrived a few days ago and first put the fine of gives a ball into his head; under her management nothing can be wanting to go of well.

Mrs. Faith and her niece are together receiving their guests; the elder lady tall and dark with a certain air of maternal dignity which being natural, is not unbecoming, and with which her dress of black velvet is adapted. Edith's slight form seems lost in her mother's mantle, but her face is illuminated entirely in white, for this is her first ball; almost unnerving in her purity she looks standing there, the expression of her face, hardly in keeping with her surroundings; she speaks to each guest in turn her lips smiling but her eyes grave.

"Edith, has Mr. Faldon arrived yet? I saw some Kate shortly afterwards

"No."

"And if you think his arrival will make any difference, I may as well tell you a mistaken Katarina," her brother pics in banteringly. "I imagine that dancing is necessary in Mr. Faldon's line, but speaking of programmes, your side is, Edith, that I must see yours while there is yet time."

"Suppose you only let George put his name down her one dance, and then if you be tired, I will be a good sister and let you off the rest of the dance." Kate with mischievous smile, "Edith, I think I have a partner for you."

"Suppose you only let George put his name down for one dance, and then if you be tired, I will be a good sister and let you off the rest of the dance." Kate with mischievous smile, "Edith, I think I have a partner for you." "Suppose you only let George put his name down for one dance, and then if you be tired, I will be a good sister and let you off the rest of the dance." Kate with mischievous smile, "Edith, I think I have a partner for you." "Suppose you only let George put his name down for one dance, and then if you be tired, I will be a good sister and let you off the rest of the dance." Kate with mischievous smile, "Edith, I think I have a partner for you."

"

Poetry.

A BIRD'S SONG.

The sinking sun had stroked the Wave
With flecks of gold and crimson hues;
The wanderlog wind had sunk to rest,
Not a breath was felt from east to west.
The evening chimes, like gladsome psalm,
Pealed forth from out the old church tower;
And o'er the valley fell the calm
Which bends upon the twilight hour.

Loud through the pre-ward, listening rale,
From the church-yard, hard by, of yore,
A blackbird trilled his mellow tale,
Like some sweet dreaming lancinar sphe,
By cottage, grange, and half ground,
Enraptured listeners lingered long;
All heard the old same falling sound,
While each interpreted the song.

A wonder-work to vision dim
Of a young Shakespeare's gifted pen,
And every sylvan, half hoty trees,
In that sweet music, found a voice for
Then shining shone in measured flow
Where glows the London evening star
Above the fair Hampstead.

A maiden at the moon fringed wall
Beside her pitcher listened long,
Her soul entranced with the silence spell
Contained within that mystic song.
Pray! to her it was sigh
Of love which all her being filla,
And she had dreamed of a lighter lover
From over the dividing hills.

To child, and youth, and maiden fair
That bird made glad the closing day;
Each one, in his own peculiar way,
Drew secret from its roundelay.
All dissent through the years of woe
On their hearts felt the mellow strain,
Waking the young, the old, age,
And made them sigh for youth again!

JOHN'S WIFE.

A young wife stood with her hand on her bosom,
And looked around the little room
"Nothing but toil forever," she said,
"From early morn to the dark night's end.
If you were only a merchant now,
We need not live by the sweat of our brow."
Pouting away, spoke shoemaker John,
"We are as well as the rich, if we're standing on.

A lady stood by her husband's chair,
And tenderly passed her hand over his hair;
"You never have time for me now," she said,
And a tear stole down her cheek for the last head.
"If we were only rich, my dear,
With nothing to do from year to year,
But to come to each other—ah, dear me!
What a happy woman I should be!"
Looking up from his lasting, spoke merchant John
"We are one well while we're standing on.

A stately form in velvet dressed
A diamond glittered on her breast,
"Nothing but toil for fashion," she said,
"I'm sometimes wish that I were dead.
If I might cast this wealth aside,
And be once more the poor man's bride."
From his easy chairman, spoke gentleman John,
"We are one well what we're standing on."

Literary Miscellany.

Edith's Sacrifice.

A Beautiful Christmas Story of Real Life

CHAPTER I.

Doctor Ross sits in his study as he usually does of an evening, for he is a lover of books. Much ends up of activities Mrs. Ross died, people said that little Edith would soon have a second mother. Time has made "little Edith" no more little; it has turned her father's dark hair gray, but has left the prophecy unfulfilled.

Though this room is generally closed to all visitors, except his daughter, Dr. Ross is not alone. A while ago he admitted to his friendship a tall, gaunt stranger than himself by at least twenty years; a man who has travelled much, learned much, read much and written much; a man for whom he has a sincere admiration not unmixed with pity, for his premature old age. Dr. Ross has friends enough, but none of them have the lofty mind has been purified by pathetic mortality, but I am of Charlotte Brontë's opinion, that "the Author of all good has bestowed the 'Joy of life' on some, and the 'Sorrow of life' on others." This little poem 'Mathetoup' has some sorrow stamped it; but remembrance of sometimes Miss Ross," and he commences to read, his voice giving to the poem a vague feeling than Edith had found in them before.

"Maiden with the meek brown eyes,
In whose orbs a deeper lies,
Like the dark lake in evening skies!

"Those whose looks outshine the sun,
Golden tresses scattered o'er one,
As the braided streamlets run!

"Smiling with innocent feet,
Where the brook and river meet,
Womanhood and childhood fleet.

Sweet their shadows calling by,
As the dove with startled eye,
Who flies from shadow fly!

"O, thou child of many prayers!
Life and death are in the hair I share,
Class and age come on wares!"

He says not on her face a moment, then he continues

"Thy strength sorrow, wrong and rath,
Is thy mother the day of wrath,
Is thy age the smile of truth.

"O, maiden! if thy lot shall steal
Into wounds, that cannot heal,
Be thou as your gentle sad.

And that smile, like sunshine, dart
Into many a sunless heart,
For a smile of God thou art."

He looks up from the book, and rises. "It is getting late. Good-night Edith." "Good-night father," and in a
lower tone "Thank you," then he is gone.

CHAPTER II.

The home is more than usually lit up tonight; carriages keep stopping at the door, and after disclosing their brilliant immates move on and give place to others. The year will end in a few hours, and Dr. Ross has made up his mind that some young people at least shall meet its successor gaily. His sister with her son and daughter arrived a few days ago and first put the time of gaiety half into his hand; under her management things promise to go off well.

Mrs. Forbes and her niece are is gather to entering their guests; the elder lady tall and dark with a certain air of serenely dignity which being natural, is not unbecoming, and with much her drum of black velvet is in keeping. Edith's slight form seems slighter still when near her aunt; she is robed entirely in white, for this is her first ball; almost unearthly in her pretty simplicity standing there, the expression of her face hardly in keeping with her personal image; she speaks to each guest in turn her eyes smiling but her eyes grave.

"Edith, has Mr. Falden arrived yet?" asks her cousin Kate shortly afterwards.

"No."

"And if you think his arrival will make any difference in your prospects, I tell you at once Kate," her brother puts in teasingly. "I imagine that develop in secrecy in Mr. Falden's line, but speaking of programmes, reminds me, Edith, that I must see yours while there is yet time."

"Suppose you only let Gregory put his name down for one dance, and then I give you permission to do what you please with them to him," proposes Kate with sisterly flattery before she is cleared by her partner; but the delicate blint is disregarded as Miss Ross sees when he returns the card.

"Four, Gregory?"

"Yes, do you object?"

"*Not if—I mean—*and said this morning that it is unusual to dance more than twice in a night with the same gentleman falling to decay." To what then was it given?

"Unless I" he says inquiringly and with a look of amusement.

"Unless you are bantoffled to him; but, with an air of relief, "that is out of the question with us; being cousins we must not stand on ceremony."

Austin Feldon turns to his friend; but something in the old man's face checks the words he was about to utter. "Thank you," he says at last very quietly; "Dr. Ross, you are a good man, you good for pride of intellect is tied astray. Love has had no place in my life so far, perhaps it only can save me from indolently. Glancing up he sees someone standing in the doorway, someone with a fair earnest face, and eyes that meet his own coldly; she comes to him and laps her hand in his for a moment, still with that wistful look in her dark eyes.

"Come, Edith, we need you to cheer us tonight, her father smiles. Jim has so ceasely brightened since he saw her—"we can man alone here so long get rather gloomy; let us have some music, child." He leads the way out of the room; she is following, but turns suddenly. "Mr. Falden."

"Yes."

"Neither my father nor you seemed to notice when I came; you were in deep conversation, and I want to tell you I heard part of it."

"I am sorry."

"It was confidential; I ought not to have listened, but I thought you heard me open the door." She continues, "I am sorry to hear it." She goes, and the man stands still where she has left him.

"Good God! If words of mine should stay the power of that child's pure heart. Is it not enough that I am wretched? Must I bring misery to others—to her above all the rest! Bitt, no!" she seemed to feel more sorrow than fear.

Sounds sweet and solemn reach him. Edith is playing something of Beethoven's, something so sad that mingled with the harmony there might be the yearning, despairing cry of a broken heart. Why does she not choose music more suited to her age? he wonders, as he quietly enters the room, and looks at her as she plays. A light is pleasing on her bright hair making a glory round her; he is reminded vaguely of St. Cecilia, Agnes, or Magdalen, he can scarcely tell which of the three, for the little head bears some resemblance to the old master's ideals of all three fair saints. After all, he concludes, Beethoven may be more suited to her than he thought at first, and his reverie comes to an end as she turns from the piano.

"Do you know Edith, that Mr. Feldon has been reading instead of listening! What do you say to that," the dinner and glance at his friend who has absently opened a book.

"Nothing," she replies with a faint, slow smile. "I hardly do this tonight."

"Which means I presume, that my taste is not sufficiently refined to appreciate the king of musicians.

"Perhaps not since you say so," she returns unsolicitously. "I think that books are more to your liking; then all the music stand were put together, though, with an aerial phase at the volume in his hand, "I merely intended Longfellow amongst your favorites."

"He stands high in my favor, Miss Edith, so far once you were wrong. Longfellow is a true poet, his verses are not books, words only of artificial beauty, but finally strung together; his own grand heart beats glows in all he has written."

"Except Hiawatha," puts in Edith.

"Certainly that is a serious thing," her father admits, laughing; "but who was it that I used to find dreaming over the Golden Legend, when I would come home to look for her. And who prefers the old American bard to our poetaster than himself by at least twenty years; a man who has travelled much, learned much, read much and written much; a man for whom he has a sincere admiration not unmixed with pity, for his premature old age. Dr. Ross has friends enough, but none of them have the lofty mind has been purified by pathetic mortality, but I am of Charlotte Brontë's opinion, that "the Author of all good has bestowed the 'Joy of life' on some, and the 'Sorrow of life' on others." This little poem 'Mathetoup' has some sorrow stamped it; but remembrance of sometimes Miss Ross," and he commences to read, his voice giving to the poem a vague feeling than Edith had found in them before.

"Maiden with the meek brown eyes,
In whose orbs a deeper lies,
Like the dark lake in evening skies!

"Those whose looks outshine the sun,
Golden tresses scattered o'er one,
As the braided streamlets run!

"Smiling with innocent feet,
Where the brook and river meet,
Womanhood and childhood fleet.

Sweet their shadows calling by,
As the dove with startled eye,
Who flies from shadow fly!

"O, thou child of many prayers!
Life and death are in the hair I share,
Class and age come on wares!"

He says not on her face a moment, then he continues

"Thy strength sorrow, wrong and rath,
Is thy mother the day of wrath,
Is thy age the smile of truth.

"O, maiden! if thy lot shall steal
Into wounds, that cannot heal,
Be thou as your gentle sad.

And that smile, like sunshine, dart
Into many a sunless heart,
For a smile of God thou art."

He looks up from the book, and rises. "It is getting late. Good-night Edith." "Good-night father," and in a
lower tone "Thank you," then he is gone.

CHAPTER II.

The home is more than usually lit up tonight; carriages keep stopping at the door, and after disclosing their brilliant immates move on and give place to others. The year will end in a few hours, and Dr. Ross has made up his mind that some young people at least shall meet its successor gaily. His sister with her son and daughter arrived a few days ago and first put the time of gaiety half into his hand; under her management things promise to go off well.

Mrs. Forbes and her niece are is gather to entering their guests; the elder lady tall and dark with a certain air of serenely dignity which being natural, is not unbecoming, and with much her drum of black velvet is in keeping. Edith's slight form seems slighter still when near her aunt; she is robed entirely in white, for this is her first ball; almost unearthly in her pretty simplicity standing there, the expression of her face hardly in keeping with her personal image; she speaks to each guest in turn her eyes smiling but her eyes grave.

"Edith, has Mr. Feldon arrived yet?" asks her cousin Kate shortly afterwards.

"No."

"And if you think his arrival will make any difference in your prospects, I tell you at once Kate," her brother puts in teasingly. "I imagine that develop in secrecy in Mr. Feldon's line, but speaking of programmes, reminds me, Edith, that I must see yours while there is yet time."

"Suppose you only let Gregory put his name down for one dance, and then I give you permission to do what you please with them to him," proposes Kate with sisterly flattery before she is cleared by her partner; but the delicate blint is disregarded as Miss Ross sees when he returns the card.

"Four, Gregory?"

"Yes, do you object?"

"*Not if—I mean—*and said this morning that it is unusual to dance more than twice in a night with the same gentleman falling to decay." To what then was it given?

"Unless I" he says inquiringly and with a look of amusement.

"Unless you are bantoffled to him; but, with an air of relief, "that is out of the question with us; being cousins we must not stand on ceremony."

Austin Feldon turns to his friend; but something in the old man's face checks the words he was about to utter. "Thank you," he says at last very quietly; "Dr. Ross, you are a good man, too good for pride of intellect is tied astray. Love has had no place in my life so far, perhaps it only can save me from indolently. Glancing up he sees someone standing in the doorway, someone with a fair earnest face, and eyes that meet his own coldly; she comes to him and laps her hand in his for a moment, still with that wistful look in her dark eyes.

"Come, Edith, we need you to cheer us tonight, her father smiles. Jim has so ceasely brightened since he saw her—"we can man alone here so long get rather gloomy; let us have some music, child." He leads the way out of the room; she is following, but turns suddenly. "Mr. Feldon."

"Yes."

"Neither my father nor you seemed to notice when I came; you were in deep conversation, and I want to tell you I heard part of it."

"I am sorry."

"It was confidential; I ought not to have listened, but I thought you heard me open the door." She continues, "I am sorry to hear it." She goes, and the man stands still where she has left him.

"Good God! If words of mine should stay the power of that child's pure heart. Is it not enough that I am wretched? Must I bring misery to others—to her above all the rest! Bitt, no!" she seemed to feel more sorrow than fear.

Sounds sweet and solemn reach him. Edith is playing something of Beethoven's, something so sad that mingled with the harmony there might be the yearning, despairing cry of a broken heart. Why does she not choose music more suited to her age? he wonders, as he quietly enters the room, and looks at her as she plays. A light is pleasing on her bright hair making a glory round her; he is reminded vaguely of St. Cecilia, Agnes, or Magdalen, he can scarcely tell which of the three, for the little head bears some resemblance to the old master's ideals of all three fair saints. After all, he concludes, Beethoven may be more suited to her than he thought at first, and his reverie comes to an end as she turns from the piano.

"Do you know Edith, that Mr. Feldon has been reading instead of listening! What do you say to that," the dinner and glance at his friend who has absently opened a book.

"Nothing," she replies with a faint, slow smile. "I hardly do this tonight."

"Which means I presume, that my taste is not sufficiently refined to appreciate the king of musicians.

"Perhaps not since you say so," she returns unsolicitously. "I think that books are more to your liking; then all the music stand were put together, though, "

THE MONITOR.

PUBLIC JOURNAL OF THE ARCHDIOCESE

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1886.

JUBILEE PASTORAL

—OF—

RT. REV. FRANCIS MORA, D. D.,

BISHOP OF

MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.

To the Rev. Clergy and Laity.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:—By Apostolic letters of the 22nd of December, 1885, the Holy Father has been pleased to open the treasury of the Church, proclaiming to the world an extraordinary Jubilee extending during the whole of the present year.

The reason for this great favor, granted now for the third time during his Pontificate, we found in the untiring zeal of the Sovereign Pontiff and the unbounded charity towards his flock, which is pointed out in the Encyclical which accompanies this letter.

With joy, therefore, we discharge the pleasant duty of announcing to you this Jubilee, and "ex, hort you not to receive in vain the grace of God, for He saith: in an acceptable time have I heard thee: and in the day of salvation I have I helped thee. Behold, now is the acceptable time: behold, now is the day of salvation" by which the Allmighty God, at a very low price, offers us not only the pardon of our sins, but also the amendment of our lives and the Kingdom of Heaven.

The year of Jubilee was a year of great rejoicing in the oppressed Hebrews, because debts were remitted and enrolled; slaves were restored to liberty; paid families returned in possession of their lands, patrimony. For greater reason it should be a year of joyful being to us, the children of the Church of Christ.

For in it is a year of mercy, a year of indulgence, a year of forgiveness. The unfortunate vanity may, by salutary penance, regain their forfeited dignities, and re-enter their lost possessions, the honorably industrious; the slaves of sin are to be restored to the liberty of the children of God, and each of us, by repentance of the past, can lay up renewed and redoubled spiritual vigor for the future.

We have, dear faithful, standing against us the guilt of sin and the punishment inseparably connected with it. The guilt of mortal sin and its eternal punishment, also remitted in the moment of penance, by the absolution of the Priest of God, joined with humility, contrition, and satisfaction. This is the ordinary means left by the Redeemer of the world, to His Church, for the sinner's justification. But in this life even the sin when may be perfect as to merit the remission of the eternal punishment due to sin. Nothing filed can enter the Kingdom of Heaven; therefore it is necessary to pay to fall the debt of this justice, either in this life, by penance, or in the other and good works, or in the next by purifying fires of purgatory. Hence the importance of the jubilee, by which "The Lord hath taken away thy sin; nevertheless, thou shalt not sin any more." Hence the necessity of God to indulge, the child, into to thee shall nearly the Psalmist David, "Remember not the offences of my youth and my ways of penance. Mercifully, then, and the selection of the means of the Jubilee, the Church, for a spirit of penance, and the selection of the means of the Jubilee, the Church, for a spirit of penance, and the selection of the means of the Jubilee, the Church, for a spirit of penance

Farm and Home.

California Cream of Tartar.

Among the various industries and sources of revenue of Los Angeles, California, which are a perfect success so far as they have been will attended to, is the production of argols and the manufacture of good cream of tartar from the same. Albert Yoe, who has been engaged in this business for some time, though it has been very successful, has met with a great deal of difficulty with his limited means to secure a location adapted to the handling of the wine or producing the argols on a scale that would make it largely a source of profit. He commenced the business four years ago, and has been compelled to move from one location to another frequently at a great expense and interruption to his enterprise. The argols are obtained by suspending small pieces of rope in casks or vats of wine, like the old process of making dip candles, when the tartar crystals form on the pieces of rope until the wine is relieved of its acidity and materially aged and improved. When the crystals are taken out, they are put through a refining process and bleached of their reddish brown color and some out in pure white crystals ready for the mill, where they are ground to an impalpable powder, ready for the market. The crude argols are usually kept for three or four months, when they are shipped to the New York market. The wine from an acre of grapes will produce from thirty to seventy-five pounds of chemically pure cream of tartar, owing, of course, to the yield and the acidity or tartar contained in the wine. The wines from the low, moist, or heavily irrigated vineyards usually contain a greater percentage of tartar. The cream or tartar of Southern California always commands a higher price than that brought from France, and is eagerly sought for by dealers. The use of wine can be had for from one to three cents a gallon, or the equivalent of the evaporation and waste of wine during the process. Last year seven tons of this valuable product were shipped and there will probably be shipped three or four times that quantity this season. He is just now building a factory where he will have an abundance of room for handling wines. His furnaces and lattice are in position, ready for his tanks and cooperage for conducting his operations on a much larger scale this season than ever before.

The Power of a Piano Wife.

An old general was once asked by a friend how it was that, after so many years spent in the army, he had come to be so frequent a communicant, receiving several times a week. "My friend," answered the old soldier, "the strongest part of it is, that my change of life was brought about before I ever listened to the word of a priest, and before I had ever set my foot in a church. After my campaigns, God bestowed on me a pious wife, whose faith I respected, though I did not share it. Before I married her she was a member of all the pious confraternities of her parish, and she never failed to add to her signature, Child of Mary. She never took it upon herself to preach one sermon to me, but I could read her thoughts in her countenance. When she prayed every morning and night, her countenance beamed with faith and charity; when she returned from the church, where she had received, with a calmness, a sweetness and a patience, which left in them something of the serenity of heaven, she seemed an angel. When she dressed my wounds I found her like a Sister of Charity.

"Suddenly, I myself was taken with the desire to love the God whom my wife loved so well, and who inspired her with those virtues which formed the joy of my life. One day I, who hitherto was without faith, who was such a complete stranger to the practices of religion, so far from the Sacraments, said to her: "Take me to your confessor."

"Through the ministry of this man of God, and by the divine grace, I have become what I am, and what I rejoice to be."

Millions in Milling.

The growth of the milling business has been one of the marvels of the age, though in reality no more wonderful than the development made in the Northwestern wilderness by our modern farmer, because it was the ongrowth of the farmer's work. If prophecy were allowable in this age who would dare predict the future of milling in Minnesota and Dakota when he took into consideration the vast empire of wheat lands yet virgin to the plough? It is but the beginning, and the writer of 1890 will find as wonderful a scale of development for the decade, as does the present writer for the one just past, and still no many deals will have been made upon the resources of the wheat lands of the Northwest. In 1876 only 5,000,000 bushels of wheat found market in Minneapolis, and but 1,000,000 barrels of flour were made, yet the good people of the city felt that it was a most remarkable record. Follow down the years and see the figures roll up—seven, ten, sixteen and on up to thirty-three was the numerals necessary to show the receipts in millions, while the growth was equally marvelous in flour production figures. In the year 1878 commenced the direct export of flour to the countries of the Old World. It did not take long to convince London bakers of the value of flour made from Minnesota hard wheat, and the 150,000 barrels exported that year has grown to an export of more than two million barrels per annum.

Cavier on Tight Lacing.

The great naturalist, Cavier, was walking one day with a young lady who was a visitor of light lacing, in a public garden in Paris. A lovely blossom upon an elegant plant drew from her an expression of admiration. Looking at her pale, thin face, Cavier said: "You were like this flower once: to mover it will be as you are now." Next day he had her to the same spot and the beautiful flower was drying. She asked the name. "This plant," replied Cavier, "is an image of yourself. I will show you what is the matter with it." He pointed to a cord bound tightly around the stem and said: "You are fading away exactly in the same manner under the compression of your corset, and you are losing by degrees all your youthful charms, just because you have not the courage to resist this dangerous fashion."

A Suggestion about Children.

Brood over them lovingly, but don't interfere with them unwisely. During the first eight years of their lives—so important to all their after-existence—let them be clean, loving and happy little animals. Let them eat, play, love, and tell the truth. Give them plenty of brothers and sisters, and if these fail to appear, let them have other playmates of their own age. Children should never be taken as a joke, and never put forward as a show. Everything which concerns them is big with consequences, and should be seriously considered. The chief business and duty of each generation is to rear worthily the next, and the weightiest charge that can devolve upon a human being is the possession of a child—a fact which too few parents fully realize.

If feeling old comes your counsel, vigor by using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It will vitalize the blood, restore the wasting energies, and build up the system.

Family Fun.

One Price Only.

"Schoolmam, school talk in and 2000 at dose vinter gin?"

"How much is this overcoat?"

"Twenty tollers for dot overgoat, and I was making you a bresent of dot overgoat."

"That's too high."

"I dells you Mishter Gilbroly, I have only one brice, I never dealer. Chose read dot sign on der val Fixed Prices."

"Well, that means you fix the prices to suit yourself. Twenty dollars is too much."

"I dell you one price, twenty tollers. I had only one price, twenty tollers.

"It's not worth seven and a half."

"Mon Schwumbung, exactly 'Vill you give dot?'"

A Singular Omission.

"Pawpaw," said a New Jersey young lady, "will you look into the dictionary for 'omission,' and let me know how it is spelled?"

"Taint here," said the old man, after a search.

"It must be, pawpaw. Have you looked carefully?"

"I've been through the S's five times, an' there ain't nothin' that even looks like 'skeeters.'"

Why Ladies are Called Dicks.

Because they are not all tame. Because there is a good deal of sport to be got out of them when they are first found and captured. Because they may be sold. Because, as proved by the results of public examinations, they may be plucked. Because, as we can see in the illustrated newspapers, they may be drawn. Because they may be beautifully done, a good deal of better being usually employed in the process. Because they are often well peppered. Because they are always dressed in some fashion for dinner. Because they have long bills. Because there are always plenty of them in the market.

A Wife's Foolish Anxiety.

Wife (to sick husband)—Did you not derive great consolation, John, dear, from the minister's visit?

Sick Husband—Not very much.

Wife (anxiously)—Oh, John, I wish you could bring yourself to think of these things! Surely his words must have had some effect. What did he talk about?

Sick Husband—He talked about the advisability of my endowing a chapel.

When She Was Happy.

"Well, Aunt Chole, you don't look very happy to-day." "Hone, yer heart, Mary! I ain't got no 'casion to be." "Well, I'm sorry you have that, Aunt Chole. Do you fortunate one as thy cousin? of I was ha' I be happy as a 'possum in a tater patch." "Why, I thought your sister had had her husband." "Well, dat's it, she's married two—got money by both on 'em, and nary a chile or chick to bodder her. Dere's luck for ya."

Women Brings Wondrous Changes.

"You look tired," said a kind-hearted woman to a tramp who was economically petting away a generous plate of corned beef and cabbage. "Wouldn't you like a taste of wine?"

"What kind of wine is it?" he asked.

"Sweet Catawba."

"Sweet Catawba with corned beef and cabbage! H—m. Oh yes," he sighed, with a retrospective tear stole down his cheek, "bring on the wine; but there was a time, madam," he added, brokenly, "when I would gladly have been shot rather than indulge in such a mixture as that!"

Remarkable Time.

"I'm not a sprint runner," said Charley, "but I made fifty yards once in remarkably quick time. It was just that far from the front door to the gate, and my girl's father had the dog and allowed me ten seconds to clear the distance."

"I grasp the situation," replied Gus, "but fifty yards in ten seconds is not fast time."

"No, but when I reached the gate I had eight seconds to spare."

A Similarity of Conditions.

She (on board the yacht Eglewing)—How gloomy the sky looks, do then dile the sails, Mr. De Salt?

He—Yaw, the sails are fell.

She—And how resplendent the moon is, Mr. De Salt?

He—Ya'as, the moon's full.

She (getting a little tired)—Ah—do you know where the Captain is, Mr. De Salt?

He—Er—ya'as, below. He's full, too.

Under the Doctor's Care.

"You need outdoor exercise," said a New Jersey physician to a citizen, "fresh air and healthful amusement. Get a toboggan outfit and in a week you will be a well man."

The citizen followed this advice and on the first trip down the slide broke both of his legs.

A Successful Career.

"How is your son doing, Mr. Smith, who went to New York a few years ago?"

"He has made a name for himself, said Mr. Smith.

"Indeed! In what way?"

"I understand he calls himself Smythe."

Better than a Store.

"Madam," said a shivering tramp, "will you give a poor fellow a job chance to get warm?"

"Certainly," replied the woman kindly; "you can carry in that ton of coal, but don't burn yourself."

An Angel Prematurely.

"Mother, what is an angel?"

"My dear, it is a little girl with wings, who flies."

"But I heard papa telling the governess yesterday that she was an angel. Will she fly?"

"Yes, my dear, she will fly away the first the thing to-morrow."

Nearly Hit It.

"What is it, my children," exclaimed the temperance advocate, "that causes men to ignore the ties of home, neglect their families, stay out until after midnight, and get up with a bad headache in the morning?"

"I know," shouted the little son of a Congressman.

"Well, my little fellow, tell the others what it is."

"Politics."

Misery and body aches suffer from sluggish action of the blood, the result of dyspepsia or biliousness. Ayer's Pills will stir up the liver, stir the stomach and bowels to activity, rouse the power of the system, and throw health into body, which is indispensable to mental vigor.

Catholic Societies.

All Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are requested to furnish the Secretary of the Catholic Directory with the names of their Societies and Officers.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCE.

PATRONS OF OFFICE.—The Particular Council meets once a month, and a general meeting of all the conferences of the City once a month, the object being to allow grouping and dividing the conferences, and to the equal distribution of the funds, so that the poorest conferences may not be overwhelmed with applications. The revenue of the society are derived from the collections at the monthly meetings, from donations, from a collection made each month in the Central Hall on the first Thursday in every month, but the following are the Spiritual Directors, viz: Rev. J. Prendergast, V.G., President, J. J. Dunn, Vice-President, J. Ryan, Treasurer, P. Dunne, Secretary, Rev. J. Prendergast, Rev. J. Ryan, Rev. J. Dunne

PARNELL'S DEPARTURE.

An Explanation by Justin McCarthy.

NEW YORK, February 25.—The Independent of February 25, published an article by Justin McCarthy, member of Parliament, setting forth in intelligible form for American readers what Parnell and his conferees decide on their demand for home rule. He begins by saying that the Nationalists do not demand a parliament, but would not be satisfied with mere local boards; that very many Irishmen would be glad for separation, but they recognize that the spirit of the age does not favor small, independent States, but rather an agglomeration of States, and that therefore the question of separation does not come into practical politics. He then goes on to say: "All the Irishmen I know, certainly all the responsible Irishmen, are well content to see Ireland part of Great Britain, provided she is a partner with England on fair terms. If she is, they say, they hope that Ireland should be in partnership, but they are not willing that she should be in subjection. What they say to the English statesmen is this: 'Give Ireland the right to manage her own affairs within the line of sentiment that washes her shores; give her the right to do for itself, and every one of the English colonies in Canada and Australia can do; give us this on this much, and we are willing to live in friendly partnership with you.'"

"SO NO IMPERIAL SENTIMENT?

we could easily arrange. A compromise might be found. My own idea of a satisfactory system would be to have a home rule parliament for England, another for Scotland, and if needs were, yet another for Wales, as well as for Ireland, and an imperial parliament in which all should be represented for imperial affairs and affairs of common interest. This would be about such a system as you Americans have, and as Canada and Australia have. But neither England nor Scotland wants a home rule parliament for himself just yet. I say just yet, because the demand and the necessity will come soon enough. Scotland, then, and England will find that it is not possible to get through local, parochial, national and imperial business in one overtrelized legislative body, but just yet this is not fully recognized, and therefore there is a certain difficulty about establishing a system which should give Ireland, and Ireland alone, a domestic Parliament and at the same time allow to Ireland full representation in the Imperial Parliament. Englishmen say: 'It is unreasonable that you should come to some not and take part in the government of our affairs, while we are not to be allowed to have any share in the management of your affairs.' I do not think there is much in the objection. But the objection is made and has to be taken into account. Therefore, I at least, should be quite willing to accept a Parliament in College Green, Dublin, and to give up all right to sent in the Imperial Parliament at Westminster.

NO SECURITY ABOUT IMPERIAL APPEALS

"Some arrangement could be made as to Ireland's share in common taxation and her voice in imperial affairs. No serious difficulty could arise about that. Give us an Irish Parliament, and we will show that we are ready to meet England on fair and reasonable grounds of compromise and agreement as to other matters, but it must be an Irish Parliament, not a system of local boards. That Parliament, I say, must be an Irish Parliament, not a system of local boards. That Parliament, I say, must be an Irish Parliament, not a system of local boards. Even in practice the difference would be very great. In principle the difference is the difference between what we want and what we do not want. We want to have the existence of the Irish nation recognized. We want an Irish National Parliament, free to make what laws it will for the internal administration of Ireland. We would accept the control of the Imperial Parliament at Westminster, or of the Sovereign, represented by the Sovereign's delegate. That would be hand on over to the control of an English majority again. But we should be quite willing to accept the control of the Sovereign acting on the advice of her Irish ministers, on the same principle on that which prevails in Canada and Australia. Of course it would be merely nominal control, just as it is in Canada and Australia, and in England herself. The actual of the Sovereign in those countries never again can be anything but nominal.

THE CONTROL OF AN ENGLISH MINISTRY

over Ireland's domestic Parliament would be a very real and a most serious thing for Ireland. Ireland would be quite willing to give any requisite guaranty by an article in the written constitution or elsewhere for the protection of the minority in all their freedom of conscience, in all their rights of whatever kind. Nothing could be less needed than such guaranty. Nothing is farther from the mind and heart of Catholic Ireland than to do the slightest wrong to the Protestants of Ireland. With the single exception of O'Connell, all the great Irish leaders have been Protestants, and some of O'Connell's most powerful supporters have been Protestants. See what I let it in Wolfe Tone, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Robert Emmet, Smith O'Brien, John Mitchell, Isaac Butt, Charles Stewart Parnell—all Protestants, and to keep the ear members elected to serve Ireland's national cause in the Imperial Parliament are several more Protestants who would be rather amused if they were asked whether they were not afraid of being deprived of their freedom of worship if an Irish Parliament were to be established.

THE ORANGE BUGBEAR

"What about that Northern Province of Ireland Ulster? I ask my American readers to put well into their heads the fact that a majority of the members returned to Parliament from the Province of Ulster are Nationalists and devoted followers of Mr. Parnell. Let us name some of them: Mr. Healy, Mr. Sigger, William O'Brien, William Redmond, Arthur O'Connor. Every American has heard of them names, and knows that they are names of men absolutely devoted to the Irish cause. These men and many others like them are now chosen representatives of the Ulster constituencies. Mr. Sexton went near to carrying the division of Belfast. I am only twenty votes behind any Orange competitor for the representation of the Orange city of Derry. Tell me of a Protestant being oppressed by a Catholic neighbor in such a country and under such conditions. But by all means let a guaranty be given if it is thought desirable or necessary. Let it be given in any form that national men can devise. I shall make no trouble about that."

Bismarck's Inhumanity.

A good deal has been written in the European and American press concerning Bismarck's cruel medieval system of espionage directed against the Poles. With what harshness these measures are being carried out, one specimen out of many will suffice to show: On the 27th ult. there arrived in Posen, from Bielsze, a woman of the age, it is said, of 64 years. She had been compelled as a "foreigner" from her home, and she was trying to get to Thorn in order to arrive, by way of Alexandrowo, in Russian Poland, to the country from which the old woman and her companions made use of to reach the town from the railway station, the poor creature's appearance excited universal sympathy, and a small collection was quickly made for her amid very strong expressions of opinion regarding German policy. He did was the unfortunate victim of Prince Bismarck's "Thorschluss" that she was unable to continue her journey, and, according to latest accounts, was still in Posen.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—Monsignor Kirby, titular Archbishop of Sipkerna and rector of the Irish College, has issued private audiences and all the feast of the Purse 1530 Dr. as Peter Paxon from the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of all Ireland, being his Grace's annual offering for 1886.

Carlow.—The tenants on the Duke of Leinster estate attended on Feb. 6, at the Victoria Hotel, Muinalow, for the purpose of meeting Mr. Hingston, the receiver appointed on this estate under the Court of Chancery, with a view to the settlement of their rents. On a former occasion the result of the tenants' application for a reduction was an statement of 25 per cent, but this was refused. Mr. Hingston informed the tenants that he was recommended by Judge Boyd to accept the same terms as obtained last year, namely, a reduction

Poetry.

A CHRISTIAN HERO.

(Suggested by the perusal of the life of Bishop Ridley, by J. Nicemane, C. M. E., and inscribed to Rev. H. Lowe, C. M. E.)

The laurels of this have,
The martyr's shining palm,
The angel's wreath(?) cut leaves
For one so wise and calm,
The heart's most tender homage,
Sweeter than words can frame,
A moment's pondering
Are twined around his name.

Great heart where love celestial
In quenchless radiance burned,
Of an humanity and manhood
To heaven above were turned,
Who said earth's sweet affections
A counted himself lost,
Yet were he nobler than God's consecrated Priest.

Monger, and soldier, and lover,
Dangers by sea and land,
Hatred and cant pursued him,
Leagued against him hand in hand,
Big shot in Faith's strong armor,
With chilblain patience sweet,
He laid his heavy burden
Down at the Saviour's feet.

Then rose refreshed and strengthened
To a nobler life in death,
Lightsome in shade,
Gazing his Master's will,
Of him no more seen
No tall but seemed as light,
Had one grovelling spirit

How thrills the soul on realties
That mistake sublime,
Of the bleeding Host repeaching
The apostate for his crime,
Man Man dare not, God is angry,
Plying the crying wanderer,
Revealed Himself that day.

Tree son of Saint Ephrem,
Of the frame richly blessed,
Who the Lord's Cross bore
Within the forward West,
The feet born of the Order,
And well may Rome be sure,
To add a Bishop's mantle
To his unclouded tiara

Though few the years God left him,
To lead His people here,
So careful was he over
Of souls to Christ so dear,
Each thought, each deed, each moment,
Through every passing day,
Was given to prayer and labor
For those beneath his sway.

Thus, ever and anon, his life's prayer
With love's pure Source rile,
I shall God for the Blessings
That crowned His servant's life,
And beg the holy Bishop
Who now before Him stands,
To lift for us his pleading
His consecrated hands

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.

Mossy Woodland, March, 1886.

"St. Ev. Bishop, Romanus was the first Novice of the Redemptorist Order in Austria to make the religious vows.

AN OFF-DRAWN PICTURE.

AT ANTHONY DOYLE

Ding Dong!
Ding Dong!
The bell is lustily pealing;
Ding Dong!
Ding Dong!
A brazen mirth revealing.—
The a message bell, and the trembling bells
Is full of the joy of the happy hour;
And joyous is he, at her side,
With a manly love for her wedding dower.
But alas! but no curse that follow sh
In the wake of Joy's bewildering train,
And leave no alone in a Darkness pain
To grope our way thro' woe and pain.

Ding Dong! Ding Dong!
Let us hide in the shade of the gloomy cry—
"We live—and we live to die."

Ding Dong!
Ding Dong!
The mirthful bell is pealing;
Ding Dong!
Ding Dong!
A sadness of revealing.—
Now the shadow of a sentiment the corteges walks
For the state will be to after the life
But the corpse has entered the shining gates
And repeat! lies gone to Jesus
Alas! for the joys that follow oft,
In the darkness trade of woe and strife!
And lead us on to a clearer path,
That gulfs one steps to such sweet life!

But hark! the bell still clanks its song,
And the wind and waves still bear it along.

Ding Dong!
Ding Dong!
What a comfort its sonnet pealings give,
"We die and we die to live!"

Literary Miscellany.

The Queen of the Circus.

A Beautiful Catholic Story.

Everywhere about the dead walls of a European city, about two years since, might have been read the following announcement, with that of other similar, of the Circus Company: "Miss Zenobia, First Acrobat." It is her history, given by herself, that follows here.

Twenty-four years ago a little girl was born into the world in an old-fashioned village of Canada, and so soon as a name was needed to point her out, called Matilda Prescott. There was no talk of christening her; and the world she came into was cold, cruel and unchristian enough. Her father was sober from drink only on odd days; and her mother had long ago sunk into a state of almost brutal stupidity under long continued ill treatment from her husband. When the little girl was able to walk about, she was only too glad to be sent on some occupation, out of sight of the misery which was always before her eyes at what was called her home. In the long days of the Canadian summer she went to pick wild berries in the woods, and then sold the sweetest fruit of the family, or by their sale obtained a few pence to supply jugs for the craving appetite of her drunken father.

One day there passed along the road, near the thicket where she was at work, the major caravan of a circus that had been exhibiting in the neighboring town. In the carriage at the end of the line of wagons rode a few young women, the chief performers of the menagerie company. Seeing the open-eyed wonder of the child, they asked for some of her berries, and took her up with them as they rode on their way home. Her story was easily drawn from her. It is possible that the heart of some these wandering people was touched by the brightness of the little girl, whose whole appearance cold of poverty and wretchedness. She was tribe, too, as only those who live in the open air and woods from childhood are. Soon Matilda discovered that, in her delight at the unsentimental drive with her new friends, she had already gone far from her own place, and was on a strange road. She wept, but her companions consoled her and asked her to remain always with them. They told her that it was too late to go back; and soothed by their promises and by almost the only kindness she had yet known, she soon resigned herself and was carried away. Father and mother she never saw again; soon she would not have known them, in the variety of new scenes into which she was thrown. So she grew up a performer in the gymnasium of the circus from her childhood. Her name was often changed, as is the custom with that kind of people; but we shall know her only by her last professional title—Miss Zenobia, First Acrobat.

Zenobia, as she was to be caported, soon attained to a very high rank in her art. Nimble could leap so skillfully as she, or perform such daring feats. She had been stolen away from parents who did not deserve to be entrusted with her care. As she grew up, it was not likely that she would find any great obligation towards those who had taken her with them for their own advantage. She soon ran away from this first company of rude country performers, and joined herself to another band. Her fame spread, and the little ragged child of the Canadian woods became a great personage in her own curious world. With different troupes she travelled far and wide. She performed for some years in the North, and afterwards through the principal cities of South America. Thence she found her way to Australia, where she remained some years, and then visited the European colonies in India and Egypt. Her wandering star led her to French Algiers, and over to Spain. Here, for the first time in her life, she entered a church. Up to this she had imagined the great temples to be centres through which she passed to be only theatres of a sort different from those she knew, and closed to such as she. One day she saw the Spanish common people mingling with others of every class and making their way altogether into the church. She made bold to join the throng, and found to her surprise that nothing had here to be paid at the door.

It was the holy time of Christmas. Like the others she drew near the Crib of Bethlehem, so commonly represented in Catholic Churches at this season, and in a country like this, with a climate so different from that of her native Canada, and knelt before the altar where the Child Jesus was laying on the straw in the Manger. Coming out of the church, she found herself in a strange street, what child that was before whom the lights were kept burning. The astonished girl could not understand that even pagans should be ignorant of our Christian mysteries, and answered:

"It is the little Jesus"

"Is Jesus alive?"

"He is not alive there; that is His image."

Hearing this, Zenobia went back into the church, and looked long and attentively at the Child placed in the Crib, wondering how "Jesus" might be, and what it all could mean. The astonishment of the little girl who she had not addressed made her afraid to ask an explanation of the people around her. Everyone was praying devoutly; it was clear that the Assumption worship, uninstructed in the A B C of the Christian religion, did not enter into their circle of ideas.

Zenobia went on her way deeply impressed at what she had seen. It was all strange to her. There was then something in this which all her wanderings had not implied. She gathered as much as she from the praying throng, where she saw men and women and children of every class interested and consoled, but most of all the poor and suffering.

About this time, she had two dreams which left a deep remembrance after them and urged her to go on in this new way, which had so strongly caught her curiosity. One night she saw before her a Lady of majestic mien, who put before her a great book in which all her actions were written. The poor Zenobia exclaimed: "This is God, or the Mother of God, if God has a mother." Another night, in the jungle, she saw a solitary path in which young ladies, with the same mien, were walking to and from in silence. Sleep to herself, though she had not the slightest notion of what convent life was, she felt that she was a person who few God well, and whom God loves well." For the present the dream passed away, leaving only a regretful memory, as of a glimpse of other and better things. But they were to be brought again strongly at a future day, when the adventurous Zenobia should at last leave true happiness, as she thought, behind her.

Now and then the circus she had of religious things were again aroused within her. Possibly she found her life of constant excitement already palling on her; and the delicate nature could not refrain from thoughts of what was to be after the life is over. She happened two or three times during her journeys to be obliged to put up for the night with some Christian family. Here, in the conversation which she willingly turned to such subjects, she heard them speak of the unquenchable fire, which shall be the lot of those who name the gifts God has given them, and who repent too late. In the solitude of her room she lighted a fierce fire in the grate, and deliberately threw into it first one book, first her hand and then her bare foot. Yes, the intense pain made itself felt, she said to herself: "Yet this is nothing to a fire which burns the whole body, and burns forever! And there is something in me which does not die and which would hinder my body from being consumed in such a burning!"

She now observed curiously whatever concerned the religious life and actions of the uncertain strength which she passed. She performed successively in France and Austria, and was at Moscow when the late emperor of all the Russias met his tragedian. His horrible assassination was carried out by means of the explosives which modern science has taught unchristian men to use. Concerning it she had many curious details to tell, which had come to her knowledge from the seditious people into whose company her profession constantly threw her. She now entered her stage, performing in the difficult feats of the Garden Empire, and so came into Italy. She was in the first rank of her strange career, wandering, adventurous, careless for the morrow. Yet she was not without an occasional thought of a different mode of life, and of making ready for the life to come. It is touching beyond measure that she should not yet have learned that the Christian religion, was the unanimous cry of the poor, wear, what child that was before whom the lights were kept burning. The astonished girl could not understand that even pagans should be ignorant of our Christian mysteries, and answered:

"It is the little Jesus"

"Is Jesus alive?"

"He is not alive there; that is His image."

Hearing this, Zenobia went back into the church, and looked long and attentively at the Child placed in the Crib, wondering how "Jesus" might be, and what it all could mean. The astonishment of the little girl who she had not addressed made her afraid to ask an explanation of the people around her. Everyone was praying devoutly; it was clear that the Assumption worship, uninstructed in the A B C of the Christian religion, did not enter into their circle of ideas.

Zenobia went on her way deeply impressed at what she had seen. It was all strange to her. There was then something in this which all her wanderings had not implied.

THE MONITOR.

PARCHIAL NEWS OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1888.

The Churchman's Forged Letter Fraud.

Forgery seems to be the favorite method of fraud most popular with Protestant preachers when they undertake to calumniate the Catholic Church. To such an extent has this practice been carried forward by the so-called Protestant Reformers, that an eminent non Catholic writer of the last century branded the practice as a sectarian custom in those burning words "Forgery.—I blush for the honor of Protestantism while I write it—seem to have been peculiar to the Reformed—I look in vain for one of those accursed outrages of imposition amongst the disciples of Popery." Those few words condemn as a total shell, more the corner-stone of Protestantism, which is nothing less than a counterfeiting of Christianity, a falsification of true Faith, and the supplanting of God's spiritual work by a system of false Religion forgery is just as necessary an ingredient as falsehood—and both are the Shibboleths of sectarianism.

On the morning of March, 1st, the Pacific Churchman (Episcopalian organ)—published a letter pretending to have been written by Cardinal Manning to Robert Montague—an English convert who became a parson—in which the Cardinal is made to say that he regrets that he ever joined the Catholic Church. In his introduction of this matter to his readers, the editor of the Churchman—thinking he had a good cassagnac! the Catholic Church—referred the matter especially to the consideration of the MONITOR. In a subsequent issue we pronounced the letter a decided forgery, and we had intended to send the document to Cardinal Manning himself for his denial—as positive were we that not a word of the malicious document ever emanated from the mind of the distinguished convert in question. Just as we were on the point of putting our intention into operation, some unknown friend in Canada sent us a copy of the Montreal Post in which we find the following forcible refutation of the flagrant forgery which the Churchman circulated with the hope that it might mislead both the Church of God and Cardinal Manning. His Eminence makes the following reply:

ARCHBISHOP'S HOUSE,
Westminster, S. W.,
February 20th, 1888.

Dear Sir—I thank you much for your attention in sending me the letter in the Toronto Globe. It was so badly done that I should say that it is no letter of mine. From the style it contradicts the contention of my last five and twenty years, which have been spent in thanking God and in bringing others to say as I have been able the only true faith and fold. You may make whatever use you will of this letter.

Believe me always your faithful servant,

HENRY EDWARD,
Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.
(Signed)

Thus we speak another of those hateful falsehoods which Protestants fabricate for purposes of calumny against the Catholic Church. But the source from which these calumnies originate is fruitful in evil, and even while we are thus stamping out one slander, a dozen other falsehoods equally as diabolical are being concocted in Satan's laboratory, and in due time will be heralded forth by hierarchs in order to form men away from finding the true Church of God.

Now that we have unmasked this malignant forgery, we ask the Pacific Churchman—as an act of simple Christian justice—to print the fact of Cardinal Manning's denial of the forged letter in its columns, or failing to do that, we shall be compelled to brand it with the crime of deliberately attempting to destroy the name and fame of one of the most consistent and steadfast converts in the Catholic Church. The Pacific Churchman has borne false witness against Cardinal Manning, let us now see if the Rev. Editor of that professedly religious journal possesses Christianity enough to make reparation for the wrong thus done by denouncing the evil association that appeared in his columns over the forged signature of a great Catholic Prelate.

What is "Boycotting" and Where did it Originate?

A subscriber to the MONITOR in Napa asks us to state where "Boycotting" originates and the name of his friends assert that it is not of recent origin. The system of non-fraternity and non-co-operation with one's neighbor in consequence of some offense against public or private right, morals or equity, is as old as the memory of man runneth back, and it was put into practical effect in many instances during the days of the American Revolutionary struggle when the patriots refused to fraternize with or patronize in any way the Royalists residing among them. The deed of throwing the British tea into Boston harbor was an act of "Boycotting" against John Bull which proved very effective, and it is a matter of history that during the anti-slavery agitation no Southern slaver of slaves would deal to the extent of a dime with any Northern merchant who was known to hold sentiments adverse to the Southern institution.

Thus the system of "Boycotting" has been carried on in this country in many ways for more than a century, and those as christian creatures who occasionally attached the lines "no Irish need apply" to their help-seeking advertisements, think that disgraceful method of "Boycotting" the sentires of the Emerald Isle. Again in 1845, when the Native American party spreaded an anti-Catholic spirit throughout the land, they tried to effectually "Boycott" all Catholic citizens by the most foul, brutal and bloodthirsty system that ever emanated from the slaves of Satan. The riots in Philadelphia, New York, Louisville, Baltimore and other Eastern localities were all occasioned by men who sought to "Boycott" those citizens whose only crime was that they were Catholics, and some designing demagogues took advantage of this fact to preach a crusade against the Church, thus instilling their ignorant dupes to murder their fellow citizens merely because they professed a faith that was denounced by some diabolical wretches who should have been sent to Sing Sing.

The system of social isolation which is at present known under the peculiar name of "Boycotting" was suggested by Charles Stewart Parnell in September, 1880, during a speech he made at Ennis, in the County Clare, where a great many evictions had taken place and where "landgrabbers" were prospering on the poverty of the evicted tenants.

In the course of his speech on that occasion Mr. Parnell asked this question—"Suppose when you go home a tenant was told a few farms from which another tenant has been evicted?" Somebody in the crowd shouted "Shoot him!" Then Mr. Parnell continued. "I think I heard somebody say shoot him. I wish to point out to you a much better way—the moral Christian and charitable way—which will give the fiend an opportunity of repenting. When a man takes a farm from which another has been evicted, you must shun him on the roadside when you meet him—you must shun him in the streets of the town—you must shun him in the shops—you must shun him in the market place and everywhere else where you meet him—in a moral Coventry, by isolating him from the rest of his countrymen as if he were a leper of old. you must show more kindness to the wife of the man who has committed."

Captain Boycott, of Ballinrobe, was the first on whom this plan of punishing the wrong-doer was tried, and such success was achieved by his ostracism in their social action, that the system of social isolation spread throughout all Ireland under the name of "Boycotting, and now it has become the weapon whereby the laboring classes on this coast propose to seek relief from the Chinese incubus which enforces idleness upon a large class of the laboring element.

The Treasures of the Rosary for the Living and Deceased.

Questions are continually being put, not only here, but everywhere else, by the people to priests and nuns about the Rosary, and especially the following: What are its indulgences, privileges, benefits; and what is required in order that Christians may share in them all? What is the difference between the Rosary Confraternity and the Living Rosary Association? Who has the right to establish a Rosary Confraternity? Is it necessary to have beads blessed in order that we may gain all the indulgences conceded by the Church to their recitation? When do the beads lose their indulgences? When some beads or grains are lost and others have been made to replace them, or when beads are chained over, is it necessary to have them blessed over? Is it lawful for the Rosary to be recited? Is it necessary to meditate on the Mysteries in order that one may gain all the indulgences, and is it necessary to use the voice in practising the Rosary even when only one is present? Is it lawful and devotional? Will nuns and seculars indulge in [illegible] when any strangers happen to join them? Is it a sin, or merely such one says it by himself? Is it true that any special favors conferred on those who recite the Rosary either singly or collectively in a Church? What is meant by the Fepal, Brigittine and Dominican blessings of beads?

These are all most important questions, and there are many others not less so, which concern all Rosarians, and, indeed, all the faithful, and which it is well to answer now and again for their benefit. We are all well aware that such questions can only be answered with security and tact by following the decisions of the proper Roman Congregations, the common teaching of approved authors, and the responses of the Master General of the Dominicans, who has from Apostolic authority the custodianship, direction and government of both the Rosary Confraternity and the Living Rosary Association. In last week's issue of the MONITOR some of the very many privileges that Rosary Confraternities enjoy were described. Before answering the questions above noted, and others hinted at, we will here add other privileges which Rosarians enjoy by reason of their being associated to some canonically erected Confraternity, in order to induce the faithful who have not yet been enrolled in a Confraternity, and who consequently are deprived of many blessings they could enjoy if they were Rosarians, to have their names recorded in a Confraternity Register. Let Christians ponder over the singular blessings that will surely secure to themselves, and the wonderful helps they will always have at hand for the poor souls in Purgatory by being true Rosarians, and they will not hesitate long about attaching themselves to an organization which means all blessings to its members, both living and dead.

The contents of the following numbers will give an insight into the riches of the Rosary Confraternity, but particularly of the Dominican Church in this city:

I. Every Church in which a Confraternity of the Rosary is canonically erected, possesses by right, but only in favor of Rosarians, all the local indulgences specially conceded to the churches of the Friars-Preachers or Dominicans. (Clement VIII, Quæ sunt quæ.

II. Such a church also possesses, but only in favor of the members of the Rosary Confraternity, all the local indulgences of all the Confraternities and churches of Rome, even the plenary indulgences for the sires of the Emerald Isle. Again in 1845, when the Native American party spreaded an anti-Catholic spirit throughout the land, they tried to effectually "Boycott" all Catholic citizens by the most foul, brutal and bloodthirsty system that ever emanated from the slaves of Satan. The riots in Philadelphia, New York, Louisville, Baltimore and other Eastern localities were all occasioned by men who sought to "Boycott" those citizens whose only crime was that they were Catholics, and some designing demagogues took advantage of this fact to preach a crusade against the Church, thus instilling their ignorant dupes to murder their fellow-citizens merely because they professed a faith that was denounced by some diabolical wretches who should have been sent to Sing Sing.

III. Now also observe the perpetual indulgence, provided their names are recorded in a Confraternity register, and that they faithfully perform the work enjoined, can gain the plenary and pointed indulgence attached to the visit of a church, chapel or oratory of the Confraternity of the Rosary, by reading the decree of erection in their own convent or monastery. (Pius IX., 11mo. Aug. 1857.

IV. The sick, prisoners, travellers and other persons legitimately impeded, as Rosarians, can gain all the indulgences attached to visiting the altar of the Rosary and of the Church in which a Confraternity is established, by saying wherever they may be at the time some prayers for their intention. (S. Pius V. Inter desiderabilia)

The prayers to be recited on such occasions are left optional to each Rosarian, except in the following cases in which they are determined First, in order to gain the indulgences attached to the Salve Regina, that anthphon must be recited on bended knees and before a statue or image of the Blessed Virgin. (Innocent XI. Nuper, Dec. 9, Nov. 1.). Secondly, in order that the above indulgences be classified perfectly, the Rosary must be recited on the first Sunday of the month (unless specly five plenary and a great number of partial indulgences), it is requisite that they say the Rosary—the fifteen decades. In the case of the sick one chaplet will suffice. We must here remark to gain all the indulgences of the first Sunday of the month, Confession and Communion, when possible, are indispensable conditions, yet, if Rosarians are so circumstanced that they cannot comply with these two conditions, they may gain the indulgences named provided they recite the entire Rosary, or at least a third part of it if they cannot do more, and provided they have the disposition to confess and go to Communion at the time prescribed by the Church. (Innocent XI. Nuper, Cap. 2 ex.)

VI. We have a right to order from what has been stated in the foregoing numbers that whenever it is merely impossible for a Rosarian to make his visit to a church or chapel of the Rosary, he may gain the indulgence attached to such a work by visiting any church whatsoever. This decision has been plainly declared in regard to the indulgence of the Stations (Leo X. Mon 1518); and also in regard to the indulgence of fifty years, granted once a day, to the recitation of a chaplet. (S. Pius V. 25, Julii 1567).

Whenever the word "Statutes is used in connection with the Rosary Devotion it has a special meaning, it refers to the rules of the five olders or to the rules of another five times for the purpose of gaining the indulgences of the Station churches in Rome. At the head of each Mass of the time during Lent, the name of the Station church is given.

VII. All members of Religious communities and their tertiaries, or third order secular members, recite a decade a day, in favor of the poor souls in Purgatory, a plenary indulgence by reciting a third part of the Rosary, and Office, in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament, or, when this last condition is not possible, anywhere. (Benedict XIII., 21 Dec., 1725).

A New History of California.

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA by Theodore Hittell. Volume First. San Francisco: Pacific Press Publishing House and Occidental Publishing Company. 1888.

In no State in the Union is the Catholic Church more intimately connected with its history than it is with that of the State in California. Hence when a non-Catholic undertakes to write the history of this State—and the region formerly comprised under the general term of "Alta and Lower California"—he should direct himself of such Professional prejudices as a false education received from false teachers may have forced into his mind; he should hold himself as overly balanced as the scales of Justice itself, and his literary labors should be of that liberal character which does not delaine the dead nor insult the religious belief of the living members of God's fold.

The early history of California is most intimately connected with the tenders of the Franciscan, Carmelite and Dominican of California's earliest history, and behind these footprints upon the sands of time which the waves of anti-Catholic animosity can never wash out! Its work for Jesus Christ, its care for poverty, its question their sufferings, and to pick Sown in their sufferings, and to pick Sown in their sufferings. But they were men who walked off their lives in the shadow of God's sanctity; men who were scrupulously exact in keeping before their minds a perpetual remembrance of the decree of the Decalogue and the precepts of Christianity. Their time time because a daily sermon to those Indians that surrounded them, and the Fathers did nothing more than this they deserve the affectionate recognition of every Californian who delights in seeing the development of practical Christianity in the great good accomplished by the Catholic missionaries who made this coast subject to the Cross.

The writer who says that the work of these missionaries was barren and unpopulate son only glance at the labor of the missionaries from a standpoint of selfish worldliness, losing sight altogether of the spiritual benefits which their supernatural lives left as a legacy to mankind. Those men were heroes in heroes; they taught mankind obedience to the commands of Christ by carrying the Cross to unknown tribes and peoples; they taught the world self-denial by selling themselves voluntarily in order to Christianize and civilize the Indian people who are characterized by Mr. Hittell as "the most abject, the most squalid, the most brutish of human beings;" yet the instruction imparted in the daily lives and holy example of the missionaries ofloened the rough hearts of these beasts, tempered their brutality, improved their abject condition, and let the effulgence of God's faith illumine souls that otherwise would have died and darkness of paganism! Was not this good fruit? Did not such heroism in the holy cause of God leave a beneficent impress upon the future? It is just the opposite of the world that worships heroes, but let the Christian Church be the world's "historians" that keeps saints out of heaven. The grovelling, gold seeking men of the Mammon-loving world can see no use therein for Indians, naked Mexicans or ossified Friars. To him religion is a "humbug, tried a "cloak," and the idea that men should leave civilized life and all its attractions in order to teach a few thousand worthless Indians to say prayers, to chant hymns, and to lift the earth is a piece of lofty unreality of respect from any rational man. Yet it is through these despised agencies that God has made the world what it is.

He chose the foolish ones of this world whereby to confound those who call themselves wise, and thus it was with the Catholic missionaries of California whose Faith led them on to venture a hitherto unknown territory, to the achievement of works which even now erect evident witnesses of California's ancient glory. And, as we cast our eyes forward, in the spirit in that same faith we can see the missionary Fathers surrounded by the tear of those made to feel that they have cared for Christ, chanting canticles of everlasting joy, and praying that the scales may fall from those who have hitherto been blind, and that the souls the missionaries were robbed and foolishly expelled from the country that therefore their labors were not "in vain" right path. Their labors were in the path that leads to Paradise, and happy is the man who pursues the path perseveringly pledge to their saintly footsteps.

We notice from a Washington dispatch—not published in the local dailies—that Hon. Jack Montgomery's nomination for Lieutenant-Governor, Edmund having reported adversely to it as Chairman of Judiciary Committee. We cautiously await the outcome of this case in order to see how much love for principle, manhood and freedom of speech exists among the people of California.

IRISH PARLIAMENTARY FUND

$17,000 FROM FETALUMA

PETALUMA, March 12, 1888.

[illegible] Please find Draft for $17,000 [illegible] Lord Lieutenant of Petaluma, also the names of the Ladies who collected the money, and the names of the donors to the Ministry, and Parnell Fund. Yours respectfully,

W. [illegible]

The following are our representatives:

L. E. Mc[illegible] of Mrs. Lucy, $50 each; J. E. Mc[illegible] of Mrs. Lucy, $50 each;

Farm and Home.

The Farmer's Workshop.

Every farmer, market-gardener and fruit-grower whose business requires the keeping of a team, or even one horse, should also have a few carpenters' tools, a bench, and a vise. It would be more convenient to have a suitable room specially for a workshop; but if that is impossible, then a corner of the main floor of the barn will do.

If provided with a few suitable tools, any man of ingenuity can do many a job of repairing for himself which would otherwise cost him a good deal of money, and often great loss of time besides. To illustrate, while ploughing corn one day, when a boy, the plough-point caught on an unseen root, and the sudden jerk broke the beam. My employer, who was working with me in the same field, gave me his horse and plough, and then taking mine went to the barn. There he made and put in a new beam, which did not take more than two or three hours. He hired three miles from home, and it would have taken him longer than that to have gone to town and had it mended, so he probably saved time as well as money.

Winter is a season of comparative leisure to most farmers and many gardeners. At that time they would find a workbench and set of tools very useful. There are many who go to town every little job they have to be blacksmithed, and then find probable occasion for many stormy days through the winter and spring, when it would be impossible to do much outside work.

Antiquity of Wheat.

President Charles Barnard, in an article in the Century for January, says that the wheat plant is one of the oldest in cultivation. The Chinese recorded its culture as early as 2700 B.C., and it is one of the prehistoric plants, remains of which seeds being found in the ruins of the houses of the lake dwellers. While there are several races of wheat, and while there has been ground, producing hybrids, it has retained its true character, and been entirely independent of other plants since its culture began. Compared with wheat, rye is a modern plant. It is not figured on any Egyptian monuments, and seems to have been first cultivated in the Roman empire about the beginning of the Christian era, though it may have been known somewhat earlier in Russia and Tartary. While these two commercial plants have been cultivated side by side for centuries, the first plants appearing to be true hybrids, between them have seen this year in this country. Wheat and rye may have been crossed, however, yet there appears to be no record of anything like the results here obtained.

A Fatal Notion.

Not long since a young man who was inquiring into the nature of an employment offered him, asked: "What is the least time in which I can learn enough about it to get along?" This question is suggestive, because it shows a tendency to hasten to secure results without the proper amount of labor. Here was a young man with all of his active life before him. He could afford to take time to acquire the details of a business, but he preferred to get just enough knowledge of it to enable him to perform the duties required of him so that he could hold the position, and no more. To him anything more than the barest knowledge or skill which would insure him against discharge was lost. He was in a hurry to get into a position where he could get some compensation, but he had no desire to be competent to command higher wages. He was in the mood of a boy who hires out for his board and clothes, and cares little for anything else. He was in a hurry to get into a position where he could get some compensation, but he had no desire to be competent to command higher wages. He was in the mood of a boy who hires out for his board and clothes, and cares little for anything else. It never occurred to him that something else than the bare knowledge of the duties of the place which he proposes to join and to the man who paid for his services. On the contrary, he was counting on giving the poorest and most unskilled service which would be accepted for the wages which he desired. His aim was to give the least for the most, and if he could have secured wages for no service whatever, he would have done so, even if such a course involved questionable action. That is not an exceptional case. Every community has such young men, and such men who have been young men. That there are such is due in part to a haste to get into employment, and partly to a desire to get along with as little effort as possible. To this very general sentiment can be attributed a large number of inefficient men who crowd every branch of business industry. Poor workmen, shiftless and heedless laborers, listless and dishonest salesmen—in short, all sorts of inefficiency and lack of purpose in all men in every walk of life. It is this running which fills communities with shiftless, and eventually with all kinds of men who lie in wait to seize the earnings of other men.

It scarcely need be said that the men who thus enter the employments of a community are a hindrance and a check upon prosperity, that idleness and unskilled labor is the bane of successful industry. But great as the inconvenience and loss which this spirit of inefficiency and shirking brings to others, it is doubtful if comparison is that suffered by the persons who adopt the do-as-little-as-possible policy. The young man who acts on that principle never succeeds. His own unfaithfulness and dishonesty bind upon him a burden with which he cannot rise. Other men are promoted, but he keeps the place where he began. He is never esteemed in his calling, because he is no credit to it, and because he has no pride in it and no ambition to succeed in serious effort.

Let Love Preside.

Here is one word of advice for those who would have a happy home, and that is, let love preside in it. When your behavior in the domestic circle becomes a mere matter of calculation; when the curse you give is merely the result of deliberate study of the most effective one; when your kisses are given for you scarcely, happiness has died on the hearth-stone. When the husband's position as head of the household is maintained by loudness of voice, by strength of arm, by fire of temper, the republic of domestic bliss has become a despotism. Oh, ye who promised to love each other at the altar, how dare ye commit perjury! Let the shadow of suspicion come on your affection. It is easier of till that flower than it is to make it live again. The blast from hell that puts out that light, leaves you in the blackness of darkness, forever.

A Friendly Office.

It is sometimes true kindness to press one another percon the duty of doing something not quite pleasant. For instance, some people have a great objection, when they are in bad health, to calling in medical aid. The really kind friend ought to point out the backsliness of neglecting to take all measures necessary to restore the health. Frequently dependency and irritability arise from mere disturbance, sometimes the cause is want of occupation, but oftentimes produces the same result. A wise physician will discriminate between the causes, and prefer to stop short to remove the nervous condition. The true friend will see the system recommended is carried out, even if the sufferer is at times inclined to murmur.

When the blood is loaded with impurities, and moves sluggishly in the veins, a cathartic is needed, as the condition of the vital fluid cannot long continue healthy. There is nothing better than Ayer's Sarsaparilla to purify the blood, and impart energy to vigorous

WHAT WARNER'S SAFE CURE CURES AND WHY.

CONGESTION OF THE KIDNEYS BACKACHE. INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS. BLADDER. OR URINARY ORGANS.

Catarrh of the Bladder, Gravel, Stone, Dropsy, Enlarged Prostrate Gland. Impotency or General Debility. Bright's Disease.

WHY IT IS A SPECIFIC remedy known that has power to expel the uric acid and urea, of which there are an organic secreted each day as the result of muscular action, and artificial, if taken in the blood, to kill six men. It is the direct cause of all the above diseases, as well as of Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Insanity, and Death.

This great specific relieves the kidneys of too much blood, from whom from all patients, restores them to healthy action by its certain and soothing power.

IT CURES ALSO Jaundice, Enlargement of the Liver, Abscess and Caries of the Hip Joints, Biliousness, Headache, Furred Tongue, Sleeplessness, Languor, Debility, Constipation, Gall Stones, and every unpleasant symptom, and a workman's set of tools very useful. There are many who be handy with tools who find it pay well as on the kidneys, increasing the secretion and flow of bile, regulates an stalling functions, removes constipation, and makes Dyspepsia a word unknown in a sound stomach. Sold by all druggists, price $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

IT CURES ALSO Female Complaints, Leucorrhea, Displacements, Relaxations, Ulcerations, Painful Menstruation, Prolapsus, Fluxes, Fits, Convulsions and Child-bed Fever, and all sides and ailments peculiar to the sex.

WHY? All these troubles, as is well known to every physician of eminence, arise from congestion of the kidneys, and the poisonous matter which they should separate from the blood, instead of breaking down and expelling, is absorbed and poisons the blood, and is the direct cause of all the ailments from which women suffer, and must as surely follow as night does the day.

WHY Warner's Safe Cure is acknowledged by thousands of our best citizens to be the only true blood purifier, or because it acts upon scientific principles, and is the very root of the disease, and not on the symptoms and liver. For if these organs were kept in health, all the morbid waste matter so deadly poisonous if retained in the body, would be passed out. On the contrary, if they are congested, the acids are taken up by the blood, decomposed, and carried back to the most remote part of the body.

WHY 99 per cent of all diseases which afflict humanity, arise from impaired kidneys, as shown by medical authorities. Warner's Safe Cure, by its direct action, possessing the power to restore the kidneys to healthy capacity, nature curing all the above diseases herself, when the cause is removed, and we guarantee Warner's Safe Cure as a positive preventive if taken in time.

As you value health, take it to avoid sickness, as it will at all times, under all circumstances, keep all the vital organs healthy.

We also Guarantee a Cure and benefit in every case of Diabetes, Dropsy, and Gravel, when the cure is within the power of medicine, and in all other diseases of the urinary organs, or malarial poisoning, ailments of the respiratory and digestive systems, liver disease and to all those who from the use of an alcoholic remedy is addicted.

Warner's Safe Cure is sold by all druggists, price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Address, H. H. WARNER & CO., Rochester, N. Y.

Catholic Societies.

All Societies of Catholic Organizations are required to send list of officers and other interesting items for publication for publication.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

FATHERLY THERE—The Particular Council meets every evening, and a general meeting of the conference is held quarterly. The Particular Council, in addition to the ordinary duties of visiting the poor, relieving their wants, and providing them with employment, undertakes charities, a full proportion of which falls to its share. The amount of charity thus expended from collections, dues of members and donations in money and kind, amounted to $1,200 last year. The Conference has charge of the following offices: Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Shoulds; President, Thomas Brady; Vice-President, Michael Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Brady; Secretary, John Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Librarian, Thomas Ryan. The following are the officers of the Conference of Young Men: President, Thomas Ryan; Vice-President, John Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Ryan; Secretary, John Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Librarian, Thomas Ryan. The following list comprises the officers of the Ladies' Conference of Charity: President, Mrs. Thomas Brady; Vice-President, Mrs. Ryan; Treasurer, Mrs. Thomas Ryan; Secretary, Miss Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Miss Ryan; Visitors, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Thomas Ryan, Mrs. Ryan, Miss Ryan, Miss Ryan, Miss

SETON HALL BURNED.

The Seminary Building Saved by Heroic Efforts—The Loss is Estimated at about $40,000.

While the family and the students at Seton Hall College, in North Orange, were at dinner yesterday noon—says the New York Sun of the 15th inst.—Henry Faindt, the village shoemaker who attends to the footgear of almost everybody in the college, strolled into the college grounds from the road with several pairs of shoes under his arms. As he turned the corner of the seminary building he glanced along the facade of the main college hall and discovered a little column of smoke issuing from the cornice at the base of the Mansard roof. He started for the door of the refectory in the burning building, knowing that almost everybody in the institution was at dinner there. Before he reached the door Chas. Hale one of the smaller students, met him in the quadrangle. The shoemaker called Hale's attention to the fire, which was rapidly gaining headway, and the boy went quickly to the dinner room and quietly informed Father Marshall, the Vice-President in charge, that the building was on fire. Father Marshall stepped to his feet, and informed by a score professors and students, ran to the dormitory in the fourth story.

The students ran out of the building as ordered by the Bishop to getting out the furniture and bedding. The students and seminarians worked with great energy and pluck, fighting flames with buckets of water and in carrying bedding and furniture.

Nearly everybody in Orange, and when the workers were found in danger, they had a hard ing the greater part of the portable property was safely removed to the campus and quadrangle.

The fire was first observed at 12:40, and within an hour the roof fell in with a crash, carrying down the floors and several partition walls. Meanwhile an alarm was sent to Newark by telephone, and a steamer and supply wagon responded. Before the firemen arrived the interior of the college building was in a blaze and had crossed over the passage connecting it with the seminary building was made the centre of the students' efforts. They formed a bucket line and hung wet blankets from the windows and roof of the seminary at the point of greatest danger, where but six feet intervened between them and the burning building. By heroic efforts they succeeded in checking the advance of the fire until the Newark steam engine arrived and turned the stream of water from a neighboring pond upon the endangered building.

Nothing was done toward extinguishing the flames in the college building until the safety of the adjacent buildings was assured, as it was apparent that all efforts to save it would be futile. The students, with buckets and hands, assisted with smoke brusted themselves in carrying, sorting, and packing away the goods rescued from the burning building. They worked steadily until 8 o'clock, when an order was given to them to pack up and seek their homes. The fire was then under control. Nothing was left of the college building but four brick walls and the square water tower at the southern end.

The building consisted of four stories, the upper one being of white pine, with a Mansard roof. The building was about 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, and it was divided up into class rooms, study rooms, play rooms, sleeping dormitories, and refectory. It cost between $40,000 and $50,000 when it was built, in 1865, and it was insured in the Hartford and Phoenix Insurance Company of this city for about $20,000.

Little personal property of the students was insured. Father Corrigan, a student, lost about $200 in money, jewelry, and personal effects, and William McLaughlin lost an equal amount. Hicks Brothers sought praise from Vice President Marshall and other officers of the college for extraordinary energy in fighting the fire. They said he saved the seminary by his coolness and bravery in directing his companions and in carrying out the principal.

Bishop Wigger, who has his residence at the college, was absent in South Orange when the fire broke out, but he was quickly on hand, and from the seminary porch he encouraged the boys and men and directed their efforts. The President, the Rev. James Henry Corrigan, was in this city, where he attended a meeting of the school board on Monday night. Several thousand persons from Newark and South Orange gathered in the college grounds during the fire, but they came too late to render much assistance.

The building contained ninety collegians, thirty-seven seminarians, fifteen Sisters, a number of priests, and twenty-two servants. All got out of the burning building and saved their clothes and books. Arrangements will be sent to their homes.

Congress of Catholic Scholars to be Held in 1887.

An interesting congress is to mark next year. The recent Catholic Congress of Germany appointed a section for Christian Apologetics, and this section has just decided to continue for 1887 the great International Congress of Catholic Savants, to be held in Paris. The organizing committee, nominated at Rome, met for the first time in Paris on December 29 in under the presidency of Mgr. d'Hestier, Rector of the Catholic University of that city. The committee now consists of 77 members resident in Paris, and 26 members in the provinces or abroad. Among them are many men of the eminent Bollandist and historian, Pere de Smedt; the P. J. Prof. Gilbert and de Harlez, of the University of Louvain; Kurth, of Liege; de Lapparent and Duchesne, of Paris; de Margerie, of Lille; Delisle, of Lyons; Duilhe, de St. Projet, of Toulouse; de Nadaillac, de Beaucourt, de l'Epinois, Paul Allard and many other name illustrious in science history, literature and other departments of learning. The work of the congress will fall into nine divisions: 1. Philosophical and Social Sciences. 2. Exact and Natural Sciences. 3. Historical Sciences, and each division will comprehend five sections. The Penal Law will shortly issue a circular describing in detail the organization and plan of work. In inviting all the Catholic savants of Europe to participate in the preliminary labors, principally by drawing up of memoirs, and fixing the actual state of science in regard to the various questions effecting Catholic faith.

The Encyclical "Immortale Dei."

The Encyclical of his Holiness Leo XIII., entitled "Immortale Dei" on the Christian constitution of States, has been translated into Greek, Arabic, Turkish, and Armenian, and has a marvellous effect in the East, where it has produced a great and salutary impression, not only amongst Catholics of various Rites, but also amongst members of other communions. Copies of the Encyclical have been distributed to Schismatics, anxious to read this Pontifical document, which "constitutes to-day the authoritative code of the world," as the Apostolic Delegate in Bey-rout wrote the Propaganda. Copies of it in French and Italian, language well known in that country, were also distributed, and many persons expressed to the Delegate their admiration of the Encyclical. The Governor General of Lebanon, Wasa Pacha, has, in letter to the Prelate already mentioned, described it as a matter piece in thought, expression and style.

—Dentistry in all branches; prices reasonable Alfred E. Blake, D. D. S., 106 Kearney street.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—The stern truth that Ulster is Protestant is cutting into the Home Rule delusion in Belfast. The same of the Orange orators no longer affect to speak for "Ulster." It is "North-east Ulster" only that remains as "free-dom's home or slavery's grave." This is labour; but it is still an aspiration. South Down is part of "Northern Ireland," and South Down is a solidly Nationalist Nationalist "Nationalist." Dungannon, in the north-west, is the centre of the present discussion of the dwindling Orange party.

Cork.—Mr. Henry Lindsay Young, late Mayor of Cork, commenced a libel action on Feb. 2, for the purpose of clearing the name from his honesty in the transaction of his business. The brasstry, complained of by the Rev. T. O'Connell, C.C., President of the Michelstown National League, acted in a body on the landlord, and asked for a reduction of 25 per cent. on the September rate. After a friendly discussion, the matter was arranged by the tenants accepting a reduction of 20 per cent.

At St. Joseph's Carmelite Convent, on Wednesday, Feb. 24, Mary, in religion Sister Anne Joseph, eldest daughter of Mr. Nicholas Dallinghan, county Cork, received the habit and the bands of the Order. Mr. P. Walsh, C. C. Ballyvourney, was the sermon preacher.

Dublin.—The Rev. Pierce Power, P.P., V.F., Clonbulloge, Bishop-elect of Waterford, was presented with an address by the members of the Clonbulloge Branch of the League, delivered there by Mr. Edward Murphy, a respected farmer residing in Portrane, near Mosscards, in Co. Limerick, whom he knew passing away and knocking him down at Portlaw, in the county Waterford, where he had been marketing.

King's County.—The Rev. R. Hurley, P.P., Kinnitty, breathed his last on Feb. 17. When the sad intelligence reached Birr several and regret was freely expressed by the people of every class.

Kerry.—Bartholomew O'Connor Hugan, of Tralee, in the county of Kerry, solicitor, has been adjudged a lunatic.

Limerick.—A public meeting, for which the people in the county Limerick had been some time preparing was held on Sunday, Feb. 21, at Newcastle West in every respect successful as a great expression of popular opinion. The object was to protest against the system of intimidation and eviction, as exemplified in the case of a couple of respectable tenants in Ballingarry. They had demanded a reasonable reduction from their landlord, but this was refused and their cattle were seized for the rent; but at the last moment, when the sheriff was on the point of effecting a seizure of their property, the interest of the Bishop of Limerick, who was present at the meeting, and the sentiments which many of the leading men expressed in order to be present. They came from Limerick City, from Kilmallock, from Abbeyfeale, from Bruree, and many other places, mostly or more distant. The great event of the meeting was the speech of the Bishop of Limerick, which was received in that strain of enthusiasm which was to be expected from the Bishop, who was received in that strain of enthusiasm which was to be expected from the Bishop, who was received in that strain of enthusiasm which was to be expected from the Bishop, who

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE BLACKSMITH'S CHILD.

The golden rays of morning were streaming over the dale,
And down along the mountain and out across the vale
The flowers were springing fresh and bright to kiss the gentle breeze,
The nestling birds on pinions light was singing over the trees
When from the distant valley upon the neatest air
Came sounds of bells ringing, calling men to prayer
Now people, the wealthiest, now dying to the West,
Those great bells kept sobbing, bidding men to rest.

From many an humble cabin and lonely manse
Came forth
Old men and young came trooping on their way to holy Mass.
And further down the valley there moved a little band
Of happy smiling children going hand in hand.
There was little Ella smiling fair and Kate with laughing eyes,
And winsome Ves with joyous face as sweet as summer skies,
But sweeter far and fairer than the moss rose blushing will
Was little brown-eyed Mary, the blacksmith's only child.

The sunlight funnel her glowing cheek and kissed her head and baby
As if it loved with mallow cheek to linger softly there;
The birds upon each hawthorn bush opralsed their sweet notes in song,
And seemed to warble sweeter as Mary tripped along.

For a cripple's love was in her breast as pure as self-sacrificing,
Her soul was filled with angels blest the heavenly bliss
Her every dream and constant thought was of this land of Love,
And wondrous questions oft she asked about the saints above.

Now music sweet is stealing along the morning breeze
From the little church in the valley among the elm trees;
Inside the aisles is kneeling upon the sacred sod,
And humble hearts are smiling sweet devotion in their God.

The Holy Sacrifice proceeds—peace to each soul is stealing,
Now the Gloria in Excelsis the choir is sweetly singing,
Hark! the bell has ceased its tinkling for the Consecrated was ever sighing and,
And step by turns the Angel priest with reverential bow,

"Behold the sweet and spotless Lamb," the saintly Father said,
"For wounded souls a heavenly balm, for them His Blood was shed,
Now gathering to the altar rail to taste that Bread
Which Angels ever adore."

Suddenly the captain in command (a handsome fellow) reined in his horse with an exclamation, and at the same instant, with a cry of surprise and consternation, Honor ran swiftly to the house. The regiment passed on, the stranger looking back as far as I could see him. As soon as I could follow Honor I hastened onward. I found her sitting in the kitchen, her face in both hands, sobbing.

But, lingering at the altar rail, remained a little child,
'Twas the blacksmith's little daughter with features calm and mild.
Her snowy hands were softly shaped across her breast
Her eyes were raised to Heaven as if longing to be blest.

When she: a light ob one round her in rays so soft and clear,
As if angels bright had found her and united her dear.
Hush! the most reverent and gentle smile, so pure, so heavenly bright.
Oh! can I be, oh! can it be—her soul has taken flight?

Yes, her baby spirit has wandered, her sweet soul has fled
Away beyond this earth and earth's pleasures to the Dead.
Yes, away beyond the stars angels, to those golden gates of glory,
Where no pleasure and happiness where every thing is here.

Now and forever, gentle reader, on the little angel dead
Pray, pray that in purity and keep your soul-relative alive.
And when temptation whispers with voice so soft and sweet,
Remember little Mary—the blacksmith's gentle child.

FRANCIS QUIZE.

Literary Miscellany.

The Ways of God.

The story of a Wornan-Girl. Whose Pilgrimage Performances Served a Sent.

CHAPTER I.

In the early days of the civil war there came to me—a middle-aged woman, living alone, and in need of a servant—a fresh, young maid-of-all-work, sent by my pastor and friend, Father Doane. I will remember what a pretty picture she made, standing before me with loosely clasped hands while I read the letter of her parish priest to mine, not knowing which to admire most, the noble simplicity of his who had written it, or the confiding abandonment of her who had entrusted it across the sea, but yet support through the world.

She wore a long, dark-blue cloak, with a double cape that covered her completely, and made her seem taller than she really was. An odd-looking little velvet cap was set modestly, not jaunty, on her brown hair, that peeped in wavy ringlets from beneath the rim, and hung in two, thick shining strands down to her waist. Her whole costume was effective. Yet one could see that nothing had been done for effect; labors, taste and a sense of the fitness of things had made up an artistic whole which could not have been surpassed by the most skire devotee of fashion. Totally unconscious of herself, one could see that she stood, she was yet an embodiment of womanly grace and beauty. Her skin was of that exquisite fairness and clearness which usually denotes German birth, country, but the deep, dark, long lashed eyes were of Irish blue, the brunette, I think, I ever saw.

"What may you do?" I asked, finally, after feasting my eyes on her sweet, shy beauty.

"I'll do anything, ma'am, you set me to do," she answered, a sweet, swift, smile chasing the dimples from cheek to cheek.

I would like to spend the rest of my life looking at you, I thought, but I said, returning her smile:

"You would have nearly all there to do here, my dear. I live with a lady—a little, little service; still, there is always work, you know."

"Well, ma'am, I am cook and wash and iron and sewing and clean, and do anything, indeed, if you'd want me."

"You seem to be a willing little body," I said, "and young to know so well how to toil and spin. How old are you, my dear?"

"Nineteen, ma'am" she said.

I was surprised. "Why you do not look more than sixteen. Have you been long in the country?"

"Just a year, ma'am."

"And where have you lived during that time?"

"About a month in New York, ma'am; three months in Brooklyn, and a while in Buffalo."

"And what is your name, my dear?"

"Honor, ma'am, Honor O'Brien."

"Well, Honor, I said, "you please me very much, and, if you will you may stay by here, I think we shall get on together."

"O, ma'am, I would like it above everything. It is just what I wanted, and I will try very hard to do your bidding."

"Yes; I think you will," said I. "But you must not run away from Avondale as you did from New York and Brooklyn and Buffalo. Maybe you've heard the old saying: 'A rolling stone gathers no moss, Honor?'

"Indeed, then, I often have, ma'am.—But here a subtle and inexplicable change came over her face.

"There was a reason, ma'am, a very good reason, and that was why the priest in Buffalo advised me to come here, or to some other place away from the big cities."

I wondered what the reason could have been that made it necessary for that modest little maiden to leave the "big cities" behind her, but I forbore to ask, knowing it could not have been through any laxity of conduct on her part, her face was so open, her manner too frank for that.

She entered upon her duties immediately, and proved to be all I had hoped and expected. Deft of hand, quick of foot, and, after she had been with me awhile, so intuitively, light of heart, my little hand-maiden was a veritable treasure. At that time I was a constant, a shadow of something that had been, or a tear of something impending not in keeping with her natural character; but whatever it was, it was soon off, and she went about the house singing at her work from morning until night.

CHAPTER II.

As time passed, Honor grew to be as like a servant, and more a companion and friend. She had received a fair education, she skilled in all kinds of light needlework, and was passionately fond of flowers, which seemed to respond to her gentle touch like conscious things; and, before the summer passed well under way, my little garden was a bloom of glory. She never spoke of her past life; was altogether reticent about her home or relatives. Her piety was as sincere as unobtrusive—a weekly communing, she explained her daily life according of the principles of her Divine Master, doing all things well to which she put her hand.

Honor had been with me nearly nine months, the little town was the resort of several railway lines diverging west and south, and during that time I had often been the rendezvous of regiments marching to the front. We had grown familiar with the pomp and trappings of war, if not with its horrors, and the sounds of fife and drum were heard very often in the streets.

One evening we were working in the garden, when a passing regiment attracted our attention, and with that fascination which martial things have exerted over the human mind from time immemorial, we rose from our work to watch the boys in blue as they marched by.

Suddenly the captain in command (a handsome fellow) reined in his horse with an exclamation, and at the same instant, with a cry of surprise and consternation, Honor ran swiftly to the house. The regiment passed on, the stranger looking back as far as I could see him. As soon as I could follow Honor I hastened onward. I found her sitting in the kitchen, her face in both hands, sobbing.

But, lingering at the altar rail, remained a little child,
'Twas the blacksmith's little daughter with features calm and mild.
Her snowy hands were softly shaped across her breast
Her eyes were raised to Heaven as if longing to be blest.

When she: a light ob one round her in rays so soft and clear,
As if angels bright had found her and united her dear.
Hush! the most reverent and gentle smile, so pure, so heavenly bright.
Oh! can I be, oh! can it be—her soul has taken flight?

Yes, her baby spirit has wandered, her sweet soul has fled
Away beyond this earth and earth's pleasures to the Dead.
Yes, away beyond the stars angels, to those golden gates of glory,
Where no pleasure and happiness where every thing is here.

Now and forever, gentle reader, on the little angel dead
Pray, pray that in purity and keep your soul-relative alive.
And when temptation whispers with voice so soft and sweet,
Remember little Mary—the blacksmith's gentle child.

FRANCIS QUIZE.

Literary Miscellany.

The Ways of God.

The story of a Woman-Girl. Whose Pilgrimage Performances Served a Sent.

CHAPTER I.

In the early days of the civil war there came to me—a middle-aged woman, living alone, and in need of a servant—a fresh, young maid-of-all-work, sent by my pastor and friend, Father Doane. I will remember what a pretty picture she made, standing before me with loosely clasped hands while I read the letter of her parish priest to mine, not knowing which to admire most, the noble simplicity of him who had written it, or the confiding abandonment of her who had entrusted it across the sea, but yet support through the world.

She wore a long, dark-blue cloak, with a double cape that covered her completely, and made her seem taller than she really was. An odd-looking little velvet cap was set modestly, not jaunty, on her brown hair, that peeped in wavy ringlets from beneath the rim, and hung in two, thick shining strands down to her waist. Her whole costume was effective. Yet one could see that nothing had been done for effect; labors, taste and a sense of the fitness of things had made up an artistic whole which could not have been surpassed by the most shire devotee of fashion. Totally unconscious of herself, one could see that she stood, she was yet an embodiment of womanly grace and beauty. Her skin was of that exquisite fairness and clearness which usually denotes German birth, country, but the deep, dark, long lashed eyes were of Irish blue, the brunette, I think, I ever saw.

"What may you do?" I asked, finally, after feasting my eyes on her sweet, shy beauty.

"I'll do anything, ma'am, you set me to do," she answered, a sweet, swift, smile chasing the dimples from cheek to cheek.

I would like to spend the rest of my life looking at you, I thought, but I said, returning her smile:

"You would have nearly all there to do here, my dear. I live with a lady—a little, little service; still, there is always work, you know."

"Well, ma'am, I am cook and wash and iron and sewing and clean, and do anything, indeed, if you'd want me."

"You seem to be a willing little body," I said, "and young to know so well how to toil and spin. How old are you, my dear?"

"Nineteen, ma'am" she said.

I was surprised. "Why you do not look more than sixteen. Have you been long in the country?"

"Just a year, ma'am."

"And where have you lived during that time?"

"About a month in New York, ma'am; three months in Brooklyn, and a while in Buffalo."

"And what is your name, my dear?"

"Honor, ma'am, Honor O'Brien."

"Well, Honor, I said, "you please me very much, and, if you will you may stay by here, I think we shall get on together."

"O, ma'am, I would like it above everything. It is just what I wanted, and I will try very hard to do your bidding."

"Yes; I think you will," said I. "But you must not run away from Avondale as you did from New York and Brooklyn and Buffalo. Maybe you've heard the old saying: 'A rolling stone gathers no moss, Honor?'

"Indeed, then, I often have, ma'am.—But here a subtle and inexplicable change came over her face.

"There was a reason, ma'am, a very good reason, and that was why the priest in Buffalo advised me to come here, or to some other place away from the big cities."

I wondered what the reason could have been that made it necessary for that modest little maiden to leave the "big cities" behind her, but I forbore to ask, knowing it could not have been through any laxity of conduct on her part, her face was so open, her manner too frank for that.

She entered upon her duties immediately, and proved to be all I had hoped and expected. Deft of hand, quick of foot, and, after she had been with me awhile, so intuitively, light of heart, my little hand-maiden was a veritable treasure. At that time I was a constant, a shadow of something that had been, or a tear of something impending not in keeping with her natural character; but whatever it was, it soon was off, and she went about the house singing at her work from morning until night.

CHAPTER II.

As time passed, Honor grew to be as like a servant, and more a companion and friend. She had received a fair education, she skilled in all kinds of light needlework, and was passionately fond of flowers, which seemed to respond to her gentle touch like conscious things; and, before the summer passed well under way, my little garden was a bloom of glory. She never spoke of her past life; was altogether reticent about her home or relatives. Her piety was as sincere as unobtrusive—a weekly communing, she explained her daily life according of the principles of her Divine Master, doing all things well to which she put her hand.

Honor had been with me nearly nine months, the little town was the resort of several railway lines diverging west and south, and during that time I had often been the rendezvous of regiments marching to the front. We had grown familiar with the pomp and trappings of war, if not with its horrors, and the sounds of fife and drum were heard very often in the streets.

One evening we were working in the garden, when a passing regiment attracted our attention, and with that fascination which martial things have exerted over the human mind from time immemorial, we rose from our work to watch the boys in blue as they marched by.

Suddenly the captain in command (a handsome fellow) reined in his horse with an exclamation, and at the same instant, with a cry of surprise and consternation, Honor ran swiftly to the house. The regiment passed on, the stranger looking back as far as I could see him. As soon as I could follow Honor I hastened onward. I found her sitting in the kitchen, her face in both hands, sobbing.

"Do tell me, ma'am, they were all ladies of great fortune, and I had nothing in the way of money. I heard that in Avondale they'd take a girl with a few pounds or so, and I made up my mind to strive to get one.

"I went out to service, then, to Mr. O'Dee, of the Lakes, and I liked her well. The wages were small, and it was a very public place; but I stove to save every cent to come to America. Father James knew all about it and he gave me a character word, and encouraged me as well as he could.

"About a year and a half ago there came some young English gentlemen to the place; they weren't all Englishmen either, though I thought they were then.

"One of them was very free and easy from the first. He'd follow me and say things about my eyes and hair till I didn't know whether my head was on my shoulders or not. I was both to tell the mistress, so I went to the priest, and he bid me pray and keep a good heart, and the father would soon get tired. When the party went away and he with them there was a load off my mind, but he wasn't gone till he was back, and I was to the priest again.

"How much money have ya, Honor?" said he.

"'Ten pounds, Father,' said I.

"'Well, then, my child,' said he, 'I think the time has come for you to go to America. That is a bad man and a dangerous man. My nothing to say one if your intention; leave it all to me and I'll make it right with the Mrs. O'Dee.'

"I stole away in the night from my kind mistress and my good Queenstown without any mishap. Father James gave me a letter and I showed it to the captain of the ship, and he said I wasn't afraid but that I could make my way and take care of myself in America till I could make sure of a country. I stepped on the ship with a light heart, for I felt as if I had the world before me and that I was free. The first morning out I saw my tormentor on the upper deck, and he was so.

"In spite of all precautions—money will open every door—he was on the same car as I, so no gentleman still speak to on honor' sake.

Here she paused, unable to continue for some time. It was with great difficulty that I could console her.

"Well, to make a long story short, ma'am, I escaped him at Castle Garden. But, oh, what a sad, lonely feeling was that for me, all alone in a strange country!

"I went straight to the parish priest of the church near the dock. He sent me to a nice lodging house and he himself got me a place as parlor-maid with a lady on Madison avenue. I was beginning to feel contented and easy in my mind, though I never went to Mass but in fear and trembling; I was such a coward at being found out.

"One afternoon I opened the door to some ladies and gentlemen who were waiting at the house for a sleighing party; I was with them, and I knew that my journey must begin again. Before they left the house he tried to put a note in my hand, but I dropped it on the floor. After they went I picked it up and threw it in the fire."

"What was in it, Honor?"

"O, ma'am, do you think I'd read it! Not if I had to walk on burning coals to put it out of the way. That night I packed up again and left my blind mistress feeling very much disgraced. I went back to the lodging house and soon got a place in Brooklyn as nurse-maid. I was there three months. One morning the little boy and myself went out for a walk. All at once he called out, 'There goes Uncle Frank.'

"I looked up—two gentlemen on horseback were riding on the street. Your Uncle Frank, Albert I said I.

"'Nothing of the grey eyes,' said he. 'He don't come to see my mother, because because and Aunt Fanny had a fuss, but he's going to our house now.' It was he again. My heart stood still in my mouth. I got a feeling over me as if I was angry with me and would not save me. But, of course, this didn't last long, ma'am, for I knew well that as long as I tried to save myself God would not desert me. I wasn't long getting my little things together, and I soon left the town behind me. I went to Buffalo, took my letter to the priest at that Jesuits' Church and he sent me to a decent widow woman to board. She persuaded me to go into a shop where they made caps for soldiers. Although I didn't care for some of the girls, there were so many of them, I soon got acquainted and passed my time well, often earning a dollar a day. The Jesuit father was a very nice confessor and while he didn't know all my story, for I was ashamed to be telling it everywhere, he encouraged me to persevere in my resolution and told me that God would bring it about in time. I wanted to save a hundred dollars at least, for I knew that I would need a few clothes whatever I went.

"One day some gentlemen came to visit the factory. I never looked at them till they came to my seat, 'fan that a fine-looking man! He lives in New York, but he has an interest in the factory.' I looked up—he was watching me—you know what I was, ma'am. My head turned round, my heart grew sick and I thought, 'I am secure at last.' Then the evil spirit came down and the sweet Mother of Jesus helped me. 'Sweet Mother, assist me,' was my prayer all that afternoon, and she did. In the evening as we came down the outside stairs of the factory, which open on an alley, I saw him standing at the lamp-post. In such a hour of grief I could do nothing. When I left them behind I heard him following me. He came up to me, I tried faster; I ran, he ran. All at once a fire engine rushed along, and I was afraid of men and boys. They separated us. Then running my utmost, now court I knew, I came out on another street, and ran right into the Jesuit Father. There I told my story, every word. He was very indulgent. And I have been so happy, ma'am, so happy that I often think it is the good Mother to wedding I perhaps be the right thing to stay here always with me. But now—not now I must be up and off, since I've seen him again.

"Honor, I said, between her sobs, my own term falling fast, "you need not go be the cause of what you have seen today. The regiment is marching forward, he must come back. But even if he could, he would not dare think of you.

"'O, ma'am,' she said, "he will follow me to the end of the earth; it must be laid out for me. If there is any escape from this persecution it'll be in the speedy doing of what I set myself to do long years ago. There is surely some place where they will take me and give me a chance to prove my self worthy of serving Almighty God in the way I'd like. I'm young, ma'am, I must yet. The time is come. I have been here too long.

"'Does Father Doane know, Honor,' said, "he would help you? he did.

"'No, ma'am, not at all—he does know that I want to be a nun, but about the old life he knows nothing.

"'Very well, we will go to him together, I said, with a smile.

Between us we told the pitiful story, and Father Doane, with the good priest's blessing and benediction, and promise to think of some asylum where she could be temporarily lodged while awaiting future developments as to her final vocation.

After some correspondence he succeeded in obtaining her admission to the House of the Good Shepherd, near the city of Buffalo, where she could find a temporary home.

I had lost her, my gentle, gracious, faithful Honor. I was so promise ma am, I am not a lucky person to have to do with. Maybe I'll never forget you, and you must think of me and pray for me, ever and ever.

CHAPTER IV.

The crisis of the civil war was passed, and only occasional skirmishes here and there, which, I hoped, would feed still kept alive its embers. A few days after one of the most memorable battles I received a letter from the front, sent from a military hospital. It ran thus:

"DEAR MADAM: Racked by pain, some of my members torn asunder as with pointed arrows, I lie upon my bed, a cripple for nearly dwell, I lie here on my dying bed, musing upon you, and thanking the Almighty that He has granted me the grace of contrition, and I hope, the privilege of asking your pardon and forgiveness.

"Madam, you had—perhaps still have—a poor employ and Irish girl named Honor O'Brien. I once did her, or endeavored to do her, great wrong. Virtue was stronger than the devil, and God takes care of His own. I was paid back the shameful story; if you do, you can realize that I am suffering deeply. If you do not know it, so much the better for your trust in human nature. If Honor is with you still, I beg that you will show her this letter, asking her forgiveness and her prayers. If she is not, and you have access to her, do me the kindness to let her know you have received it, and to forward my much more. A good Sister of Charity, who is my emanuensis, has promised to forward this. Something in the soft voice of this kind woman, heard with my imperfect ears, something in her gentle touch, her patient forbearance with my groans and complaints first stirred whatever was left of virtue in my soul. Tell Honor this—a good woman like herself brought me back to God. If I could write with my own——

Here there was a break in the letter with the addition of the following lines:

Colonel Grey died this morning, a few moments after I had written the preceding words. He had already received the last sacraments. He died as he lived, a cripple.

"Madam, I have a sister, a

THE MONITOR.
EVERY SATURDAY FOR PUBLICATION.
The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—Time has its own revenge. There recently died at Berne, Switzerland, a lineal descendant by his mother of Martin Luther. The deceased was Dr. Franz Hirnschwalder, Catholic professor of systematic theology in the Berne university.

—The articles concerning the Rosary, and the indulgences attached thereto, which are now appearing in these columns, ought to be preserved by all those directly or indirectly interested in order to have them for future reference, as the decisions concerning the indulgences are copied from authorized sources and many of them are not easily attainable.

—The Eastern papers are denouncing the immodest dresses worn by female leaders of folly and fashion in ball-rooms and other public places of amusement. But this is only another sign that America is rapidly drifting into that sinful system which marked those Roman women who were worshiped far more for the charms they publicly displayed than for any interior virtue that adorned their characters.

—Our thanks are hearty tendered to John Hurr, the efficient Supreme Secretary of the Catholic Knights of America, for a very useful Directory of the Order compiled from official returns in his office. From this compendium we learn that there are fifteen Branches of the C. K. of A., in California; Oregon has 1; Washington Territory, 3; Colorado, 5; Utah, 2; New Mexico, 3; Montana, 2, and Nevada 1. Total number of Branches on this coast 31.

—At the meeting of the Board of Education, in this city, on Wednesday last, a resolution was adopted Boycotting the Chinese. The resolution proclaims that it is the sense of the Board that no Principal, teacher or employee in the Public School Department of this city employ, patronize, aid or encourage the Chinese in any way, but do all in their power to legally promote their removal from this coast, and to discourage their future immigration.

—Rev. R. J. Gauy, President of the Waterford Branch of the Young Ireland Society, has received a letter from the widow of General Thomas F. Meagher, offering to present them with a dress and presentation sword belonging to her dead husband. The offer was thankfully received by the society who at their last meeting passed a vote of thanks to Mrs. Meagher for her kindly presentation of such a memento of Meagher to Waterford. Gen. Meagher's son is at present residing in this city, having obtained a position in one of the Custom's Departments.

[illegible] Rev. Father Damen, S. J., died in Providence, Rhode Island, on the 24th inst. He was a brother of the celebrated Jesuit Father Damen, who died at the same time. This is the first instance in the history of the Church in America where a father and two sons died within a fortnight and ready for consecration and destination simultaneously. This looks like a new epoch in the Church, and one that augurs well for the future prosperity of the Church. Let us hope that the unknown dead will pull for others assembled in the Church Triumphant conference, as he has to apply them.

The Indulgences of the Rosary.

Order and system would demand of us to attend first to explaining what a Confraternity of the Rosary is; who has the right to establish it; and what things are required in order that it may be established; and then, what are the conditions required in order that persons may be associated to a Confraternity, and what they must do in order to gain all the advantages of such a Confraternity. But the benefits to be derived from the knowledge of the Indulgences of the Rosary by those who are already enrolled, and who have thereby prior claims on our consideration and attention, bid us to answer first for their benefit particularly, the question "What are the Indulgences of the Rosary?" However, before answering the question just put, we beg all Rosarians to remember most tenaciously that the indulgences of the Rosary are purposely rated, Pope Paul V. revoked them for the purpose of substituting others in their stead, but he re-established them in all their fullness by the Constitution of the 20th of September, 1606. Cum cœlos. Pope Clement VII. granted furthermore to the indulgences of the Rosary the remarkable privilege, viz., that they are never to be considered revoked or suspended by any Decree pronounced unless special mention be made in the Decree of their revocation or suspension—Nisi mentio fuerit de ea, per verba sub facta in eis speciali mentione. (Fulley, O. P., Tom. iv. page 173). In the next place, for it is well known to all, that in enumerating and recording the indulgences which Rosarians may gain, we are following scrupulously authors, manuals and writers that have been approved by the Master-General of the Dominican Order, who has, under the Pope, the supreme guidance and government of the Rosary Confraternity and of the Living Rosary Association.

INDULGENCES WHICH CAN BE GAINED ONLY ONCE DURING LIFE.

1 §. In entering the Confraternity. Several plenary indulgences can be gained on the day of admission into the Confraternity. The first one was granted by Sixtus IV., Ete vineisque; the second by Pius V. Commerantes; conditions: Confession, Communion in the church of a Confraternity, and the recitation of a third part of the Rosary. The third was granted by Gregory XIII., Gloriosi. Conditions: Confession and Communion. The fourth was conceded by Clement VIII., Salvatoris. Condition: Communion. The fifth was granted by the same Pontiff, In Salute. Condition: Communion.

2 §. Indulgences that can be gained at some undefined period during life by Rosarians. Innocent VIII., Nobus, granted one plenary indulgence. Leo X., in confirming, in his Constitution Pastoris aeterni, this indulgence, supposes that he method has regularly rested every week the whole Rosary. The third and the fourth were conceded by Alexander VI., Illius qui. That Pope doubled all the indulgences conceded by his predecessors to Rosarians. The fifth was conceded by Adrian VI., Illius. Conditions: to have recited the Rosary at least once during life, and to hold in one's hand in his last sickness the blessed Rosary made (the candle must be blessed by a Dominican priest, or by any other having faculty from the Master General of the Dominicans). The sixth was conceded by S. Pius V., Consurrent. Conditions: Confession and the Holy Communion in the Catholic Church, hence Professor Lane has evolved a new proposition entirely by which the old "Homer" is transformed by such sentences as ora, vidi, vici, in entirely disordered and sickness are now compelled to say ovum, uvetor, omelet, (!) The "Professor" who invented such a squeeze in style for the common tongue of the Universal Church, must have taken out his Degree for "Hog Latin" in some sovereign second-rate metarian school.

—In the Pittsburg St. Patrick's Day procession was borne a new banner, which attracted much attention and has been since the cause of much comment. It was composed of three broad perpendicular bars—green and orange on the outer and white for the central field. This is said to represent the struggle of united Ireland for liberty. It has been suggested that the center color could be more appropriately made purple than white. As green is a combination of blue and yellow, orange a combination of yellow and red, and purple a combination of blue and red, so would all the colors blend in the new device.

—Representative Kelly, of Pennsylvania, has introduced a Bill into the House reviving the grade of General, and authorizing an appointment thereto, with the evident purpose of then honoring General Sheridan. The rank of General was created for Grant, as that of Lieutenant-General was made for Sherman. With Grant's election in the Presidency Sherman was made General and Sheridan Lieutenant-General, with the proviso that the rank should be personal to each. Sherman is now on the retired list. The honor it is proposed to confer upon Sheridan has been richly merited, and we hope soon to see "little Phil." elevated to the highest military rank.

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

Mgr. Farley, Secretary of the Committee, Denies the Rumored Dissensions.

Two weeks ago we contradicted the report published in the city dailies to the effect that "dissensions" existed among the Prelates having charge of the proposed University. Here is what Mgr. Farley, rector of St. Gabriel's Church, New York city, and Secretary of the Committee, says:

"I feel very sure that if any such dissensions existed, I would be acquainted with them. It is a fabrication founded on malice. The statement is available for evil. It was after mature deliberation that Washington City was selected, and the property has already been purchased and plans for the building are in course of construction at the present time. With regard to the second statement that the personnel of the committee has caused dissatisfaction I must say that nothing to that effect has reached my ears. The committee is a very strong one, and amongst its members are prominent names, such as Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Gibbons, of Baltimore; Archbishop Williams, of Boston; Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, and the Rt. Rev. M. Marty, Vicar Apostolic of Dakota. There are two from the South—Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, and Bishop Keane of Richmond. New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts are represented by Archbishop Corrigan, Archbishop Ryan and Archbishop Williams. Of the three priests that with myself necessarily compose the balance of the clerical portion of the committee, two—the Rev. Dr. Chapelle, of Washington City, and the Rev. Dr. Keane, of the Catholic University, Washington City, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington have lay representatives."

ARCHBISHOP ELDER.

He Describes his Visits to the Poor The Sunday Before Last.

CINCINNATI, March 29th.—In an interview with Archbishop Elder, printed in the Enquirer, the Archbishop tells of his visits to the Poor His says

"I had two audiences with him. In my text he spoke with love of our recent great American Cardinal, and expressed the hope that he may live upon the future. In my second audience he took occasion to express his great love for the poor of the Metropolitan See at Baltimore, and spoke of the great work done by the Sisters of Charity among the poor.

"The Archbishop added that the object of his visit was to make a personal inquiry into the report of the condition of religion in his diocese. The Bishops of this country are required to go to Rome once every ten years. This was the first visit as Archbishop of Cincinnati. He said the Pope is advanced in years, and is not in robust health, but he preserves great vigor and attends to much business.

"The Archbishop said very delicately and gently the sufferings of the people for want of food and clothing. He said he had spoken to Chairman M. W. Harkness, Secretary, and H. J. Oliver, Treasurer, of the Relief Committee, and had been assured that the Committee would act at once. The Archbishop said that some more difficult information had been received by the Committee, but he had no opportunity of learning what was the conclusion in the matter. The appointment of Catholics is ordinarily a matter personal to the Pope. Catholics in Congress and other officers in the Church there are common-by-means that have the duty of examining into the qualifications and recommending the fitness of persons, submitting the names of persons selected or corrected by the Sovereign Pontiff; but the Archbishop said that he had no right to speak and consequently could not give information from the Pope's intention until it should be made public. He said, however, that the Archbishop of Baltimore "is very probable that the Archbishop of Baltimore will be raised to the Cardinalate, and I rejoice when it is done, but I have no definite information."

GERMAN NOTES.

The Cologne Volksstimme announces, on what it calls the unimpeachable authority, that the decade of Archbishop Hohls of Freiburg for a coadjutor with the right of succession has been granted by the Government.

Dr. Theodor Wolm, Professor of the Philosophical College at Brunn, committed suicide by throwing himself under a train, on the occasion of the original survey.

The Bishop of Ermland, Prince Bishop Hermann Eberhard, has conferred the Canonical Institution upon the Rev. Dr. Wolmann, Professor of Theology at the Lyceum of Braunsberg, in the place of Canon Dr. Schmidt, deceased.

The Prussian Government has ordered the Bishop of Paderborn to remove the Rev. Dr. Schmidt, Professor of Philosophy at the Lyceum of Paderborn, from his office, on the ground that he has been guilty of "Modernism" in his lectures.

Dr. Theodor Wolm, Professor of Philosophy and College at Brunn, committed suicide by throwing himself under a train on the occasion of the original survey.

The Bishop of Ermland, Prince Bishop Hermann Eberhard, has conferred the Canonical Institution upon the Rev. Dr. Wolmann, Professor of Theology at the Lyceum of Braunsberg, in the place of Canon Dr. Schmidt, deceased.

The Prussian Government has ordered the Bishop of Paderborn to remove the Rev. Dr. Schmidt, Professor of Philosophy at the Lyceum of Paderborn, from his office, on the ground that he has been guilty of "Modernism" in his lectures.

THE HAIL MARY.

"Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee, Blessed art thou among women." Luke. I. 28.

FIFTEENTH ARTICLE.

MARY'S PEERLESS BEAUTY.

(INSTRUCTED BY THE MONITOR BY A NUN OF ST. CHARITY.)

If you examine carefully, remarks St. Jerome, you will find that there was no virtue, no beauty, no grace, no gift of God, that did not shine forth in a most resplendent manner in Mary. (Epist. ad Paul. et Eustoch.) Let us, then, look at her in turn, so grace, so glory so to be found fully in Mary, and first of her beauty. (Ex Cant. Canticorum, Cap. 7). St. Cyril promises our sweet Saviour to be "the first fruit of God and the most beautiful pearl of the universe." Mary is the most beautiful pearl of the universe, the blessed image of God (Hom. I. in Nativ. Virg.) What then, says St. Ambrose, is so beautiful as the Mother of God, which is more splendid than the whom Splendor itself has shrined? What can be conceived more chaste than she who engendered a body without any intercourse of the members? (Ex. Lib. 2 de Virg.) The glorious St. Epiphanius sums up all Mary's greatness in the short address to her: "Hail Blessed Virgin, you are filled with grace; God and salutation, Virgin, Mother of God, peculiar Virgin, the Virgin adorned among women, the Virgin more exalted than angels and more of our nature, the glory of our race, who has deliver Adam from the curse of Eve, who has given life, who has revoked the sentence of the condemnation, who has given to us the tree of life, who has opened Paradise, who has opened the gates of heaven

Farm and Home.

The Help of Children.

I remember reading of a lady who once asked a distinguished man, whose opinion was considered of weight, how soon she should begin to enforce obedience from her child. He asked its age, and her reply was, "Two years." "Madame," said he, "you have lost two years already."

As soon as a child begins to help itself and to reach for things, it can be taught that it cannot have everything, and that there is a limit, or must be, to its desires. No child is happier for being allowed to destroy whatever it can reach, or being allowed to be obstreperous and disagreeable.

One to take care of. The mother who allows her little girls and boys to leave their dolls and play toys about, and whittle all over, and run about the house eating cake and bread, and throw down apple cores, and their mittens, and caps, and wraps, here and there, and then go about pointedly, after they have gone, and stoop, and pick up, and replace, and hang up, will in after years allow her grown-up daughter to leave her bed room and bed unaired for, and her dresses and room in confusion. If mother or some one else will set the little ones constantly, it comes to be expected, and they grow up expecting that some one is going to do it for them, and they are to have no money and no responsibility. I say teach your sons and daughters to wait on themselves whenever possible. There is generally time to do this and go to school, too. No girl or boy ought to study all the time, and they never can learn too soon to depend on their own resources, and help not only themselves, but others, especially their mother.

System and Order.

If there is an occupation on earth in which order and promptness is of importance it is that of farming. Order should be made the first and chief law of the farm. Order everywhere and in all things—in the house, in the stable, in the fields; in times of labor and in times of relaxation. If this be insisted upon as the inexorable rule the farmer will save himself and his, much fruitless toil and more vexation of spirit. To be orderly it is necessary that he be thorough in all that he undertakes. What is done once thoroughly will last longer and prove more serviceable and satisfactory than when is done a dozen times imperfectly. The farmer should be provided with the best of everything. If he is unable to obtain all that he sees not the quality of what he does purchase be of the best. It pays in the long run. Yet with all these desirable adjuncts to a good farm, the farm will not be a thrifty, economical one unless his wife be fully in accord and sympathy with this spirit of intelligent farming and husbandry, won't you let her department with care, order and fidelity.

The Growth of Children.

Anything connected with the growth and development of children is interesting. For nearly three years the 120 pupils (boys and girls) of the Rev. Malling Hansen have been weighed and measured with extreme care, four times every day. In September and October a child grows only a fifth of what it did in June and July; while, during the autumn and early winter, the child accumulates bulk, but the height is stationary. But what is most curious is that the effect of short periods of change of temperature in the winter, especially if continued for two or three days, favors increase of bulk, while, on the other hand, a fall in the thermometer favors growth in height. This looks as though there were times other determining causes than that of temperature. Similar observations applied to the growth of trees and shrubs have discovered the operation of a similar law. Dr. Hansen's observations have excited great interest among the men of Copenhagen. It is obvious that if further and more extended observations verify the results at which he has arrived, these results may have an important bearing on the training of children as compared with the best times of the year for their vacations, and also when they need the most nutritious diet.

The Most Fruitful Plants on Earth.

The most prolific of all fruits of the earth is the banana. Its produce is enormous; 1,000 square feet planted with thirty or forty bananas will yield as many clusters, with 160 to 180 fruits on each, and each cluster weighing from 40 to 50lbs., so that 1,000 square feet will produce 2,000lbs. of nutritive substance, whereas the same space would in Europe only grow 33lbs. of wheat or 99lbs. of potatoes. The produce, therefore, of the banana is to wheat as 132 to one; and to the potato as 44 to one. It is not so startling as to what, but an acre of bananas will support twenty-five times as many people as an acre of wheat. The sweet orange, too, is wonderfully productive. One tree at St. Michael's in the Azores has been known to bear 30,000 marketable oranges in one year, besides four of five thousand thrown away as unmarketable. The cocoa palm will annually yield as much as a ton weight of nuts; and the date palm will, when in full bearing, produce a yearly crop of from 1 to 4 cwt.

Angel Cake.

A correspondent asks for a recipe for angel cake. The following directions if strictly followed will probably be successful as that is the main secret.

Eleven eggs, the whites, one and a half cups of sifted powdered sugar, one cup of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, a pinch of salt. Sift the flour, cream of tartar, sugar and salt together four of five times. Beat up the eggs on a large platter to a stiff froth, then add the sifted flour, gradually on the platter with the eggs. Don't let it stand a minute after it is thoroughly mixed. Bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Try it with a straw, and if not done, let it bake a few minutes longer. Do not open the oven door until the cake has been in the oven fifteen minutes.

How to Get Strong.

One of the secrets of muscular recuperation is in stopping when fatigue begins from exertion. He or she who is not the fresher in body and mind for the exercise taken, has had an overdose of what in proper measure would have proved a benefit. The pain in strength is shown and felt in the increasing ability to do more and more without exhaustion. The measure of success is not in the greatness of the feat accomplished, but in the ease with which the exercise is indulged in, and in the absence of exhaustion after it. There are occasions frequent enough in which people in the struggle of life are forced beyond their powers of endurance, and there is no need to carry into the case of recreation the fatigue which exacting work imposes. For beginners this is important; after a time our can take more exercise and feel no fatigue.

The Poor Little Ones.

We often see children sick and restless on fine and hands, rough, scaly skin, and often sore on the head. These things indicate a depraved condition of the blood. In the growing period, children need of pure blood, by which to build up strong and healthy bodies. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is active, the blood is purged of its impurities, and the child's development will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, eczema, ulcerous, blip-joint disease or other grave maladies and suffering are sure to result from neglect and want of proper attention to such cases.

With a very large Family of Children it is really the mistaken economy to do without Warner's Safe Yeast, as it is the best, purest, healthiest, most reliable and economical yeast made. Ask your grocer for it. Price, 10c. a pkg. Warner's Safe Cure Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Warner's Safe Yeast Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Family Fun.

A Schoolboy on Corns.

Corns are of two kinds—vegetable and animal. Vegetable corn grows in rows, and animal corn grows on toes. There are several kinds of corn: There is the unicorn, the sweetcorn, pop corn, corn dodger, field corn, and the corn, which is the corn your feet feel most. It is said, I believe, that gophers like corn, but persons having corns do not like to "go for" if they can help it.

Corn have kernels, and some colonels have corns. Vegetable corn grows on the ears, but animal corn grows on feet, at the other end of the body. Another kind of corn is the acorn; this grows on oak trees, but there is no hoot shoot the corn. The acorn is a corn with the inoculative scale added. Try it and see. Many a man when he has a corn thinks it was an acorn.

If a farmer manages well he can get a good deal of corn on an acre, but I know of a farmer that has the corn that makes the biggest achar on his farm. The bigger crop of vegetable corn is when you raise the better the duckes like it; but the bigger crop of animal corn is when you raise the better you not like it. Another kind of corn is the corn dodger. The way it is made is very simple, and is as follows—that is, if you want to know. You go along the street and meet a man you know has a corn and a rough character; then you step on the toe that has the corn on it, and see if you don't have occasion to dodge. In that way you find out what a corn dodger is.

Not for Publication.

The little daughter of a literary man began writing stories when she was only seven or eight years old. One day a visitor, to whom she had been showing her efforts, said:

"I expect you will grow up to be a writer like your father, Nettie. You will write stories and have them printed in the newspapers, won't you?"

"Oh, my, no!" said the little girl, with a serious face: "my stories wouldn't never do to print."

"Why wouldn't they?"

"Why, because they ain't true. They're just the things that I make up."

In Mitigation.

"Well, Erbalinda De Wiggs, I don't see how you could go and engage yourself to that old Slingshot. Why, he hasn't a tooth in his head," exclaimed Mrs. Wiggs, dearest friend, when she heard of the engagement.

"Well, dear," was the reply, "you mustn't be too hard on him on that account, for he can't help that, you know."

"Was he? I didn't know that, or I wouldn't have said anything about it," was the sympathetic response.

The Child's Patron Saint.

A Sunday school teacher in a far Western village was speaking to the little girls and boys, and telling them about the different customs in different lands. Finally he asked the question:

"Now, children, tell me whose birthday is celebrated at Christmas time?"

Instantly there was a chorus of "Santa Claus!"

The Old Lady Bothered.

Old Mrs. Bennington—The paper says that two whales, a cow and a calf, were seen floatin' of Amagansett. Was they fish?

Old Mr. Bennington—Well that's all right, ain't it.

Old Mrs. Bennington—It's all right about the whales, of course, but I don't see how the cow and calf got out there.

Funny Sayings.

Good young landlady—"Little boy, have you ever been bogged and?"

Small boarder—"Oh, yes, ma'am; I have the marks here on my arm."

Johnny (just after Sunday school)—"Say, Jack, what is a sockdolager?" Jack—"Why, don't you know? It's what they ring in a church when they get ready to go home. The minister gets up and says: 'Let us now sing the sockdolager.'"

Girl—"Gimme quarter pound of tea, quick." Clerk—"What kind, green or black?" Girl—"Blackest you've got. It's for a colored funeral."

"Are you in favor of enlarging the curriculum?" asked a rural school director of a farmer in the district. "Enlarge nothing," replied the old gentleman; "the building's big enough; what we want is to teach more things to the scholars."

A gentleman visits a young couple of his acquaintance who had not been getting along very well together. "How is it," he demanded of the husband, "you have beaten your wife so soon?" "Why, friend," replied the other, "I have remarked that with any couple there is always one who boots the other. I preferred to somebreak."

They were walking in the conservatory at the last White House reception. "Will you love me with all your soul?" she murmured. "Yes, darling," he answered. "And all your heart?" "Yes, dearest." "And all your—" "Everything, darling, everything," he interrupted. "Pocket-book," she continued, not noticing the interruption. He gasped once and all was over.

Common notes: He meeting her at the church door to escort her home)—That was a beautiful hymn the sermon closed with, she—Yes. He—Are you fond of hymns? she—Well, there's one I may say I am particularly fond of. He—Indeed! What kind of meter is it in? She—It is a come-at-me-not-at-him. Then they linked arms and strolled away with their heads close together.

A Delaware young man rode fifteen miles through snowdrifts to see his girl. A year after marriage he may refuse to go down to the grocery, 200 yards, to buy a mackerel for supper.

Mrs. Fogg—Do you, you can find nails now; but I remember the time you loved the very ground I walked on.

Mr. Fogg—And my affection for the ground is as strong as ever, only it is the ingredients that I complain about.

Mild soothing and healing is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Catholic Societies.

☞ Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are requested to furnish for this Department a concise statement of their organization, for this Department.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARTICULAR COUNCIL—The Particular Council meets every month, and a general meeting of all the conferences every three months, for the purpose of receiving and directing the work of charity, assists in the equal distribution of the funds, so that a Conference may not have a too plentiful or too scanty charitable work. The Secretaries of the society are directed to furnish the Secretary of the Particular Council with a monthly report, which meets in St. Mary's Cathedral Hall on the first Thursday in every month, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. Officers—Rev. Jas. Gallagher, Very Rev. J. J. Prendergast, V.G., President; J. J. Dwyer, Vice President; Jas. Lynch, Treasurer; Jas. Donovan, Secretary; P. J. Thomas, Assistant Secretary. The Particular Council further directs that a list of all the conferences in the city and their officers be sent to the Particular Council.

The following list comprises the officers of the St. Vincent de Paul Conferences in this city:

C. Cmiel, St. Mary's Cathedral, Director; Rev. John Cummins, 401 Tiffy st., Vice-President; Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st., and T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street, Treasurer; Patrick Lynch, 610 Larkin street, Secretary; Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin street, Assistant Secretary; Michael Ryan, 1017 Larkin street, Sergeant-at-Arms; John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms.

St. Joseph's Church—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan, 1424 Howard street; President, James Flaherty, 1008 Howard street; Vice-President, Patrick Shea, Tenth and Howard streets; Treasurer, Patrick Shea, Tenth and Howard streets; Treasurer, Patrick Shea, Tenth and Howard streets; Secretary, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

St. Mary's Church—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan; President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Vice-President, John Cummins, 401 Tiffy st.; Treasurer, T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street; Secretary, William Mahoney, 1008 Howard st., and T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street; Assistant Secretary, M. Ryan, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Lynch.

St. Ignatius Church—Spiritual Director, Rev. J. Bastigue; President, Roger O'Donoll, Hayes and Ashbury streets; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Treasurer, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Secretary, Charles J. Dunne, 1017 Sacramento street; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

St. Peter's Church—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Vice-President, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Treasurer, T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street; Secretary, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

St. Patrick's Church—Spiritual Director, Rev. J. P. Harrington; President, Roger O'Donoll, Hayes and Ashbury streets; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Treasurer, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Secretary, Charles J. Dunne, 1017 Sacramento st.; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

Rincon—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan; President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Vice-President, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Treasurer, T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street; Secretary, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

Mission—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan; President, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Vice-President, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Treasurer, T. F. Sullivan, 1411 Post street; Secretary, Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; Sergeant-at-Arms, John D. Murphy, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, John Cummins.

Corresponding Secretary, Edw. C. O'Brien, Physician, Grant, N. J. Kelly, 1 Jackson st.; Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st.; John J. Dwyer, 1008 Howard st.; Jas. Flaherty, 1008 Howard st.; Jas. Donovan, 20 Moss st.; Jas. Lynch, 1017 Larkin st. (property), $1,000. The association meets at 12 Jackson Hall, Jackson Building, 1 Jackson st. Admission free. Attending and visiting visitors at 100 Shotwell st., 1 Jackson st., 1 Jackson st., 1 Jackson

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

Antrim.—It is becoming more apparent day after day, that the Ulster Manifesto has little left in it to scare any protestant sincere people. The worst type in Parliament never would not put the ungodly questions they do. Many of them are ruled out of order by the Speaker. Most attention is paid now by the Liberal side of the House to any one of the Irish members that is the entire gang of the "loyalist" members from Ulster.

Carlow.—The respected pastor of Rathvilly, county Carlow (Father Doyle), is busy making a final effort to secure the means for establishing his parish.

Clare.—On March 31, Baron Dowse opened the Clare Assizes, and in addressing the Grand Jury, said he was happy to inform them that no less present counties had been visited by evil fate. The number of bills to be before them was very small, and the cases to be tried, which had not been anticipated by the Crown Solicitor, he was happy to be able to tell them that they would not take very long to adjudicate, and did he think they would take very long either in trial.

Cork.—The Cork Steamship Company has at length seen the folly of its way, and has accordingly repented in sackcloth and ashes. At a special meeting of the share holders on February 26, the terms of peace proposed by the Cork Trade Association were adopted—or perhaps we should say surrendered with many a sigh from Anerchie to Mr. Cake O'Connor, M. P., the only name of the fight with the Company is that the part of Cork Trade Association, "the only entire seized for rent; that the entire trade of the port of Cork, and the trade of the port of Cork, and that there shall be no favor in terms, with regard to the allotment of cattle space; and that the terms of contract, the only bone of contention, shall be the Company's act as end. According to other reports, the Company have agreed to carry the cattle of the Association free during the month of January, and April, and at half freight for the months of May and June, to remove the cattle trade for the loss entailed by the contest.

Mr. Henry Lindsay Young, Leamcurl, Cork, the owner of the Mitchelstown Estate, has sent a letter to the Mayor of Mitchelstown, on Saturday, March 27, in which he offers a reduction of 25 per cent. After a friendly discussion the matter was referred to the tenants receiving a reduction of 20 per cent.

Mr. J. Thelaban, the Irish painter, has just completed a portrait of the Pope. It is said by eminent authorities to be the best work of his Holiness extant. This picture is to be presented by the clergy of Cork to the Pope, as a prominent Catholic of side of the Holy See.

Cavan.—At the Cavan Assizes, Pow Cavan, recently, the ceremony attendant on the reception of the white rod by ladies who choose to can contend rule through devotion to God and to religion were observed, and which the imposing details which contrast such events as they interest and delight the people, and which are the means of dignity of Irish life, the beautiful object of the convent being quite filled with the assemblage, which an unusual number of the significance brought together. The young ladies received were Miss Fitzgerald, Miss Mary de Sales; Miss McGovern, Sister Mary Francis; Miss O'Reilly, Sister Mary Ignatius; Miss Dowdall, Sister Mary Alphonsus; and Miss Eardley, Sister Mary Ignatius.

On March 24, at Cavan, William James Tennent, J.P., Tullyrain, Glenbarrow, succeeded by Mr. John R. Tversley, Glenbarrow, succeeded by Mr. Tversley, Glenbarrow, succeeded by Mr. John Tversley, Glenbarrow, succeeded by Mr. John Tversley, Glenbarrow, succeeded by Mr. John

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

BRIDE'S EVERLASTING HOPE.

Though hunted, harried and oppressed, we dared
Unto the Lord,
Best blood-stained gold and treasuresare more
Than all beneath dissension's curse but never did
We yield.
Their laws, their wholesale robberies, their cruelties, or their threats,
A thousand times they boasted that our land
Was purified.
When they commenced the hundred claims that Proved them to their profit,
A thousand times they boasted that our cherished
Land was free.
And but a day—the mountain-top with signal fires
Was red,
We've heard the wrath of Saxon lion, whose Ruthless Claws made,
With a mother's steel, and famine's scourge, and Rattlesnake
Unchristian rail.
Our latest land a howling waste, to yield us but
The grave.
We've spoken a mocking word—the synagogue
Of slavery
We've heard the intolerable sycophants that Bellow in Congress's Hall.
We fortified our fields with blood, and hoped
Our women slain,
Who gave unto the helpless rear their swords
And failed to quail
The hated lips—remembered choice of Connaught or of Hall.

To day wherever their rule 'st wrong has formed
Our cause be fly,
Whether beneath the tropic fires, or 'neath the Pale Star, by
A jeeny, copy, by Kinfaud news, of hate and Tyranny grown
And whatever hate with a hand of iron unyielding
Has fear.
They made her in her hour of need—they
Made't her in her woe,
And deep in Irish memories sank the alien's
Treacherous blow,
Yet, with the Prophet's gift of eyes, with a mighty power we 'k sway,
To sweep, as sure as Heaven's throne, the spoilers from our land.

THOMAS DUFFY.

San Francisco.

THE HEART OF THE HOME.

Be the home where it may, on the hill, in the valley,
Hemmed in by the walls of the populous town,
Not far where the corn lifts its plumes to the
Or perched on the slope where the forest
Still sets the heart of the home is the same,
Full over the doorway of manse in the town,
And over the pioneer's home in the forest,
Of this home inscribed, in the model, "whose
Be command,
Unchallenged, it stands rule in our beautiful land.

Be the home what it may, whether lofty or lowly,
The mansion, the cottage, the plain little
The heart-hearth of true love shall make the Holy and happy.
To the patriot's heaven shall keep it from
Be there,
For the heart of the home is the same, in
the town,
In hall or in hut, there is ever one name
Which kindles the torch of a swift leaping
Love.
As we bow to the mother, whose gentle control
Is therapeutic that sways in our beautiful land.

Oh, come with the dawn-dusk of morning the Lark
The sunlight has fled—back to tender embrace;
And a mother, when age brings her glory and honor,
She smiles with the glow of life's eve as her
Be, we glad at her praise, we are sad at her blame,
Her name was the first for our child-lips to
And lovingly, loudly all homage we claim
Be the heart-hearth of true love shall
Be the mother's name
Be the mother's name
Be the mother's name

THE MONITOR.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—His Eminence Cardinal Newman completed his eighty-fifth year on Sunday the 21st ult. Considering his great age his Eminence is in remarkably good health. On his natal day he received many congratulations from all parts of the world.

—A London paper hits the mark when it says that Lord Randolph Churchill has gone out like a spoiled squib. There was much preparation and a little fire, and now there is nothing but a bad smell. His fiercest spleen is for the vulgar Protestantism of Ulster was faced with more quietedness, it is true, than his speech at Paddington, but his intention was just as mischievous and his argument just as senseless.

—The Churchman—with the usual overzeal of spirit peculiar to Protestantism—refuses to retract the diabolical calumny it printed a few weeks ago against Cardinal Gibbons, until the Cardinal opens his vast safe, or some one in his name, repudiates the letter. This is merely a subterfuge to gain time so that some of the mud thrown at Cardinal Manning may "stick" in the minds of the Churchman's readers, but we expect a letter in this city from Dan Mahony's secretary in the course of a few weeks, we will give the Churchman a little longer time until we show it evidence that will compel it to retract its vile calumnious insinuation that disgraced its columns.

—A subscriber in Lake county sends us an Oakland anti-Catholic paper with two articles marked therein, and asks us to answer them. Our friend seems to be astonished to find such foul slanders permitted to go unrebuked, but it is simply impossible to stop the work of filth in a world where falsehood has a thousand tongues whilst truth has only one. There ought to be room for such a paper as the Oakland libeler of Catholics in any Catholic household, as the slanderous sheet is supported by an element that is inimical to Catholics personally and generally.

—A subjugam from Rome it states that is officially announced that at the Consistory to be held on April 12th, the following dignitaries of the Church will be made Cardinals: Archbishop Taschereau of Quebec, Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore, Monsignor Ferrata, Nuncio at Vienna, Monsignor Desprez, Nuncio at Paris; Mgr. Rampolla del Tindaro, Nuncio at Madrid, and Mgr. Masotti, formerly Nuncio at Lisbon. The same authority says that the Bahama islands, which have hitherto been in the diocese of Charleston, will hereafter be in the diocese of New York.

—The "Women's Rights" party have sent a memorial to the Pope thanking him for his encyclical. But the "Women's Rights" people must have been really "sold" by somebody, as the Sovereign Pontiff has never made any such decision, and Dr. Bagshawe, Bishop of Nottingham, closes a letter condemnatory of the anarchy League in this unmistakable language:

"We therefore strictly prohibit, in all Catholics, any participation whatsoever in the Freedom League within the limits of the diocese of Nottingham, and if any should unhappily persist, in disregard of our prohibition, in lending their aid to this "habitation" or meeting of the Freedom League within these limits we warn the clergy that such persons may not be absolved, unless they shall renounce, by the future, such disobedient conduct.

—The Paris correspondent of an English paper writes that he "learns from a quarter which is usually well informed in such matters, that the Right Rev. Monsignor Cigni has been offered the position of British Chaplain at Boulogne. His Eminence as a cultured scholar and profound theologian, his ability and popularity as a preacher, and the rare shown of manner which captivates and insces an indelible impression upon all who have had the pleasure to approach him, have made Monsignor as popular favorite not only among the French themselves—whose language, by the by, he speaks with the ease and fluency of a native. His appointment to the post would be hailed with universal satisfaction; and his response to the offer is therefore awaited with considerable anxiety."

—One of the features of the St. Patrick's Day celebration at Quebec was the presentation of an address to His Grace Archbishop Taschereau, who received the presentation. Mr. Carbry read the address to the Archbishop, and in reply thereto, the newly-created Cardinal said that it was to him "always a new cause of rejoicing to meet on this day the representatives of the Quebec Irish population, so much devoted to the Church and to their pastors. The faith which fourteen centuries ago St. Patrick implanted in the Emerald Isle has grown so strong in its roots that it has ever since flourished in spite of time and persecution. Wherever the sons of Ireland are to be found, they not only show by deeds themselves faithful to the doctrines preached by St. Patrick to their ancestors, but have been misionaries of the faith and examples of whether wherever the English language is spoken in and out the immense British Empire upon which the sun never sets. This is a glory which cary few zeons upon earth can boast of and which the dawning of brighter days will only make more brilliant in the future."

—On a recent reservoir of the seventy-sixth natal day of the Holy Father, the Cardinals, Archbishops, Bishops and Prelates, in curia, assembled in the Hall of the Throne at the Vatican Palace to present their felicitations and good wishes on the double anniversary of the birth and coronation of the Sovereign Pontiff. An address was read by the Cardinal Dean of the Sacred College, to which the Pope made answer, thanking the assembly for their sentiments. Recalling the benedictions to learning and to science ever rendered by the Papacy, his Holiness added that the Church, far from obstructing true progress, promoted and blessed it; and that what he himself had already done in favor of science was but little in proportion to what he would do were he not impeded by want of true liberty to act at will; the same holds even in the promotion of learning he was forced to submit to alien laws which hampered and fettered his action. In proof of this he referred to the noted Dan Dorcides letter relating to the pretended conspirators against the Vatican. "Futile pretexts and calumnies unfounded," said the Holy Father, "to impose the pontificate with impunity to popular ire, and the Vatican to the menace and ferocious declamations of the demagogues." He concluded by professing his entire submission to the designs of Providence in his own regard personally, and protested that he should never cease to demand in the face of the Catholic world a state of things which will effectually secure the dignity and liberty of the Pope and of the Holy See.

Vandalism in Rome.

The Osservatore Romano of a recent date, contains an elaborate exposé of the condition perpetrated by the representatives of the Robber King's successor upon the venerated ruins of many sanctified Catholic shrines in the Eternal City. In order to show what modern vandalism has effected since 1870, a list is given of the palaces, gardens, parks and galleries, which for centuries have been objects of universal admiration, and which the mania of speculation has made away with. Here is the list with the dates of the destruction: The Villa Grazioli, 1872; the Villa Torlonia, before the Porta Pia; the Botanical Gardens, in the Nunziare; the famous Villa Aldobrandini, which contained a portion of Raffaele's frescoes; the still more famous Villa Farnesina; the Villa Mellini, on Monte Mario, 1880; part of the Villa Barberini, 1882; part of the celebrated Farnese Gardens, on the Palatine, 1885; the Villa Cesarini, 1883; the Villa Casali, on the Coelian, 1884; the Villa Giustiniani; the Villa Bonaparte; and—the most beautiful of all in Rome—the Villa Ludovisi, 1885. Finally, the Villa Campana, 1886. All have been ruthlessly destroyed. The beautiful Villa Ludovisi, lying between the Quirinal and Monte Pinciot, will in a few years form a new quarter of the town, traversed by a street about twenty yards wide. The appropriation of a part of the Villa Farnesina, for the purpose of regulating the Tiber, has led to serious damage to the frescoes of Raffaele which it contained, and a lawsuit is pending in consequence. It is not only that the whole civilized world is deeply robbed of these famous centres of beauty and art, which seem of our civilization; but even from a sanitary point of view—inasmuch as Rome possesses no woods or forests in her neighborhood—the destruction of these old private parks and gardens which have always been so generously opened by the Popes, is a serious public misfortune.

Archbishop Croke is the lone idol of a true-born Celt. As a Prelate and a patriot he is a type of the holy Prelates in the past and he gives up their lives for the love of their faith and fatherland. On every occasion when this patriotic Prelate speaks he always says something worth while to the Irish heart and hallows it by the new inspiration received from Archbishop Croke's lips. On a recent occasion he replied to an address presented to his Grace by the Artists' Industrial Association of Dungarvan, and this is what his said concerning those Irish-born people who are ashamed of the "brogue" they were born with:

"With regard to native manufacture and the address presented by the artisans of the town, I am for everything that is Irish, and for Irish spirit. They tell me I am a Dutchman, but it all counts whether my name be Dutch, or whether it is not, my heart is Irish. I am for native industries. I am for native art. I am for native manufacture. Everything we want, everything we can produce in Ireland should be bought by Irishmen in preference to anything imported from a foreign country. We can give employment to our population, in every sense of the word, in Ireland, if we only set about it. There is a shame and a disgrace attached to any Irishman having children to send to England or France or anywhere else to be educated. We should set our sons amongst us, that they may be able to say, I am Irish, I prove it! They learn in England to despise their country; if not in the U—and they learn hook with them as English heart and an English accent, forsooth! What do we care for their English accent. It is the greatest sign of the degeneracy of an Irishman to be ashamed of his native country. Wherever I go, I find that every Irishman who is ashamed of his country is proof of the very worst degeneracy. I find in every portion of this country field to another and every one who is ashamed of his country, I find that every degeneracy is proof of his degeneracy. Irishmen should be proud of his name. When travelling in steamer or railway carriage there is nothing in the world that makes my nationality so about before the English as to hollow a fine broad, Irish accent. I tell you what is more. I never knew a good, solid, down-hearted Irishman who ever thought of changing his accent. I wish to long as you like. Look at Daniel O'Connell! he was one of the greatest Irishmen. Look at Father Tom Burke, the great! Look at Father Tom Burke who was Irish of the Irish to the last! Look at Father Tom Burke, one of the age. Did he change his accent? Never. He kept his Irish accent. Look at Father Dominic, the famous Irish Capuchin, who was more outspoken than the Irishman who wishes to change his accent. This man spoke out which makes no change our appearance, should be obnoxious to Irishmen. Hear, hear! I am for Irish manufacture, for Irish education, for Irish spirit, and for Irish in every way, I am Irish! I am the man. (Loud Applause) I am for everything native, native! (Laughter and applause). I think we have too much of the Dutch and too much of the Jew in us. Let us be Irish, and look more to the native—if we lived by it, native more and the "native—native" we ought to be very much better than we are.

According to a calculation of the Linz Theological Review, the number of Catholic missioners who left Europe last year for heathen lands was 1,000. The Lyons Propagaeda of Paris 120, most of them destined to fill the gaps caused by the persecution in Tonkin; also 30 Jesuits, 32 Franciscans, 5 of the Marists, 3 of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost, and 2 of the German Mission Society at Hupf. This list is clearly incomplete, as it does not take into account the missioners who went out from Italy, nor those from the English or French Colleges for Foreign Missions.

—A fire recently completately destroyed the great convent of the Ursulines at Malon, in Belgium. The inmates of the convent, thirty nuns, and one hundred and two young girls, boarders at the convent school, were all saved.

Who will Build a Home for Saint Joseph's Homeless Boys?

We deeply regret to learn from the Report of the Hon. Director of St. Joseph's Union which we publish this week, that the work of rescuing and helping homeless boys—which is the special province of this organization—is not only greatly circumscribed for want of funds, but also that it spent—during the fiscal year just closed—nearly eight hundred dollars more than its receipts!

Surely the Catholics of San Francisco are not so indifferent to the fate of Catholic boys as to stand supinely by whilst they are robbed of their faith and made to leave the Church through the ungenerous or criminal conduct of unworthy parents! It took $6,126.15 to support St Joseph's Orphan Directory last year, yet there were not 3,000 Catholics found in San Francisco who would contribute a single dollar a year towards this great and deserving charity!

In the St. Joseph's Messenger—the usual organ of the Association—the hope is expressed that "our Holy Patron will inspire some wealthy Catholic of San Francisco, to present us with a suitable lot, wherein to erect a larger building, as our present one is entirely too small to accomodate the increasing number of destitute children who continually appeal to us for protection." And we sincerely hope very member of the Union will make special prayers during the special Gamaliers for this end. The power of prayer is proverbial, and who knows but Almighty God may inspire some wealthy Catholic to immortalize his memory here on earth, and to help gain immortal glory for his soul hereafter—by donating $20,000 to erect a building to be known as St. Joseph's Home for Homeless Boys. What a magnificent project by which some Pacific coast millionaire can immortalize Providence! What an enduring monument whereby to earn the prayers of the Catholic Church and all her faithful children for centuries to come!

We feel that it is only necessary to easily allude to the tenacerious good which can be accomplished by erecting such a building, in order to have some Catholic gentleman whom Almighty God has blessed with means enough to give our beloved Archbishop and set the privilege of erecting such a building for those words of St. Joseph, of whom his Grace has so well said that "the hand of the Homeless Boy stretched out to you is supplication to the Hand of Christ.

Catholic boys are falling into the hands of proselytizers every week for want of a kind where the innocent lambs of God's flock can be preserved from the ravenous wolves of sectarianism. And who are they whom Almighty God will hold accountable for the loss of faith among His homeless boys? It is the rich. The people who hords their wealth whilst the wolves destroy the lambs; the people who care not what becomes of the baptized Catholic child so long as they can revel in luxury even though that one thoughtless act may be the loss of that faith for which our Divine Saviour shed the last drop of the blood in His Sacred Heart!

We earnestly recommend the consideration of His force for the poor homeless boys of our Metropolis to the heart of some affluent person worthy of God's love, so that the homeless boys may not be homeless any longer, but that they may find food, raiment and shelter, beneath a spacious roof erected through the benign influence of the holy Patron of universal charity who is all-powerful in heaven.

Ireland Defended Against English Catholic Aristocracy.

It is singular how deeply prejudice is rooted in the hearts of even Catholic Englishmen, and how their narrow-mindedness manifests itself whenever an occasion offers. The Duke of Norfolk is a great Catholic, but he is also such a "high-born Britisher" that he scoffs at the idea of granting Home Rule to Ireland, and he imagines that Ireland possesses all the liberty she is entitled to! The Duke is not alone in his peculiarity. English Catholics, but this class of Catholic Englishmen has been well taken to task by an Irish correspondent of the London Tablet, whom letter explains itself in a way it once suggestive and forcible:

CORTE ROCCAMONA, March 6th, 1886.

Sir—It seems to me a fair conversion is the minds of your English Catholic editorscary that the priesthood of Ireland—nay, even the Bishops, have erred from the path of God's Commandments so far as they have identified themselves with the National movement; for I am justified in taking the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Denbigh as fair specimens of the class, and there we do not only hold them cowardliness, but they have thought themselves calling upon to denounce their countrymen. Are you aware that some editors, have made the best of these times, in the interest of Ireland, to defend, a few serious questions. Could it be possible that they are the victims of the misrepresentations of Irish exiles, of their native press, in which I am inclined to include the Tablet itself? Ought not Dr. Bagshawe, an English Catholic Bishop, and the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Denbigh as fair specimens of the class, and there we do not only hold them cowardliness, but they have thought themselves called

Farm and Home.

How She Converted Him.

The Age of Steel gives the following account of an experiment of the eight hour system in St. Louis:

Several weeks ago the proprietors of a machine foundry learned that their employes wanted to work under the eight hour rule. The latter now told they might do as they pleased, provided they were willing to accept eight hours' pay for eight hours work. The proposition was agreed to, and the last day of trial all the men were at their posts of duty when the whistle blew seven or eight went home early. The next day the number that remained was a little larger, the third day still larger, and so on, until at the end of the week there wasn't a man in the establishment working less than the usual time.

One of the men who experimented with the eight hour rule, in the instance above referred to, tells how he came to change his opinion with regard to long and short time work. We give his story spare, because it goes to show what an important factor of the labor problem home influence is. He says: "The second day we tried the eight hour plan I went home and found my wife sitting in the rocking chair, leisurely reading the afternoon paper, and there was not a sign of supper in preparation. Of course, I began to expostulate with her about so unusual a state of affairs; but she made me feel very foolish when she looked up and naively remarked that her day's work was over, that she was an 'eight hour man.' The next day I was the last man to leave the shop, and on coming home I found the table spread and the meal waiting me."

How a Wise Man Built His House.

Many of our readers will find their own experience reflected in the following paragraph taken from the last number of the Detroit Lever Journal, where it used to illustrate another subject. A gentleman wished to build for himself a nice mansion, and, of course, was exceedingly anxious to have the approbation of his friends and neighbors. So he asked the advice of all. The first said, "Have a nice site, and I should build such a style of house." The second said, "I don't like that site nor the style of house." The third came along, and was utterly amazed at the selection of the site made by the others, and their total want of taste in architecture. He said, "Leave off all that; have in the most charming spot for a house, and have in the most exquisite idea for a house." And so he went on until the gentleman became disgusted with his indecision, and was mad enough to his own site and adopted his own style of architecture, and built a house to suit himself. By a multitude of counselors there is wisdom, but the house builder's experience in seeking the advice of his neighbors found it different, and was probably wise in rejecting all their suggestions, and following the plans of his own judgment dictated. The moral here conveyed does not end with locating of a house site or the erection of the building. It will be generally found best to believe one's own impressions and taste rather than to defer to others.

The Cost of Wheat Production.

The phenomenally low prices for wheat which have prevailed during the past year have directed attention to the details of the cost of producing that grain, and in various issues of the wheat problem the statistical experts are making calculations to settle the question whether, at the prevailing prices, the culture of wheat can be profitably continued. One of the most interesting reports yet published is that of the cost of 1885 in that State.

The average yield per acre is given at 19.20 bushels of wheat, 60.55 bushels of oats, and 19.07 bushels of corn of corn. The yield then indicated applied to the cost per acre shows an average cost per bushel of 59.1 cents for wheat, 29 cents for oats, and 52.1 cents for Indian corn. The average price of wheat on January 1, for the State, is placed at about 74 cents, oats 30 cents, and corn 40 cents per bushel of ears. In regard to wheat, the report observes that the "net profit on investment in the northern counties is 36 per cent., and in the northern counties 25 per cent."

California Soda.

Works have been begun at Owens Lake, in this State. A portable engine is employed; and as soon as a vat is filled, the engine is moved to another, and the water is left to evaporate from the one that had been filled. This process will be repeated at all the vats until the soda sediment in the accumulating water in the pit reaches the surface. It will take about a year to get a crop of soda by this method, which will bring $50 per ton. It is expected that fifty tons of soda to the acre will be annually gathered. The number of vats will be increased till they hold an area of 50,000 acres of soda, the income from which is expected to be nearly $2,000,000 a year.

Toads as Bee Eaters.

The toad may be useful in kitchen gardens as a slug and insect destroyer; the frog as a deep your spicy from his grounds, the better. Toads will exit at the foot of a hive to seize a honey-laden bee that may happen to fall to the ground on its return from foraging, and one bee master, says a correspondent of the London Graphic, saw over a dozen little workers captured in the space of half an hour by an old fat fellow, who darted out his tongue with wonderful celerity immediately he saw a bee on the ground. The bees had been collecting pollen, and many of them, being heartily laden, were unable to reach the floor board of the hive.

Good Advice.

Good reading is the best friend that can be introduced into the home circle; bad reading the deadliest and most irreducible enemy. Spoken words are often forgotten, but printed wickedness leaves an inevitable taint behind.

There is no object so fascinating as a pretty-faced, intelligent woman, but then a woman is commend herself as an eligible particular for matrimony should be useful as well as ornamental. A model wife is an economist, a broad saver, while her husband is a broad winner.

A little domestic druggery is a homely antidote against the vagaries of a fickle fine wife and mother out of a mere hothouse plant. I advise a thorough knowledge of kitchen economy, for far too many girls now new-a-days raise marriage long before they have learned to spoak a pepperhot.

"The Proper Study of Mankind is Man," says the Illustrious Pope. If he had lived a woman in the list, he would have been nearer the truth, if not so poetical. Dr. R. V. Pierce has made them both a life study, especially woman, and the peculiar derangements to which her delicate system is liable. Many women in the land who are acquainted with Dr. Pierce only through his "Favorite Prescription," bless him with all their health, for he has brought them the panacea for all those chronic ailments peculiar to their sex; such as prolapsus, anteversion, retroversion, leucorrhœa, obstruction, "internal fever," bearing, backache or internal cancer, and other alarming symptoms, which make life a burden. Prize reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

Family Fun.

He'd Choose to be a Baby.

The following story was told at the recent military encampment at Mexico, Mo. A group around one of the numerous camp fires were relating incidents of bravery and swordice shown in battle, and this is one of them:

"It was at the battle of Gettysburg," said the speaker, "when the bullets were falling like hail, and the shells were shrieking and bursting over our heads like a storm, a private dropped out of the ranks and skulked back toward the rear. He was well under way, when, unfortunately for him, he was met by Gen. Hancock coming in the front.

"'What are you doing here? Get back to your post, the General shouted.

"The poor fellow stopped still and trembled like a leaf, but made no reply.

"'Get back to your post, you miserable coward; aren't you ashamed of yourself to be skulking back here when you should be in the front with your brave comrades?

"Still the man made no reply, but commenced to cry like a year-old infant.

"'You infernous, snoaking coward, shouted the infuriated General, 'get back to your post; I'll guide you down like a dog. Why, you are nothing but a baby.'

"'(-I-I-I-I-I-I-I-I) you-u-u, I-I-I-I-I-I-I-

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

Antrim.—Not only is Ulster a small part of Ireland, but the Ulster Protestants are a small part of Ulster. The best is slowly but surely being done by English intelligence, when Sir Henry Wolseley, the English military governor, arrives to organize State in Ulster than ever before since the days of Cromwell. Perhaps it is because the English intelligence is accessible to the French Republic. An able paper on "Protestant Ulster," which Professor Galloway Bigg has put in circulation, will contribute much to clear the English intelligence on the subject. His points are that "instead of Ulster being a Protestant province, it is simply a province where extreme cases of Protestant and Catholic Ulster Ulster is contrasted with a province, not, northern province, which is overwhelmingly Catholic. Ulster is a province where the Presbyterians are the majority of the Protestants, and where the Presbyterians are and always have been the overwhelmingly Catholic districts, the Presbyterians being the majority in most of the Ulster, three-fourths of the Irish Presbyterians being in Ulster, and six counties instead of three.

Cork.—The Master of the Rolls in Dublin, has mentioned a scheme for the payment of the debts and of ten shillings to the creditors of the Munster Bank, numbering about 15,000. It is estimated that the dividend will reach nearly eighty thousand pounds.

A very sad and painful occurrence took place at Halfpenny, in the vicinity of Shillelagh, on March 9th. A meeting of Catholics was held at Garryan Catholic chapel, between Mr. Patrick Byrne, a respectable farmer of Ballycurrane, and Mike McCarthy, of Moor, the latter a Protestant. Words ensued, and Mr. Byrne, McCarthy and Mr. Michael Byrne, his son, were all shot almost immediately. The two former died in a few hours, and since the death of his son last year, a young, talented, amiable gentleman of Mr. Byrne's, his constitution began to give way.

At the Presentation Convent at Mitchelstown, on March 8th, Miss Margaret Coughlan, daughter of Mr. Michael Coughlan, Knocknagree, County Tipperary, was received.

Limerick.—On March 10th, there was a reception at the convent of the Poor Clares, Kenmare, the young lady who took the veil being connectedly one Miss McMahon, of Ennis, who took the name in religion of Sister Mary Catherine.

Carlow.—On March 6, a number of cattle, the property of Mr. John Burke and Mr. James Reynolds, of Monaghan, were sentenced for Kerry, by the Sheriff at Shillelagh, county Wicklow, and by the Sheriff, held 22 acres at Clonee, Co. Wicklow, and Mr. Reynolds, at the yearly rent of £1, the privilege of living on a farm of nine acres, and by a lease for which he paid £100 and sold to the former tenant, is obliged to pay to the landlord, Mr. Nugent, £85 a year. Both these tenants paid their half year's rent last October in full and up to date. In December they were both served with civil bills for the amount of a half year's rent, which they offered which hanging gain, they state, tender, and paid the rent into the hands of the sheriff. The claimant of the case before the Land Court, is not very popular with the Irish and neighbors of the two tenants, and the sheriff's officer had to be escorted by the police to protect him from the violence of the people.

Wexford.—Another meeting in connection with the establishment of a better factory at Tullow was held on March 6th, when a large number of shares were taken by influential farmers, and others in the undertaking. It was stated that there was not probability that the Creamery, when in full working order, would cost the disgraceful accident which rendered necessary the temporary stoppage of business.

Waterford.—Another meeting in connection with the establishment of a better factory at Tullow was held on March 6th, when a large number of shares were taken by influential farmers, and others in the undertaking. It was stated that there was not probability that the Creamery, when in full working order, would cost the disgraceful accident which rendered necessary the temporary stoppage of business.

On the contrary, the feeling of kindness and sympathy which prevailed towards the unhappy family, based the fact of the unfortunate crime which shocked the country, and did much to retard the National cause.

The Rev. J. O'Leary, P.P., Ballynaslloe, addressed his parishioners from the altar on March 7, strongly denounced the recent moonlight outrages which were bringing shame on the country. He appealed to the boys assembled especially young men in the parish to behave themselves together and kick those vile weapons from among them.

Louth.—The Rev. James Moonan, P.P., Tullyallen, and on March 7, at his residence in Louth. He commenced his sermon by stating that he was sorry to be obliged to speak to them as a friend and counselor, and not as their pastor, and now for many years past, he had never had occasion to speak to them because Dunleavy, Armagh, and from thence he went to Newport, where, after finishing his ecclesiastic career, he was ordained in 1856. He first came over to the parish of Carlingford, and the next in Tucker. From thence he went to Arden, from where he was promoted to Drogheda. In this town he officiated for seven years, during which time he was a great favorite with the people, and he was sorry to leave them. He was then appointed to Dundalk, and in this town he officiated almost immediately. The deceased was ordained in 1856, and was only ordained in 1860, and died at the tender age of 30 years, and, since the death of his son last year, a young, talented, amiable gentleman of Mr. Byrne's, his constitution began to give way.

At the Presentation Convent at Mitchelstown, on March 8th, Miss Margaret Coughlan, daughter of Mr. Michael Coughlan, Knocknagree, County Tipperary, was received.

Clare.—On March 10th, there was a reception at the convent of the Poor Clares, Kenmare, the young lady who took the veil being connectedly one Miss McMahon, of Ennis, who took the name in religion of Sister Mary Catherine.

Cavan.—On March 6, a number of cattle, the property of Mr. John Burke and Mr. James Reynolds, of Monaghan, were sentenced for Kerry, by the Sheriff at Shillelagh, county Wicklow, and by the Sheriff, held 22 acres at Clonee, Co. Wicklow, and Mr. Reynolds, at the yearly rent of £1, the privilege of living on a farm of nine acres, and by a lease for which he paid £100 and sold to the former tenant, is obliged to pay to the landlord, Mr. Nugent, £85 a year. Both these tenants paid their half year's rent last October in full and up to date. In December they were both served with civil bills for the amount of a half year's rent, which they offered which hanging gain, they state, tender, and paid the rent into the hands of the sheriff. The claimants of the case before the Land Court, is not very popular with the Irish and neighbors of the two tenants, and the sheriff's officer had to be escorted by the police to protect him from the violence of the people.

The cheapskapers are on the verge of bankruptcy, and they have not yet received a penny of the money lent to the Pope. The distribution of Peter's Pence will be greatly lessened, and the Italian loan will be lamentably. The Italians are at Adelphi, and they are more anxious now than what it was in 1860, when the Italian loan was brought out, and the Italian loan. It has been brought out in the same fashion of the Papal loan, and with whatever for cattle, and the cheats want to be paid by herself in a lump sum, and the district, and who, for a considerable period, was a confidant of other ruling from the Italian Union, left her not on March 7, for Italy, and the purpose of the Italian loan, and the Italian and our affairs was not otherwise than a "Pope." Nor was she ever at a loss for an answer. A neighbor who discovered her mistake was so good as to point it out to her, and she was not a little pleased at the discovery. Mrs. Bartley, of Marlborough Police Barrack, Dublin, for the discovery the poor old creature herself up in a corner of the room, and spoke to her in the Italian language, of Mr. Arthur, and contingent of the Italian Union, (Mr. John Higgins) is opposed by Nicholas Chapman, J. P., Colonel

Market Report.

MONTHLY OFFICE,
130 City St. Tuesday Evening, April 6, 1886.

WEEKLY QUOTATIONS are ..... $1.90@1.80
Flour—Flour is selling at ..... 4 00@4 50
Cornmeal, ... 2 10@ 2 25
Oats, ... 1 12@1 25
Barley, new, ... 1 00@1 10
Hay, wholesale ..... 15 00@16 00
Ground Barley, $ ton, ... 17 00@18 50
Middlings 18 00
Bran ..... 17 00@18 00
Rye ..... 1 75@1 85
Buckwheat 2 00
Potatoes, ... 1 50@1 60
Turkeys, $ lb wholesale ..... 12@15
Chickens, $ doz ..... 3 00@5 00
Geese, $ pair ..... 1 75@2 00
Brollers $ pair ..... 1 00@1 50
Young Roosters ..... 7 00@7 50
Old Roosters ..... 5 00@5 50
Eggs ..... 15@18
Cheese, $ doz 1 50
Butter
Choice fresh roll ..... 16@17
Fancy ..... 19@20
Dairy ..... 12@15
Oranges
Domestic ..... 2@10
Eastern ..... 4@7 50
Lemons
Choice $ box ..... 10 50@17 00
Wool
Wool, Southern Coast ..... 14@15
Tree Mountain ..... 16@18
Humboldt ..... 17@19
Meats
Beef, wholesale ..... 6@7
Mutton, wholesale ..... 8@9
Veal, wholesale ..... 8@9
Pork, wholesale dressed ..... 9@10
Corners Sugarcured Hams ..... 10 @11
Sugarcured Ham ..... 12@13
Bacon, breakfast ..... 12@13
Lard, $ lb wholesale in kegs ..... 7@8
Vegetables
Beans, white ..... 1 60@1 80
Cabbage, $ 100 lb ..... 1 50@2 00
Onions, $ lb ..... 2 50@3 00
Onions, California ..... 2 50@3 00
Potatoes
Green Peppers ..... 75@80
Garlic, $ lb ..... 7@
Fruit
Dried Apples ..... 5@6
Crushed $ lb 7
Dried Peaches $ lb ..... 5@6
Straw
Straw, $ bale ..... 50@60
Tobacco
Roll, $ lb ..... 70@75
Hops
Hops ..... 9@11
Honey
California Dry, $ lb 11
Dry Alfalfa 10
Bees, $ lb ..... 5@6
Tallow
Salted Kips ..... 1@2 50
Salted Hides, each, shearlings ..... 50@1 00
Domestic Paper
Given Apples, $ box ..... 50@1 00

BORN.

McPHEE.—In this city, March 19, to the wife of Charles McPhee, a son.

DIED.

KELLEHER.—In this city, March 9, Daniel Kelleher, a native of Ballyvourney, County Cork, Ireland, aged 30 years, brother of John Kelleher, and nephew of John Linen of Fort Costa, a native of Bal-Gaddy and St. Gaty.

MOORE.—In this city, March 20, Catherine Moore, a native of Tubbercurry, County Sligo, Ireland, aged 70 years.

MOORE.—In this city, March 20, Catherine Moore, a native of Tubbercurry, County Sligo, Ireland, aged 70 years.

MOORE.—In this city, March 21, Mary Moore, a native of Tubbercurry, County Sligo, Ireland, aged 70 years.

MOORE.—In this city, March 21

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

A REQUEST AND A REPLY.

DEAR UNDA:—Do write some verses on Ireland for your affectionate sister.

EMMA.

O Ethel dear, 'tis hard to bear
The story of poor Ireland;
The wrongs, the woes, the relentless foe
Inflicted on that island.

The Saint's songs or Sinn's wrongs,
Her deep, red sea of sorrow,
My plaintive muse shall s'er refuse
To chant until to-morrow.

In vain would I attempt to try
(And not feel more hearted)
To contemplate her stricken state,
Her glory long departed.

Her daisy hills, her fairy dells
Her mazy crystal water,
Her stalwart sons, her bonny lasses,
Her pure—her matchless daughters.

Her chosen leaf of hard and chief,
Her shillelah and blackthorn,
Are dear to me as naught can be,
Among them I was born.

Her changeless green is ever seen
Where nature can permit it;
When God had made that land he said:
"I'm good,"—and then he blest it.

With pride I trod the sacred sod,
Delighted with such visions;
And wondering why her foe traitors sought
A spot their dear opinion.

Well, whatever, 'twas, attaching fear
From pity's tenderness,
Yet I'm sure I'm not in error
Tho' I'm not in my senses.

"Eat," you say, say, "Dear uncle, pray
Do tell me why you left her,
Of loyal one, for you were one—
That day you bowed and shaved."

Perhaps, dear child, I then was wild,
My heart is ever with her;
Both heart and brain shall so remain
Till heart and brain shall wither.

I hop'd in vain, to see again
Each place I loved to ramble,
Her lighted fire, her cottage door,
Or where I'd dwell scramble.

Her place, her plaidie, unscathed shadow
Her mountains, lags, each wildwood
In no answer, each spirit your
More dear than s'er in childhood.

Her queenly brow is sorrow now
Is veiled, but God will save her;
Then, Ethel dear, we need not fear,
All hell cannot undermine her.

Hall! lovely Ida—thy sacred soil
Is replete s'er the nymphs;
They can't endure on soil so pure—
They touch thee but to perish. [illegible]

My Island home, tho' doomed to roam
I never did ignore thee;
Tho' hard as fate—my heart the same
I ever could adore thee.

Ireland—Ireland, yet undismayed
I stand a church defender,
The good fellow of the public house, always
"We'll die, but not surrender."

With pence and pen, like other men,
I tried being opinion,
Of Pontiac band in this free land,
I tried to conscience.

And did away for her to pray,
I'm prayed to God to save her;
And now, dear child, tho' I was wild
I think I did not err.

But, ask dear ma, for she, says,
Dots very well remember;
I was in love, I'm sure, I know
Was one of dark November.

Me copy, I dotted, dear grandma cried—
Her hotsie seemed all to burn,
Ask loving Ma—she will tell you
O that time! could I return!

O Ethel dear, the I am here
Mr. Sweeney going into Ireland,
If amongst details it were seen
I hand again my relation.

But, here and there, yes, everywhere
Throughout the Island,
In all her valley grim fastnes stalks
The sad and sore and blighted.

The peasant's hut, O! breathe it not,
Where the fever-stricken lie,
Is shorthand dismal of direst want—
A bedroom, kitchen, sty.

Its kindness, dell, grovelling still,
Ill seems most betoken;
Even hell is more merciful to the curs
Till the landlord-pole is broken.

O'er native soil, her sons of toil
A stranger seem to wander;
Her abscissors, beyond the seas
Their plaidie and blackthorn squander.

The vampire breed still suck her blood,
Still fatten on her plight;
With wanton joy her millions die,
Her perish of starvation.

The landed lord! the vamal horde
High carnival are keeping!
Their victims are—the poor, dear Isle,
Their hapless epilepsy weeping!

Ta rum of nights! amort your flight,
O Ireland yet a hundred
Years hounded years of poons' tears
Ye will be deserted!

But poons' tears ten thousand years
Ten hundred years hence can't serve,
The tyrant's chain will still remain
Not riveted as ever.

Let cannon roar from shore to shore,
The sunburst gleaming o'er you,
Let hearts of oak, and gallant yeomen
Ay! your fathers did before you.

With swords, and pikes, and blunderbuss
And charge the Saxon hordes,
And let them feel your cold blue steel,
There's logic in that sword.

A loyal hand to mother-land
Should unsheathed be the baby, and, dreaming
Would never yield the battle field
Tis Saxon, I say! [illegible]

Profaned by years of chains and tears
Her sword will unsheathe her;
The Saxon blood, the act so good,
Will serve to enrich her.

But, hide you time, commit no crime,
Keep counsel on the tower;
Wait for the day we cannot say,
Hear ance, the trifled for hour.

Go on the plan, as I mention your scrawl—
Yes, "Anna Jo—Keep it warm;"
The powder dry, you'll hold with joy
The bursting of the storm.

So at them then, like Irishmen
Fighting in their fatherland;
Remember how the Irish fought
The eternal Sweeney.

Then, grasp the sword, invoke the Lord,
Your country fought and died;
The Saxon scout will fine about,
But, you have have to tribute.

Your mam is right—then strike with might,
And God will serve your army;
And you will see your country free
On the clearing of the storm.

Yes, one more more our native shore
Ye shall be free!
Much Freedom's smile our Emerald Isle
The home of valor and sense.

In College Green will then be seen Legislature;
The Harp that dead, so only wept
Will wake in jubilation.

Yes, Ethel dear, shall then appear
Our land, in all its grandeur;
Jo Freedom's hand shall hoist outright,
Transcending former splendor.

UNDA JANE.

Marlboro, Ont.

Advice to Mothers.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to the taste, it softens the gums, reduces the pain, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Literary Miscellany.

Jim Daly's Repentance.

BY KATHARINE TYNAN.

When the story was told to me, I thought it extremely sad and pathetic. I wish I could tell it as I heard it, but having spent all in a summer day, I can only set down the facts as they happened, and in my halting words they will read, I fear, but badly and lonely; and if in the reading will be found no trace of the tears which dropped from my eyes while listening to this little human tragedy, I am more sorry than I am say for my want of skill. Indeed, I could not write it at all, if I had not sleeped in tears. It is the story of a hard and futile repentance—futile, in that amends could never be made to those who had been sinned against; but surely not futile, inasmuch as no hour of human pain is ever wasted that is laid beside the Lord, but rather is gathered by Him in His pitiful hands, to be given back one day as a harvest of joy.

CHAPTER I.

"Whisht! whoira! whisht! Sure I know you NATAR MORE to hort me or the child!"

The woman, shielding young and pretty, who thus spoke, was half sitting, half, lying in a low rush-bottomed chair; in the poor kitchen of a small Irish farm-house. Her delicate, pretty face was marked with the mature lines of pain and care, and now it was paler than usual, for across cheek and cheek extended a livid, dark bruise, as if from the blow of a heavy fist; and over the pathetic, drooping mouth there was a cruel, jagged cut, evidently caused by a fall against something with a sharp projecting point.

By her side, in a watched cradle, lay puny baby, about a year old, with the small fingers, claw-like in their leanness, clutched friendly, and with one's gray wisdom, at two pinched features that one might have thought it dying. The young husband and father was cast down at his wife's knees, in an attitude bespeaking utter shamefacedness, and his face was hidden in her lap; but over the sun-brown hair her thin hands went softly, with caressing, tender strokings; and as she great, heart-breaking sobs burst from him, she leaned more close another down her was face, while her low, soft voice went on tenderly: "Whisht, alanna machree! whisht! Sure it's breakin' my heart ye are! How can I bear to listen to ye sobbin' like that!"

All the weary months of sick indolence and neglect were forgotten, and she only remembered that her Jim was in sore trouble.

Jim, Daly had entered her, her husband, and her baby's father; not Jim Daly the the good fellow of the public house, always ready to take a treat or stand one, always first in every scheme of conviviality, drowning heart and mind and conscience in whisky; while at home, on the little hill side farm, crops were rotting, poverty and hunger threatened the little household, and day after day the meek, uncomplaining wife was growing thinner and paler, and the lines deepened in her face, where no lines should be.

Then years had gone by since the wedding day, that seemed but the gate of a happy future for those two young creatures, who loved each other truly; and almost since that day Jim Daly had been going steadily down hill. Not that he was vicious, he was only young and gay and good-natured, which made him a great favorite, and he had a fine baritone voice, that could call out "Golden Glen Grattloch so well with rare power and tenderness. And when the cackling spirits who had taken up their abodes in the Widow Dodder's public-house nightly, would come to draw him aside with many flattering words, he was not strong enough to resist the temptation and the young wife—they were the merest boy and girl—was too gentle in her clinging love to say nay.

So things had been going on from bad to worse, and soon not only the village, but much of the day as well was spent in the ale shop. Finally, the long years of people began to shake their heads over boy, by Jim Daly as a confirmed drunkard, and the handsome, boyish face was growing sodden look, and the once bright eye relaxed to rest on either frankly or cleanly; but lowered under a friend's gaze uneasily and painfully. Poor Jim, however, the chiefest friend he had, was the publican, who, in his way, was kind to him, and keeps noting sadfully every step that he made on the downward path, where the gray shadows are growing deeper.

Jim was his quietly for a long time, with no movement disturbing the solemn silence, except once, when the mother's heart yearned to suddenly to gather into it the solid hand of her dying child. Not she is not alone in her distress; two Sisters of Mercy, in their black serge robes, are kneeling on the other side of the bed, and their soft eyes are tender and watchful. They will be ready with help the moment it is needed; but now the large bands of the brown library suspended from their girdle are slipping through their fingers, through the white fingers, and their lips are moving in prayer.

Suddenly the child sighs, and moves faintly. One of the nuns goes gently and noiselessly to the mother's side, and she sinks; this morning Sister Columba had spoken to her of the joy of what a wonder and happiness flowers always were to the crippled child—for Jim Daly's little lad was all ways crippled from that fall in his baby-hood. He lies one contentedly a moment, and then says, in a broken voice:

"Mammy, will there—be green fields in heaven—and—flowers—as well? I'd like to run then! I couldn't go to Cruachin Iar-mear—with his poor—cross! I was lame—by they got primroses—an' gay we—ran—"

And it is the nun who answers, for the mother is sobbing:

"Yes, Jimmy, darling child, there will always be green fields in heaven, and primroses and you will run and sing, and our dear Lord will be there, and His Blessed Mother, and He will come to see you playing about His feet."

And gradually the soft sleep passes imperceptibly and painlessly into death. And the nun sinks down at his mother's side, and lays him down softly on the pillows, and smooths the little limbs, and composes the loving hand over the transparent eyelids; and the other nun gathers poor Winnie's hot face with a sweet comforting words, that will surely help her by and by, ta which now are unheeded, because God has mercifully given her a short insensibility.

CHAPTER III.

A fortnight later a bronzed and bearded man landed on the quay of Dublin. It was Jim Daly—a new, grave Jim Daly—coming home, now comparatively a wealthy man, with the money earned by hard in Sonny in the gold fields. There he had worked steadily for three years, with always the one object in view; of atoning for the past, and making fair the future to wife and child and mother; and the object had been strong enough to keep him apart from the sin and riotousness and drunkenness of the camp.

He had never written home in all these years, though the thought of his loved ones was always with him—at getting up and lying down, in his dreams, and during the hours of the working day. At first, times were hard with him; for three years it was a steady struggle for existence; and he could not bear to write while every day he feel were slipping back ward. Then came the rush to the gold fields, and scoring on lucky rich, he found himself steadily getting "o pile," and so determined that when a fortune was amassed he would turn his steps homward; and bonnes postal arrangements in those days were precarious, and the time occupied by the transit of a letter so long, he had given up the thought of writing at all, wanting capacity the days drifting by that were bringing him nearer home.

In his wandering life no letter had ever reached Jim Daly; but he doubted not that his dear ones were all right. In his peaceful saliva village life always passed innocently and safely; the people were poor, but the landlord was lenient, and they had enough to pay rent he asked, without exposing themselves to the starvation and misery that ravaged on the other estates. And, apart from destitution and sin of the kind, the misery crept close to be accompanied from their dissense, and the little graveyard was long in filling up.

Jim was thinking of all this day, and he had no idea of how things had changed. For a time after he mised everything had gone fairly; Winnie had grown strong again, and even when his silence grew alarming, so many people were had time enough to do so sure he loved her, and she knew he would come back some day. The first blood on the sky came when the baby developed some shadow of the life-in the result of the fall—which refused to yield to medical treatment, and he became worse with time; and as the years slipped by, the child lying grew into a delicate, gentle child, fair and wise and grave, but crippled hopelessly.

The fourth year after Jim went, there came a bad season; crops failed, and the one dead; and then, fast on those troubles the kind old landlord died, and the agency of the estate was placed in the hands of J. P. and D. L., sides of whose activities on the estate already wonder that they made those simple peasants shiver by their mysterious hints in winter evenings. Then, like a thunderclap, came raising of rent followed soon by strife, and then the sheriff, and the eviction period. One of the first to be deprived of his home was old Mrs. Daly, and when she saw the little brown house, dear to her memory for so many years, had brought her a bride, where her children were born, and from whose door, one after the other the little coffins, dead at birth, had been carried, till all hat breathing, hearty Jim came,—when she saw the golden thatch of her cot gone to the flames, the house, proud old heart broke from the home of a kindly neighbor she also went out, a few days later, to pitch, hushed and broken in the churchyard, where none should seek to arrist them. And the troubles thickened, and fever and fever and death came; and then the good priest died—and a broken heart, they said. And so the last friend was gone, and the people, with pains and death shadowing every household, were overwhelmed with their own troubles; and poor Winnie and her little crippled son drifted away to the city.

And at the time all these things were happening, Jim was lying on a bed of pain in a hut tent in the erating, raising gravely with a wounded leg, and found on a farter vision than the samp, or the Australian sky, per panorama that passed unbeeded before him, with a great yearn to be with the green grasses in the pastures at home in Inishmore; and he saw Winnie, his dear colleen, coming from the little house door, and he heard her voice call to him, as she used to do, and she exclaimed: "Why, Jim, I never saw you! Why, I thought it dead! Come, and I'll get you a drink!" and he could hear the ripple of her laughter, and he saw the little son, with his cheeks like apples in August, and his violet eyes dancing with joy, and he heard the boy's voice calling, crying, stumbling; and the fat lively hand stretched in his hand, and he felt, all of a sudden, tender laugh she swung him in her lap and arranged his hair, and on her shoulder, wherefrom he shouted so merrily that the Sisters of Charity, who were with him, and he looked around for a moment her placed chasing of the cud, to gaze in alarm at the approaching dangers of his mind.

Oh, how sad their dream seems to me, knowing the bitter reality! I will tell you how Jim Daly found his wife. It was the evening when he landed at the North Wall, where he was obliged to wait until morning for a train to take him home. Impatient that meet his loved ones, the pain and anxiness increased by this delay, he was restless, and he looked around for some amusement to pass the time. He had a little money in his pocket, and disposed his fly down the Rotunda, where he was in the company of the Illesses, then through the goodness of God, the fruit of prayer, Masses and indulgences will be available for other souls.

Jim was thinking, he assured, that far from being prejudicial to ourselves, our Charity towards the Departed will, on the contrary, be most advantageous to us, because merit is proportionate to the ratio of charity. Accordingly there is more charity in sacrificing a person's own interest to relieve his suffering brethren, than in doing good to himself. "There is very little virtue in giving what is superfluous to the poor," remarks a judicious author, "but a great deal in bestowing what is dear and even necessary for oneself." We should likewise consider how the special protection of the Righteous whose place we may have assigned, and whose deliverance we may have accelerated. Having once entered into Glory, they will become our most faithful intercessors before the Throne of Father. We perhaps know them not, but they know us well, and will never forget us. Neither will they be alone in discharging this their debt of gratitude. Our Blessed Lord Himself, whose interests are very at immensely promoted and advanced by our devotion towards those Holy Souls, will assist them in repaying the kind service we may have rendered them.

—Rick Heaslem cured at once by "DIRT."

THE TIME FOR HOUSE-CLEANING.

A Lenten Discourse which Everybody will Gain Profit by Reading.

"And when he (the useless spirit) is come, he findeth the house where he came out swept and garnished."

This is the time of year for house cleaning, and a Prudent Father is a person delivered on a recent Sunday. This priest is the housekeeper of the spiritual chambers of the soul, and you know that especially in this season of Lent, it is housecleaning time for him, too; and, I may add, for everybody else. Many other housekeepers, he often finds he has a very dirty job on his hands. It is astonishing what filth some people have to clean up in this land of grace, time, both in houses and souls. The good woman wonders where it all came from. While it was gathering in the dark and gloomy corners unknown to her, it was quite so plainly, but not, as a rule, she is blissfully unaware, and shows it all up. She cannot help her—it is her nature—she is so much ashamed of it herself as all her neighbors are—she must have it out. But if she has any respect for herself, or love for her husband and children, she gives up her courage, and out comes the broom and the scrubbing brush and pail, and it is days with courage and a good will, to sweep the cobwebs and take to reach the dust-covered pictures and ornaments, and the dark cobwebs; and down upon her knees to get at the filth and the dirt, that has crept in and accumulated in the corners, and behind the doors. The good housekeeper, the Prudent Father, knows that the soul of Jesus Christ, the Master, who was, and says truly, that it is His home, and that He wishes to dwell there. The priest is now like the virtue in the selling elbow, the scrubbing brush and the soap and hot water used to help clean up the souls of those people who are in the right spirit—and God's grace is shining during this Lenten season, and compelling them to see what a dirty place it is, so all they can do is to wish it clean.

I begin by saying that the priest was the housekeeper of the spiritual chambers of the soul, and he is the one who undertakes there. It would be better to say that everybody is the housekeeper of his own soul, and that he ought to keep it clean, not only for his own happiness, but for love of Jesus Christ, the Master, who was, and says truly, that it is His home, and that He wishes to dwell there. The priest is now like the virtue in the selling elbow, the scrubbing brush and the soap and hot water used to help clean up the souls of those people who are in the right spirit—and God's grace is shining during this Lenten season, and compelling them to see what a dirty place it is, so all they can do is to wish it clean.

No matter who wants a clean soul is not discouraged. He says to himself "I'll go to the door, and, with a little, I will begin right away." (If he goes at it once confusion, scattering at the heap of filth he has to clean up, and hardly believing that he is in the right spirit enough to begin, "wondering," as I heard a sad sinner saying "if one priest could absolve all the sins he had to do.

He finds, to his joy, that there is plenty of help and all he has to do is the spiritual house ever seen—that one priest can absolve all the sins he has to do—everything is very simple, and he begins right away." (If he goes at once to confusion, scattering at the heap of filth he has to clean up, and hardly believing that there is help enough

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1886.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

APRIL 14—Palm Sunday.
" 19—Monday—Cons. Sp. Sierra-Leon, Idaho, 1885.
" 21—Wednesday—Feria.
" 22—Thursday—MATERNITY THURSDAY.
" 23—Good Friday.
" 24—Saturday—HOLY SATURDAY.

Ireland's Prospects for Home-Rule.

The full and comprehensive obituaries which we publish of the important proceedings in the British Parliament will enable our readers to reach satisfactory conclusions concerning the prospect which the present political crisis offers for the attainment of Home Rule for Ireland. It is wise "to make haste slowly" in coming to conclusions regarding the regaining of freedom by the Irish people, as the question will—in all likelihood—be left for other Parliaments than the present to decide.

The Irish people have gained a great victory even in the single fact of having the Right Hon. Prime Minister present such a Bill as Gladstone has formulated for the action of the British representatives. This is a most important advance in the right direction, and one that the head of no English ministry ever yet had the courage or the honesty to accomplish. Innumerable bills legislating for the benefit of Ireland have been presented to the British House of Commons, but hitherto they have been treated with contempt, now, however, the cause of Ireland has attracted the sympathy of the whole world, her case is the hands of faithful representatives, and hence England is coerced into listening to appeals to which she hitherto turned a deaf ear.

The speech made by Gladstone when he presented his scheme for Irish Home Rule, entitles him to the eternal gratitude of the Irish people in every land. He stands alone (in the midst of millions of Ireland's enemies, as the Moses to lead Erin from bondage to freedom. May God preserve him the health, strength and perseverance necessary to win the great political battle in which he is now engaged, and may he live long to wear the laurels of victory won for a long-suffering people.

Commenting upon the epitaphs which Gladstone's measures has developed, T. P. O'Connor, M. P., thus sets forth the situation and forecasts the results which are likely to follow from the present critical state of the British political world:

The criticism of the Tory leaders devolves upon them the duty of the main point of attack, not only by the wisdom but by the whole tone of the speech, in the provision for the exclusion of the Irish members from the Imperial Parliament at Westminster, the indelicateness of the tone and sentiment in the whole of the portion of Gladstone's proposals respecting the police force, and lastly, but not least, the intimation that those portions of the Premier's statement which relate to the land question, will be brought in before the second reading. It would be a great misfortune if the impression should be allowed to prevail that the Tory leaders are not sincerely desirous of the Premier's statement being read a second time

Farm and Home.

Profit in France.

If any orchardist doubts the desirability of the French prunes as a safe investment for a certain future income, says the Prune and Horticulturist, we refer him to E. J. Knapp, of Carpentoria, who has just marketed this season a crop from one acre and a half of land. In planting an orchard six years ago, Mr. Knapp only set out 350 prune trees, not knowing how well they would thrive. From the very first they have been vigorous and thrifty, needed but little care, and have borne a crop every year the first year. This, the dry season they have to contend with, had seemingly no bad effect on them, and each tree was literally loaded with fruit. After gathering and drying, just completed, Mr. Knapp found he had four tons of dried fruit, all in as prime, acceptable condition as any foreign prunes ever in market. C. C. Hunt bought the whole crop at once, the price being twelve and one-half cents per pound. This, from an acre and a half of land, is pretty comfortable profit, and the figures are not exaggerated in the least. As California dried prunes are equal, if not superior, to imported varieties, they seem to promise a wide and permanent market. The prune, though the favorite of all dried fruits, is a decidedly sensitive and difficult tree to suit in soil and climatic conditions, and attempts to transplant it have utterly failed everywhere else but in California. Under these circumstances it is improbable that future prices or demand can be less than now, though an advance is likely. Even at a net profit of less than half the present retail price, yielding five cents per pound, a small family could live very comfortably from the income of six acres, which would be $1,000 a year. In the Santa Clara valley many handling pain their entire living from the profits of their prune orchards, five and six acres in size, and their children do all the picking and drying. A five-acre tract of land recently sold by Hon. Allen Blamey, adjoining Chino, has been prepared for prune trees, the land thoroughly being fish and just suited for the purpose. Other orchards are to be set out in that locality, and we expect the business will be quite extensively engaged in.—Chico Chronicle.

Shying Horses.

This trick or vice is generally the effect of nervous timidity, resulting from an unstable temperament. It is aggravated by improper handling. To punish a horse for shying introduces a new cause of fear. The horse will be more alarmed and show more tokens of fear at the prospect of a whipping than at the imaginary object of danger in the road. Hence one bad habit is cardinal by the introduction of another. It is impossible to whip terror out of a horse or prevent nervous tics in one. Kindness and gentle persuasion are the best weapons to correct the peculiarities habit of shying. The less fear exhibited by the driver, and the less notice taken of the shying by using harsh means, the sooner it will be given up. A careful, experienced horseman can easily detect an object likely to cause a nervous horse to shy, and by word or touch will encourage him to pass it unnoticed. When this fails, give him time to look at the object of his fear; pat him and soothe him up to it, then take him past it two or three times, will be taken no notice of it.

When shying is the result of the combined habit it is incurable, and if the eye sight is failing, the horse for ordinary driving and riding will be perfectly useless. A man we know that had great sight in harness for two or three years, suddenly took to jumping the white stone crossings of an ordinary macadamized street, as if they were water breaks. In three months she was stone blind.

Colton Fields in Nevada.

Few are aware that a part of Nevada is capable of producing semi-tropical or even tropical plants, but this is nevertheless true. In the extreme southeastern part of Lincoln county, near where the Arizona and Utah lines meet the Nevada line, is a Mormon settlement, where melons, citrus, grapes and such things are raised in abundance. In the settlement they have a cotton gin and a flouring mill, and are absolutely independent of the rest of the world. Irrigation, which is a small stream coming into the Colorado river, runs through the settlement. On the map it is designated as township 13, south of range 70 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

Extracting Teeth with the Pistol.

Old Dr. Money extracted tooth by fastening a strong piece of magnet secured to the tooth, to the opposite end of which he placed a bullet, was fired. With this tooth and a full measure of powder, a pistol was charged, and when the trigger was pulled, the operation was performed effectually and speedily. Once a gentleman who had agreed to try his nostrum, and had even allowed the apparatus to be adjusted, at the last moment hesitated. "Stop, stop, I've changed my mind!" "But I haven't, and you've a fool said a coward for your pains," exclaimed the Doctor, pulling the trigger. In another there being a surplus, it was turned, much to the timid patient's delight and astonishment.

A Bird Waiter.

As showing the extreme mildness of the winter in some portions of Tulare county, and the rapid growth of plants, Andrew Ross, who lives in Frazier valley, says there is a cabbage plant there years old on his place that is now green and growing and that has never died from the cold, it says, and that it has five or six branches of last year's growth that are at least five feet in height. He also has on his premises an orange tree of the same age that is about fifteen feet in height.

A Good Farmer.

The Hanford Sentinel says that George Moody has seventy acres of alfalfa on which he kept last year, 200 kegs for guide, 30 horses and put up 80 tons of hay. He has 45 acres of wheat from which he harvested 800 sacks, which yielded 140 pounds, making 1400 bushels. He is a good farmer and these figures prove it.

A fisher-saving Yankee of Chapinville, Conn., has rigged a crank attachment to a wheel of his wagon connected it with a churn that he places in the wagon; and when he comes in all ready for a dunge in into the churn, hitches up his horse and takes a ride, returning home in due time with a nice mess of butter that has indeed "come" very easily.

— The Medical Times says that a good way to remove insects from a garden from the eye is to take a horse hair and double it, leaving a loop. If the object can be seen, by the loop over it, close the eye, and the mote will come out as the hair is withdrawn. If the irritating object cannot be seen, raise the lid of the eye, and roll the ball around a few times, draw out the hair, and the substance which caused the pain will be seen to come with it.

"How are we ever going to get through our spring and summer's work? We are all run down, tired out before it begins. So my sweet-by-and-by farmer's family. We never go to your drug shop and pay five dollars for six bottles of Joyful Recuperative. This is just the medicine you need, and will pay compound interest on the investment.

DOMESTIC DISCORD
Often arises from a trifle. Let it be known you use the best, that's guaranteed pure, healthy, reliable, and you will have no quarrels with the grocery man.
BY WARNER'S
SAFE YEAST
Which, used with judgment,
NEVER FAILS!
It is put up in packages, 10 ounces net, and 2 ounces net, when full.
If your Grocer does not keep it, send 25 cents in stamps for a full package.
Warner's Safe Yeast Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Family Fun.

Sharp Retorts and Smart Sayings.

"I have such an indolent husband," said Mrs. Dull. "Yes; so Gossip says, responded Mrs. Spiteful, quietly. "Sometimes he indulges too much, doesn't he?" They no longer speak to each other.

Miss Lutewater, of doubtful age—"Have you noticed this quaint necklace of mine, Miss Pepper? Pepa had it made it for me in Florence, when I was a little child." "Indeed! Why, it is a real antique, isn't it?"

"There's no calamity can befall a woman which I have not suffered," said an indignant woman to her husband. "Oh, my dear; not so bad as that. For instance, you are not a widow," he replied, sweetly. She held her breath two seconds, and then retorted, "I said calamity, sir."

"Geography class, stand up," said a schoolmaster. "What is a pyramid?" "A pile of oats in a circus, one on top of the other." "Where's Egypt?" "Where it always was." "Where's Wales?" "All over the sea." "Very well," said the schoolmaster, "stay there till I show you a species of birch that grows all over this country."

Douglas Jerold was seriously disappointed with a certain book written by one of his friends. Hearing that the wit had spoken and his disappointment, the author, on meeting him, remarked, "I hear you said that book of mine was the worst I ever wrote." "No, I didn't," was the reply; "I said it was the worst book anybody ever wrote."

"Here is a curious case, ma'am," said the superintendent of the insane asylum. This man imagines he is the motive power that runs the world. He's perfectly harmless, though, but he thinks the world wouldn't move without him. Very queer notion, isn't it?" "I don't know about that. My husband had got the same notion in his head."

Spiner had a rich but vulgar old uncle of his wife's, from whom he has expectations, to dinner the other day. During a pause in the conversation the enfant terrible of the family, after watching the guest intently, said earnestly, "I wish I was you." "Do you, my little boy? And why do you wish you were me?" "Because you don't get out of the room when you eat with your knife."

Boone, baker's shop. Enter Biffs boy. "Please, I want two new loaves." Baker gives five-pence in payment. Hard shopkeeper—"Why, what's this? Two loaves? You haven't brought enough." Little boy, after a moment's pause—"That's all money gave me. When did it go up?" Hard shopkeeper—"Go along!" Exit boy. "Then, please, I'll take two of yesterday's bakes."

Fair ingénieuse: "And so you liked my performance?" Gallant admirer: "Oh, it was the very scene of tragic art. But I'm almost sorry I went; I caught such a frightful cold." Actress: "Cold! Why, the theatre was warmed!" Admirer: "Yes, but the floor was so damp." Actress: "Indeed! What could have caused that?" Admirer: "The tears." She gave him a free ticket for the season.

A sharp boy at a commercial college had addressed a letter to a firm as "Gents." "You mustn't do that," said the instructor. "Why not?" asked the boy. "Because 'Gents' is vulgar. Don't you know that invitations to negro balls are always addressed that way?" "Well, no! I never knew that," replied the boy, with much judgment because that the instructor blushed and hurried on to the next desk.

Some amateurs gave a concert not long since for a benefit. One of the features of the performance was a dirge on the piano, which, of course, was played in very slow time. At the rehearsal the gentleman who was getting up the performance, but who was not much of a musician himself, said to the young lady who was to pound out the dirge on the piano, "You can play as slowly as you please now at the rehearsal, but when it comes to playing it at night before the audience you will have to hurry up a little." Way so! "Because the pall bill will bring in out to debt, instead of there being a surplus, if you play as slowly as you are playing now."

Seven Wonders of the World.

A married man, when asked to name the seven wonders of the world, replied as follows:

A woman who will wear a spring bonnet the second season without growling.

The man who tells the truth when he says he never tasted liquor.

The taxpayer listener who is willing to talk for the good of the world when there is no cash in view.

The minister who gives all his marriage fees into the missionary fund.

The female who doesn't think every woman but herself looks like a fright when wearing a big bustle.

The lawyer who cannot be without blunders.

The old maid who never cried herself to sleep because she never married.

No Food for New York.

An Eastern man who was traveling in Arkansas entered a bush in a certain village and asked for a draft on New York.

"Don't keep 'em," was the prompt reply. "Don't you do any business with New York?"

"Yes, sir."

"Don't what a little singular?"

"I don't see it. When a bank has got mortgages on every farm in the county, a lien on every mule which comes into town, and a first claim on every stalk of corn and cotton for twenty miles around, what in thunder does it want to fool with New York for?"

Interrupted by a Revival.

"What other business do you follow besides preaching?" was asked of an old colored man.

"I speculates a little."

"How speculate?"

"Sells chickens."

"Where do you get the chickens?"

"My boys fetch 'em in."

"Where do they get them?"

"I dons know, ah. I'm allers so busy wid my preachin' dat I ain't got time to ask 'em."

"Then, suppose, I'll take two of yesterday's bakes."

Catholic Societies.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARTICULAR COUNCIL.—The Particular Council meets on a monthly, quarterly, semi-annual and annual session in total quantity. The Particular Council, including the Conferences of a parish, meets on the second Sunday after each of the Masses of the parish, or the conferences shall have a just proportion of means for relieving the poor of the parish, which means are derived from collections, dues of members and donations. Officers—President, Thomas Scott; Vice-President, Thomas Walsh; Secretary, Thomas Scott; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Cary Ryan; Assistant Treasurer, Thomas Walsh; Sentinel, Cary Ryan; Sentinel, Thomas Walsh; Sentinel, Thomas Scott; Sentinel, Cary Ryan. Meeting—Meeting of the Particular Council of the Conferences of the City and Suburbs, the first Sunday in each month.

The following list comprises the officers of the different St. Vincent de Paul Conferences in this city:

ST. MARY'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. John Prendergast, S. T. D.; President, Thomas Scott; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Secretary, Patrick F. McCormick, 910 Larkin street. Meeting the 1st Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the Sacristy Chamber of St. Mary's Cathedral, California St.

ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan, 1401 Stockton street; President, James Fitzgerald; Treasurer, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Patrick Ready; 1107 Dupont street; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Scott. Meeting the 2d Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Patrick Ready; 1107 Dupont street; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Scott. Meeting the 3d Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. J. Prendergast, S. T. D.; President, Cary Ryan; Vice-President, Thomas Scott; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 4th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Secretary, Thomas Scott. Meeting the 5th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 6th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 7th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 8th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 9th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 10th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 11th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 12th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

Monsignor Dominic Parisis—Spiritual Director, Rev. Joseph Sadlier; President, C. J. Hagan; Vice-President, Charles McIntyre; Secretary, Matt. V. Brady; Treasurer, Daniel Kelly; Sentinel, Jas. Lynch; Sentinel, Jas. Brady.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS OF AMERICA.

ST. JOSEPH'S BRANCH.—No. 429—MATEVIMILA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jos. Sadlier; President, Jas. Lynch; Vice-President, Thos. J. Dunn; Rec. Sec., D. F. McCarthy; Fin. Sec., D. F. Desmond; Treasurer, Frank J. Tonkin; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Chas. Dwyer; Trustees, John C. Coyle, (1 year) Jas. M. Doyle, (2 yrs) Jas. Lynch, (3 yrs) Jas. Donovan. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. MARY BRANCH.—No. 435—MERCY—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Mrs. M. Ryan; Vice-President, Mrs. M. Sullivan; Rec. Secretary, C. P. McCarthy; Fin. Secretary, P. H. Narcisse; Treasurer, M. H. Brown; Marshal, Miss A. Kearney; Guard, Mrs. Shanahan; Trustees, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Brown. Meeting 2d and 4th Sundays.

ST. JOHN BRANCH.—No. 452—SACRAMENTO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Phelan; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Chas. Cronin; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Lynch; Guard, Jas. Brady; Trustees, Jas. Donovan, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PETER'S BRANCH.—No. 457—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Chas. Cronin; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 463—MARYSVILLE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOSEPH'S BRANCH.—No. 468—SAN JOSE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. MARY'S BRANCH.—No. 487—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. M. P. Kelly; President, Jas. P. Taaffe; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 488—PETALUMA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 490—STOCKTON—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PETER'S BRANCH.—No. 492—SAN JOSE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 501—VISALIA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 502—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. MARY'S BRANCH.—No. 507—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. M. P. Kelly; President, Jas. P. Taaffe; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 508—PETALUMA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 509—STOCKTON—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PETER'S BRANCH.—No. 510—SAN JOSE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 511—VISALIA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 512—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. MARY'S BRANCH.—No. 517—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. M. P. Kelly; President, Jas. P. Taaffe; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 518—PETALUMA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 519—STOCKTON—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PETER'S BRANCH.—No. 520—SAN JOSE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 521—VISALIA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 522—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. MARY'S BRANCH.—No. 527—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. M. P. Kelly; President, Jas. P. Taaffe; Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 528—PETALUMA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 529—STOCKTON—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PETER'S BRANCH.—No. 530—SAN JOSE—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. PATRICK'S BRANCH.—No. 531—VISALIA—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

ST. JOHN'S BRANCH.—No. 532—SAN FRANCISCO—Spiritual Director, Rev. Jas. Sadlier; President, Jas. Donovan; Vice-President, Chas. Cronin; Rec. Sec., Jas. Lynch; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Guard, Jas. Donovan; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Brady. Meeting 1st and 3d Sundays.

DEVOTIONAL SOCIETIES.

YOUNG MEN'S CATHOLIC SOCIAL AND LITERARY SOCIETY.—President, Geo. C. H. Byrne; First Vice-President, Jas. Lynch; Second Vice-President, Jas. Donovan; Rec. Sec., Chas. Cronin; Fin. Sec., Frank H. O'Brien; Treas., P. H. Narcisse; Assistant Rec. Secretary, J. Kelly; Corresponding Secretary, Jas. J. Craven; Physician, Dr. Jordan; Marshal, Jas. Brady; Assistant Marshal, Jas. Donovan; Guard, John Cronin; Trustees, Chas. Cronin, Jas. Lynch, Jas. Donovan, Jas. Brady. Meeting—Second Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street. The association meets in Conference on the last Sunday in each month, for the purpose of mutual improvement. Meetings are held at 1128 Stockton street, rooms 12 and 14, open every evening from 7 until 10 P. M. A complete catalogue of books can be addressed to James J. Craven, Corresponding Secretary, or to the President, Geo. C. H. Byrne.

ST. JOHN'S BENEVOLENT SOCIETY OF OAKLAND, CAL.—President, Thomas Walsh; First Vice-President, Jas. J. White; 1360 Wood st.; Second Vice-President, P. Scully; 1st Rec. Sec., Cary Ryan; 2d Rec. Sec., Thomas Scott; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Fin. Secretary, Patrick F. McCormick, 910 Larkin street. Meeting on the second Sunday after Vespers, in the Sacristy Chamber of St. Mary's Cathedral, California St.

ST. JOSEPH'S FARMS.—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Scanlan, 1401 Stockton street; President, James Fitzgerald; Treasurer, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Patrick Ready; 1107 Dupont street; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Scott. Meeting the 2d Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. J. Prendergast, S. T. D.; President, Cary Ryan; Vice-President, Thomas Scott; Treasurer, Philip Ryan; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 3d Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 4th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 5th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 6th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 7th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 8th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 9th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 10th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 11th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

ST. PATRICK'S FARM.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Peter Yorke; President, Thomas Walsh; Vice-President, Cary Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Scott; Secretary, pro tem, Thomas Walsh. Meeting the 12th Sunday in each month, at 2 o'clock, in the new Hall, 1107 Dupont street.

Our Young Folks.

Monitor Mystics.

Filial Love.

Young friends, there is not on earth any much lovely sight than the unwearied care and attention of children to their parents. Where filial love is in the heart, we will answer for all other virtues. No young man or woman will turn out basely, we strongly believe, who has parents respected and beloved. A child affectionate and dutiful will never bring the gray hairs of his parents to the grave. The wretch who breaks forth from wholesome restraint, and disregards the laws of his country, must have first disobeyed his parents, although neither love nor respect them. It is seldom the case that a dutiful son is found to be naught of his country, or to be degraded. Filial love will keep man from sin and crime. There never will come a time, while your parents live, when you will not be under obligations to them. The older they grow the more need will there be for your assistance care and attention to their wants. The venerable brow and the frosty hair speak loudly to the love and compassion of the child. It is sacred and infinitely make them at times fretful, bear with them patiently, and forgetting that time are long may bring you to need the same attention. Filial love will surely never go unrewarded.

Slave to Caprice.

Subjection to moods is the mark of a deteriorating morality. There is no lower servitude than that of the mind. Moods are rises are lower, and a mind composed of such mean, cowardly stuff is not worth liberties. This is a truth that the young must lay to heart. It will be a sorry day for this world, and for the young man and everybody makes his moods his masters, and does nothing but what he is in the mood to do. The need of training the will to the performance of work that is distasteful; of making the impulses serve instead of allowing them to rule the higher nature; of forgetting the moods instead of being subjugated by them, lies at the very foundation of character. It is possible to learn to fix the wandering thought, to compel the reluctant mental energy, to concentrate the power upon the performance of a task to which there is no inclination. Until this victory has been gained, life holds no sure promise; the achievement of this conquest is the condition of future success. No matter how splendid may be the talents and gifts, unless there is a will that can marshal and command them, the life is sure to be a failure.

A True Boy.

"Sir," said a lad, coming to one of the wharfs in Boston, and addressing a well-known merchant, "Sir, have you any berth for me on your ship? I want to ship something." "What can you do? asked the gentleman. "I can lay my jug to any thing whatever I am put to," answered the boy. "What have you done? Have you been Catholic Claims for Christian Education.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

this to every one who has ever made any attempt in the instruction of children. One hour a week cannot be set against thirty with all the impressions and associations which the day-school brings. The mind, as it expands from day to day in the knowledge of truth, must also see in every line the growing light of the Creator and the lessons of his Divine revelation; otherwise each step will be an advance on the path of negation, which, through called the path of philosophy, by many, is really the way of infidelity. Children are to be taught positively the dogma of faith revealed. These dogmas are not to be either put aside or doubtfully referred to, as if they were only questions to be examined.

And, in fact, there is no place where children can be addressed but the daily school. There is no other place where the lessons of religion of the teachings of the Church can reach them. We believe there is no just ground for complaint. The only rule is the conscientious conviction of Catholics, founded upon their own knowledge and experience. If, therefore, the elimination of religious teaching from the school satisfies no one, or should satisfy no one but atheists, there is only one portion of society which can be pleased with what we may call godless schools.

The system which would select out of the actual of the Christian creed a few articles, or make schools out of the truths of natural religion, is a practical impossibility. There are trouble upon which all classes are near agreed. Unhappily there is not one which is not disputed by many. And where is the arbiter who has the right to decide upon the truths which shall be deemed essential? If Protestants, inconsistently as it seems to us with their professions, are willing to adopt such a system, we Catholics surely are not, and our rights of conscience are to be respected.

THERE REMAINS THEN ONLY ONE WAY by which the principles we hold sacred can be observed, and the obligations we feel to our religion be granted to us. There is the establishment of denominational schools, in which from early childhood the truths of revelation and of the divine law may be impressed upon the growing powers of the young mind. These powers will grow for good or for evil, for truth or for error, for this way every religious denomination would be able to provide for its own children, and to preserve what it professes to hold dear. And as it will be that every non-conformist must do this, or be instrumental in its own destruction by the neglect of the most ordinary means of self-preservation.

We are told that, granting all this, "we may over liberty; we may establish as many Christian schools as we choose. There is no one to hinder us." To this we reply that we recognize our legal right, and that we mean to use it. But there is an injustice practiced upon us which is a species of persecution. We are taxed unjustly and unfairly to our at our expense. The state imposes a large tax upon all its citizens for the support of its schools. Them schools are not according to our conscience. We ought to be forced to patronize them. We cannot use them with a good conscience, nor can we be forced to pay for them? Is it just to tax us for them when we cannot send our children to them, and when we are obliged to pay heavy sums for the building and maintenance of denominational schools? It is amazing to us that honest people do not see the injustice of this. There are those who know well that the public schools are the principal agencies of the perversion of many of our children from the faith of their fathers.

Because they are tried to see this result, are fair-minded citizens willing to be governed by it? Are they, and do in others what they would not tolerate for themselves?

THE PURELY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL.

We say this with no intention of speaking ill of them, nor of ignoring their real merits. All these institutions are good. But they are, and must be godless, as neither the existence of God nor His revelation to man are taught in them. They have only one end in view, and one have to other. This is the direction of the mind and all the energies of the heart to the needs of time to the exposure of eternity. The materialism of our day ignores altogether the life after death with its great and endless destinies. When we are taxed to support such schools we are bound to contribute to that which according to our conscience is wrong in principle and evil in its results to children and to society. Is this just? Is it in accordance with the spirit of freedom which should govern a State like ours? It is admitted that the Catholic shall assume the expense of primary education, we ought rather to be exempted from the tax imposed or rather a proportion of the sum based according to the number of the children we claim to be. Our system would be more reasonable. The more principles would apply to all private schools, which would be allowed a share of the tax paid by all. This is what Catholics want, and it would be the perception of the use level for primary education, and they want all others who desire it to enjoy the same privilege. They want it for their own children alone. Neither in schools, nor in proportion of them, nor in school stories, do they desire to meddle with the children of Protestants or unbelievers. In instance of such proselytism on our part we be tried. We pant to preserve the faith of our own children, and we must do it, even if we are unjustly taxed to support schools which we cannot conscientiously approve.

In brief, we want the denominational system for ourselves. We leave others to decide that they want in the same liberty we claim for all.

SOMETHING TO AND NEW BY THE ANCIENT TOOL

We can claim something new and ancient of when we assert our conscientious and prudent, ignorance and prejudice shall are the source of such an objection. The proposition is not new. It has been given out of the sentiments of Christian sects and the angry interest of bigotry. The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." In this country the common schools were once Protestant institutions whose influence was directed against our religion. The denominational system exists in almost every nation of Europe, and gives more perfect satisfaction than ever, while it insures more universal education. In Prussia and in other European countries the denominational system is carried out in minimum, and while the harmony of all classes is secured, the children of Catholic parents are blessed with the benefits of education. "In 1864," says Ker, a Protestant writer, "the Prussian people had established 23,646 schools, which were attended daily by 2,200,146 children, and were directed by 27,639 highly educated teachers, of whom nearly 20,000 were Protestants, who had obtained diplomas and certificates of character at the Prussian colleges. Could this magnificent result have been obtained if the people, the clergy, and the government had not been at variance on the question of religion?"

STATISTICS COULD RARELY BE CITED to show the beneficent operation of the denominational system wherever it is established. Every attempt in Europe to disturb it has been the fruit of atheism, or an assault upon all religion, and has led only consequences. It has found favor with many of our best and most patriotic citizens. It ought to find favor with all.

"Social Condition and Education of the People."

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Cork.—The County Cork Grand Jury have approved of a presentment for the construction of a lunatic asylum for the county, the lunatic at present accommodated in the county asylum at Ballinrobe, Mayo, to be transferred to the new asylum. The cost of the work was originally estimated at £18,000, and the Grand Jury proposed to borrow £12,000 of the sum required to complete it.

The Cork Grand Jury have passed £1,000 on the application of Father Davis and Mr. Healy, Fishery Inspector, towards the establishment of a schoolship at Baltimore, for training the youth of the county in a proper mode of catching and curing fish, and making and mending nets. It was mentioned that the Chief Secretary promised to place the school, when started, on the same footing as other industrial schools. This is the first application under the Act of 1885.

On March 14th, a little girl named Mary Dalton, aged 8 years, was alone in her father's house, at Banada, when her clothes caught fire. Her cries and screams attracted the notice of some persons passing by, who broke in the door, and rescued all the assistance possible to the unfortunate sufferer. The child died on the following morning.

Clare.—Mr. John O'Mahony, Chairman of the Kilrush Town Commissioners, overhead, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Kilrush.

An imposing funeral procession took place in Ennis, on March 14, when the remains of the late Mr. Michael Hogan were interred. The members of the Corrib family attended, and met with no molestation whatever. Of the clergy, only the venerable Father O'Loughlin was present. Some people who had organized the district on the occasion of ordinary relations in the Mass of the same time condemning, as secondrels, the members of the "Mitchelling" party, who by about collecting arms and other things from the Mass, it is a suspicious circumstance that not the slightest attempt on the part of any of the Mitchelling party to aggravate the position of the much-tried Corrib family by any unseemly demonstration.

Longford.—The National Festival passed off at Longford with the usual enthusiasm, the demonstration taking place except that of the turnout of the Longford brass band at which had to be hired in the festival. The band was accompanied with the Ballymahon, Ballymore, and Lanesboro' bands on March 17, continued day and night, and the portion of the forenoon, large sums of the festival of approximately the Ballymahon in the Cathedral, and the Rev. J. Kelly, P.P., preached a splendid sermon on intemperance at the twelve o'clock Mass.

Limerick.—The demonstration in Limerick in one of the most remarkable and painful character of the day, and, it must be observed, there is very little sympathy with the Mitchelling party in the city, which speaking of, and the labor market, given the Mass, and the Mass, and Unfortunately, for the every clothing factory is closed earlier to some change in the order from the War Office, and in the condition of affairs it may be imagined that the Mass must be suffering severely. The only means of alleviating the prevailing distress must be the immediate execution of labor on the Shannon Navigation, and the work must be pushed to be built by the Limerick Fireclay Company, otherwise starvation will be the result.

Louth.—Cases of 1890 have been referred to the Commissioners for the purpose of enabling the Commissioners to carry out the provisions of the Act of 1886, and the Commissioners have decided to continue to Parliament, Mr. Michael Davitt, Mr. Dillon, Mr. John F. X. O'Brien, Mr. T. D. Sullivan, Mr. Sexton, and another of your fellowmen, whose chances of obtaining a seat in the House of Commons are very far from any issues of the severity of the Mass, have obtained employment on their work. The rate of wages is 1s. 6d. per day.

Mayo.—A very cheerfully accident occurred, on Sunday, March 11, at the village of Cooper, four miles from Ballyhaunis. A woman named Healy, it appears, directed her son, a boy of ten years of age, to shut the gate while she was about visiting a neighbor, and on returning in about a quarter of an hour she was horrified to see him hanging on a halter which was hung on a peg in the house, literally choked and strangled to death. It appears the lad was putting down a few bales he had got packed in the loader from which he was unable to extricate himself, and the strain caused a painful sensation in the neighborhood.

Great sympathy is felt in the neighborhood of Bohola for Mr. Hamilton, one of the tenants of the estate of the Fallon Land League, who has been ejected for the non-payment of the Mass of redemption had only just expired when she offered the rent and costs due; but, as her holding was wasted as a site for a police barrack, the agent insisted on his legal rights. The farm has since been grabbed.

At Ballyhaunis the National Festival was ushered in by the tunes band parading through the town, accompanied by a large concourse, and playing the National anthem. The festival was duly honored by the tens of thousands of people of both sexes who congregated in the town.

Sligo and County.—At a meeting recently held by the Lunn holders' Defence Union, at Monasterboice, Co. Louth, Mr. Thomas Gallagher, M.P., in the chair, it was stated that the Sligo movement at the eleventh hour, had taken the chair at Land League meetings when tenants still were afraid of eviction if they did so, and instanced cases where the landlords had got tenants to take out leases by pretending that they were about to sell their property.

Stonecarvers.—At Athlone the anniversary of our Patron Saint was celebrated in the most magnificent manner, and it is not too much to say that never was fete so fantastic honored and honored in the same display and decoration. The first parade commenced at two o'clock, and the procession was led off by the brass band of the Cross, Fife and Drum Band, which was followed by the Mass, Mass, Mass, Mass, Mass, which was followed by a crowd of the people, and the Mass, Mass, Mass, Mass, Mass,

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE MARTYR OF KALAWAO.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

[It is recorded in that remarkable little book "The Lepers of Molokai," that Father Damien, the heroic and sainted young priest who has devoted himself to death in the area of much in the Hawaiian archipelago, formally takes a vision in that hospital and lingering place, of the Divine Saviour, and of His Mother, in the form of Brother Dutton, a fellow-sufferer with him in the great cause. Father Damien, from the moment of his arrival, in consequence, of his disease, further of the world in general, Father Damien, written with a sublime simplicity of faith. Having, no doubt, much of the same characteristic of any Damien, and knowing the sweetness of the Divine Mother, and knowing the sweetness of the Divine Mother, and with that one intent I say it is good "But Abraham said, 'Friend, remember that thou art in thy life received good and thy brother evil; but now he is comforted and thou art tormented.' Luke 16:25.]

Not by the rack, the flame, the sword,
Shall this bright trophy crown the day
O noble martyr of the Lord!
Dalphon's heroic son!

Not like the Coliseum's hand,
Victims of Roman fancies,
Upon th' arena's bloody sand,
The prey of furious beasts!

But, in the tender, mute Southern sea,
Where Lazarus lies
A mass of complete peace,
Stands the Hawaiian valley.

Far from beloved Fatherland,
From friends, home, and friends,
The glory of thy mission grand
To immortal crowns,

O virgin holocaust of Love!
O royal martyr!
Whose performance to our God above,
Life-long consecration!

Thine be the triumph of the soul,
The martyr's victory!
No fiery martyrdom, laurous intent,
Can stain the spirit free!

For high in heaven, beyond the gloom
Of Death and dark Decay,
To where immortal bliss blooms
In fields of sublime Day,

Courage, brave heart,—the end is close —Its long or short the span
Of suffering life;—thy thou must share
Thy people's fate and lot.

What time the frail, corroding walls
Of flesh, release thy soul,
Christ, in His fair eternal halls,
Shall make thee glad and whole.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MY MARY.

My Mary she is smiling fair,
No artful charms can blind her,
Affection's heart her mirror bare,
Or every trouble behind her.
Mary, mine is my heart's delight,
Mary more to slight she ever sings
Like any mountain fairy,
Mary, mine is my heart she brings,
My little Irish Mary.

My Mary's eyes are full of Love,
Around my heart they've twined,
Her heart is as pure as a dove,
And pure as diamonds shining.
Her cheeks would shame the blushing rose,
Her form is light and airy,
With love my heart for her throbs,
My little Irish Mary.

I rate not wealth nor worldly pomp,
I seek no earthly treasure,
Form her I ever wish to roam,
She is my greatest pleasure.
Let others sigh for a powder let,
And scorn that ever vary,
Give me my lassie in smiles yet,
And my little Irish Mary.

FRANCIS QUIRK.

THE STATIONS OF THE CROSS.

JESUS IS CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

Thou then, my cruel heart, but thou
Thou wrought the doom thou weepest now
Thy sins are the cause of all this ill
Thy sins are the cause of Christ's death
Then, O, mourners—"Die for thee.
Thou, O, mourners—"Die for thee.

HE RECEIVES HIS CROSS.

Why choose a death of force delay
Take up thy Cross and follow Me
Thy Redeemer's cross
The cross, as if Thy demand it exact!
Then dost I, a sinner, live, we know
Must ever gist itself on woe.

HE FALLS THE FIRST TIME:

Thou fallest—all too weak! The might
That have sustained Thee
As the Thy myriad worlds wave none,
Hath much between the sins of a sin
Ye rainbow stones, then needless and,
How can you round your proverbial Cod!

HE MEETS HIS MOTHER:

Thy raise Him up, and good Him on,
Ye who! the Mother meets the Son,
How heart reads heart, as eye to eye
Darts the soul as tangent of reply!
Sweet Lady, traitor tho' I be,
Let me take Jesus Jesus with thee.

SIMON OF CYRENE IS MADE TO HELP HIM:

Ye sinless Jesus to see Him die
Too soon for cross and Calvary;
And the Crucifixion, inspire speak,
Reluctant, fondly the timely aid,
O happy Simon, dight thee! happy
Give me the load thou scorest so!

ST. VERONICA OFFERS HIM A CLOTH TO WIPE HIS FACE

Who calls that face unlovely now,
Spite scourges bruised and thorns pierced brow!
Tis me it never seem! so fair!
For when was love so written there!
Kind Veronica, get me place
To hang, like thee, that pictured face.

HE FALLS A SECOND TIME:

Again He falls! Again they deal
Their cruel blows—these hearts of steel!
He hails His Mother! and the throne
Shall back, to let her pass alone!
She hands—the Him and nurses,
And rage and scorn at her distance.

HE SPEAKS TO THE WOMEN OF JERUSALEM:

The tender women succor His fate.
With Mary's grief compassionate.
Here meet each mourner, in His sad,
They shall, indeed, be comforted.
And He, in turn, has tender for them,
Daughters of Jerusalem.

HE FALLS A THIRD TIME:

And yet another fall! Ah, why!
Tis my repeated perfidy.
O Jesus I by life to rule
If only to be false again!
I! Mary, greets, Jesus, I implore,
To die this hour, or do so More.

HE IS STRIPPED AND GIVEN GALL TO DRINK:

The way—the journing way—is passed
And Calvary's summit is reached at last!
With gall the soldiers mock His thirst,
Then strip Him to their glee accurst!
Dressed, ye angels! Nested Him Saint,
And with your pinions rest His chaste!

HE IS NAILED TO THE CROSS:

Ah see, they stretch Him on the wood!
The pain-wrung brow, the pierced hands
Nor He alone their every sting!
For Mary Jesus has kneeling! Ye,
Lord, let that sound my music be,
When the death hour shall strike for me!

HE DIES UPON THE CROSS:

A horror wraps the earth and sky,
While three long hours go slowly by;
And now! "Tis finished!" Jesus cries!
Bow down, O Mary, thy head!
My heart, count these mortive centers!
Behold, the very rocks are rent!

HE IS TAKEN DOWN AND LAID IN MARY'S BOSOM.

Unclothed, pierced and lacerated
Thy lifeless form, yet hour my prayer
Thy sorrow was a grief like Mine,
And sorrow was a guilt like mine,
Yet should I, as good would be,
Sinner He, then lovest, dost for me!

HE IS LAID IN THE TOMB:

His lovers by Him in the tomb
And leave Him to His peaceful gloom.
Then despond, Lord, Thy labor done
For me—for all! Redemption won!
And I, in turn, as God would be,
And buried to all else but Thee.

—A petition to have the Very Rev. J. Jamison administrator of the diocese of Alton, appointed successor to Bishop Hulles is now circulated among the clergy of the Alton diocese, and will be sent to Rome in a few weeks.

—A sisters' school for white girls and Indian children will soon be opened at the Catholic Mission in Alaska Territory.

Literary Miscellany.

Bernard Ralston's Ward.

How a Philosopher Protonged his Our dianship of a Lovely Damsel.

CHAPTER I.

It is the business of a philosopher, as the world knows, to find fault with everything. He is the most abnormal phenomenon, to suppose, at least, an adequate explanation of every enigma. For what other purpose does he exist than to throw light on the surrounding darkness? He is a torch-bearer in humanity's ignorance. If now and again, by reason of a pessimistic temperament or defect of training, the rays he sheds around intensity rather than dispel the gloom, and cast shadows as of Egyptian night across man's forward path, surely he is unconscious his mission.

But the worst bead is sometimes punished, and the shrewdest explorer of the silent-virtoning mystery is sometimes confounded. A problem presents itself which cannot be resolved by any of the familiar processes. The why of some suddenly disclosed fact is as inscrutable as the Sphinx of the eastern deserts. It was thus with Bernard Ralston.

Those who thirst for fame, or aimers thirst for power, or enterprise for adventure, would have found much to envy in this young man's position. At an age when a statesman is currently supposed to be studying his parliamentary primer, and when a future general may still be writing under the tyrannicams of a barracks-room instructor, Bernard Ralston had been selected out in front rank of philosophical thinkers. His book on "Impulse, Conscious and Unconscious" was read and criticised by the few, praised and scouted by the many. He was flattered, and feted, and the lion of the season.

It was from this suddenly acquired distinction that his embarrassment had approached. The scientists latter that was the beginning of serious woes that dates its rise thus:

Dear Sir:—We have a fellow, "Bill" by the will of our late client, Mr. Humphrey Ward, yes sir-ee-sophisticated and young enough, gentlemen, Oliver. As this may be in the nature of a surprise, we beg leave to enclose the precise paragraph of the will. "And I leave my ward, Oliver, to the care of Bernard Ralston, esq., as the guardian of my child. I am sure that Oliver can have no fitter or wiser protector than Bernard Ralston, esq., and I do hereby so appoint him." Yours, etc.

FARNHAM & FITZ.

The gift of the proverbial white elephant could have produced in no heart a greater consternation. What should a retired contemplative, of serious purpose and scientific nature, answer such a challenge? If the old homestead was larger, it by no means followed that he wanted more life within its bounds; and a girl in her teens is more child, as with the age wisdom of five-and-thirty years he considered her. How could her presence by his friends be harmonized with the quiet current of the life he elected to live?

Yet, the bestial twenty-five thousand dollars was a temptation. The glorious old home place had been sadly tarnished through the improvidence of Oliver's father, and philosophy is not a particularly remunerative hobby to ride. Mr. Humphrey Ward's legacy, if not precisely fortune, would be an assistance in the keeping up of his ancestral home.

The matter was debated long and anxiously, and as the result John, the servant, arrived at the Hall one snowy February morning. Slight of figure, boyish in feature, with merry, violet-tinted brown eyes, and lips continually parting in a pleasant smile over teeth of whitest pearl.

Bernard Ralston was disappointed, yet, if he was properly to protect his ward, his position might not be a sinecure. Neither did it.

The girl's beauty attracted notice as clever-looking people usually do, and it was soon an open secret in the country side that Miss Power, as well as being a very young lady was a richly dowered one. This brought the sensations hopeless and hopeful into the resonances accorded with the chorus of admirers.

But Olive was not sensitive to the easy degree for any of her wooers. With a woman's instinctive dexterity she kept them at bay, and at twenty had escaped the necessity of a yet refusing any offer in formal and unequivocal terms. She was developing a taste for study which half amused, half interested her guardian. One evening he bravely rallied her on her application to study big tomes in the library.

"I shall be accused of treacherous a merry and bewitching young lady into a blue stocking—a disciple of my own dry sarcasm presently, he said. "some one some day may have special cause to blame me, I fear."

A sudden blush was on the maiden's cheek, and her glance fell. It was unpleasible that she should misinterpret Bernard's meaning.

"There is Gawaid Harbury to think of," Olive's guardian was during enough to add.

Two shining eyes were momentarily upliited. Was the flash they gave one of indignation, of scorn, or merely of confusion at a betrayed secret! Bernard could not guess.

"The nature of my employment can make no difference whatever, in my way that I can imagine to Mr. Harbury, she answered. Then—it seemed to Bernard a strange tone—"Will you forgive me for asking a favor! she went awifily on; "I should like—oh, so much—to help you work. Could I not copy out your notes or revise proofs sometimes?

What philosopher could have successfully resisted the volunteered help of such an amanuensis! Not Bernard Ralston.

CHAPTER II.

It was summer three months later then the date of this new conversation. Olive's guardian was seeking his ward in her own boudoir, with a gloom upon his face and a depression of soul which belied his analysis. He had a message to convey and a proposal to informally submit, which he felt doubt would be accepted. Gawaid Harbury, the young owner of Gaudhop, had asked permission to lay himself and his fortunes at Olive's feet. He loved her, he said; he would do his best to make her happy.

"And I believe that he will. He has a home to offer you and a large income. Favorable gentleman. As your guardian, Olive, I am bound to give my sanction to so fair and promising a suit. May I say, Olive, that I am sorry to see a cloud upon your face? Since Ho, thou loved, dost for me!

HE IS LAID IN THE TOMB:

His lovers by Him in the tomb
And leave Him to His peaceful gloom.
Then despond, Lord, Thy labor done
For me—for all! Redemption won!
And I, in turn, as God would be,
And buried to all else but Thee.

—A petition to have the Very Rev. J. Jamison administrator of the diocese of Alton, appointed successor to Bishop Hulles is now circulated among the clergy of the Alton diocese, and will be sent to Rome in a few weeks.

—A sisters' school for white girls and Indian children will soon be opened at the Catholic Mission in Alaska Territory.

THE POPE AND MODERN EVILS.

The Crisis Impending in Human Society. Reminiscences as of the Days of Law XIII.

On a recent occasion the parish priests and other notable ecclesiastics of Rome were received in audience by the Sovereign Pontiff who delivered an address of sorrowful condition of the present times which was so sad and so full of the spirit of society is so sadly tired and disturbed. These evils he has deplored from the beginning of his Pontificate, and on many occasions has condemned them in the Catholic Encyclicals as well as in Pastoral and private letters. He has also aimed at in his Encyclical Letters, in which he opposed the false theories of socialism, rationalism, naturalism, and particularly in those Encyclicals to which he pointed in the congress which adopts the world, namely, the sect of Freemasons. Still more recently by the Encyclical Immortale Dei, summarizing preceding instructions, he expounded and strive to restate in clear and irrefragable principles which are the true base on which the Christian constitution of States should rest. He clearly understood by those now listening to him, that it would be in vain to hope for the turn of the world to God, if the wound was not healed in its very root in families and individuals, which are the constituents of the State. He and Leo XIII. that Christian virtues should flourish again. The Holy Father referred then to the Jubilee, the plenitude of which was considered by all Christendom as an event of the highest importance, and, in the announcement of a Holy Year a religious enthusiasm, a holy exaltation, a sentiment in reforming morals and in ameliorating the lot of the poor and of all people. It was witness of such effect when, at every young, he assisted at the memorable Jubilee of 1825, pop. gat. Leo XII. He remembered with the greatest pleasure which Rome presented a consoling spectacle that Rome presented to the world. The three weeks of one continuous prayer, the three days of fasting, the three days of penitence, the three days of the highest rank mingled with the throng, dressed in the humble habit of penance and rightly conserating themselves to work of charity and mercy. Today, and how vastly changed is the condition of Rome. How surprisingly parallel are the Rome of to-day offer to the Rome of that period. To day the revolution has planted in some here and everywhere its seductive action; here is largely and publicly spread the seeds of criminal principles and of the worst examples; here, hoary is impudently thrown and the most sacred truths and mysteries of religion are torted into derision, while a press licentious, and a literature of spite and scandal, and a literature of spite and scandal, and a literature of spite and scandal

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—Phil Callan's petition to oust Captain Nolan, the Parnellite member who defeated him, is at last disposed of. He has to stand out of court because the deposit required was not put up. That ends the matter.

—Gladstone's bill granting Home Rule to Ireland will come up for a second reading in the British House of Commons on May 15th, and then will commence in earnest the legislative battle which will end in Gladstone's downfall or in the greatest victory ever attained by Irish right and justice over English wrong and tyranny.

—The daily press contains a cablegram from Madrid in which it is stated that Monsignor Esquerro, Archbishop of that city, was assassinated by an ex-priest on Palm Sunday last. But we have found the manipulators of the cable news so untrustworthy on many occasions heretofore, that we await more reliable intelligence before we credit the report.

—A cablegram signed by Dillon, Deritt and Dr. Kenny, has been received by Patrick Egan, President of the I. N. L. of America, in which these gentlemen say that Gladstone's scheme of an Irish Legislature, amended on Parnell's lines, is worthy the acceptance of Ireland. So say all of Ireland's friends.

—No stronger criminal indictment was ever brought against any class of men than that which Gladstone brings against the landlords of Ireland in the speech which we print this week. He then brands them as the immediate cause of all the misery with which Ireland has been afflicted. "The history of Ireland," says the English Prime Minister, "is one long indictment against its landowners," and this admission is the best vindication of the Irish tenantry, and of the justice of their national cry "The landlords must go!"

—It pays—in this world at least—to be an Irish Protestant Bishop. The late Marcus Gervais Beresford, of Armagh, left behind him an estate of a legacy than £91,000 (nearly half a million dollars), every penny of which was drained from a country where many people are constantly living on the ragged edge of famine from year to year! Not a cent of this immense sum has been left to charity, not a dollar given for the love of God or of his neighbor, but, with the true instincts of a well-paid hireling parson, he leaves his ill-gotten gold as marriage portions and legacies to his immediate relatives and his servants. Not of such is the kingdom of heaven!

—Several Correspondents want to know what was the number of the raid made against Zach. Montgomery by the anti-Catholic wing of the United States Senate. We are happy to be able to inform our readers that at a meeting of the Judiciary Committee on the 14th inst., Mr. Montgomery's case came up for hearing, but no action was taken, and a correspondent of ours in Washington says that Mr. Montgomery will be allowed to retain his present position as his enemies have discovered that the "no Popery" cry would prove so much destructive dynamite to those who would attempt to use it in these days. A dispatch received this morning, and which we print on the 5th page, brings the news of Mr. Montgomery's confirmation yesterday!

—Every word in the article on "The Child and the State," which we publish this week, is applicable to San Francisco, and all the evils and abuses therein stated in this city to an extensive degree. Are there no large-hearted charitable Catholic Californians who will take pity upon the forlorn and homeless boys of this city and save them both to Christianity and to society by erecting a St. Joseph's Union for Homeless Boys in San Francisco? May God inspire some favored citizen to immortalize his memory among his fellow-men by instituting this much-needed work for the salvation of the souls of thousands of homeless boys.

—Next Sunday will be the great festival of Easter, the time designated by the Church for all those who approach the Sacraments only once a year, to make their peace with God and to prove themselves obedient children of the Church. This may be the last Easter when many of us will have the opportunity of having our souls left stainless through a worthy reception of the Bread of Life, and that man is his own greatest enemy who—calling himself a Catholic—refuses to listen to the voice of the Church as she calls him to the Confessional, maybe for the last time. Let every reader of the MONITOR, therefore, rise from sin, just as our Blessed Lord arose from the tomb on the third day.

—The letter attributed to Cardinal Manning, but which has since been proven to be a badly-bungled forgery, was printed in the Occident—the Presbyterian organ—last week. We have not the least doubt but that the Occident editors know that its genuineness had been successfully questioned even before they printed it, but an honest conscience cots no figure in the mental make-up of Presbyterian preachers! All that such institutions seek is to throw dust in the eyes of their dupes by preaching false doctrine and dealing in detraction of the Catholic Church to such a degree as to make even Sabbath delight at the excellent manner in which Christian people do his work!

—Labor agitation seems to be shaking every section of the world just at present. In Belgium the labor riots resulted in killing and wounding a large number of persons. At Sumsel, on the approach of the troops sent to disperse them, the working-men placed 200 women in the front ranks. The troops opened fire and many women were injured. At Chatelet, Charleroi, La Louviere, Gilly and Connellet, several factories and mines have been wrecked and many persons have been killed and wounded in collisions with the local soldiery. The total number of arrests made in connection with these riots is 2,500. The prices have more inmates than can properly be accommodated. In Ireland, recently, a collision occurred between the railroad deputies and the strikers which resulted in the killing of four men and one woman. The press and the people lay the blame of this calamity to the grasping ambition of Jay Gould who purposely hired armed men with strict orders to give no quarter. Mark our warning upon the first demonstration made by any mob. At present the militia are guarding the railroad property in East St. Louis and other cities.

A Pen Portrait of Pixley.

The chief calumniator of the Catholic Church in California is Frank M. Pixley, the Annanias of the Argonaut. It is due, therefore, to those persons who may read the ribbons and ruffles assumed by that oft-refuted slanderer of the Church makes upon Catholic Prelates, priests and people—that they should know the character which that brazen hight bears among those citizens of California who know him intimately, and among those he stands as stood Arnold in the days of Washington and as stands Judas in the sight of God.

Governor Stoneman was interviewed last week by one of the Examiner's staff concerning the appointment of Park Commissioners (Frank M. Pixley being one of the Board whose terms are about to expire), and in response to the question as to whom he would appoint, Governor Stoneman made this reply, which shows the standing of the libeler of God's Church among his fellow-men in no enviable light:

"I have not fully made up my mind," said he, "as to who I will appoint yet, but I do not see how I can appoint Mr. Pixley, in spite of the wishes of the people of San Francisco. I had intended to do so when I came down to the city, but I may have been besieged with protests against the appointment of Mr. Pixley, and I see no other course open to me but to appoint him. Letters from all over the State come daily beating the same burden. The labor organizations of San Francisco appear to be a unit in opposition to him. He is opposed by a great portion of the German and Hebrew, while the Irish are solidly against to him. I must appoint one Republican on the board, and Mr. Pixley is a Republican, but from all quarters in his own party ranks comes the most strenuous opposition to his appointment. Now is a sample of the documents that come to me in reference to his appointment. I will show you one such a roll of manuscript. It proves that the signers are Republicans. Look at the signers. Among them were the names of John Mackey, President of the Local Land Leagues of Ireland, Hale Pomeroy, Sam Brannan, Daniel Sheerin, State Treasurer; M. F. O'Donoghue, State Secretary, and a majority of the gentlemen connected prominently with the Sts. Peter's and Paul's Church."

"Personally," he continued, "I am very friendly to Mr. Pixley, but I think my duty is carry out the wishes of the people of the city. Many of the Protestants do not approve of him, but say 'say may but Pixley.' I think if Mr. Pixley had labored to that end, he could not have more effectually rendered himself unpopular. I never knew so many men could be alive on such short notice."

Time and again in these columns we have said that the Satanic falsehoods fabricated by Pixley were disgusting to every sensible man in the State, and that his vicious vaporings were received by the community as the ravings of a frenzic who is considered on the Parish of the California Church. It is well, therefore, that those who do not know how utterly unpopular Pixley is even among the Protestant and non-Catholic elements of every community in this State, that Governor Stoneman's experience concerning him should be placed before them so that persons outside this State may be enabled to place a proper value upon the vindictive aspersions of this assailant of all that is good and pure.

The unanimous attitude in which Pixley has placed himself in this community should also serve as a warning to anti-Christian bigots of his character who imagine that the surest road to wealth and popularity is through unscrupulous antagonism to the Catholic Church and that to assume religious rage honorably knows as "the Pope's Irish."

More invetera church haters than the California crank cinder consideration have tried their hands at crucifying to death the Church of Christ—and failed, hence how unless it is for any man to preserve in a pen-and-ink persecution when the only result is to have himself hated by men of all creeds and parties, who despise the disbelieve which degrades those who use it into the most despicable detractors.

The Right Kind of Warfare.

The rumor of "dissensions" among the friends of Parnell in America has been turned to remarkably good use in the following correspondence which explains itself in the annexed cablegram sent from Detroit, Michigan:

DETROIT, Mich., April 8, 1886.

Charles S. Parnell, House of Commons, London, England.—The friends of Ireland, of your self, of President Patrick Egan and of ex-President Alexander Sullivan, are confident to make war upon and to injure you in the usual way. In evidence thereof we send you a draft for £12,000 for the Parliamentary Fund. We hereby threaten you that we will continue to wage just such warfare until Ireland is prostrate at your feet.

P. O'BRIAN CURRIGAN,
Treasurer of the Irish National League of America.

TRANSIT FROM PARNELL.

DETROIT, April 16.—The following cablegram was received in this city to-day:

LONDON, April 16, 1886.

Rev. Chas. O'Donnell, Treasurer Irish National League, Detroit: I thank you for your encouraging message and have cabled the Speaker to-day to place the £12,000 in your hands. We have not the least doubt but that the Occident editors know that its genuineness had been successfully questioned even before the document was printed, but an honest conscience cots no figure in the mental make-up of Presbyterian preachers! All that such institutions seek is to throw dust in the eyes of their dupes by preaching false doctrine and dealing in detraction of the Catholic Church to such a degree as to make even Sabbath delight at the excellent manner in which Christian people do his work!

—Labor agitation seems to be shaking every section of the world just at present. In Belgium the labor riots resulted in killing and wounding a large number of persons. At Sumsel, on the approach of the troops sent to disperse them, the working-men placed 200 women in the front ranks. The troops opened fire and many women were injured. At Chatelet, Charleroi, La Louviere, Gilly and Connellet, several factories and mines have been wrecked and many persons have been killed and wounded

Indulgences of the Rosary.

10 i. Indulgences that can be gained on movable feasts and feasts. On each day of the Octave of Easter, and on each of the Sundays from Septuagesima to Easter, indulgence of thirty years and as many quarantines for fulfilling the Stations of the Rosary (see No. 1 of this section) both as to the authority conceding the indulgence and for the meaning of the word "Station"). 14. In the feast of the Ascension, first, a plenary indulgence for making the Rosary Stations, second, a second plenary for the Second Glorious Mystery to which this day is assigned as its feast; third, a third plenary indulgence; Pius IX., Ut saepe; conditions Confession, Communion and a visit to some public church; fourth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting five decades of the Rosary, Sixtus IV., Pastoris; fifth, seven years and seven quarantines, on the same conditions, Sixtus V., Consuetudini. 15. On the Vigil of Pentecost, an indulgence of ten years and ten quarantines for making the Rosary Stations. 16. On the feast of Pentecost, first, a plenary indulgence for the Third Glorious Mystery to which this day is assigned as its feast (see No.; this section in regard to the indulgences and the days of all the Mysteries of the Rosary); second, a second plenary indulgence, on the ordinary conditions, Pius IX., Ut saepe; third, an indulgence of thirty years and as many quarantines for making the Rosary Stations (see No. 1 this section); fourth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting five decades of the Rosary, S. Pius V., Consuetudini; fifth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, Sixtus IV., Pastoris; sixth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting the Litany of the Saints, Alexander VI., Romanus Pontifex, and a visit to the church of the Order. 17. On the Sunday of April, a plenary indulgence, Gregory XIII., Pastoris; conditions, Confession, Communion, and a visit to the altar of the Rosary. On the 24th—the Feast of the Cross of Christ—a plenary indulgence, Gregory XIII., Pastoris; conditions, Confession, Communion and a visit to the Rosary altar. On the 25th—the Feast of St. Mark, Evangelist—a plenary and as many quarantines for reciting the Rosary Stations (see No. 1, 10 i). 18. On the 26th—the feast of St. Peter, Martyr, O. P.—a plenary indulgence; conditions, Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order. On the 30th—the feast of St. Catherine of Ricci, Virgin, O. P.—a plenary indulgence, Benedict XIII., Pretiosus; conditions, Confession, Communion and a visit to a church of the Order. On the 24th—the feast of St. Matthias, Apostle—an indulgence of three years and three quarantines for assisting at the Salve Regina in a church of the Order, Clement VIII., Inefabilis. Towards the end of February commences in the Dominican churches, "the Devotion of the Seven Fridays," that precedes the feast of St. Vincent Ferrer, O. P., which occurs on the fifth of April. Should Easter cease the feast of St. Vincent to be transferred, the above named devotion will commence later than the time specified, that is, the time on which the feast of St. Vincent in such a case will be observed, will determine the first Friday on which the devotion alluded to must commence. All who practice this devotion may gain, first, on any one of the seven Fridays, all their own selection, a plenary indulgence by going to Confession, Communion and by visiting a church of the Dominicans; second, on each of the other six Fridays, seven years and seven quarantines, on the same conditions, Pius IX., Ad augendam.

March. On the 7th—the Feast of St. Thomas Aquinas, O. P.—"Doctor of the Church and Heavenly Patron of the Catholic Schools," may be gained a plenary indulgence; conditions Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order, Benedict XIII., Pretiosus. On the 19th—the Feast of St. Joseph—a plenary indulgence; conditions Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order, Pius IX., 6 Martii, 1877. On the 20th—the Feast of the Annunciation—the same indulgences as on the second of February (Feast of the Visitation of the B. V. M.), except that the indulgences of ten years and ten quarantines for the recitation of the whole Rosary have been suspended and the following have been added: First, ten years and ten quarantines for a third part of the Rosary, S. Pius V., Consuetudini; it is necessary to receive Communion to gain this indulgence; second, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting the whole Rosary, Sixtus IV., Pastoris; third, seven years and seven quarantines on the same conditions, Alexander VI., Romanus Pontifex; fourth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting five decades of the Rosary, S. Pius V., Consuetudini; fifth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, Sixtus IV., Pastoris; sixth, seven years and seven quarantines for reciting the Litany of the Saints, Alexander VI., Romanus Pontifex, and a visit to the church of the Order.

—Recently it was reported that Mr. Blaine's daughters had joined the Catholic Church. The Kansas Journal, published at Mr. Blaine's home, denying the report, says the two young ladies regularly attend the Congregational Church with their parents, and that the "report of their joining the Catholic Church was simply in relation to taking Mr. Blaine with certain class of Protestants." The Catholic Citizen says, on authority, that this is false, and that ladies are known to attend Dr. Chapelle's Church in Washington, and that the Maine denial is merely to save Mr. Blaine from the ire of the Burchard Rum, Romanism and Rebellion class, who might waver somewhat in their zeal and devotion to this Pandemonium statement of such reports should go uncontradicted.

—Michael Davitt is doing effective work in the English manufacturing districts allaying prejudice against Home Rule. He avows himself openly a free-trader and pledges his endeavor to prevent an Irish Parliament from passing tariff laws—in which he is once more at variance with Mr. Parnell.

D. J. OLIVER.

Death of one of California's Most Distinguished Irish-American Citizens.—Sketch of His Life, His Well-Deserved Honors and His Last Hours.

(FEBRUARY AND THE LATTER WEEK IN THE LOGS.)

One of those sudden and unexpected events which startle communities into wondering at the shortest measure in which death of man's Uncertainty strikes down even the strongest of the strong, occurred in this city on Sunday last, when the news spread that Daniel J. Oliver was no more. It was commonly said that he was in his usual health and spirits, and that his life was considered with all the comforts which could tend to prolong the years and his friends hoped that the sunshine of his genial disposition would continue to shed its rays upon their society gatherings for many years to come. But death knows no distinction, and in striking down D. J. Oliver, the grim tyrant has robbed the world of one of nature's noblemen—a grand Catholic gentleman, who was proud of his faith, and who by his life and whose daily devotion to God was a fitting exemplar of the teachings of the second Divine Law, which teaches us that "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The deceased was born in Ireland, and in his early manhood he was a member of the Irish National Land League, and was a prominent and active worker in the cause of Ireland's Home Rule. He was a member of the Land League of Ireland, and was a member of the Land League of Ireland, and was a member of the Land League of Ireland, and

Farm and Home.

Do Most People Eat Too Much?

"In this country a large excess of food is consumed not only by well-to-do people, but also by the poor. The excess of food consists mainly of meats and sweetmeats." This conclusion is given as the result of an investigation into the diet of laborers recently made by Colonel Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of the United States Bureau of Labor. He also criticises the "extravagant practice of this poor to purchase the more expensive food materials," when much cheaper nutriment can be had which would be quite as sustaining and wholesome.

Some writers on hygiene have taught that it is never well to eat as much as one really desires, but that you should always leave the dinner table hungry. This doctrine is like direct taxation; it may be wise, but it will never be popular.

Many a poor man would smile a sarcastic smile to hear that he ate too much. Colonel Wright's conclusion may be correct, but it is surprising. So far as our indigenous inventaments in concerned, we believe that the annual consumption of sugar in this country is, or lately, was sixty pounds to a person.

As to the tendency of the comparatively poor to buy expensive sorts of food, it should be noted that in many households costly flour or meat is used so much more carefully than the ordinary kinds as to constitute a real economy.

May Children Go Barefoot?

This question is every now and again proposed for discussion; and, when it is so, we are compelled to give the same answer. On physiological grounds, it is manifestly a sound practice to accustom children to develop the circulatory and muscular systems of the lower extremities, precisely as those of the hand are developed, by free use and exposure. It is not supposed to be either necessary or desirable that children should wear gloves for hygienic purposes. When the hands of little folk are thus decorated, the parental idea is confusedly to give them what is nowadays officially regarded as a genteel appearance. No one thinks a child ought to be protected from the weather so far as its hands are concerned. On the contrary, it is recognized that the upper extremities should be kept warm by exercise and habitual exposure.

Precisely the same view holds good with regard to the lower extremities. Contact with bodies that absorb heat, even more than the earth abstracts it, is an almost constant condition of child life. In short, it is entirely in deference to fashion and the usages of society that children wear foot coverings. There is much to be said in favor of a more natural practice. The foot is an organ of wondrous complexity, regarded as a boky and muscular apparatus. It is, moreover, provided with nerves and blood vessels of especial intrinsey. The softest and most flexible shoe, to a very great extent, and a boot almost entirely, reduces this organ to the character of a jointed block with little self movement. Obviously this reduction must detract not only from the efficiency of the foot, but of the organism as a whole. If the blood vessels of the foot are less developed, they must have less play on behalf of the foot, but also on behalf of the whole. Nor is this the only loss which the foot is habitually exposed, the quantity of blood which the lower extremities can be made to receive and, if need be, attract for a time, is very considerable.

We can only say that children who are allowed to go barefooted enjoy almost perfect immunity from the danger of "cold" by unstilting stiffing of the feet, and they are altogether healthier and happier than those who, in obedience to the tongue of social life, have their lower extremities fully swathed and put away in rigid cases. As regards the question of the shoes of children, there can be no doubt in the mind of any one that it is incomparably better that they should go barefooted than wear boots that let in the wet and stockings that are nearly always damp and foul. London Lancet.

A Crop Every Month in California.

There is no section of the State better adapted to the growth of alfalfa than Tulare county, and the following experience of a farmer in San Bernardino county, related by the Riverside Press, is but a signification of what can be done in the country:

"At Cucamonga a farmer has just finished harvesting a crop of alfalfa, which makes the twelfth time that he has cut the same field inside of a year. Making hay in mid-winter is a phenomenon not met with outside of California, but when is added the fact that one field yields twelve crops a year, a result of irrigation presented altogether unprecedented in the experience of most agriculturists. The average yield is from two to three tons per cutting, so that it may be seen that even at a very low price per ton a handsome return must have been netted. Farmers all over the State are becoming awakened to the value of alfalfa as a forage plant, although of course it is not to be expected that such phenomenal results as given above can be realized everywhere. Still, even under less favorable conditions, there is no plant yet known that will compare with this in all respects."

Faith Illustrated.

The patter of little feet on my office floor, and a glad voice exclaiming, "Papa, I'se come to 'sort you home!" made known to me the presence of my little six-year old darling, who often comes at that hour "to take me home," as she said. Soon we were tripping hand in hand on the homeward way.

"Now, papa, let's play I was a poor little blind girl, and you must let me hold your hand tight, and you lead me along and tell me where to step and how to go."

So the merry blue eyes were shut tight and we began. "Now step up, now down," and so on till we safely arrived, and the darling was nestling in my arms, saying gleefully, "Wasn't it nice, papa, I never peeped once?"

"But," said mamma, "didn't you feel afraid you'd fall, dear?"

With a look of trusting love came the answer:

"Oh, no, mamma! I had a tight hold on papa's hand, and I knew he would take me safely over the hard places."

Small Farms a Success.

The following illustrates what can be done on a twenty-acre farm: James T. Dillon, near Woodland, has ten acres of land in fruit. Seven acres of this has bearing Muscatel vines. The past season Mr. Dillon sold from those seven acres $1000 25 worth of raisins and $150 worth of green grapes, besides what his family ate and gave away to neighbors. This is a grape yield of 6502 75 per acre. The net yield must have been $950 per acre. Not in 10 per cent, upon $2500 per acre. Who, with such instances before us, will say that twenty acres of good land in California, well tilled, is not enough to make a happy home, an independent income and living for a family?—Sonora Democrat.

Splendid Barley.

The Sacramento Bee: A few stalks of barley, from the Folsom Prison farm, show the possibilities of the grain only this season. The stalks are 41 inches high, with a well-filled head of grain over five inches long. Some of the leaves are one inch and five-twelfths wide.

Family Fun.

He Fired on Time.

They engaged a new porter at the Lake House. Everybody liked him, he was so cheerful, so obliging, and so rigorously and scrupulously exact in carrying out every order given him. On last Tuesday Mr. J. S. Johnson, the Vice-President of the Dundas Chilled Plough Works, put up at the hotel. Mr. Johnson is a very dignified person, and has a reputation for extraordinary punctuality in regard to his appointments. That evening a very extraordinary thing occurred. Some say it was about 9 o'clock, others place it as late as 10. At any rate, somewhere near that time Mr. Johnson was amazed to see the door of his room open and a man step in.

"Who the devil are you?" asked Mr. Johnson.

"I am the porter," replied the stranger, deliberately removing his coat and rolling up his sleeves.

"Well, what is the meaning of this singular intrusion?" inquired Mr. Johnson.

Thomas did not reply. He spat upon his hands, executed a rapid and fantastic jig, and leaped suddenly upon the astonished guest.

"Help! Murder!" bellowed Mr. Johnson; "help! help!"

"Shut up, yer dirty spaloon!" exclaimed Thomas, chasing a firm grip upon the knot of his trousers, and propelling him rapidly out of the room, "is none of the folkes of yer that's wanted in a decent house."

"But, my good man!" gasped Mr. Johnson, his words coming by excited jerks, "there is some mistake! Let me explain!"

"Niver a word, ye hoodlum!" replied Thomas, rushing him toward the stairs "we're on to ye! The house has had ye spotted!"

The next instant the guests in the corridor were amazed to see two figures, one splutering and kicking and the other grim and determined, shoot down the staircase, plunge through the lobby, and disappear into the outer darkness. In a few moments, Thomas returned panting and redfaced to his sleeve.

"Whet in the name of heaven were you doing," asked Mr. Weekly, the proprietor, when he recovered sufficiently from the shock to speak.

"I was firing that dirty blackguard Johnson," replied Thomas.

"Firing him! Hold me, somebody! Who put such an infernal fool into your head?"

"Here she is," replied Thomas, with an injured air, holding the slate before the proprietor's eyes.

"Eh? Why—great—horn—spoon," gasped Mr. Weekly, and swooned away.

This was what he read:

"No, 40; fire at 10.30."

A Story by John Sherman.

Col. William R. Morrison and John Sherman were discussing the relative merits of their different State Legislatures the other day, when the Ohio statesman said:

"I never knew a citizen of my State who was ashamed of being a member of the General Assembly, and that's more than you can say for Illinois," and, then, when the Colonel asked for proof of the assertion, Senator Sherman continued:

"Away back in the '50s there lived in Hamilton county, Ohio, a Democratic fellow named Johnston. He finally moved out to Illinois and the community heaved a sigh for his absence. A few years ago one of Johnston's former neighbors met him at Springfield. After some conversation, Johnston said:

"'I suppose I left a pretty hard reputation behind me in Ohio?'

"'I hope you'll tell them I've reformed,' continued Johnston, 'and that I'm also a member of the Illinois Legislature.'

"The friend promised to do so, and started away, when Johnston called him back.

"'You say they still regard me as a pretty tough citizen out there?'

Again his friend answered in the affirmative.

"'Well,' said Johnston, sinking his voice to a whisper, 'I guess you'd better tell them everything you know about me except that I'm a member of the Illinois Legislature. I don't think I'd say anything about that.'"

A Girl's Good Memory.

It was at a K street residence in Washington and the young man had called for the dress and staying late, until the girl felt the approach of the dreaded "tired feeling" monotony. One night about 11 o'clock the conversation dragged, and for a minute or two he sat in a negative mood with his hand in his forehead. "I had something pleasant to tell you, he said finally.

"Yes," she responded respectfully, "that was it?" "Um—um—let me see," rubbing his head, "I can't just think what it was." "Maybe it was 'good night,'" she suggested. He looked at her for a minute in a manner intended to be very sweet, and up to date has not been back.

Sam Jones' Sermons.

Jones in one of his "Sermons" in Chicago last week ejected the saying of an old backwoods preacher as follows: "Those Methodist and Baptist preachers are all preaching for money; every one of them. To prove what I say, I can offer to double their salaries if they will do what I say and nothing I do it. And Sam's pious audience laughed aloud. The truth of the statement tickled them. The same sermon he mentioned a New York millionaire by name, who denied all his time, down to the hour of his death to sharp money making schemes, thru sect by sect. Dr. Deems to talk to him, told his wife to sing to him, "Come ye sinners poor and wretched," and died. Jones said he believed Dr. Deems talked this man into heaven, but he (Jones) didn't believe in a religion that sent men into heaven "on that schedule." And the audience laughed again.

A "Father Hubbard."

The other day, when old Major Solman announced his readiness to proceed in the direction of his church, his wife appeared wearing a "Mother Hubbard" dress. The old man intently regarded her for a few moments and asked: "Mary what sort of a coat do you call this?"

"It's a 'Mother Hubbard,' Jesse."

"Air you going to wear it to church?"

"Why, certainly, Jesse. The 'Mother Hubbard' is all the fashion now."

"Well, I'm glad to hear it," the old man replied. "I was afraid it was a put-upon gal wuz'n' go." The old man went out into the kitchen, took a crowbar of most size, ripped the bottoms out, sawed the tops together, and put them on in imitation of pantaloons. When he returned his wife uttered a loud cry of astonishment and exclaimed: "Great goodness, Jesse, what's that?" "Father Hubbard," the old man replied. "You're just agoin' to wear them sacks, are you? I've got to be fashionable to keep up with you. I've got just as much right to wear these meal bags as you have to go in that bran sack." "I'll take it off, air I right; off goes Father Hubbard," and turning away he added to himself: "Only one way to beat a woman and that's by beatin' them with her. If it hadn't been for the Daddy Hubbard I have been in a mighty hard fix.

Catholic Societies.

All Secretaries of Catholic Organizations are urgently requested to send list of officers and meeting days for insertion under this Department.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARISHES DUTIES.—The Particular Council meets every evening at 7 o'clock, and the Conferences on a very special distribution of the clothing, shoes, etc., which have accumulated during the year, and the particular conferences will have a just proportion of money for the purchase of shoes, stockings, etc., for the poor, collected from collections, dues and donations. The Particular Council will make a special appeal for funds to meet the following urgent expenses: Spiritual Director, Very Rev. Vicar-General Prendergast; President, P. J. Ryan; Vice-President, J. Fitzgerald; Treasurer, Thomas Brady; Secretary, Thomas Ryan. The Particular Council further consists of the President, Vice-President and Spiritual Director of all the conferences in the city and also one member of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

The following list comprises the officers of the old conferences, which we hope will be increased:

ST. MARY'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Caredo; President, P. J. McCormick; Vice-President, D. Cassidy; 63 Tyler st.; Vice-President, J. J. Fitzsimmons; Treasurer, Patrick Cullen, 105 Lucia st.; Secretary, Patrick F. McCormick, 105 Lucia st. Meets in the Parlors of the Cathedral every Monday evening, at the Sermon Chapel of St. Mary's Cathedral, California St.

ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. P. Prendergast; President, Michael Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Vice-President, James Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Treasurer, Patrick Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Secretary, Jas. Ryan, 1415 Howard street. Meets in St. Joseph's Church on the first Sunday of each month.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Maguire; President, Thomas Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Vice-President, A. McCormick; Treasurer, Michael Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Secretary, Jas. Ryan, 1415 Howard street. Meets in St. Peter's Church on the first Sunday of each month.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Vice-President, Michael Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Secretary, Patrick Ryan, 1415 Howard street. Meets in St. Patrick's Church on the first Sunday of each month.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Maguire; President, Thomas Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Vice-President, A. McCormick; Treasurer, Michael Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Secretary, Jas. Ryan, 1415 Howard street. Meets in St. Peter's Church on the first Sunday of each month.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Spiritual Director, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Thomas Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Vice-President, Michael Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan, 1415 Howard street; Secretary, Patrick Ryan, 1415 Howard street. Meets in St. Patrick's Church on the first Sunday of each month.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS OF AMERICA.

ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, J. J. Allen; Vice-President, Chas. Lynch; Treasurer, Chas. Cleary; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, John Cleary, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, P. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, P. R. Dorney; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. MARY'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. JOHN'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Meets in Washington Hall, Washington st., near Powell. President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Financial Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Trustees, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan.

SODALITIES.

CONFERENCE MEETS IN ST. BRIGIDA CHURCH.—President, Rev. Fr. Prof. R.J. Fisher; 1st Asst. Prefect, Chas. J. Ryan; 2d Asst. Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Sacristan, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Sacristan, Jas. Ryan; Librarian, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Librarian, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. JOHN'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

C. M. B. A.

THE CATHOLIC MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.—President, Rev. Father Prendergast; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. JOHN'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PETER'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—Meets in St. Joseph's Church, Jas. Ryan; President, Jas. Ryan; Vice-President, Jas. Ryan; Treasurer, Jas. Ryan; Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Discipline, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Dormitory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Refectory, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Lavabo, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Infirmary, Jas. Ryan; Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan; Assistant Prefect of Study Hall, Jas. Ryan.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

CATHOLIC BENEVOLENT LEGION AND ASSOCIATION.—President, Chas. R. Ryan; First Vice-President, Thomas Ryan; Second Vice-President, Thomas Ryan; Third Vice-President, Thomas Ryan; Treasurer, Thomas Ryan; Recording Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Financial Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Assistant Recording Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Assistant Financial Secretary, Thomas Ryan; Trustees, Thomas Ryan, Thomas Ryan, Thomas Ryan.

AMERICAN PONTIFICAL SOCIETY.—J. J. Ryan, Corresponding Secretary, Thomas Ryan, Thomas Ryan, Thomas Ryan

THE CHILD AND THE STATE.

[INCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

parent is the strongest of ties for the care of the child. But when parental love fails, and the offspring is either abandoned or educated in vice, the state may rightfully intervene. Its right is derived from its duty to protect itself and its property. The

I am not debating the right of interference from an impulse of the heart, though that be the foundation on which our laws and institutions are built, but I place it upon the inherent and all-pervading right of protecting and self-defense. Charity is an individual privilege; the impulse is an individual gift from Heaven. The state is not founded for charity, but for protection. The dictate of humanity is without doubt to take a child from an unhabitual parent and give it the training most likely to lead to honest and industrious life. This is to transfer the child from an unclean home to one that is clean, from indecency to decency, from foul air to pure, from unhealthy food to that which is healthy, from evil eyes to good. Who can doubt that the greatest good which can be done to a child neglected by its parent or taught beggary or crime, is to take it from the wicked parent, and give it into the care of one who will teach it not only the rudiments of learning but honest labor. In what other way can we better follow the example of the Divine Master, who is caring for those little ones who are unable to take care of themselves?

Protection, however, is the foundation of the right I am asserting. We must or should have a care that insufficient protection be not carried beyond its right, let limits. If any general rule could be laid down for marking those limits it would perhaps be this, that the state should not make one man's rights in order to protect another's. What the individual can do for himself the state should not undertake. But in the case supposed, the faithless parent has forfeited his right to his child, and the only point to be considered is the welfare of the child to the state. The question involves considerations of economy and of safety, each of which may be considered by itself.

The question of economy has political and social aspects. The prevention of crime and the punishment of the criminal impose upon the state some of its heaviest burdens. The cost of the police, of the courts and the prisons, make one of the largest items in the roll of public expenditure. In the year ending September 30, 1885, the maintenance of the three State prisons cost about $600,000. Besides these prisons there are penitentiaries at New York, Brooklyn, Albany, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo, and there is a county prison in each county. What all these cost there are no readily accessible statistics to tell. The yearly cost of the nation in the city of New York is about $3,700,000, and that of the criminal courts $200,000. The cost, defrayed from the city treasury, of prisons, reformatories, asylums, and other charitable institutions is over $3,000,000. The expense of prisons alone is with difficulty separated from the rest. There are approximate figures. It is hard to find out how much the people of this State, in all their municipal and political divisions, pay for police, courts and prisons. We know that the amount is appalling. Much of this, how much cannot be told, might be saved by the use of the surgical injection, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

The economy of this method is more vital still. Every one of these boys > is a future voter. His vote will then be as potent as yours or mine. In countries where the universal franchise has ever been thought prudent to bestow special care upon the training of so late in the future, there the people are sovereign, and the little boy, now wandering about the streets, neglected or ill cared-for, is one more voice in their to a throne. Every dictate of prudence points to his being fitted to fulfill the duties of his station. Who can say that if duly trained and his way not given to the statute of a leader of the people ranking with the foremost men of his time, he may not be the raiser of great truths, a helper of the helpless, a brave soldier in the "necessary" in the cause of God and right, on the other hand, he is left to himself in the swift current of vast and vice, floating in the scum of waves and the company of death? He will probably become a pest to the state, and may bring up in a prison, or perchance on the gallows.

For this reason, and the one preceding, it should seem to be the duty of the community to look after children whose parents abandon them or lead them into evil ways, or are incapable of taking care of them.

We have already in many instances acted upon a like theory. The compulsory education acts, the corporations formed to prevent cruelty to children, and the incorporated societies organized for their relief, are so many agencies established upon the principle. Take, for example, the eighth section of the elementary education act of 1876, as amended in 1879: which provides that the board of education in each city, and incorporated village, and the trustees of the school districts and union school in each town, by the vote of a majority at a meeting called for the purpose, shall make all children not properly instructed in habitual truants and children between the ages of eight and fourteen, who may be found wandering about the streets or public places during school hours, having no lawful occupation or business, and growing up in ignorance; the regulations to be such as the judgment of the board will be conducive to the welfare of the children, and to the good order of the city or town, and to be approved by a judge of the Supreme Court. Suitable places are to be provided for the detention, instruction and confinement when necessary, of the children, and the old of the police of cities, or incorporated villages, and constables of towns, may be required to enforce the regulations.

The Penal Code makes it a crime to desert a child "with intent wholly to abandon it" (Sec. 287), or to omit without lawful excuse to perform a duty imposed by law to "furnish food, clothing, shelter or medical attendance" (Sec. 288), or willfully to permit a child "to be endangered, or its health to be injured, or its morals to become depraved" (Sec. 289), or "the child to be placed in such a situation or to engage in such an occupation" as that any of these things may happen. Another section (291) provides that a child under sixteen who is found "gathering or picking rags, cigar stumps, bones or refuse from markets," or without a home, or improperly or shamefully neglected, or in a state of want or suffering or destitute of means of support, has no father or living or living in certain immoral company," or who is arrested as a vagrant, disorderly or destitute child." The Code of Criminal Procedure (Sec. 887) declares, as vagrant, any child between five and fourteen, "having sufficient bodily health and mental capacity to attend the public schools, found wandering in the streets or lanes of any city or incorporated village, a truant without any lawful occupation;" and it provides in the next section (888), that when a complaint is made against any such vagrant, the magistrate must cause the child and its parent to be brought before him, and may order the parent to take care of the child, and if he does not, "the magistrate shall, by warrant, commit the child to such place as shall be provided for his reception." If such a place has been provided, the child must be committed to the almshouse of the county, and a child so committed may be bound out or as apprentice. A child found begging (Sec. 893) must be committed to the poor-house, and there kept at useful labor until duly discharged or bound out.

These are very sweeping provisions, but they are said to fail of the effect intended, by reason of defects in the machinery for working them. Indeed, the theory upon which they are framed is in some respects erroneous. A child under twelve should never be treated as a criminal except upon conviction for crime, in the few cases in which a child between seven and twelve may be convicted. To treat him as a criminal leaves a stigma, which other years do not efface. A friend who called at the office of the reformatory schools in Boston described an inspection of the institution by trustees of the bearing of a little boy, three years old, who went through the exercises with the greatest spirit, intelligence and glee. Should this little child be classed with criminals, brought into contact with them, or be exposed ever to be told that he had been so classed? Only those now use in regard to such a child the expressions "arrest," "prefer complaint," "bring before a magistrate for hearing," and the like. When the word "arrest" is used in respect of legal process it is darkened and with the shadow of criminality. Why not say "take," or better still "rescue." A child under seven years of age is, and can between seven and twelve is presumed to be, incapable of committing crime. A policeman finding such a child homeless should be required to bring him before an officer specially charged with the duty of examining such cases, not a police justice. The state would then appear to take the child under its protection as one of its wards or children. Such should be the treatment of every child under twelve years of age, whatever might be the circumstances; but the treatment of children of all ages is to decide in the first instance whether a child between seven and twelve should be sent to a criminal magistrate.

When a child not charged with crime is brought before such an officer and is shown to be abused or abandoned, what should be done with him and with the parent? The father should be required to support the child, so far as the law can make him responsible. The like is required of persons classed as disorderly by Section 901 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and under the education acts is also required of parents who fail to send their children to school. How to reach the parent is a question for the criminal law, with which we are not dealing at present. But for the child, what should be done with him? Most certainly he should be placed in a healthy and sufficient home and taught the rudiments of knowledge and honest ways. Here the state should seek the aid of private charity, acting through incorporated institutions, because the state can in this case only control the institutions, and look after the treatment and welfare of the children. These agencies are sufficient for the present and may be sufficient always. Show the people that ways in which they can best help the outcast, and their benevolence will supply the means.

If these views are sound, they lead logically to the following conclusions:

1. That there should be a public guardian of homeless children under twelve years of age, whose duty it should be to find out the condition and treatment of those brought before him, and when he sees that they require it, to place them in some institution incorporated for the care of such children, to be kept there or sent by them to homes here or in the States, as the interests of the homeless children may be included not only orphans without homes, but all children under twelve years of age, who are abandoned by their parents or so neglected or treated as to endanger their morals, to be taken in charge.

II. That every police officer should be required and every citizen should be permitted to bring such children before this guardian.

III. That a child under seven years of age should never under any circumstances be treated as a criminal, and that a child between seven and twelve should not be so treated until he has been examined by the guardian and he has sent to the magistrate. No child under twelve should ever be left in the society of criminals under any circumstances whatever.

The foregoing has already reached the limit intended. It has not gone into particulars. In the contingent it has been made to refer to certain general propositions. Their development and elucidation are matters of detail. The idea of the article is attained, if it has helped to impress upon the reader the reason, justice and, partly political. Take care of the children and men and women will take care of themselves.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—On March 18, Corporal Pat held an inquest at Keady, on the body of a farmer named Patrick McGoldrick, who died from the effects of injuries received by being thrown from his car. It appears that deceased, while the drivers were passing an Archangelmass from Armagh market, one of the horses of the car got down in a drain, and the cart was turned over, throwing him out on the road. A woman who was driving the car, who was also thrown out, escaped without injury, but the deceased had received a fall so serious as severely that he died. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the facts.

Clare.—On March 20th, at Kilkee, a child named Walsh, whose parents reside in a cottage on the Circular road, accidentally fell into the face and hands being fearfully burned. It is not expected to recover.

At a time when the Land Leaguers are so active in driving people out from Kilrush, the population of that place numbered 5,000 only was bumped on March 23d. It is not alone one of the men who boycott, and some of the cattle were overshot and were not expected to live.

Great distress prevails in Kilrush and the surrounding districts among the laboring classes and small farmers. The Boards of Guardians are doing all in their power to cope with it, but it is feared the financial condition of the Union will prevent them from adopting remedial measures which would meet the case of distress.

Cork.—On March 20, Sister Agnes, of the Order of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, died in the Convent of Charity, Fair street, Dunbeg. The deceased was from Cork, and her name in the 12 of Miss Gleeson.

The Commissioners of Education took place in Cork on March 19th, in celebration of the Nationalist victories at the Poor-law elections. Bands paraded the streets and cheers were repeatedly given for the National leaders.

On March 18, Mr. P. Lynch, champion athlete, was arrested at Rosteveal, on the alleged charge of having forged the name of Mr. William Oliver to a cheque for £10.

An event of against society stared declarations of Grand Juries on bailiffs boycotted their peculiar law,—the Cork City Grand Jury, on March 19, voted in favor of a resolution to Ireland of a similar character, and the Grand Jury of Limerick passed a resolution to the effect that if the Queen from England, but would strengthen and consolidate the imperial connection. That is common sense. The substitution of the union of Ireland and England for the present one, by the substitution of an artificial bond by a natural tie, would always be a closer knitting together, and not a weakening of alliance. The Protestant on the Grand Jury jailbird, Protestant seconded and supported this resolution. They do not seem to be the exceptions that the Catholic majority at their Cookery brethren would fain make the world realize.

The wife of a Cork magistrate, one Mr. John Lyons, residing at Ballyvolane, on March 19th, gave birth to twin boys, the latter of her husband's house, and then propounded a story that she had been the victim of a conspiracy, the object being to blacken the reputation of the husband, and to implicate the wife in a charge for malicious outrage. Pretty creature!

On March 21st, there was witnessed in Castle town Bere the and ceremony of degradation in another earth the remains of the late Rev. John Harrington, the once talented, eloquent, patriotic and genial priest.

Dublin.—The Silver Cup of the Royal Humane Society (the recipient having previously received the Silver Medal) has just been awarded to Lieutenant Jon Captain Francis Adjutant of the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Fusiliers, for the gallant effort he made on the 4th ult. at Fort Mahon, in the Bay of Delhi, to save the life of Private Thomas Cassidy, of the same regiment, but unfortunately the brave man failed in his effort. Captain Cassidy is a distinguished young Irishman who served in Egypt and received the medal and clasp, Brown star, and the Order of the Medjidie. The medal awarded him is 1000 by the Royal Humane Society was the jumping off a troopship and saving the life of a man of his regiment, the same being at sea at the time between Malta and Southampton.

Captain Cassidy is a nephew of Sir Ralph Cassidy.

At the St. Patrick's Day ball in Dublin, the Earl of Cromartie danced the reel with the Countess of Aberdeen, and came to grief, but without doing any damage to anything but his dignity. Another incident occurred in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, the Lord Lieutenant, Dublin, chanced and frightened his horse, Keating & Co., was, on the 23d of March, adjudged bankrupt.

On March 17, a man named John Nolan, porter in the Castle street School of Medicine, was gentle down stairs in company with three of the medical students, when he fell to the bottom and fractured his skull.

Galway.—Rev. Walter Conway, P. P., Killeen, Cloonfad, is author of an excellent and comprehensive Catechism in the Irish language, which should be popular (and) charactaer.

Fine of Mr. Walter M. Blake's men who, with blue, has been in the Boston house erected at Dooking and Ballinasloe a few weeks ago, are now dead, the last being the half, John Geraghty, who, doubtless, died of fright.

Kerry.—Mr. J. H. Sheehan, M. P., has recovered from a serious indisposition, which took the shape of an attack of congestion of the lungs, and he will soon be able to resume the duties of his parliamentary and other duties. Dr. Lee is in charge of the case.

Meath.—A respectable farmer named James Turner, residing at Tullyallen, while recently in the vicinity of Drogheda, had a narrow escape from a dangerous case is the threat with a razor, which a tramp, who had sold to be his son, drew on him.

The Mont Bar, Dy. McGettigan, has appealed to the Lord Lieutenant, Dublin, for the parish priest at Tullyallen, vacant by the recent death of the lamented Rev. Patrick, P.P. Father Tuohy is a brother of the respected and patriotic parish priest of Ballyjamesduff, Co. Cavan.

Mrs. Sullam, wife of Peter Sullam, Esq., J. P., died on March 17th, at her residence, Castlerahan, Ballyjamesduff.

The ceremony of Profession took place at the Convent of Mercy, Navan, on Sunday, March Parle, on St. Patrick's Day, of seven young ladies, namely, Sisters Mary Ignatius, Mary Francis Xavier and Mary Gertrude, daughter of Captain Thomas Boylan, Drogheda.

The Rev. Patrick Kieran, Bishop Reabane, Tullydaly, fifty-two in number, have been granted a conditional dispensation of 20 per cent. in their rents. They made this demand last November, and after a tremendous agitation, they obtained a commission, and agreed to abide by the decision. The commission found in favor of the tenants, and offered to Mr. Smyth, solicitor, who, very much to his credit, also offered to assist in the gift of the commission of fifty-two tenants, the decision of the commission, namely, 20 per cent. The tenants immediately gave 20 per cent. abatement. The firm and determined spirit shown by the tenants (one or two excepted) shows what can be achieved a much needed lesson.

Mayo.—John O'Brien, of Swinford, in the county of Mayo, grocer and publican, has been adjudged a bankrupt.

At the usual weekly meeting of the Castlebar Board of Guardians, held March 20th, the following resolution, proposed by Mr. James Daly, Vice Chairman, and seconded by Mr. Michael Gibbons, J. P., Chairman, was passed unanimously: "That the thanks of the workhouse be tendered to the Lord Lieutenant for the act of grace which has enabled Mr. Harrison, from Carrick-on-Shannon, backed by a ballot seated Mr. Wynne, Ballinrobe, Mr. Wynne, Ballinrobe, Mr. Hanly, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Mayerty, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Daly, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Fennell—Mr. O'Neill, N., Mr. Wynne, Mr. Hanly, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Mayerty, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Daly, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Gibbons

Poetry.

THE WELCOME OF THE DIVINE GUEST.

By Eugene C. Donnelly.

In a rare old Irish story,
I have read with a tear and a smile,
Of a scene in a little chapel
In Erin's fair isle.

A little rustic chapel
In a wild pea'sle retreat,
Where the lowly Divine Guest of the mountains
Of hallowed meanings meet.

The priest at the lighted altar
Is reading the Mass of Mass;
And the place is thronged from the door
Clear out to the church yard grass.

All kneeling, humb'd and repentant,
Hilling their sins from him,
'Till the bell of the Consecration
Flings forth its solemn chime.

When lo! as the Host is lifted,
The Chalice raised on high,
Subdued yet clear, the people
Send forth one rapturous cry.

"Welcome! A thousand welcomes!
(While many a tear-drop starts)
"Welcome! Cead mile failte!
White Love of all our hearts!"

Oh, the passionate warmth of that while,
Glad, the grace, of that greeting strong!
Is the tone of the fervent lovers,
All hearts are being sung.

And in Mass of the Son of Justice
Lights up that dim old spot,
And Mother Church's prayer
A flame that dieth not!

Ah! friends, in our stately churches,
When we pass the gorgeous shrine
Where the Sacred Host repeats,
"Welcome! Cead mile failte!"

Let the voice of our faith find utterance
In a prayer to Mother Love,
Let us cry with our faith brothers
In Erin's fair isle,

"Welcome! a thousand welcomes!"
(What bliss that prayer imparts!)
"Welcome! Cead mile failte!"
White Love of all our hearts!

THE RIGHT ANSWER.

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my school child?"
"I'd kill her foes, I'd dey her years
Her sorrow change to joy,
With bogus of Chrysostom I'd wire
The Saxon's age, and spoil
That nought is yet from Erin's fears,
But sense from Erin's love."

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my second child?"
"I'd wed a Modest Irish lass back
Her children, long exiled;
Her children, long exiled, to her plains,
With sisters her brothers fill,
Rich grain should fill her every vale,
And cheer her every hill."

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my youngest child?"
"I'd set her green flag to the breze,
Now trampled, stained, and torn,
And chase the foe, like Ossian Bran,
From centre to the sea,
Till all the isles from strand to strand,
Was glorious, great, and free!"

"Well said, my son; so Ireland is blest,
That owns not Freedom for a guest."

Maloney M. Ryan.

LOUVAIN UNIVERSITY.

A Lire of the English-Speaking Gentlemen.

In commemoration of its Jubilee in 1834, the ill. lustrious Academy of Louvain published a list of its pupils, with biographical notices. This is a page of glory and dignity, and other high gratifications, for all the Catholics of Belgium. In 1834, the number of graduates in all the faculties in Louvain had reached the high figure of 3,000. The vast majority must have received the religious, moral and literary training of Louvain. Many, indeed, passed through the hands of the Jesuits, and, if we are not mistaken, the Jesuits had a hand in the training of all. We may safely infer, from what we believe, the debt is handsome to the Jesuits, that the Catholic Universities of Belgium, in a very possible sense, the production is very high. Belgium is a Catholic country. The Catholic Universities of Belgium do not appear to be in any way hampered by the Government, and among the alumni of Louvain, we find the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Public Works, the Governor of the Bank of Belgium, the Bar, the Bench, the Senate, the Chamber of Deputies, the Universities, the Press, the Clergy, the Catholic Clergy, the Catholic Clergy, the Catholic

Poetry.

THE WELCOME OF THE DIVINE GUEST.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

In a rare old Irish gray,
I have read with a tale and a smile,
(If a scene in a little chapel
In Erin's land of isle.

A little rustic chapel
In a wild yet fair retreat,
Where the Bread of Life is given
To hallowed meetings meet.

The priest at the lighted altar
In reading the blessed Mass,
And the place he thronged from the chancel
Clear out to the church yard grass.

All kneeling, hush'd and expectant,
Hiding their chosen Guest,
"Till the bell of the Consecration
Rings forth its solemn chime.

When lo! as the Host is lifted,
The Unalloyed on high,
Subdued yet clear, the people
Send forth one rapturous cry.

"Welcome! A thousand welcomes!"
(While many a tear-drop starts)
"Welcome! Cead mile fáilte!"
"White Lord of all our hearts!"

Oh, the passionate warmth of that whisper!
Oh, the grace of that greeting strong!
On the tide of its glowing fervor,
All hearts were borne along!

And the blaze of the Sun of Justice
Lights up that dim old spot,
And kindles to vivid beauty
A flame that dieth not!

A friende, be our stanch shrinkers,
When we pass on the gorgeous shrine
When the mocking angels fail, reviling,
Like a great white Pearl divine.

Let the voice of our faith feel stiffnesse
In a preaching free from a smile;
Let us cry with our Irish brethren
In Erin's far off isle

"Welcome! a thousand welcomes!"
(While blue eyes grow misty wet)
"Welcome! Cead mile fáilte!"
"White Lord of all our hearts!"

THE RIGHT ANSWER.

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my fellow boy?"—
"I'd mint her bees, I'd dry her tears,
Her sorrow change to joy."
With bugles of Clarynscline I'd win
The Saxon's ear and eye;
That nought is yet from Erin's fears,
But needs from Erin's love."

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my school girl?"—
"I'd wile to Mother Ireland back
Her children, long exiled;
Rebuild her hearth, re-lill her plains,
With ships her harbors fill;
Rich grain should fill her every vale,
And clothe her every hill."

"What would you do for Ireland,
O say, my youngest born?"
"I'd make her fields to the skies,
Of dear, her people's land, and
Of shame the foe, like Green Roe,
From pasture to rise and
Till all the land, from strand to strand,
Was glorious, free, and free."

"Well said, my son! no land is blest,
That sons not Freedom for a guest."

MALACHY M. RYAN.

LOUVAIN UNIVERSITY.

A Lot of its English-Speaking Graduates.

In commemoration of its Jubilee in 1884, the of late year's calendar of Louvain University, Belgium, contains a list of its graduates, that is a complete and distinct, and other high graduates of the University, from its foundation in 1834. The number of Graduates in all the faculty is very great, and shows how lately the University must have turned from the religious, scientific, and literary life of Belgium, to the glorious through the late to one who, poor, Kingdom of Belgium, and the Belgian people, the University must be ever dear, and the remembrance of its Jubilee, the date to be treasured by its people in which they respectively graduated. We may presume that the graduates have, in the intermediate year and decades, on that many English speaking Students do not appear found in the Lists of Graduates of Louvain, but among the Licentiates in Philosophy, the Rev. Thomas Ryan (1844), professor of St. Edward's College, Kilkenny; the Rev. L. J. Hickey, D. D., Professor of Philosophy; the Rev. Daniel Dee (1860), now a Chemistry; the Rev. J. Lynch (1860), Professor of Philosophy; the Rev. Jos. Lynch (1860), Professor of Philosophy; the Rev. Jos. Lynch (1860), Professor of Philosophy; the Rev. Archbishop of San Francisco; the Rev. Cardinal Gibbons, Baltimore; the Rev. Jos. Hickey, D. D., Professor of Philosophy; the Rev. Daniel Dee (1860), now a Chemistry; the Rev. J

THE MONITOR.
TO BEST SERVE THEE OF CHRISTIANITY

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

— M. J. Johnston, of Pomona, Los Angeles county, a former member of the Episcopalian sect, who has been seeking the heavenly light that leads men's souls to God, was baptized and received into the true fold of Christ by Rev. Father Fraher on Easter Sunday. What a beautiful day to select for such a sublime act! To rise from the tomb of religious error on Easter Sunday proves that the new convert fully appreciates the great dignity of that joyous festival.

— The Catholics of Glendive, Montana, having recently purchased the Congregational church at that place, Bishop Brondel dedicated the building to the purposes of divine worship on Sunday the 7th inst. This—one by one—is every State and territory in the whole United States, Protestantism is falling into decay, whilst the church of God is more and more firmly erected by those who considered "Popery" not sufficiently "go-a-head" for this great country.

— The Irish Orangemen who congregate in a corner of the North of Ireland are likely to prove a thorn in Great Britain's side if they carry out their blood-and-thunder declarations. At a recent meeting of these Williamites in the county Antrim, Mr. Johnston, Conservative member of Parliament for South Belfast, moved that the Irish Loyalists refuse to recognize the Dublin Parliament if established, and decline to pay taxes, and to resist all attempts to enforce them to pay taxes. He said he intended to drive up a list of those Loyalists who were prepared to bear arms. But all this bombast and brag will subside whenever the cowardly Orange heels stand long enough to feel the Irish Pough-a-bullagh sweet with breech-loaders.

— It is a hopeful sign to notice that the observance of Good Friday is growing in favor. In New York, on the recent festival, the Stock, Produce, and other Exchanges were closed, seven of the theatres had no performances, and the base-ball and other athletic clubs omitted their customary games. A movement has also been inaugurated in New York to have the saloons close on that day, Archbishop Corrigan having recently said that "every good son of the Church ought to sell intoxicants on Good Friday." We hope that prior to the next recurrence of this solemn festival some influence will be brought to bear upon the managers of theatres and other public places in this city to close their doors on Good Friday out of respect for the august sacrifice offered up for man's Redemption by the Son of God.

FATHER ABRAM J. RYAN DEAD.

The Poet-Priest of the South, in Mobile, Ala.

The name of FATHER ABRAM J. RYAN, the Poet-Priest of the South, is familiar to many readers of the MONITOR who will mourn over his early and sudden demise which took place on Holy Thursday last. His holy life as a priest, his ardent love for Ireland, and his fidelity to his Southern home during the recent contest between North and South, are all deeply revealed in his numerous poems, each of which breathes that pure spirit of poetic inspiration which distinguishes the true poet from the mere mechanical rhymester.

The inspiriting muse of FATHER RYAN has moved multitudes; his poems have caused the fire of faith to burn more brightly in many a Catholic breast; the tribute which he has paid to God, His Blessed Mother, to his beloved South and to holy Ireland, will some his memory to be cherished throughout the span of the future.

FATHER RYAN was but forty-six years old when Death broke the strings of his lyre, having been born in Virginia in 1840. His student years were spent at St. Vincent's College, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and, after his ordination, he spent several years on missionary duty in Knoxville, Tennessee. During the Spring of 1865 he undertook the management of a newspaper called the Banner of the South in Augusta, Georgia, but the enterprise did not meet with success. He was afterwards appointed as pastor of St. Mary's Church, Mobile, Alabama, and—at the time of his death—he was recting at Biloxi, Mississippi.

Among his poetical sessions "The Conquered Banner" will always rank as his masterpiece. His well-known Irish poem —"Erin's Flag"—has popularized his name among the Irish people in every quarter of the globe, and his "Rosary of My Tears," is the poetical outpouring of his life upon the pages he has left us as his legacy of love. The concluding stanza of this oddly beautiful poem are very suggestive of the devoted author of them:

But lead by lead I tell
The Rosary of my years,
Prom a cross that was laid on Calvary
Down to my own poor cross to-day—"As well!
And they're blest with a blessing of tears
Beneath a day of strife,
Than a century of sleep,
Give me instead of a long peaceful life
The tempest and tears of the deep.

A thousand joys may lean
On the pillows of all the years,
But never the dream that has been
It render the future drearier!

In view of the early demise of FATHER RYAN, it may be said that his prayer for an early death has been heard by a merciful Providence. He was a man of great sincerity, and his poems partake of the sublime almost of despair, whenever he touches the chord of his heart-strings which bound him to his native South. They are evidently the priestly sweet-singer of the Southern States prove to be as pure and as beautiful in the grave of his beloved South as in the place ejaculations and the patriotic aspirations of his brilliant genius—as reflective in the many beautiful poems he has left in the world and which all tend to make men the better for their present.

FATHER RYAN's funeral took place last Sunday, and we ask the prayers of our readers that the Recording Angel may write "Requiescat in!" opposite the name of FATHER ABRAM J. RYAN in the Book of Life.

Growth of the Church among English-speaking Nations.

The congratulatory greetings which Cardinal Moran and the Bishops of the Church under the Southern Cross sent to the Catholic Hierarchy of this country—and which appeared in the MONITOR a few months ago—has been replied to by his Grace Archbishop Gibbons, who has formulated a document which shows the vast strides made by the Catholic Church among English-speaking races in different regions of the world. Archbishop Gibbons says that "only four English-speaking bishops sat in the Council of Trent; at the Council of the Vatican 120 shared in the deliberations. At this moment they number 160, and we may without rashness venture the prediction that before the century closes they will number 200. Moreover, discipline and devotional works in English, which fifty years ago were scarce in fused, are now to be found in almost every Catholic home. Our noble language, which for three centuries has served by voice and pen to spread abroad so much religious error, is now, thank God, the vehicle of truth to the nations. As it is to-day the great medium of inter-communication in trade and commerce, so may it be more and more the channel for conveying the blessings and consolation of the Gospel to the hearts of men. For this advancement of the cause of religion in both countries, we are in no small measure indebted under God to the religious freedom which constitutes so noble a feature of our respective Governments. They hold over us the aegis of their protection without intruding into the sanctuary, and by leaving unrelaxed the spiritual prerogatives enable us to fulfill our sublime mission without fettering our apostolic liberty."

In this country, during the eighteen years that elapsed between the holding of the Second and the Third Plenary Councils, forty-one new Dioceses and seventy-three Vicariates have been created; the number of priests has risen from 2,500 to 7,000, speaking in round numbers: and religious houses, colleges and schools, have multiplied in proportion. The Third Provincial Council of Baltimore was attended by seventy-one Bishops, one Prelect Apostolic, one Administrator, three Procurators of Bishops, five Abbots, the Superior of thirty-one Religious Orders, the Rectors of eleven Greater Seminaries and eighty-nine Theologians. Figures which at once demonstrate with forcible truth the onward progress of the Church in a land where her body and bonds Missions are beginning to be more fully realized, and where she is destined to achieve a glorious career which will add additional lustre to her own exalted character and increase the respect of the world for her great Christianizing mission as typified in the labors of her Prelates, Priests and Religious Orders.

The Progress of Protestantism.

The progress of Protestantism may be likened to the regressive motion of a crab. This Protestant word; The "progress" of Protestantism is a misnomer, and a credious conglomeration of sects itself is very peculiar. In Brooklyn, New York, a Protestant church called St. Ann's has given way to the progress of commerce. Sands street Methodist church is almost entirely devoid of a congregation; the Baptist church in Nassau street, New York, has been transformed into a book bindery; the fashionable church known as "Dr. Spencer's" in Brooklyn, makes a carp opinions carpet shoe room, and the congregations of two other sectarian edifices had to double-up in one church so as to save both from tumbling into the ditch of decay.

Elm Tree Congregational church has been converted into a theatre; the Dutch Reformed church on Joralemon street has been sold and is going to be transformed into a concert hall, and Westerly Avenue Chapel has been converted into a chair making establishment.

It may be remarked that the congregations which attended these churches have erected edifices elsewhere, but this is not so. The churches collapsed for want of congregations, for the reason that so many of the non-Catholic masses have turned Agnostics, Infidels, Rationalists or Materialists, that the "progress" they are left to pay the preachers, and when their claim of salvationists do not get good pay, they quietly slip off the circuit rider to find a place in some of the professional where money can be made rapidly. In the secular sphere Protestantism, in this way, progressing, but—as a religion—it is rapidly being shifted down to a fine point by the internal error of its composition.

— The New York Sun turns the tables very sensibly upon Lord Salisbury in regard to his recent false assertion when he said "Whitehey, moonlight, and ribbon notion, murders by night and day, made doubtful the angelic character of this Irish peasantry." Unfortunately, says the Sun, an angelic character is something that no people possess. Ku Klux and kindred societies, murders by night and day, made doubtful the chivalric character of the Southern Democrats. But the Ku-Klux societies were the outgrowth of oppression by carpet-bag Governments. When that oppression was removed, the Ku-Klux became dead out of the Ku-Klux Klan. Since the Southerners have had home rule, they have become obedient to the laws and loyal to the Union. If this country should get into a foreign war there would be no need to keep an army in the South to overawe the people and guard against another rebellion. Moonlight and ribbon societies have grown out of carpet-bag governments in Ireland. They are evils which can be healed by the same medicine that cured the Ku-Klux plague. If England should drift into a war with a powerful neighbor—and sooner or later she must get there—a bad addition to that misfortune would certainly be a rebellion in Ireland. Should Gladstone's bill be torn to pieces by English passion and flung into the teeth of the Irish people, it will simply be a challenge that may be taken up at an awkward time.

— Bishop Ireland will sail for Europe soon. Rumor has it that his see will be made an archdiocese.

Indulgences of the Rosary.

[CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.]

12 c. Indulgences that can be gained on feast feasts—Continued. Second, On the 8th, 24th, or the Saturday immediately following it, commences the first of the fifteen Sundays preparatory to the feast of the Most Holy Rosary. On each Saturday may be gained, first, an indulgence of seven years and seven quarantines (Congregation of Indulgences, December 12, 1848); second, a plenary indulgence on each Saturday (December 29, 1852). Furthermore, on each of three Saturdays, at one's selection, a plenary indulgence (December 12, 1849); conditions, Confession, Communion, visit to the Rosary altar and prayers for the intentions of the Church. On the 29th—the feast of SS. Peter and Paul, Apostles—three years and three quarantines for assisting at the Salve Regina in a church of the Order, Clement VIII. Indulgellus.

JULY. On the 2nd the feast of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary—may be gained the following indulgences: first, one hundred days for the recitation of a chaplet, Leo X, Pastoris; second, three years and three quarantines for assisting at the Salve Regina in a church of the Order, Clement VIII. Indulgellus; third, seven years and seven quarantines for visiting the altar of the Rosary, Clement VIII, Salutaris; fourth, seven years and seven quarantines for assisting at the Rosary Procession, Clement VIII, In Salute; fifth, seven years and seven quarantines (ibid., seven years and seven quarantines for visiting the altar of the Rosary, Clement VIII, In Salute; sixth, seven years and seven quarantines for assisting at the Rosary Procession, Clement VIII, In Salute; seventh, (ibid., a plenary indulgence for the Fourth Glorious Mystery, Gregory XIII, Pastoris; conditions: Confession and Communion; fourth, two more plenary indulgences, granted by the same Pope, on the same conditions (see Feb. 7, No. 5, this section); fifth, a plenary indulgence for each visit to the Rosary altar, Innocent XI, Nuper; conditions: Confession, Confession and Communion. IV. For assisting at the Rosary Procession, first, a plenary indulgence, provided the recursion made his Confession and received Holy Communion before the Procession, Pius IV., Dum praeclare; second, seven plenary, granted by Gregory XIII., Ad regendum, on the same conditions; third, third plenary, granted by Pius IX., Ut magis, on the ordinary conditions. It is with remark here that the Communion prescribed for the gaining of the above specified indulgences, may be received on any day of the Octave (Decision of the Sacred Congregation of Indulgence, Feb. 25, 1848). On the 16th—the feast of St. John of Cornuta, Martyr, U. P., a plenary indulgence, conditions Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order. On the 16th—the feast of St. Mathew, Apostle, three years and three quarantines for assisting in a church of the Order, at the Salve Regina, Clement VIII., Indulgellus. On the 16th—the feast of St. Hyacinth, Confessor, O.P. a plenary indulgence, conditions Confession, Communion and a visit to a church of the Order. On the 24th—the feast of St. Bartholomew, Apostle—three years and three quarantines for assisting in a church of the Order at the Salve Regina, Clement VIII., Indulgellus. On the 30th—the feast of St. Rose of Lima, Virgin, U. P.—a plenary indulgence; conditions Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order.

AUGUST. On the 4th—the feast of St. Dominic, the Founder of the Order of Friars-Preachers, and the Establisher (Instituter) of the Most Holy Rosary—may be gained, first, a plenary indulgence, conditions Confession, Communion, and a visit to a church of the Order; second, a second plenary indulgence, on the usual conditions (Gregory XVI., March 16, 1842). It is well to remember that, in all churches in which a Confraternity of the Rosary is canonically established, the liturgical solemnity, that is, the Solemn Mass of St. Dominic, can be celebrated on the Sunday following the feast (whenever the feast falls on a week day), and the indulgences of two other sectarian edifices had to double-up in one church so as to save both from tumbling into the ditch of decay.

Elm Tree Congregational church has been converted into a theatre; the Dutch Reformed church on Joralemon street has been sold and is going to be transformed into a concert hall, and Westerly Avenue Chapel has been converted into a chair making establishment.

It may be remarked that the congregations which attended these churches have erected edifices elsewhere, but this is not so. The churches collapsed for want of congregations, for the reason that so many of the non-Catholic masses have turned Agnostics, Infidels, Rationalists or Materialists, that the "progress" they are left to pay the preachers, and when their claim of salvationists do not get good pay, they quietly slip off the circuit rider to find a place in some of the professional where money can be made rapidly. In the secular sphere Protestantism, in this way, progressing, but—as a religion—it is rapidly being shifted down to a fine point by the internal error of its composition.

— The New York Sun turns the tables very sensibly upon Lord Salisbury in regard to his recent false assertion when he said "Whitehey, moonlight, and ribbon notion, murders by night and day, made doubtful the angelic character of this Irish peasantry." Unfortunately, says the Sun, an angelic character is something that no people possess. Ku Klux and kindred societies, murders by night and day, made doubtful the chivalric character of the Southern Democrats. But the Ku-Klux societies were the outgrowth of oppression by carpet-bag Governments. When that oppression was removed, the Ku-Klux became dead out of the Ku-Klux Klan. Since the Southerners have had home rule, they have become obedient to the laws and loyal to the Union. If this country should get into a foreign war there would be no need to keep an army in the South to overawe the people and guard against another rebellion. Moonlight and ribbon societies have grown out of carpet-bag governments in Ireland. They are evils which can be healed by the same medicine that cured the Ku-Klux plague. If England should drift into a war with a powerful neighbor—and sooner or later she must get there—a bad addition to that misfortune would certainly be a rebellion in Ireland. Should Gladstone's bill be torn to pieces by English passion and flung into the teeth of the Irish people, it will simply be a challenge that may be taken up at an awkward time.

— Bishop Ireland will sail for Europe soon. Rumor has it that his see will be made an archdiocese.

D. J. OLIVER.

Death of one of California's Most Distinguished Irish-American Citizens. Sketch of His Life, His Well-Deserved Honors and His Last Hours.

[PUBLISHED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN THE MONITOR.]

In consequence of last week's edition of the MONITOR having become exhausted by reason of demand on the part of the numerous friends of Mr. Oliver to possess a sketch of his life, we regret to inform our readers that the following article, covering a few minor inaccuracies which appeared in our issue of the 24th inst., which appeared in our issue of the 24th inst.

A crowd of those sudden and unexpected events which startle communities into wondering at the ways of Providence, cast a shade of sadness over the city of the Golden Gate, on the afternoon of last Thursday week. The news flashed hither and thither by the telegraph, was to all classes and conditions of men, a shock of sorrow, and a sense of loss and bereavement, which could not be prolonged, for years and years, the Catholic Church in California, and the Irish people in the Golden State, have lost a true friend, and a sincere Christian, in the person of the late D. J. Oliver, who died at his residence, 1,104 Mission street, San Francisco, at 2 o'clock on the morning of the 15th inst., after a long and painful illness, which he bore with the patience of a true Christian, and the resignation of a true Catholic.

Deceased was a native of Ireland, and was 64 years of age at the time of his death. He was a man of great energy of character, and of a very generous disposition, which latter quality, may overtake the Editorial scribbler, who, in the hurry of his work, may not have the opportunity to set out the full meaning of the word, in the manner in which it should be set out, in order to clearly demonstrate the meaning of the writer. It may be sufficient to say, that the late D. J. Oliver was a man of robust and healthy constitution, and possessed of a good share of the energy of mind and body, which characterized the average Irish man. He was comparatively free from the trials, cares and vexations of the every-day round of life; he was surrounded with all the comforts which could lead to prolong his years and his friends hoped that the sunshine of his genial disposition would continue to shed its light upon their society gatherings for many years to come. But the unexpected, the sudden, the startling, the disconsolate, and in striking down in the prime of life, and in the full vigor of the world's race, a man who was a noted and kindly character who was proud of, and loved by, his adopted land, and who was a man who was widely accredited by his adopted home for the kindness of his heart, and the generosity of his disposition, and who was a man who was a true friend of the poor, and who was a man who was a true friend of the poor, and who was a man who was a true friend of the poor

Farm and Home.

How to Eat.

The primary act of digestion takes place in the mouth. A simple statement, certainly, but one more important than it may at first sight appear. For in the mouth the food is, or ought to be, slowly and properly masticated. This not only renders it more fit to be speedily acted upon by the juices of the stomach (gastric), but enables it to be well mingled with the secretions of the salivary and parotid glands. And what do these secretions do? The answer is this: The saliva contains a fermentive agent, to which chemists have given the name of "diastase." The property of this diastase is that it changes the starch of the food into sugar, or "dextrine," which is soluble, the former not being so. A portion of this is actually absorbed into the blood from the mouth. Again, the diastase is only active in an alkaline versus an acid medium, another reason why it should be mingled with the food in the mouth and not in the stomach. Slow mastication, then, is of the greatest importance if we would live in health and avoid the horrors of indigestion, with the thousand and one ills, physical and mental, that follow in its train. Take time to eat if you would be happy. Take time to eat if you would be well. Teach your children to do so, and explain to them the reason why. A word or two spoken to a child in a quiet and reasoning strain, will often make a very deep and lasting impression.

I have a letter before me, from which I will make an extract: "I am seventy-seven years of age," says the writer, "and have very few teeth, but my appetite and digestion are good, which I attribute to careful feeding. I have morning (breakfast) that all kinds of food, whether dry or moist, should not be allowed to pass until reduced to a pulp and mixed with the saliva."

Let me draw the reader's attention to the words "whether dry or moist." The aged but healthful writer does not to allow even moist food to pass a mouthful into the stomach. He is right. But is it not the common practice to bolt such food? Take, for example, a supper of porridge, and milk, or well-boiled bonnyclap and milk. How long do most people take to eat such a meal? And mind this: it is a most wholesome one. Why, about five minutes. Can they wonder that it disagrees, that it creates acidity and eructations, flatulence and all sorts of discomforts, not the least disagreeable of which are restless nights and nightmare dreams!

Great Profit in Figs.

S. H. Clapp, of the firm of Dudley, Clapp & Doe, extensive fruit dealers in New York, who is visiting Riverside, thinks the fruit raisers of California make a great mistake in not engaging in the culture of the fig more extensively. New York dealers are paying fifty cents per pound for choice Smyrna figs at wholesale, a price that California fruit could command if proper skill and care were used in the selection of the right variety and in grading and packing for the market. The principal fig grown in California is the black variety that is inferior on account of its color. If the White Smyrna fig should take its place and be handled rightly, it could command as high a price as the imported article. Californians seem to think that the fruit is good enough as it is and use no care in grading and packing, but part in all kinds promiscuously, while the foreign fig raisers make a selection of the very best fruit, securing a high price for which they can afford to sell other grades at a low price. The best fruit, if carelessly packed, will not command the price that the same fruit would if put up in a neat shape to catch the eye of the buyer.

Girls Learn to Cook.

Yes, yes, learn how to cook, girls, and learn how to cook well. What right has a girl to marry and go into a home of her own unless she knows how to superintend every branch of housekeeping, and she cannot properly superintend unless she has some practical knowledge herself. The fact is that man does not think enough of this; indeed, many a man marries without thinking whether the woman of his choice is capable of cooking him a meal; and it is a pity he is so shortsighted, for his health, his cheerfulness, and, indeed, his success in life, depend in a very great degree on the kind of food he eats. Let all girls have a share in housekeeping at home before they marry; let each experienced some department by turns. It need not occupy half the time to see that the house has been properly swept, dusted, and put in order, to prepare puddings and make dishes, that many young ladies spend in reading novels which unstrung their mind and body and unfit them for every day life.

What Animals is Breed to Grow Rich.

The prospect for making money by keeping cattle on the open range and feeding them as good as it was a few years ago. The best business have been secured, with rare exceptions, the national supplies of water are controlled by parties who keep them as their private property. The action of the national Government in relation to grazing lands in Indian Territory and the prevention of wire fences on public lands has been unfavorable to the interests of management.

Hog raising is less profitable than it has been at any time since the beginning of the civil war. One pork is excluded from several countries where it was once extensively sold. There is more risk from disease keeping hogs than any other kind of domesticated animals.

The outlook for large gains in keeping sheep is very good. Wool and ordinary mutton are both very low. While many are not inclined to sacrifice their flocks of sheep, few desire to increase them. All sheep raisers are hopeful of a favorable turn in their business.

The prospects for making money in breeding and raising horses and mules were never better than they are now. Horses of all descriptions command good prices. As wealth increases in large cities there is an increasing demand for horses that will make fast time on the roadways, for fine carriage horses, and for riding horses. The demand for heavy draught horses for use on drays and transfer wagons was never better. The demand for middle weight horses is also good. The increase of street car lines in all large towns and also the very number of horses suitable for drawing cars. Street railways make a demand for more horses than ordinary railways ever displeased. At present prices there is more money in draught animals than in those raised for supplying meat. That such a state of things will continue for a considerable time seems likely. The demand for horses in all countries increases as wealth and civilization increase.

— Words of praise, indeed, are almost as necessary to warm a child into a genial life as acts of kindness and affection; judicious praise is to children what the sun is to flowers.

— Use as little vinegar as possible in silking of others.

— When you bury an old animosity never mind a tombstone.

— Aspen's Catharetic Pills are suited to every age. Being sugar-coated they are easy to take, and thoroughly and perfectly cleansing. Aspen's Sarsaparilla as the best blood purifying medicine is acknowed by eminent physicians, prominent clergymen, and many of our best citizens.

IN OBEDIENCE TO THE GENERAL DEMAND OF PUBLIC WARNER'S SAFE YEAST which we guarantee to be as good as ever, we have added Hop and Potato to our Compressed and Health Preserving.

PRICE, 10c. A BOX.

(10 Cakes in a Box.)

Enough to raise 50 lbs. of the lightest, sweetest and most wholesome bread. If your grocer does not keep it, send to us.

Warner's Safe Yeast Co. Rochester, N. Y.

Family Fun.

Both Knocked Out.

When Nibsco came home from business the other night he found his somewhat better half with her head tied up and generally in a weary and used up condition.

"What is the matter, my dear?" he gently inquired.

"Oh, John, I have had such a hard day's work. I am completely worn out.

"What have you been doing?"

"Just shopping. I hunted through all the stores on Sixth and Eighth avenues, and have gone nearly the entire length of Broadway, too."

"What did you buy?"

"Nothing at all. I have been trying to match that gray silk for the front width of my new dress, but had to give it up. I am sure there is no such a thing as shopping."

The next night—that is to say, at an early hour in the morning following the night—Nibsco got home in a sadly demoralized condition, shattered mentally and physically, and emitting a strong odor of liquid oil.

"Why, John, what on earth can have kept you out so late?" demanded the angel of the home, who had sat up for him.

"What have you been doing to yourself? Where have you been?"

"Jes' a-shoppin', m'dear," he indistinctly replied. "I'e terrible hard work. Had to inter sev'ry s'loon on Six' avenue, and lots o' 'em on side streets, to match a drink of whiskey I got t'other day, but had to give it up. Th' ain't nothin' is half so tryin' as shopin, beither life."

Wanted for a Crazy Quilt.

Mr. Dusenbury—My dear, where are all my silk neckties!

Mrs. Dusenbury—I used them in my crazy quilt. Put on the one you wore yesterday.

Mr. Dusenbury, a twinkle in his eye—You have a weakness for ties, I notice. By the-bye, there's any number of them on the station lot.

"What! Ties?"

"Yes. At least a dray load of them."

"Good gracious!" Mr. Dusenbury! And not a little worn?"

"Yes."

"What kind of ties are they?"

"Railroad ties, my dear."

A Justice's First Charge.

He said: "Gentlemen of the jury, charging a jury is a new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all the evidence, as well as myself; you have also heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you do the one or the other, and don't believe what either of them has said, then I'll be hanged if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."

The Latest Boycott.

Jimmy Toffboy keeps his eye open and knows what is going on fairly well. Bustling into the kitchen the other day he shouted: "I say, ma, barry up and gimme suthin' t'eat. I'm jiggin' to join the Knights of Illiness." "You needn't trouble yourself about that. You are idle enough as it is, and there is nothing in the house for you to eat until supper time." "All right, I shall boycott you—just as soon as you saw up this rip in my trousers." He was put to bed until the necessary mending was done.

The Discovery of America.

The London Standard tells a story which many bright little Americans will appreciate. The following story comes from a school in the midlands: The master told the boys of the third class to write a short essay on Columbus. The following was sent up by an ambitious essayist: "Columbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Columbus, 'Can you discover America?' Columbus said, 'Yes, I will give one a ship.' So he had a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarrelled and said they believed there was no such place. But after many days the pilot came to him and said, 'Come my, I see land.' Then that is America, said Columbus. When the ship got near, the land was full of black men. Columbus said 'Is this America?' 'Yes, it is, said they. Then he said: 'I suppose you are the boss'es?' 'Yes,' they said, 'we are.' The chief said 'I suppose you are Christians?' 'You are right,' said he. Then the chief turned to his men and said: 'There is no help for it, we are discovered at last.'"

When the Day Is Cold.

"I see father," said Hollo, looking up from the paper, "that two boys in Maine were frozen to death while going to school." "Quite likely, my son," replied Rollo's father, "quite likely; a thing that is liable to happen anywhere, even in July. Did you never heard of a boy freezing to death while coming from school. Never, my son. And that gave Rollo something to think about all morning.

The Old Hen Too.

Mrs. Spunyerun is quite a young woman, and is the mother of a precious little girl. There was company at the house a few evenings ago. When bed-time arrived Mrs. Spunyerun said:

"Come now, Mamie, it's time for you to go to bed.

"I don't want to go to bed."

"But you must. Don't you know all the little chickens have gone to bed?

"Yes, but the old hen went to bed with them.

— We have only one thing to do—the will of God; one thing to fear—offence against God; one thing to hope for—the possession of God. Our actions should have but one motive—the glory of God; our actions should be bound up in—the love of God.

— Let us not forget the uses of silence and solitude. In these we oftentest meet God.

— Perfect soundness of body and mind is yours only with pure blood. Leading medical authorities of the world recommend Aspen's Sarsaparilla as the best blood purifying medicine in existence. It easily improves health and productive powers of both head and brain

Catholic Societies.

☞ Notification of Catholic Organizations required to be published in this column should be addressed to the Editor.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL CONFERENCES.

PARISH CHURCH.—The Particular Council meets once a month, and a general meeting of all the conferences once a quarter. The Particular Council meets on the second Sunday of the month, on the first Sunday of the month in the Parlors of the Parish, so that the poor conferences shall find a just proportion of assistance in charitable work. The conferences of this society are as follows: Conference of the Immaculate Conception, meeting in the Parlors on the second Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President; Hall on the first Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President.

ST. JOSEPH'S.—Conference of Young Men, meeting in the Parlors on the second Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President; Conference of Young Ladies, meeting in the Parlors on the second Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President.

ST. JOHN'S.—Conference of Young Men, meeting in the Parlors on the second Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President; Conference of Young Ladies, meeting in the Parlors on the second Sunday, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President.

The following are the officers of the Conferences of the Particular Council, Rev. Wm. Kirk, President; Thomas Tobin, Vice President; J. J. Conroy, 1st Treasurer; J. J. Dwyer, 2d Treasurer; Thomas Tobin, Recording Secretary; J. J. Conroy, Corresponding Secretary; Thomas Tobin, Chairman of the Dispensary; Thomas Tobin, Chairman of the Visiting Committee; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Hall Committee; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Sick Committee; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Boarding Committee; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Ladies' Committee; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Visitors; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Entertainment; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Finance; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Law; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Employment; Rev. Wm. Kirk, Chairman of the Committee of Relief

THE NEW IRISH PARTY.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

the foes of Home Rule say is that there is a minority in Ireland who are loyal to the Union, because they see in a Repeal of the Union destruction to themselves and ruin to the property of Ireland, and that this minority is composed of the landlords, men of wealth, men of commerce, manufacturers, everybody with "a stake in the country," and Protestants of all classes. Now, in the party which represents the

SOME SIXTY DEMESNES IN PARLIAMENT

there are landlords, men of wealth, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, physicians, journalists, artisans, tenant farmers, shopkeepers, newspaper proprietors, railway directors, army officers, civil servants, government officials, mayors of towns, municipal councillors, chairmen of poor law boards, magistrates, deputy lieutenants, high sheriffs, and members of the Church of England, the Presbyterian and the Methodist churches, as well as Roman Catholics. No party in Parliament has more real "stake" in its country than the Irish Nationists have in theirs. This enumeration shows that they represent the elements of a complete Irish nation. There is no section whom they cannot speak for with authority. Strange as it may sound, they are even better entitled to speak for the Irish landlords than any other party assuming to represent them in the House of Commons. Of the seven landlords of the Parnellite party one between them owns more than all the landlords of the Orange party from Ulster. These Irish landlords, Parnellites, as a matter of fact, do represent the wisdom and honesty of the landed interest in Ireland, while the others stand for prejudice and prejudice. When Home Rule is established, if there be any "Protestant" in Ireland claiming an individual existence, it will not be a minority of any reputable class or even of honest bigots, but a minority of disappointed idiots.

EVEN AMONG THE ORANGE PARTY, who are supposed to be the spokesmen of this supposed one minority, there are men who, when Home Rule becomes an established, unshakeable fact, will separate themselves from the irreconcilable opposition camps. Mr. Johnston, of Ballykilbeg, who may be called the rank Orangeman, although he also now in the midst of the Tories, for stopping the advance of Home Rule, and what the poet man imagines to be the domination of "Popery," is a Radical in the Redmondite and his colleague, Mr. De Cobain, from Belfast, brought in a bill the other day for lowering the municipal franchise, which is from treason to the principles of the Orange association, of his late Lord Clanda Hamilton or Colonel Waring. Orangeism and Tory drive him mad; Mr. Johnston would feel a far more congenial politician in Michael Davitt than in most of the gentlemen he now forgathers with, and I am in hopes of one day seeing that honest man a staunch partisan of Mr. Davitt in the Parliament in College Green. On the other hand, those who in their grandly representative party, which stands for five-sixths of the Irish nation, more than half, they may come to shape the politics of an emancipated Ireland, will take opposite sides, and form opposite parties on the questions that will arise. Not to speak of the landlords and their old members, there might be selected from the new men, numbers of disappointed men, Mr. Blake of Armagh, for example, a working man, a Protestant, a Home Ruler, a high-minded, aggressive man, and Mr. Jordan, a Nationalist, a Roman Catholic, a Radical, a working man, despite landlordism all his life, I would take to be the types of the thoroughly-pleased, contented Irish Tory. Opposite them I would set—not to mention any others—as the type of the future aristocrats, Sir Thomas Esmonde, a young gentleman who, by the grandeur, on whose, some say, the nastily of his illustrious ancestor, Henry Grattan, has fallen. I feel I have not left myself room to speak in personal detail of the members of the new Irish Party, but that may be left for a future occasion.

OUR BOOK TABLE.

AN CHUMHE OR RUN.—Her History, Her Saints, Her Heroes, Her Martyrs, Her Poets, and Her Wrongs. By Rev. Michael Walsh, and P. C. Cavanagh, L.L.D. Illustrated with numerous fine engravings. Fully and completely up to date. Royal 8vo. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, and gilt ornamental cover, $2.50. Cloth, gilt edges and gilt ornamental cover, Popular Ed. D. & J. Sadlier and Co., 38 Barclay Street, New York.

For a complete history of Ireland, which is unknown to ground as it is to Ireland. Brought to our shores by one of the Irish exiles whose name ever lived, it was accepted by the Irish race whose glorious annals it enshrines. It did not lie, and, with the faith of Christ, a new glory came to the grand people whose faith it vivifiedizes. A great and glorious line of teachers arose, as foined by the Irish Fairy, for their learning, so that Ireland received the name of "The Isle of Saints." To teach in the schools of France, Scotland, Germany and France, the Irish exiles were called for, and, when they returned to instructing their fellow-countrymen from one end to the other of the Island, Irish Universities, one of them founded by Charlemagne, brilliant Sidrian, and interesting spots in which the traditions, as gathered from the lips of the people, magnificently going up volume, which is now at your good people's disposal, cover the Isle. Every one of Irish birth or descent should be familiar with the noble heroic deeds, which no other land can boast of in such number.

The History of Kilcolman Castle, Lives of Ireland's Saints, Lives of Ireland's Heroes, Irish Martyrs, Irish Poets, Irish Wrongs, Irish Rights, Irish Wrongs, Irish Rights, Irish Wrongs, Irish Rights

Poetry.

THE MONTH OF MARY.

Fair queen of months, bright moon of flowers,
O rainbow-natured May!
When earth, through all thy smiling hours,
Keep sunshine pale-day!

The morning air is sweetly stirred
By hum of golden bees,
And joyous thrills of woodland bird
Floats on the fragrant breeze.

Pure incense rises gently up
From nature's floral altar
Fair flowers have bared their dewy cup,
And jasmine's elegiac vine

While twilight creeps down the purple hills,
And dances o'er the lea,
While light, with joy and laughter made, fills
All earth, and sky, and sea.

Thus greets May her country being!
To nature's temperate clime
And pense doth sit with folded wings,
Serenely rolling sit.

Sweet month, then hast a blessed name,
Thy light and bloom are given
To her who well the born may claim,
The gentle Queen of Heaven!

Mary, each floral gift we bring
That deeds the deep reward,
And bid each voice thy name sing,
Our Mother of the Lord.

The triumph blest, the prophecy
Is thine; all time shall bless
Thy matchless birth and purity,
Thy spirit's loveliness.

"Hail to thee, Mary! full of grace!"
The angel's voice rejoices,
While gazing on thy pictured face—
The angel's human sister!

O Sharon's Rose! shall we refuse
To bow before thy shrine,
When He who reshaped heaven would choose
Of mother-love to be?

"Behold thy mother!" Thus He gave Thy love our hope to be:
Calm, pure, and holy, fearless of the grave,
Our mother's legacy!

Come, then, our faith! Alas! "so wise,"
So wealth, so wrath, have we—
O Mother, by thy Son, thy divine
Ta aid our poverty!

In vessels frail, a drought delim
Of Jesus's mercy!
O hid Him change it, Mother mild,
To His years wine of peace!

And while the sweet May blossoms shine,
And light, and bloom and grow,
Thou floral gems we fondly twine,
Around thy shrine.

And as a worthier banquet shall
Enrich our gala-day,
And thou with rich and holy feelings,
And reign our Queen of May.

Hamilton, Ontario, (Marie).

From the Monitor.

THE LAND OF DREAMS.

BY ANTHONY DOYLE.

Did ever you visit that bright land of dreams,
Where nothing is sad and everything seems,
Where sights that are brilliant gratitude the eye,
The fairest of flowers and soft azure skies.

Flower meds of crystal, sparkling and bright,
Hills golden sun-beams whose magical light
Makes all seem as purposely grand and sublime,
That hearts the most jaunty trip gaily in rhyme.

The wonderfully rare land where sorrow and grief
Are unknown, with the exception of a bagpipe lie.
There Winter's cold hand never freezes the Nor Spring with her flowers blooms all the year round.

On another of roses we rest we believe
And are lulled to repose by invisible chimes,
Then visions of loveliness around us do move,
And fancy from bower to bower we all beaming with love!

Then the sweet music of spirits are merry or sad,
We visit that climate of joy and of peace,
Away from the world and away from its care,
To a land where the Lord grows as light as the hare.

There was food on the splendors that charm and delight
While Hessie looks on with hard sorry pain;
For Poetry and Memory true brilliance
Can in that land show their pleasurable
Can.

But oh! when a wall in rare beauties doth stream,
Wh a start and awaken—"Twas only a dream!
Ah! yes—when we wake to the cold cruel world,
And the silent or our Fairy-land lies buried.

How we long to revisit its bowers again,
And willingly exile ourselves and remain
Ah! a happy spot land! In this bright land of dreams,
Where nothing is real and everything seems!

Literary Miscellany.

"The Turning Point."

A LOCAL STORY WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR
BY LUKE LUCKY.

It was upon a warm and sultry July evening, that a small group of persons were reunited on the broad verandah of a noted California summer hotel. Supper over, many of the guests, following the usual custom, were sitting in short sleeves and in easy attitudes, enjoying a short stroll to the various interesting and romantic spots in the immediate neighborhood; some in pleasant and in rustic seats, there to sit and commune with surrounding beauty, others lounging about on steps to the plant rocks, remarkable for their quaint and significant terminations and shapes, some with pipes, some with their beauty and majesty even in the darker night; whilst some more practical sought for the cool spring to quench their thirst in its liquid waters. Nearly half the place been so deserted early in the evening, and the small group remained to the most of well known San Francisco merchants and several gentlemen friends, who seemed to derive much pleasure and satisfaction from their fragrant cigars and reclining chairs, and the pleasure afforded by the company of several charming ladies. It was just such a place and just such an evening to lead one into a pensive mood.

The spot, quite distant from town or village, the home o'erhopped and surrounded by huge oaks, with here and there a wooded willow, its tender branches, waving with sun, over and seem slightly disturbed by a gentle zephyr; all still as death, save the monotone murmur of the running creek, and an occasional responsive cricket from the bank.

Miss Waters, a sympathetic young lady, seems to have been somewhat influenced by the surroundings, as she relates a sorrowful story she had been reading the day before, whereupon her fond mother, whose classic features and stern countenance she would assume to be indicative of a philosophical mind, endeavored to impress her with the mutability and inequality of human happiness; how man was so abundantly favored, and never appreciates the least favor, or, rather, what life's journey for others is a road continually set with accidents, reverses and inquietudes.

"For example of the former take the present company," archly suggested Miss Waters. Several gentlemen took exception to the ruling, but the decision was reversed when it was that Mr. Greyrillo's ruddy countenance and beaming smiles belied the possibility of the minutest trouble.

"Excuse me, my friends, if I differ with you in the present instance. The first duty of man, says the Poet or Prophet, is to know himself, and although I do not claim to have mastered the subject matter, I feel fairness to have a closer acquaintanship with that unique personage than any here present.

"The time, so you say, my lad, is fast-ship prosperous, my home is happy, my wife an angel, and my children jewels; all blessed with religion, education and physical health. Tis true, that we angry such comforts and legitimate pleasures that our position and wealth afford, for all of which I am sincerely grateful. But this was not always so. Let me assure you that life is a struggle for all. Today I am blessed; to-morrow all is gone. Today I have wealth and happiness; to-morrow death snatches one dearest to me than wealth. A single episode in my unimportant career will afford an apt illustration of this theorem.

"Tis now sixteen years ago that I set foot in San Francisco, accompanied by my loving wife, and only child, then, less than two years old. I possessed letters from my former employers in the East, which I felt confident would secure me a position without any difficulty. In this hope I was sorely disappointed, but after considerable effort, I succeeded in obtaining place with a large grocery house. I entered its employ to work hard and faithfully, as energy and strength were the only means of access at my command. My determination resulted in progress, but I noticed that my salary remained consumed considerable only and ill-feeling in the breast of our chief clerk, Walter Williams, and the fact that he frequently resorted to multitudinous petty devices to annoy and discomfort me did not escape my observation.

"In these, however, I paid little or no attention, and never gave him the slightest cause for any ill will on his part. Now, about this time it happened that a sum of money, several hundred dollars in amount, was abstracted from the safe. This was shrouded in mystery, and when two weeks later a like amount was missing, my employer became greatly increased, and resolved to discover the criminal. Besides the book keeper, who was above suspicion, there was one but Williams and myself had access to the office, and the result of the firm's investigation was that I had committed the theft.

Mr. Wilcox, a generous, good-hearted old gentleman, called me into his private office, with evening. I informed him that I was expected to be made out a criminal, but thought that my previous conduct would help to ferret out the wrong-doer. I noticed the look of anger on the old gentleman's face, and as he rose from his chair, I felt the severity of his aspect.

"Sir, said he, you have entered my employ scarcely six months since. I have treated you well, endeavored to advance you in the business, and had confidence in your integrity, which confidence I find to have been misplaced. You will not be surprised to learn that we have conclusively proved that you have committed the petty thefts in our establishment," and as he uttered these words with rule and rancor that deeded to the firm from an anonymous friend, warning them of a certain clerk, George Greenville by name, who was leading a fast life, spending money lavishly, and had the reputation of gambling.

"This is one of the several epistles we have received concerning your actions, and let me tell you," said he raising his voice, "that were it not for your wife and child you would be in a prison cell before this." In vain I protested; on my knees I swore that the letters and accusations were lies, but all to no purpose. My blood boiled, my heart quickened in anything, and I was with difficulty that my speech responded. "Will all the feelings of an innocent man be wronged, with all the vehemence at my command, and in language more forcible than elegant, I pleaded, not for mercy nor my position, but for my good name which I valued more than aught else. The remarkable countenance of the accuser did not relax its severity, and he coolly informed me that the interview was at an end, and my presence was no longer wanted on the premises. With mingled feelings of anger and pent-up indignation I donned my hat, and away.

I imagine my feelings on emerging, from the institution where I had worked industriously, and as I thought, straightforwardly, and vending my way to my quiet home, an unused hell. It was more than human; I was able to inform my loving wife of the circumstances, and she, good soul, bore the intelligence with resolute fortitude, and at once strove to relieve my drooping spirits. All that night sleep failed me, my head ached, an intense fever sprang up, and the perspiration rolled from my forehead. My wife, poor, I rose at the usual hour, and with a heavy heart, I left for town. I tried every oral house in search of employment, but without success. The following day likewise, and day after day did I try, but the same formula continually faced and hurled me: "Who was your former employer?" "How long were you in his employ?" and "Reasons for leaving?" This last interrogatory was in effect like a weapon thrust into my very heart.

As I returned each evening disheartened, my wife's sympathizing look and cheerful smile of greeting, imparted its quota of relief and consolation; but trouble followed in the footsteps of trouble, and the crowning evil of all was that my dear helpmate was stricken with a deadly fever, and life life despaired of. Would that I could stay by her side, cool her parched lips, and administer those delicacies and attentions I would like. But no; food, drink and medicine was provided, and glad was I to secure work however unsuited. As a machine, I worked, I earned a pittance, and it mattered not to me that the flesh was completely torn from my hands, unnecessary to such work, and my fingers worn to the bone. My only consideration was the sick one at home, and through the long winter nights did I watch by her bedside, and notwithstanding my unmovable, invincible sympathies. Thank God, she continued to rally, her health gradually increased, and she was enabled to discover the criminal. Besides the book keeper, who was above suspicion, there was one but Williams and myself had access to the office, and the result of the firm's investigation was that I had committed the thefts.

Mr. Wilcox, a generous, good-hearted old gentleman, called me into his private office, one evening. I informed him that I was expected to be made out a criminal, but thought that my previous conduct would help to ferret out the wrong-doer. I noticed the look of anger on the old gentleman's face, and as he rose from his chair, I felt the severity of his aspect.

"Sir, said he, you have entered my employ scarcely six months since. I have treated you well, endeavored to advance you in the business, and had confidence in your integrity, which confidence I find to have been misplaced. You will not be surprised to learn that we have conclusively proved that you have committed the petty thefts in our establishment," and as he uttered these words with rule and rancor that dressed

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—On the Feast of St. Joseph, Bishop John Tuncken Raimondi officiated and preached in Chinese in the Cathedral at Hongkong, where fully 600 Chinese Catholics received Holy Communion on the auspicious occasion.

—Representative Springer of Illinois has introduced a bill into the House to establish a national Department of Labor, and to create a Board of Arbitration, in accordance with the suggestions of President Cleveland's proclamation which we printed last week.

—On the first page this week we print a partial refutation of certain calumnies uttered by a Rev. John H. Barrow of Chicago, but alas the matter was in type we have received a letter from our account from Mr. John Phelan, which we will print in subsequent issues.

—President Cleveland's engagement to Miss Folsom, of Buffalo, is again announced, and it is stated that their marriage will take place during the summer. Mr. Cleveland enjoys an honor unusual among prospective bridegrooms, namely that of having presented to the parents of the bride-elect, upon the occasion of her birth, the first entire [illegible] her infant form was rocked.

—Concerning Gladstone's Home Rule prospects Justin McCarthy sables to the Herald: "My forecast is this: Gladstone's measures will not pass this session, will not pass in any session in its present shape, but, all the same, Gladstone has already carried Home Rule. No Parliament will ever again attempt to carry on Imperial business until it has settled the Irish Rule question. Gladstone will educate England as Parnell has educated Gladstone."

—It is a good omen of Gladstone's future success in carrying through Parliament his Irish Home Rule measures, to find such an Anglo-American newspaper as the New York Herald giving voice to such a sentiment as this: "England has ruled Ireland with moors and insulting indifference and hypocrisy for twenty generations, and has not yet succeeded in crushing her patriotism or her pluck. She is still on her feet, she is still determined, she still asks for justice, and, heaven knows, it is time to grant it."

—When a boy in Dublin we often heard of the Mail as the rabid and ranting organ of the Orangemen. It still exists, and as a sign that increased years has not soothed its spite towards the friends of Ireland, we quote a recent sentence from its columns: "Old Whigs and Tories, the Mail thus "sneeps up" Parnell on the tip of its pen point: "This man has all but united the British public into one great party which will sweep this arrogant dreamer into the dust-bin of mischievous nonsense." (!) The Mail is evidently as mad as ever!

—The Holy Week services in Paris are carried out with great solemnity and attract immense crowds to visit all the churches. Among the notable things mentioned by the European press as being seen in the churches were the floral decorations on Holy Thursday in the churches of the Madeleine, St. Roch and St. Germain. At the Madeleine was a cross sixteen feet by ten of white and crimson roses, brilliantly illuminated by thousands of candles. At St. Roche was given a grand exposition of Rossini's "Stabat" by 700 musicians. All the churches were closed, and it looked as if the spirit of the city had subsided and all Paris had clothed itself in the garb of prayer and penance.

—The Dublin Freeman, describing the conduct of the people of Belfast on the news of the introduction of the Home Rule Bill, says that there was no extravagance in their demeanor and no boisterous jubilation. "Men shook each other by the hand and passed to their homes, each one conscious that a new responsibility—that of being a child of a regenerated nation, not a unit of 5,000,000 inhabitants of a degraded province—had been cast upon his shoulders." There were, however, a few, say one in twenty, who received the news of their possible nationalism in a very different spirit.

—Prom Glen of Emmets exchanges we learn that Father Abram J. Ryan—whose demise we noticed last week—died at the Franciscan Monastery of St. Bonifacius, in Louisville, whither he went a month ago from the Catholic institution at Reading, near Cincinnati. He intended to make his retreat and then finish a "Life of Christ," which he had undertaken. He became ill within a week with organic heart disease, and grew steadily worse. For several days his mind wandered, and he talked pitifully of his resentful life in the war days, and he often grumbled in imaginary sudden. Finally, he passed into a comatose state, from which he never roused. From the same source we learn that Father Ryan was ordained in Baltimore in 1866. His family came to this country when he was a baby and lented in Virginia.

—The Executive officers of the Irish National Leagues of America have issued a circular calling upon each branch of the League to organize citizens' meetings without delay, composed of the most representative men of all creeds and classes, and adopt resolutions, to give an expression of American opinion that will strengthen the hands of Gladstone and Parnell in the coming struggle. The members of the League should also use their influence to induce local Legislatures and other representative bodies to follow the example of the Legislatures of Ohio, New York, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and the Parliament of Quebec in passing appropriate resolutions and sending messages of encouragement across the water. Prompt action is all important, as we are filled with the Home Rule Bill and Land Purchase Bill will be resumed early this month. We publish the address elsewhere and hope the suggestions therein contained may be carried out immediately in all the principal cities, towns and localities on the Pacific Coast.

—A colony of Swedish bettlemkers arrived recently in Dublin with their families to take the place of strikers. None of them can speak English, and an interpreter explained for them that when they broke up their homes in Copenhagen to emigrate to the Irish Capital they were not aware that they were to take the bread out of the natives' mouths. The entire party—seventy-four altogether—were housed in a shed at the brickworks. An effort to deport them to their native lands is now on foot. It is charged also that the managers went abroad for the invaders before the native workers had stirred.

—Justin McCarthy sables the following to the New York Tribune. Lord Hartington, people say, is already very sorry he committed himself against Gladstone. I am told on authority that I cannot question that he has advised doubtful men to support the scheme. "I have already received a report—such is the substance of his argument—"you are not committed, you had better support Gladstone." To do justice to Lord Hartington he is a robust, manly, straightforward character. There is nothing of the Popkins plan about him.

—At a meeting of the Grattan Club held recently in New York, James Reilly read the sentiment that should at present prevail among all the friends of Ireland, when he said: "Let the Irish people here in America take care that nothing shall be done to mar the glorious project. Let no man or set of men attempt to dictate to Parnell or adopt measures that would interfere in any way with the great work he has in hand. The Irish race must stand behind him as one man, without a break in the ranks or a murmur of discontent until Ireland's right to make her own laws through her own representatives is recognized by England. There is no room for two policies now, and Parnell's policy is Ireland's."

—Gladstone's magnificent manifesto—which we publish in full—is a masterly plea for the support of all honest-minded men of Great Britain, America and all other lands for the measures "the grand old man" has introduced into the British Parliament in order to give Ireland the right to Home Rule. Mr. Gladstone throughout his great career has been the idol of the American people, and his speeches in support of Mr. Gladstone's efforts to pass the bill granting Home Rule to Ireland. If he fail he would fall with the democracy of the three kingdoms around him. Parnell, we are assured by means of public meetings held in America, but—we regret to say—Gladstone is distrusted by the Tories, and we suggest that a rousing meeting of the friends of Ireland be convened in this city as soon as possible, in order to give an unanimous and strength to the courageous efforts of the greatest English statesman of the present age.

—Bigotry and brutality are both combined in the opposition manifested against Gladstone by Ireland's enemies. A late cablegram states that some of his political foes have placed themselves in a most dishonorable position by making use of the sacred Premier's presence in the church at Hawarden on Good Friday to hurt and shame him and his sons. Some time ago the chapel at Hawarden, where Gladstone, the rector, has received numerous letters, some signed and others anonymous, which email him in the lukewarm spirit. One asks the clergyman whether an admission fee was charged "for the exhibition of the murderer of General Gordon!" Rev. S. Gladstone has thought it worth while to deny that a fee was charged for admission to the church.

—One of the most eloquent eulogies bestowed by Irish speakers upon Gladstone recently, was that delivered by the well-known Irish patriot, Rev. Geo. W. Pepper, who closed a lecture on "Ireland's Hope for Home Rule" with this picturesque peroration: "All hail, then, successor of Washington—greater than Pitt and equal to Lincoln! Immortal man! Immortal in the affections of the Irish millions throughout the world! Immortal in the prosperity of the land for whose independence Grattan pleaded and Emmet died! Immortal in the dignity and indignation of the tyrants, whose knees were together and whose faces turn pale as they read their doom in the latest proclamation of emancipation. Immortal in the resolve of the old Parliament in College Green; though the building is now desecrated, its shrine still stands; but it will be become more majestic, more stately, and more adored than ever. Incomparable Gladstone! I salute thee with all the fervor of my soul, and from the depths of my heart I say, 'God bless you.'"

—Among the whole people of England, there are few firmer friends of Ireland than the editor of the London Truth, Henry Labouchere. At a humane cause meeting was recently held in London for the purpose of endorsing Gladstone's measures, and, in the course of a very eloquent speech Mr. Labouchere told his hearers that it was significant of the democratic tendencies of the people of England that he noticed that in that gathering there were no peers decorated with orders on the stage and no fashionable beauties in the boxes, but there were present laborers from the field and from the workshop, who had not to raise their voices in support of Mr. Gladstone's efforts to pass the bill granting Home Rule to Ireland. If he fail he would fall with the democracy of the three kingdoms around him. Parnell, we are assured by means of public meetings held in America, but—we regret to say—California is distrusted by the Tories, and we suggest that a rousing meeting of the friends of Ireland be convened in this city as soon as possible, in order to give an unanimous and strength to the courageous efforts of the greatest English statesman of the present age.

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK.

MARYS PEERLESS BEAUTY

(CONTRIBUTED TO THE MONITOR AT A NON PAREIL CONTEST.)

We desire to show, in a popular manner, in this article the sinlessness of Mary, yea her impeccability, we mean that from the first instant of her creation she was endowed in grace, in a word, in, in no sense, not even by possibility, should she be so endowed with the sense of sin, was destined from eternity to carry in her pure bosom the Word Incarnate, the Son of God Almighty, and to be our Advocate with her Son. "Whenever the question of an immaculate conception is mooted in the schools, the honor of her Son, I do not wish the name of Holy Virgin to be mentioned or introduced; for we know that to her who merited to conceive and bring forth Him who is known to have had the greatest abundance of grace, so as to be able to obey in all things the precepts, she must be altogether free from all sin, even the sin of Adam." (Trac. 3, de Nativitate Beatæ Virginis Mariæ, cap. 2.) Holy Virgin Mary, we hail you as St. Bridget (Lib. 3, Revelat. cap. 1) and St. Bernard (Serm. de Aquæductu) have hailed you, and from my infancy the little prayer I was taught to say to you, I now offer you, I who am the Priest, and as I pour the water on the head of the Pagan, I say, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Hence I am also the water consecrated any six months ago, and I am the water which will be poured on the head of the Pagan, and I am the Pagan, as the Angel of the Schools, the glorious St. Thomas of Aquin, emboldens us to do, and then—as the holy nurse of the Angelic Doctor—I am the Holy Virgin Mary, who has been made qualified for the honor of being the mother of God, and from my infancy I was entirely with God. From my infancy I was filled with the Holy Ghost, and as I grew up He filled me with a degree with Himself that I was able to do so, so that when I was thence I am also never committed any sin even the venial one, but I am the Mother of

Farm and Home.

How to Clothe Children.

Every one will observe that a favorite article of winter clothing for children is a comforter swathed around the neck. This is a great error; the feet and the wrists are the proper members to keep warm; the face and throat will harden into a healthy indifference to cold; but that muffler, exchanged for an extra pair of thick socks and knitted gloves, would preserve a boy or girl really warm and well. Bronchitis and sore throat have declined 50 per cent. since the adoption of high collars and twice-around neckerchiefs went out of fashion, and if the poor would take better care of their children's feet, half the infantile complaints would disappear. It costs a little trifle to pin a piece of thick felt or cork into the bottom of a boot or shoe, but the difference is often considerable between that and a doctor's bill, with perhaps the undertaker's besides.

High Priced Horses.

The sale of the stallion Phallas for $60,000 shows that the prices of our trotters are gradually creeping up to the top notch of equine values. There is now $17,500, or $87,500, paid for Dunmaker, a lively winner. The price for Phallas is a jump of $10,000 over the former trotting limit, the $40,000 paid for Hand S., $20,000 over the $30,000 that was lately paid for a former conqueror of Phallas, Director, also a son of Director; and $21,500 more than the present limit for American thoroughbreds, the $38,000 paid for Hindoo. It was a great price, but Phallas is a great horse, and if he doesn't die, at the end of ten years his sire owner may be just as rich as he is now. It is not probable he will be any richer.

Sound Sleepers.

Warm-blooded animals like the bears and dormice go to sleep during the winter, and if it is cold, they continue in what we should call "a pretty solid snooze." The blood moves on ever so little, and once in a while they take a breath. If the weather is at all mild, they wake up enough to eat. There are other animals that don't wake up all winter, and the strange part of it is, that they know beforehand whether they will wake up or not. Those that will wake during the winter lay up something to eat, just by their sides, when they go into their winter-sleeping places. But those that do not wake up never lay up any food, for it would not be used if they did. Mrs. Hall, writing for "Our Little Ones," says:

"The little field mouse lays up nuts and grain. It eats some when it is partly awake of a warm day. The bat does not need to do this, for the same warmth that wakes him wakes all the insects on which he feeds. He catches some and then eats. When he is going to sleep again he hangs himself up by his hind claws.

"The woodchuck, a kind of marmot, does not wake; yet he lays up dried grass near his hole. What is it for, do you think? On purpose to have it ready the first moment he awakes in the spring. Then he can eat and be strong before he comes out of his hole.

"How many things are sleeping through the winter! Plants, too, as well as animals. What a busy time they do have in waking up, and how little we think about it."

A Sweet Temper.

No trait of character is more valuable in a woman than the possession of a sweet temper. Home can never be made happy without it; it is like the flowers that spring up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us. Let a man go home at night weary and worn by the toils of the day, and how soothing is a word dictated by a good disposition! It is the sunshine falling on his heart; he is happy and the cares of life are forgotten. A sweet temper has a very soothing influence over the minds of a whole family. Where it is found in the wife and mother you observe kindness and love predominating over the natural feeling of a bad heart. We find for the affectionate and ardent instructress of the children whom she has tended from their infancy, training them as rational beings, preparing them to become men and women in their turn. Smiles, kind words and looks characterize the children and peace and love have their dwelling there. Study this, ye, who require and retain a sweet temper. It is more valuable than gold; it captivates more than beauty and retains its freshness and power to the close of life.

Useful Hints for Horse Owners.

Horses are very delicate and liable to many ailments, and persons among them, who are not very familiar with their nature and requirements, will find the following suggestions, condensed from an article in the Cincinnati Enquirer, useful.

Never feed a horse with hay from a rack located above his head, as a draught beats down which is injurious, and the dust is liable to injure the eyes.

A horse should not be overworked, or like man, he gets tired, and to keep in good condition, he should have rest and good bedding.

Sometimes a horse will not eat his usual food. A mash of oatmeal, milk warm, is about the best food to give a horse under such circumstances. And then a horse should have grass. It is his natural food.

A continual diet of hay hardens the coating of his stomach. The food is not digested. Carbonic acid gas is generated, and the horse dies in agony, swalling up, suffering from what is commonly known as colic. Then, again, horses need well ventilated stables, free from draught or damp. The floor should be smooth and nearly level. It should be well drained and light, for sudden change from darkness to light is injurious to the eyes, and a damp, offensive odor is injurious. Then, again, the bedding and litter should be carefully separated from that which is foul. They should be well shaken up and dried, and the stall should be thoroughly cleansed; and when the stable is empty, be in a plenty of fresh air.

A horse's stall should be large enough to allow him to lie down comfortably in any position. A tired horse will be glad to lie down with his legs stretched out if he has room; but if you can't give him a loose box, then a light halter block should be used, and care taken to arrange the halter so that it may travel freely to allow the head to come easily to the litter, for rest and sleep are as necessary as food and water.

If a horse comes to the stable wet, he should be rubbed dry before the blanket is put on. The legs should be well rubbed, and the hoofs always examined for stones.

Care in Packing.

That care in packing and shipping fruit will pay well was clearly proven last month to the satisfaction of at least one Los Angeles county fruit-grower. Two neighbors, near Anaheim, picked and packed about 100 boxes of orange each for shipment to Chicago and through the Orangegrowers' Union. One man cleaned his oranges, wrapped them carefully, threw out the culls, and otherwise used good sense in handling. He got $3 25 a box for his fruit, and made a profit that pleased him. The other packed good, bad and indifferent together, omitted cleaning and wrapping, and he received $1 50 a box for his goods, making no profit worth speaking of but convincing him most effectually that it pays to clean oranges and ship them to market in an attractive shape.

Family Fun.

A Wonderful Woman.

The best tatooed woman in the United States lives in Austria. She has been married a number of years to a man named Ferguson, but she and her husband have never had a quarrel yet, and he has frequently boasted that it would be simply impossible to make her angry. Ferguson made an unfortunate attempt to see if he could not exasperate her to look cross or scowl at him, merely to gratify his curiosity, but the more outrageously he acted the more affable and loving she behaved.

Last week he was talking to a friend about what a hard time he had trying to find out if his wife had a temper. The friend said he would bet a hat that if Ferguson came home drunk, raise a row, and pull the table cloth full of dishes off the table she would show some signs of emotion. Ferguson said he didn't want to risk a friend of his money, for he knew he would win, but they at last made the bet of $50, the friend to hide in the front yard and watch the proceedings of the contestation through the window.

Ferguson came home late, and apparently fighting drunk. She met him at the door, kissed him, and assisted his tottering steps to the house. He sat down hard in the middle of the floor and howled out

"Confound your ugly picture, what did you mean by pulling that clear from under me!

"Oh, I hope you did not hurt yourself. It is very awkardness, but I'll try not to do it again." And she helped him to his feet, although she had nothing in the world to do with his fall.

He then sat down on the sofa, and, sliding off the lady, he reached in her pocket for lifting up the other end of the sofa, all of which she took good-naturedly and finally she led him to the supper table. He threw a plate at her, but she said as she had not noticed it, and asked if he would have ice-cream. Then the brute seized the table cloth and set down on the floor, pulling the dishes and everything else over with him in the grand crash.

What did this noble woman do? Did she suppose she grumbled and scolded about going home to her sex, or that she sat down and sobbed a fool, or that she rolled and pouted? Not a bit of it. With a pleasant smile she said

"Why, George, that's a new idea, isn't it? We have been married ten years, and have never yet ate our supper on the floor. Won't it be fun—just like those picnics we used to go to before we were married? And then this angelic woman deliberately sat down on the floor alongside of the wretch, arranged the dishes and fixed him up a nice supper.

This broke George all up. He owned up he was only fooling her, and offered to give her $50 to get her a new hat, but she took the money and bought him a new suit of clothes and a silver watch.

They Always Bite.

A good-looking, well-behaved stranger had been stopping in a country town in this State for three or four days, when one day some men were hanging round the hotel doors, a humble-youth with wide eyebrows and lowered head passed along, leading a calf. Both traveled as if it were an everyday thing, but no one thought of this until afterwards.

"Boy!" called the stranger from the hotel steps, "what do you ask for that calf?"

"Won't sell him."

"How much does he weigh?"

"Nigh upon 100 pounds."

"I can't be Gentlemen, I'd like to wager that I can guess nearer than that weight than any of you."

A dozen citizens got up, and walked around the calf, and squinted their eyes, and mentally estimated. Then a sort of Walkinshaw at each mouth. Finally, after consulting from 2 until 5 o'clock, the average was struck at 100 pounds. The stranger then pulled out a pocket-book and from it produced a $100 bill, which he placed in the hands of Squire Turner, to be held by him in trust for the winner. Then he pulled out a pocket-book full of bills, and said he would bet any man in the crowd that he could guess nearer than the average. Ferguson, who had been a witness of the proceedings, stepped forward and said he would bet $50 that he could guess nearer than the average. The money was put up, and the stranger asked the boy if he could have the calf for a few minutes, and on receiving a reply in the affirmative, he led the calf into the hotel and shut the door after him.

Two hours passed away, and the crowd became impatient, and Ferguson, who had been drinking freely, was loud in his abuse of the stranger, who had so long deprived him of the chance of winning back his money. At 5 o'clock the door was opened, and the stranger came out, followed by a fat calf, which was so much like the one he had led in that no difference could be detected. The stranger said he was ready to weigh the calf, and he was allowed to do so. The scale beam stood even at 100 pounds, and he was asked if he was willing to let the matter rest there. He said he was not, and he was allowed to place the calf on the scales. The beam stood even at 100 pounds. The crowd was astonished, and Ferguson was loud in his abuse of the stranger, who had so long deprived him of the chance of winning back his money. At 5 o'clock the door was opened, and the stranger came out, followed by a fat calf, which was so much like the one he had led in that no difference could be detected. The stranger said he was ready to weigh the calf, and he was allowed to do so. The scale

A Great Fire.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO'S BUILDING AND CONTENTS DESTROYED.

Lives and Property Lost in the Flames.

ADJOINING BUILDINGS DAMAGED BY FALLING WALLS.

The Sweep of the Fire Toward Mission Street: Small Buildings Burned.

The Firemen Still Pouring Water on the Heated Debris.

The alarm of fire turned in from station 46 at the corner of Geary and Market street at 5:55 last Friday afternoon was caused by a conflagration in the printing, engraving and lithographing establishment of A. L. Bancroft & Co., at 721, 723 and 725 Market street, and by nightfall the massive brick and iron structure was a mass of ruins. The fire was one of a series that have occurred within three years in the large printing establishment in this city, and the losses involved, and the area swept by the devouring element will cause it to rank as one of the great fires of San Francisco.

BANCROFT'S BUILDING.

Bancroft's building was one of the largest structures on the south line of Market street. It comprised five stories and a basement, and extended through to Stevenson street. It was erected in 1870 by the Bancroft firm of book-publishers, and was fitted out for their use. The first story was used as a bookstore, the second as a piano and music-store, and the balance as a printing, engraving and binding office.

The western half of the ground floor was occupied by L. & E. Emanuel, dealers in furniture and bedding, which firm also used the basement, where a large quantity of their goods were stored. The eastern basement was used by the Bancroft's for storing paper, stock, ink, unused machinery, etc.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE.

The fire originated in the basement of the furniture store of L. & E. Emanuel, in a manner not yet satisfactorily explained. Located in this basement was a varnishing shop for repairing furniture, which contained a large quantity of inflammable material. It is supposed the flames first started in this place, quickly ignited the paint and varnish, communicated to the furniture and bedding in the basement, thence quickly spreading by the elevator shaft to the upper stories, and extending among the books, papers and inks in the Bancroft building, soon had the whole on fire.

THE FIRST ALARM.

Within twenty minutes after the first alarm had been given the entire building was filled with smoke, and half an hour afterward the flames were pouring through the roof, leaping high in the air rending in an angry volume.

The material which first caught fire was such as gave rise to a vast amount of thick black smoke, which passed upward in the elevator walls to the top story, filling it and escaping from the upper windows.

THE SCENE ON MARKET STREET.

Those people who were on Market street when the fire first broke out stopped and watched the smoke pouring from the upper story windows. It was apparent that the fire was in the upper part of the building, but was confined to the basement of Emanuel's furniture store, and the dense puffs of smoke now and then escaped. It was thought by many people who stood watching the building that the water would soon be turned on the fire and the building be saved, but there seemed to be a delay in getting streams played. The ground floor and basement of the Bancroft building was occupied by L. & E. Emanuel, manufacturers and importers of furniture. The fire carried a heavy stock of goods, and in less will power by Sunday, 1000. The stock was a complete loss. Mr. Emanuel stated yesterday that on January 1st, he permitted $50,000 of insurance to lapse, owing to the excessive rates. This was, therefore, but partially insured.

The insurance on Bancroft's building is $60,000 and on the stock $140,000. I quit recently the firm carried $250,000 but had lowered the amount when the rates were raised.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH FAIR.

Names of the Ladies in Charge of Tables.

The fair inaugurated by Father Casey and the ladies of the parish for the purpose of raising funds for the completion of the church, opened yesterday, and will continue for three days, in Stevenson's Hall, Market street. The following are the lady managers of the various enterprises: Table No. 1—Mrs. Averille, Mrs. Cusack, Mrs. Mogan, Mrs. Cavanagh and assistants. Table No. 2—Mrs. Mrs. McAlmar, the Misses Curtis and assistants. Table No. 3—Mrs. Mullaney and assistants. Table No. 4—Mrs. Dougherty and assistants. Table No. 5—Conducted by the Confraternity of the Sacred Heart; Miss Griffin, assistant. Table No. 6—Mrs. Cleary and daughters. Table No. 7—Mrs. Freelander and daughters. Table No. 8—Mrs. Hutter, Mrs. Riley, Miss Keeg and assistants. Table No. 9—Young Ladies' Sodality; Mrs. Kandrick, President. Table No. 10—Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Table No. 10—Under the auspices of the members of St. Peter's Parish. Refreshment Table—Miss Mortimer, Miss Bonnington and Miss Dooley. Soda Fountain—Miss Mary Cleary. Wheel of Fortune and Flower Stand—Miss Lucy Cleary and assistants.

THIRD INFANTRY REGIMENT DRILL.

The Third Infantry Exhibition Drill at the Mechanic's Pavilion was witnessed by several thousand people, and for acuteness and precision of the several military maneuvers evinced the excellence to which they were carried by the Third, it could not be surpassed. The exercises were opened by a musical rendition by the combined bands of the regiment, followed by the drill of the Light Artillery Band, after which the Regiment was reviewed by General Shepard and Staff. A Battalion drill was next executed under the command of Lieut. Col. P. Boland, in the absence of Colonel Robert Tobin, who is on the sick list. The company drill was next in order, after which Lieut. Martin Ryan Company "C" (Emmets) in bayonet drill and Brown in fan drill. Capt. D. I. Driscoll next exhibited the fine marching and drill of Company "H," and then a present drill was performed, after which the troops were formed in order of battle ready for the dances who enjoyed themselves until daylight owing to Murphy's music.

EASTER IN URIAH.

Easter Sunday was observed in Uriah at both the Catholic church and at the tabernacle of the Latter Day Saints. Mass was read at the former at the usual hour, with beautiful and appropriate music, and the church was crowded to overflow, the attendance being even more numerous, as the coming ceremony of baptism.

The altar in the chapel of the Tabernacle was most beautifully decorated with natural flowers, plucked from the beautiful gardens which surrounds the building, and which makes the finest grounds one of the most lovely sights in a pretty town.

The service at this present time for our daughters were paid tribute in by all who attended, and which impressed as well as interested. The 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, 32d, 33d, 34th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 41st, 42d, 43d, 44th, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 51st, 52d, 53d, 54th, 55th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st, 62d, 63d, 64th, 65th, 66th, 67th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72d, 73d, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82d, 83d, 84th, 85th, 86th, 87th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92d, 93d, 94th, 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 102d, 103d, 104th, 105th, 106th, 107th, 108th, 109th, 110th, 111th, 112th, 113th, 114th, 115th, 116th, 117th, 118th, 119th, 120th, 121st, 122d, 123d, 124th, 125th, 126th, 127th, 128th, 129th, 130th, 131st, 132d, 133d, 134th, 135th, 136th, 137th, 138th, 139th, 140th, 141st, 142d, 143d, 144th, 145th, 146th, 147th, 148th, 149th, 150th, 151st, 152d, 153d, 154th, 155th, 156th, 157th, 158th, 159th, 160th, 161st, 162d, 163d, 164th, 165th, 166th, 167th, 168th, 169th, 170th, 171st, 172d, 173d, 174th, 175th, 176th, 177th, 178th, 179th, 180th, 181st, 182d, 183d, 184th, 185th, 186th, 187th, 188th, 189th, 190th, 191st, 192d, 193d, 194th, 195th, 196th, 197th, 198th, 199th, 200th, 201st, 202d, 203d, 204th, 205th, 206th, 207th, 208th, 209th, 210th, 211th, 212th, 213th, 214th, 215th, 216th, 217th, 218th, 219th, 220th, 221st, 222d, 223d, 224th, 225th, 226th, 227th, 228th, 229th, 230th, 231st, 232d, 233d, 234th, 235th, 236th, 237th, 238th, 239th, 240th, 241st, 242d, 243d, 244th, 245th, 246th, 247th, 248th, 249th, 250th, 251st, 252d, 253d, 254th, 255th, 256th, 257th, 258th, 259th, 260th, 261st, 262d, 263d, 264th, 265th, 266th, 267th, 268th, 269th, 270th, 271st, 272d, 273d, 274th, 275th, 276th, 277th, 278th, 279th, 280th, 281st, 282d, 283d, 284th, 285th, 286th, 287th, 288th, 289th, 290th, 291st, 292d, 293d, 294th, 295th, 296th, 297th, 298th, 299th, 300th, 301st, 302d, 303d, 304th, 305th, 306th, 307th, 308th, 309th, 310th, 311th, 312th, 313th, 314th, 315th, 316th, 317th, 318th, 319th, 320th, 321st, 322d, 323d, 324th, 325th, 326th, 327th, 328th, 329th, 330th, 331st, 332d, 333d, 334th, 335th, 336th, 337th, 338th, 339th, 340th, 341st, 342d, 343d, 344th, 345th, 346th, 347th, 348th, 349th, 350th, 351st, 352d, 353d, 354th, 355th, 356th, 357th, 358th, 359th, 360th, 361st, 362d, 363d, 364th, 365th, 366th, 367th, 368th, 369th, 370th, 371st, 372d, 373d, 374th, 375th, 376th, 377th, 378th, 379th, 380th, 381st, 382d, 383d, 384th, 385th, 386th, 387th, 388th, 389th, 390th, 391st, 392d, 393d, 394th, 395th, 396th, 397th, 398th, 399th, 400th, 401st, 402d, 403d, 404th, 405th, 406th, 407th, 408th, 409th, 410th, 411th, 412th, 413th, 414th, 415th, 416th, 417th, 418th, 419th, 420th, 421st, 422d, 423d, 424th, 425th, 426th, 427th, 428th, 429th, 430th, 431st, 432d, 433d, 434th, 435th, 436th, 437th, 438th, 439th, 440th, 441st, 442d, 443d, 444th, 445th, 446th, 447th, 448th, 449th, 450th, 451st, 452d, 453d, 454th, 455th, 456th, 457th, 458th, 459th, 460th, 461st, 462d, 463d, 464th, 465th, 466th, 467th, 468th, 469th, 470th, 471st, 472d, 473d, 474th, 475th, 476th, 477th, 478th, 479th, 480th, 481st, 482d, 483d, 484th, 485th, 486th, 487th, 488th, 489th, 490th, 491st, 492d, 493d, 494th, 495th, 496th, 497th, 498th, 499th, 500th, 501st, 502d, 503d, 504th, 505th, 506th, 507th, 508th, 509th, 510th, 511th, 512th, 513th, 514th, 515th, 516th, 517th, 518th, 519th, 520th, 521st, 522d, 523d, 524th, 525th, 526th, 527th, 528th, 529th, 530th, 531st, 532d, 533d, 534th, 535th, 536th, 537th, 538th, 539th, 540th, 541st, 542d, 543d, 544th, 545th, 546th, 547th, 548th, 549th, 550th, 551st, 552d, 553d, 554th, 555th, 556th, 557th, 558th, 559th, 560th, 561st, 562d, 563d, 564th, 565th, 566th, 567th, 568th, 569th, 570th, 571st, 572d, 573d, 574th, 575th, 576th, 577th, 578th, 579th, 580th, 581st, 582d, 583d, 584th, 585th, 586th, 587th, 588th, 589th, 590th, 591st, 592d, 593d, 594th, 595th, 596th, 597th, 598th, 599th, 600th, 601st, 602d, 603d, 604th, 605th, 606th, 607th, 608th, 609th, 610th, 611th, 612th, 613th, 614th, 615th, 616th, 617th, 618th, 619th, 620th, 621st, 622d, 623d, 624th, 625th, 626th, 627th, 628th, 629th, 630th, 631st, 632d, 633d, 634th, 635th, 636th, 637th, 638th, 639th, 640th, 641st, 642d, 643d, 644th, 645th, 646th, 647th, 648th, 649th, 650th, 651st, 652d, 653d, 654th, 655th, 656th, 657th, 658th, 659th, 660th, 661st, 662d, 663d, 664th, 665th, 666th, 667th, 668th, 669th, 670th, 671st, 672d, 673d, 674th, 675th, 676th, 677th, 678th, 679th, 680th, 681st, 682d, 683d, 684th, 685th, 686th, 687th, 688th, 689th, 690th, 691st, 692d, 693d, 694th, 695th, 696th, 697th, 698th, 699th, 700th, 701st, 702d, 703d, 704th, 705th, 706th, 707th, 708th, 709th, 710th, 711th, 712th, 713th, 714th, 715th, 716th, 717th, 718th, 719th, 720th, 721st, 722d, 723d, 724th, 725th, 726th, 727th, 728th, 729th, 730th, 731st, 732d, 733d, 734th, 735th, 736th, 737th, 738th, 739th, 740th, 741st, 742d, 743d, 744th, 745th, 746th, 747th, 748th, 749th, 750th, 751st, 752d, 753d, 754th, 755th, 756th, 757th, 758th, 759th, 760th, 761st, 762d, 763d, 764th, 765th, 766th, 767th, 768th, 769th, 770th, 771st, 772d, 773d, 774th, 775th, 776th, 777th, 778th, 779th, 780th, 781st, 782d, 783d, 784th, 785th, 786th, 787th, 788th, 789th, 790th, 791st, 792d, 793d, 794th, 795th, 796th, 797th, 798th, 799th, 800th, 801st, 802d, 803d, 804th, 805th, 806th, 807th, 808th, 809th, 810th, 811th, 812th, 813th, 814th, 815th, 816th, 817th, 818th, 819th, 820th, 821st, 822d, 823d, 824th, 825th, 826th, 827th, 828th, 829th, 830th, 831st, 832d, 833d, 834th, 835th, 836th, 837th, 838th, 839th, 840th, 841st, 842d, 843d, 844th, 845th, 846th, 847th, 848th, 849th, 850th, 851st, 852d, 853d, 854th, 855th, 856th, 857th, 858th, 859th, 860th, 861st, 862d, 863d, 864th, 865th, 866th, 867th, 868th, 869th, 870th, 871st, 872d, 873d, 874th, 875th, 876th, 877th, 878th, 879th, 880th, 881st, 882d, 883d, 884th, 885th, 886th, 887th, 888th, 889th, 890th, 891st, 892d, 893d, 894th, 895th, 896th, 897th, 898th, 899th, 900th, 901st, 902d, 903d, 904th, 905th, 906th, 907th, 908th, 909th, 910th, 911th, 912th, 913th, 914th, 915th, 916th, 917th, 918th, 919th, 920th, 921st, 922d, 923d, 924th, 925th, 926th, 927th, 928th, 929th, 930th, 931st, 932d, 933d, 934th, 935th, 936th, 937th, 938th, 939th, 940th, 941st, 942d, 943d, 944th, 945th, 946th, 947th, 948th, 949th, 950th, 951st, 952d, 953d, 954th, 955th, 956th, 957th, 958th, 959th, 960th, 961st, 962d, 963d, 964th, 965th, 966th, 967th, 968th, 969th, 970th, 971st, 972d, 973d, 974th, 975th, 976th, 977th, 978th, 979th, 980th, 981st, 982d, 983d, 984th, 985th, 986th, 987th, 988th, 989th, 990th, 991st, 992d, 993d, 994th, 995th, 996th, 997th, 998th, 999th, 1000th, 1001st, 1002d, 1003d, 1004th, 1005th, 1006th, 1007th, 1008th, 1009th, 1010th, 1011th, 1012th, 1013th, 1014th, 1015th, 1016th, 1017th, 1018th, 1019th, 1020th, 1021st, 1022d, 1023d, 1024th, 1025th, 1026th, 1027th, 1028th, 1029th, 1030th, 1031st, 1032d, 1033d, 1034th, 1035th, 1036th, 1037th, 1038th, 1039th, 1040th, 1041st, 1042d, 1043d, 1044th, 1045th, 1046th, 1047th, 1048th, 1049th, 1050th, 1051st, 1052d, 1053d, 1054th, 1055th, 1056th, 1057th, 1058th, 1059th, 1060th, 1061st, 1062d, 1063d, 1064th, 1065th, 1066th, 1067th, 1068th, 1069th, 1070th, 1071st, 1072d, 1073d, 1074th, 1075th, 1076th, 1077th, 1078th, 1079th, 1080th, 1081st, 1082d, 1083d, 1084th, 1085th, 1086th, 1087th, 1088th, 1089th, 1090th, 1091st, 1092d, 1093d, 1094th, 1095th, 1096th, 1097th, 1098th, 1099th, 1100th, 1101st, 1102d, 1103d, 1104th, 1105th, 1106th, 1107th, 1108th, 1109th, 1110th, 1111th, 1112th, 1113th, 1114th, 1115th, 1116th, 1117th, 1118th, 1119th, 1120th, 1121st, 1122d, 1123d, 1124th, 1125th, 1126th, 1127th, 1128th, 1129th, 1130th, 1131st, 1132d, 1133d, 1134th, 1135th, 1136th, 1137th, 1138th, 1139th, 1140th, 1141st, 1142d, 1143d, 1144th, 1145th, 1146th, 1147th, 1148th, 1149th, 1150th, 1151st, 1152d, 1153d, 1154th, 1155th, 1156th, 1157th, 1158th, 1159th, 1160th, 1161st, 1162d, 1163d, 1164th, 1165th, 1166th, 1167th, 1168th, 1169th, 1170th, 1171st, 1172d, 1173d, 1174th, 1175th, 1176th, 1177th, 1178th, 1179th, 1180th, 1181st, 1182d, 1183d, 1184th, 1185th, 1186th, 1187th, 1188th, 1189th, 1190th, 1191st, 1192d, 1193d, 1194th, 1195th, 1196th, 1197th, 1198th, 1199th, 1200th, 1201st, 1202d, 1203d, 1204th, 1205th, 1206th, 1207th, 1208th, 1209th, 1210th, 1211th, 1212th, 1213th, 1214th, 1215th, 1216th, 1217th, 1218th, 1219th, 1220th, 1221st, 1222d, 1223d, 1224th, 1225th, 1226th, 1227th, 1228th, 1229th, 1230th, 1231st, 1232d, 1233d, 1234th, 1235th, 1236th, 1237th, 1238th, 1239th, 1240th, 1241st, 1242d, 1243d, 1244th, 1245th, 1246th, 1247th, 1248th, 1249th, 1250th, 1251st, 1252d, 1253d, 1254th, 1255th, 1256th, 1257th, 1258th, 1259th, 1260th, 1261st, 1262d, 1263d, 1264th, 1265th, 1266th, 1267th, 1268th, 1269th, 1270th, 1271st, 1272d, 1273d, 1274th, 1275th, 1276th, 1277th, 1278th, 1279th, 1280th, 1281st, 1282d, 1283d, 1284th, 1285th, 1286th, 1287th, 1288th, 1289th, 1290th, 1291st, 1292d, 1293d, 1294th, 1295th, 1296th, 1297th, 1298th, 1299th, 1300th, 1301st, 1302d, 1303d, 1304th, 1305th, 1306th, 1307th, 1308th, 1309th, 1310th, 1311th, 1312th, 1313th, 1314th, 1315th, 1316th, 1317th, 1318th, 1319th, 1320th, 1321st, 1322d, 1323d, 1324th, 1325th, 1326th, 1327th, 1328th, 1329th, 1330th, 1331st, 1332d, 1333d, 1334th, 1335th, 1336th, 1337th, 1338th, 1339th, 1340th, 1341st, 1342d, 1343d, 1344th, 1345th, 1346th, 1347th, 1348th, 1349th, 1350th, 1351st, 1352d, 1353d, 1354th, 1355th, 1356th, 1357th, 1358th, 1359th, 1360th, 1361st, 1362d, 1363d, 1364th, 1365th, 1366th, 1367th, 1368th, 1369th, 1370th, 1371st, 1372d, 1373d, 1374th, 1375th, 1376th, 1377th, 1378th, 1379th, 1380th, 1381st, 1382d, 1383d, 1384th, 1385th, 1386th, 1387th, 1388th, 1389th, 1390th, 1391st, 1392d, 1393d, 1394th, 1395th, 1396th, 1397th, 1398th, 1399th, 1400th, 1401st, 1402d, 1403d, 1404th, 1405th, 1406th, 1407th, 1408th, 1409th, 1410th, 1411th, 1412th, 1413th, 1414th, 1415th, 1416th, 1417th, 1418th, 1419th, 1420th, 1421st, 1422d, 1423d, 1424th, 1425th, 1426th, 1427th, 1428th, 1429th, 1430th, 1431st, 1432d, 1433d, 1434th, 1435th, 1436th, 1437th, 1438th, 1439th, 1440th, 1441st, 1442d, 1443d, 1444th, 1445th, 1446th, 1447th, 1448th, 1449th, 1450th, 1451st, 1452d, 1453d, 1454th, 1455th, 1456th, 1457th, 1458th, 1459th, 1460th, 1461st, 1462d, 1463d, 1464th, 1465th, 1466th, 1467th, 1468th, 1469th, 1470th, 1471st, 1472d, 1473d, 1474th, 1475th, 1476th, 1477th, 1478th, 1479th, 1480th, 1481st, 1482d, 1483d, 1484th, 1485th, 1486th, 1487th, 1488th, 1489th, 1490th, 1491st, 1492d, 1493d, 1494th, 1495th, 1496th, 1497th, 1498th, 1499th, 1500th, 1501st, 1502d, 1503d, 1504th, 1505th, 1506th, 1507th, 1508th, 1509th, 1510th, 1511th, 1512th, 1513th, 1514th, 1515th, 1516th, 1517th, 1518th, 1519th, 1520th, 1521st, 1522d, 1523d, 1524th, 1525th, 1526th, 1527th, 1528th, 1529th, 1530th, 1531st, 1532d, 1533d, 1534th, 1535th, 1536th, 1537th, 1538th, 1539th, 1540th, 1541st, 1542d, 1543d, 1544th, 1545th, 1546th, 1547th, 1548th, 1549th, 1550th, 1551st, 1552d, 1553d, 1554th, 1555th, 1556th, 1557th, 1558th, 1559th, 1560th, 1561st, 1562d, 1563d, 1564th, 1565th, 1566th, 1567th, 1568th, 1569th, 1570th, 1571st, 1572d, 1573d, 1574th, 1575th, 1576th, 1577th, 1578th, 1579th, 1580th, 1581st, 1582d, 1583d, 1584th, 1585th, 1586th, 1587th, 1588th, 1589th, 1590th, 1591st, 1592d, 1593d, 1594th, 1595th, 1596th, 1597th, 1598th, 1599th, 1600th, 1601st, 1602d, 1603d, 1604th, 1605th, 1606th, 1607th, 1608th, 1609th, 1610th, 1611th, 1612th, 1613th, 1614th, 1615th, 1616th, 1617th, 1618th, 1619th, 1620th, 1621st, 1622d, 1623d, 1624th, 1625th, 1626th, 1627th, 1628th, 1629th, 1630th, 1631st, 1632d, 1633d, 1634th, 1635th, 1636th, 1637th, 1638th, 1639th, 1640th, 1641st, 1642d, 1643d, 1644th, 1645th, 1646th, 1647th, 1648th, 1649th, 1650th, 1651st, 1652d, 1653d, 1654th, 1655th, 1656th, 1657th, 1658th, 1659th, 1660th, 1661st, 1662d, 1663d, 1664th, 1665th, 1666th, 1667th, 1668th, 1669th, 1670th, 1671st, 1672d, 1673d, 1674th, 1675th, 1676th, 1677th, 1678th, 1679th, 1680th, 1681st, 1682d, 1683d, 1684th, 1685th, 1686th, 1687th, 1688th, 1689th, 1690th, 1691st, 1692d, 1693d, 1694th, 1695th, 1696th, 1697th, 1698th, 1699th, 1700th, 1701st, 1702d, 1703d, 1704th, 1705th, 1706th, 1707th, 1708th, 1709th, 1710th, 1711th, 1712th, 1713th, 1714th, 1715th, 1716th, 1717th, 1718th, 1719th, 1720th, 1721st, 1722d, 1723d, 1724th, 1725th, 1726th, 1727th, 1728th, 1729th, 1730th, 1731st, 1732d, 1733d, 1734th, 1735th, 1736th, 1737th, 1738th, 1739th, 1740th, 1741st, 1742d, 1743d, 1744th, 1745th, 1746th, 1747th, 1748th, 1749th, 1750th, 1751st, 1752d, 1753d, 1754th, 1755th, 1756th, 1757th, 1758th, 1759th, 1760th, 1761st, 1762d, 1763d, 1764th, 1765th, 1766th, 1767th, 1768th, 1769th, 1770th, 1771st, 1772d, 1773d, 1774th, 1775th, 1776th, 1777th, 1778th, 1779th, 1780th, 1781st, 1782d, 1783d, 1784th, 1785th, 1786th, 1787th, 1788th, 1789th, 1790th, 1791st, 1792d, 1793d, 1794th, 1795th, 1796th, 1797th, 1798th, 1799th, 1800th, 1801st, 1802d, 1803d, 1804th, 1805th, 1806th, 1807th, 1808th, 1809th, 1810th, 1811th, 1812th, 1813th, 1814th, 1815th, 1816th, 1817th, 1818th, 1819th, 1820th, 1821st, 1822d, 1823d, 1824th, 1825th, 1826th, 1827th, 1828th, 1829th, 1830th, 1831st, 1832d, 1833d, 1834th, 1835th, 1836th, 1837th, 1838th, 1839th, 1840th, 1841st, 1842d, 1843d, 1844th, 1845th, 1846th, 1847th, 1848th, 1849th, 1850th, 1851st, 1852d, 1853d, 1854th, 1855th, 1856th, 1857th, 1858th, 1859th, 1860th, 1861st, 1862d, 1863d, 1864th, 1865th, 1866th, 1867th, 1868th, 1869th, 1870th, 1871st, 1872d, 1873d, 1874th, 1875th, 1876th, 1877th, 1878th, 1879th, 1880th, 1881st, 1882d, 1883d, 1884th, 1885th, 1886th, 1887th, 1888th, 1889th, 1890th, 1891st, 1892d, 1893d, 1894th, 1895th, 1896th, 1897th, 1898th, 1899th, 1900th, 1901st, 1902d, 1903d, 1904th, 1905th, 1906th, 1907th, 1908th, 1909th, 1910th, 1911th, 1912th, 1913th, 1914th, 1915th, 1916th, 1917th, 1918th, 1919th, 1920th, 1921st, 1922d, 1923d, 1924th, 1925th, 1926th, 1927th, 1928th, 1929th, 1930th, 1931st, 1932d, 1933d, 1934th, 1935th, 1936th, 1937th, 1938th, 1939th, 1940th, 1941st, 1942d, 1943d, 1944th, 1945th, 1946th, 1947th, 1948th, 1949th, 1950th, 1951st, 1952d, 1953d, 1954th, 1955th, 1956th, 1957th, 1958th, 1959th, 1960th, 1961st, 1962d, 1963d, 1964th, 1965th, 1966th, 1967th, 1968th, 1969th, 1970th, 1971st, 1972d, 1973d, 1974th, 1975th, 1976th, 1977th, 1978th, 1979th, 1980th, 1981st, 1982d, 1983d, 1984th, 1985th, 1986th, 1987th, 1988th, 1989th, 1990th, 1991st, 1992d, 1993d, 1994th, 1995th, 1996th, 1997th, 1998th, 1999th, 2000th, 2001st, 2002d, 2003d, 2004th, 2005th, 2006th, 2007th, 2008th, 2009th, 2010th, 2011th, 2012th, 2013th, 2014th, 2015th, 2016th, 2017th, 2018th, 2019th, 2020th, 2021st, 2022d, 2023d, 2024th, 2025th, 2026th, 2027th, 2028th, 2029th, 2030th, 2031st, 2032d, 2033d, 2034th, 2035th, 2036th, 2037th, 2038th, 2039th, 2040th, 2041st, 2042d, 2043d, 2044th, 2045th, 2046th, 2047th, 2048th, 2049th, 2050th, 2051st, 2052d, 2053d, 2054th, 2055th, 2056th, 2057th, 2058th, 2059th, 2060th, 2061st, 2062d, 2063d, 2064th, 2065th, 2066th, 2067th, 2068th, 2069th, 2070th, 2071st, 2072d, 2073d, 2074th, 2075th, 2076th, 2077th, 2078th, 2079th, 2080th, 2081st, 2082d, 2083d, 2084th, 2085th, 2086th, 2087th, 2088th, 2089th, 2090th, 2091st, 2092d, 2093d, 2094th, 2095th, 2096th, 2097th, 2098th, 2099th, 2100th, 2101st, 2102d, 2103d, 2104th, 2105th, 2106th, 2107th, 2108th, 2109th, 2110th, 2111th, 2112th, 2113th, 2114th, 2115th, 2116th, 2117th, 2118th, 2119th, 2120th, 2121st, 2122d, 2123d, 2124th, 2125th, 2126th, 2127th, 2128th, 2129th, 2130th, 2131st, 2132d, 2133d, 2134th, 2135th, 2136th, 2137th, 2138th, 2139th, 2140th, 2141st, 2142d, 2143d, 2144th, 2145th, 2146th, 2147th, 2148th, 2149th, 2150th, 2151st, 2152d, 2153d, 2154th, 2155th, 2156th, 2157th, 2158th, 2159th, 2160th, 2161st, 2162d, 2163d, 2164th, 2165th, 2166th, 2167th, 2168th, 2169th, 2170th, 2171st, 2172d, 2173d, 2174th, 2175th, 2176th, 2177th, 2178th, 2179th, 2180th, 2181st, 2182d, 2183d, 2184th, 2185th, 2186th, 2187th, 2188th, 2189th, 2190th, 2191st, 2192d, 2193d, 2194th, 2195th, 2196th, 2197th, 2198th, 2199th, 2200th, 2201st, 2202d, 2203d, 2204th, 2205th, 2206th, 2207th, 2208th, 2209th, 2210th, 2211th, 2212th, 2213th, 2214th, 2215th, 2216th, 2217th, 2218th, 2219th, 2220th, 2221st, 2222d, 2223d, 2224th, 2225th, 2226th, 2227th, 2228th, 2229th, 2230th, 2231st, 2232d, 2233d, 2234th, 2235th, 2236th, 2237th, 2238th, 2239th, 2240th, 2241st, 2242d, 2243d, 2244th, 2245th, 2246th, 2247th, 2248th, 2249th, 2250th, 2251st, 2252d, 2253d, 2254th, 2255th, 2256th, 2257th, 2258th, 2259th, 2260th, 2261st, 2262d, 2263d, 2264th, 2265th, 2266th, 2267th, 2268th, 2269th, 2270th, 2271st, 2272d, 2273d, 2274th, 2275th, 2276th, 2277th, 2278th, 2279th, 2280th, 2281st, 2282d, 2283d, 2284th, 2285th, 2286th, 2287th, 2288th, 2289th, 2290th, 2291st, 2292d, 2293d, 2294th, 2295th, 2296th, 2297th, 2298th, 2299th, 2300th, 2301st, 2302d, 2303d, 2304th, 2305th, 2306th, 2307th, 2308th, 2309th, 2310th, 2311th, 2312th, 2313th, 2314th, 2315th, 2316th, 2317th, 2318th, 2319th, 2320th, 2321st, 2322d, 2323d, 2324th, 2325th, 2326th, 2327th, 2328th, 2329th, 2330th, 2331st, 2332d, 2333d, 2334th, 2335th, 2336th, 2337th, 2338th, 2339th, 2340th, 2341st, 2342d, 2343d, 2344th, 2345th, 2346th, 2347th, 2348th, 2349th, 2350th, 2351st, 2352d, 2353d, 2354th, 2355th, 2356th, 2357th, 2358th, 2359th, 2360th, 2361st, 2362d, 2363d, 2364th, 2365th, 2366th, 2367th, 2368th, 2369th, 2370th, 2371st, 2372d, 2373d, 2374th, 2375th, 2376th, 2377th, 2378th, 2379th, 2380th, 2381st, 2382d, 2383d, 2384th, 2385th, 2386th, 2387th, 2388th, 2389th, 2390th, 2391st, 2392d, 2393d, 2394th, 2395th, 2396th, 2397th, 2398th, 2399th, 2400th, 2401st, 2402d, 2403d, 2404th, 2405th, 2406th, 2407th, 2408th, 2409th, 2410th, 2411th, 2412th, 2413th, 2414th, 2415th, 2416th, 2417th, 2418th, 2419th, 2420th, 2421st, 2422d, 2423d, 2424th, 2425th, 2426th, 2427th, 2428th, 2429th, 2430th, 2431st, 2432d, 2433d, 2434th, 2435th, 2436th, 2437th, 2438th, 2439th, 2440th, 2441st, 2442d, 2443d, 2444th, 2445th, 2446th, 2447th, 2448th, 2449th, 2450th, 2451st, 2452d, 2453d, 2454th, 2455th, 2456th, 2457th, 2458th, 2459th, 2460th, 2461st, 2462d, 2463d, 2464th, 2465th, 2466th, 2467th, 2468th, 2469th, 2470th, 2471st, 2472d, 2473d, 2474th, 2475th, 2476th, 2477th, 2478th, 2479th, 2480th, 2481st, 2482d, 2483d, 2484th, 2485th, 2486th, 2487th, 2488th, 2489th, 2490th, 2491st, 2492d, 2493d, 2494th, 2495th, 2496th, 2497th, 2498th, 2499th, 2500th, 2501st, 2502d, 2503d, 2504th, 2505th, 2506th, 2507th, 2508th, 2509th, 2510th, 2511th, 2512th, 2513th, 2514th, 2515th, 2516th, 2517th, 2518th, 2519th, 2520th, 2521st, 2522d, 2523d, 2524th, 2525th, 2526th, 2527th, 2528th, 2529th, 2530th, 2531st, 2532d, 2533d, 2534th, 2535th, 2536th, 2537th, 2538th, 2539th, 2540th, 2541st, 2542d, 2543d, 2544th, 2545th, 2546th, 2547th, 2548th, 2549th, 2550th, 2551st, 2552d, 2553d, 2554th, 2555th, 2556th, 2557th, 2558th, 2559th, 2560th, 2561st, 2562d, 2563d, 2564th, 2565th, 2566th, 2567th, 2568th, 2569th, 2570th, 2571st, 2572d, 2573d, 2574th, 2575th, 2576th, 2577th, 2578th, 2579th, 2580th, 2581st, 2582d, 2583d, 2584th, 2585th, 2586th, 2587th, 2588th, 2589th, 2590th, 2591st, 2592d, 2593d, 2594th, 2595th, 2596th, 2597th, 2598th, 2599th, 2600th, 2601st, 2602d, 2603d, 2604th, 2605th, 2606th, 2607th, 2608th, 2609th, 2610th, 2611th, 2612th, 2613th, 2614th, 2615th, 2616th, 2617th, 2618th, 2619th, 2620th, 2621st, 2622d, 2623d, 2624th, 2625th, 2626th, 2627th, 2628th, 2629th, 2630th, 2631st, 2632d, 2633d, 2634th, 2635th, 2636th, 2637th, 2638th, 2639th, 2640th, 2641st, 2642d, 2643d, 2644th, 2645th, 2646th, 2647th, 2648th, 2649th, 2650th, 2651st, 2652d, 2653d, 2654th, 2655th, 2656th, 2657th, 2658th, 2659th, 2660th, 2661st, 2662d, 2663d, 2664th, 2665th, 2666th, 2667th, 2668th, 2669th, 2670th, 2671st, 2672d, 2673d, 2674th, 2675th, 2676th, 2677th, 2678th, 2679th, 2680th, 2681st, 2682d, 2683d, 2684th, 2685th, 2686th, 2687th, 2688th, 2689th, 2690th, 2691st, 2692d, 2693d, 2694th, 2695th, 2696th, 2697th, 2698th, 2699th, 2700th, 2701st, 2702d, 2703d, 2704th, 2705th, 2706th, 2707th, 2708th, 2709th, 2710th, 2711th, 2712th, 2713th, 2714th, 2715th, 2716th, 2717th, 2718th, 2719th, 2720th, 2721st, 2722d, 2723d, 2724th, 2725th, 2726th, 2727th, 2728th, 2729th, 2730th, 2731st, 2732d, 2733d, 2734th, 2735th, 2736th, 2737th, 2738th, 2739th, 2740th, 2741st, 2742d, 2743d, 2744th, 2745th, 2746th, 2747th, 2748th, 2749th, 2750th, 2751st, 2752d, 2753d, 2754th, 2755th, 2756th, 2757th, 2758th, 2759th, 2760th, 2761st, 2762d, 2763d, 2764th, 2765th, 2766th, 2767th, 2768th, 2769th, 2770th, 2771st, 2772d, 2773d, 2774th, 2775th, 2776th, 2777th, 2778th, 2779th, 2780th, 2781st, 2782d, 2783d, 2784th, 2785th, 2786th, 2787th, 2788th, 2789th, 2790th, 2791st, 2792d, 2793d, 2794th, 2795th, 2796th, 2797th, 2798th, 2799th, 2800th, 2801st, 2802d, 2803d, 2804th, 2805th, 2806th, 2807th, 2808th, 2809th, 2810th, 2811th, 2812th, 2813th, 2814th, 2815th, 2816th, 2817th, 2818th, 2819th, 2820th, 2821st, 2822d, 2823d, 2824th, 2825th, 2826th, 2827th, 2828th, 2829th, 2830th, 2831st, 2832d, 2833d, 2834th, 2835th, 2836th, 2837th, 2838th, 2839th, 2840th, 2841st, 2842d, 2843d, 2844th, 2845th, 2846th, 2847th, 2848th, 2849th, 2850th, 2851st, 2852d, 2853d, 2854th, 2855th, 2856th, 2857th, 2858th, 2859th, 2860th, 2861st, 2862d, 2863d, 2864th, 2865th, 2866th, 2867th, 2868th, 2869th, 2870th, 2871st, 2872d, 2873d, 2874th, 2875th, 2876th, 2877th, 2878th, 2879th, 2880th, 2881st, 2882d, 2883d, 2884th, 2885th, 2886th, 2887th, 2888th, 2889th, 2890th, 2891st, 2892d, 2893d, 2894th, 2895th, 2896th, 2897th, 2898th, 2899th, 2900th, 2901st, 2902d, 2903d, 2904th, 2905th, 2906th, 2907th, 2908th, 2909th, 2910th, 2911th, 2912th, 2913th, 2914th, 2915th, 2916th, 2917th, 2918th, 2919th, 2920th, 2921st, 2922d, 2923d,

Poetry.

TO MARY MOTHER.

When guilt and sin around my soul
Their baneful shadows throw,
And worldly gifts and vanity
Were all my soul could know,
Then I turn to thee, O Mary mine
From Heaven's bright happy place
But thou, in pity, fix my gaze
Dear Mary, full of grace.

When sad sorrow which so every side
My fragile barque encompasses
And boding gloom darkens at the tears
That round my bosom presses,
When fears unspeakable trouble rouse
And death draw on apace,
I'm sorely tempted to turn, O Mary Star,
O Mary, full of grace!

And oh! if Satan's cruel snares,
That oft my steps beguiled,
Should yet entrap my faithless feet,
Alas, was thy warrant child!
And when this weary journey's o'er,
Grant me to see thy face
And dwell with thee forever more,
Sweet Mary, full of grace.

RAIN IN THE HEART.

(The following lines were found by a Confederate soldier in a Federal hospital in Virginia.)

"Take each life some rain must fall,"
I thought of this, and I
Thought how I would be sad and pall,
When rain came to my sky.
But when I came to the poet's rhyme,
There was fewer weeks on the page of time.

But long years of woe pass over the soul,
Blows winds of anguish, and storms of sorrow roll,
And shock after shock we are called to bear,
Till the lips are white with the heart's despair.

The shores of time with wrecks are strewn,
Like the ear comes over a smoke,
Shadows of shadows and half in glee.

Many are laid from human eyes,
Only God knoweth the agony they lie;
Only He knows when a soul is in pain
Help me to bear, oh, help me to die.

"Take each life some rain must fall,"
If life were all; if life were all
Life would be a mockery and a blast:
Never Faire—we'll reach it at last.

So strong, so strong, to my heart I'll say,
The road is the wonderful road of life;
Days of sunshine are given to each one,
"We take such life some rain must fall."

Literary Miscellany.

Chateau Jeanne d'Arc.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR. BY J. N. DOYLE.

"Ah, what a grand and beautiful night!" exclaimed young John O'Neill as he stood from the door of his cottage and went to the window to contemplate the scene.

Grand it certainly was. And sublimely beautiful, to a lofty soul like John O'Neill's, that enjoyed the silvery transparent and trembling sobbing and break the spirits of ordinary mortals.

Peal after peal of terrible thunder shook the old castle to its very foundation. Vivid flashes of lurid lightning lit up the lower, the mountains, the giant trees, the storm-lashed coast; and the driving rain beat furiously against the castle window.

"Grand—p-r-r-and!" said John. "Hut! I am losing half its beauty by remaining in this tame spot. I will open the door and enjoy outside the lovely scene face to face."

He opened the door, and immediately the last gust of wind, which had blown through the room, extinguishing the lamp and scattering books and papers about.

Young O'Neill was the sole occupant of Chateau Jeanne d'Arc that night, and now and the total darkness brings out the beauties of the storm with fine effect. But this doorway is not a good enough place for him. I must climb to the top of the tower.

It was easier said than done. To climb the winding, rickety stairway up to the parapet of the tower, in the dark, calm daylight, was no easy task; and it required a high degree of courage to attempt it on this terrible night. But John O'Neill was totally unacquainted with every feeling of fear. Unappalled, he ascended with a firm step (he was asleep in the watch tower.

Now his soul was in its element. Far below him the lightning's flash revealed glimpses of the storm-drenched landscape, while above him were intensely black clouds. Above, second, below, against you and cheek, and everywhere, but the raging, roaring, ominous, pitiless pitying rain. Each vivid flash of lightning left him plunged into the deepest, blackest darkness conceivable, but then the thunder crashed and tore the elements so though they were broken up into chaos and final destruction. Swallowed up in the darkness and confusion, O'Neill felt that he was a mere speck in the universe—that his identity was almost annihilated—and he experienced in the terrible grandeur of the situation.

"Ever—br-r-ave!" he shouted in an ecstasy of delight. "How great is God! Sometimes it terrifies someone you. The sages and poets have written by the lightning attempt the universe in letters of liquid fire. His voice is heard in the whirlwind, speaking in the soul of His power and grandeur. He has the wind your motion, and it walks the frighted feets into port, or engulfs them with angry hollow entrance, and, this evening, his waves with bubbling groan; his earthly ocean roals, but the raven lash each other down to their depths forever. What a speak man is! What has he to be proud of!—oh—what a dark and awful—! There—it is gone."

O'Neill made a quick movement, but the wind was strong, and he was blown down.

"Oh, that I were a storm-king!—oh, that I had the wings of an eagle, that I might now majestically above the clouds. Higher, higher—this spot is too tame for personal such awful and splendid surroundings. This storm-lant castle is like the grave, the untiring letters of the soul which longs to mount above the raging tempest of human passions—"

Flash, cr-r-ash—bang—roar!

Never in his life did John O'Neill experience such a sensation and such a shock as interrupted his soliloquy. Heaven and earth seemed to burst into a grand wreck of blazing and crashing ruin. For once he was so dazed that he could not find his voice. A gigantic oak a few yards from the castle had been literally pulverized by the lightning and was now burning like a torch. That quarled, sinewy oak that had defied the storms of centuries—that would have resisted the axe, the wedge and the blasting powder of the hardy woodmen, and requires many days to work it into cordwood—was instantaneously reduced into toothpicks. Many blazing splinters fell upon John in the exhaustion and all over the lawn, and only for the rain the entire premises might have been consumed by fire.

For several moments O'Neill was wrapt in silent contemplation of the thrilling scene. The roaring, howling flames in the surrounding objects, giving them an intensely black back-ground. The storm was now considerably abated. John could see the ocean, and was enabled to form an idea of what it was he could see plunged about by the angry, foam-crested waves.

Ah, what is that!

His breathing stops, his heart ceases to beat, and his whole being is concentrated into the one faculty of hearing.

It is a faint moan—a wail of distress. He is sure, now, that it was not the wind. It is the voice that it comes from the sea—from the sea, a piece of floating wreck. He sees something like a human being clinging to it—white arms, floating tresses in its waves.

Again, that piteous wailing cry smites his ear.

Now his heart bounds with sympathy, and his every faculty is stimulated with a desire to respond to that cry of distress.

Quick!—no time is to be lost. A few seconds serve to mature his plans, fifty more to execute it. A coil of rope lies in the turret. One end he secures to the battlements, and snapping over the wall he glides down the rope to the rocks a hundred feet below. Tying the other end of the rope round his body he bravely plunges into the boiling, seething breakers and battles with night. Then he rises upon and battles with superhuman strength against the raging waters. He is raised to the summit of a swelling wave and gets a glimpse of the victim of shipwreck, and the next moment he is dashed backward heels over head beneath the foaming ids. The breakers have carried him back a hundred yards, again buoyed, into the being forevelas, again buoyed, into the vortex, and swept toward the victim, which he reaches this time before the next wave strikes him. The wreck had lodged upon a rock, where the young girl who clung to it would have soon perished, if not rescued. O'Neill rescued her, and then began to pull himself shoreward by the rope. The upper himself shoreward by the rope. The upper end of the rope being so high in the tower, O'Neill's vigorous pulling kept him and his burden above the waves. He reached the shore, fortunately without being seriously bruised upon the rocks. Taking the young lady in his arms he hurried up to the castle.

As before stated, young O'Neill was entirely alone in the castle, and as he carried the young lady in his arms he hurried up to the castle.

As before stated, young O'Neill was entirely alone in the castle, and as he carried the young lady in his arms he hurried up to the castle.

"Ah, monsieur, could I fear anything, with a chevalier so brave and generous as my defender! Let me beseech your heroism by assuring you that I feel as secure as child in its mother's arms. Your generous, ardent, fervice in me a sympathy which I have long felt for the noble Irish people. I have read of them and their trials and sufferings, their battles for faith and freedom, their heroic courage and constancy, their generosities and nobility, their sanctity and piety, and my admiration of their character is unbounded. You may therefore judge of the pleasure I give me to meet one of your noble race."

"Thank you for the compliment, mademoiselle, though I am unworthy of it. But will you now please tell me about yourself, for I am eager to learn of you, and how you come to be shipwrecked."

A pained expression came over the young lady's face at the recollection of her recent experience.

"Oh, monsieur, I shudder to think of it! The shipwreck fearful in itself, and to those who are strangers to us. But I will tell you all, beginning at the beginning. I am a French girl, my name is Marie Delrosier. Until I was twelve years old I never knew what it was to wish for something in this world, and my life was all sunshine and happiness. But a dark time came. I was with a young man, whom I loved with my soul, my affiance to the English. They invaded France, and their army laid siege to my native city. After a heroic defence, it was carried by storm. My father fell, one of the gallant defenders, and madame my mother and I fled, with most of the inhabitants, to well Paris. For the first time I now begin to feel the pangs of want and destitution. Home months afterwards we returned to the smoldering ruins of our native city; but not a vestige of my father's property remained. Unwilling to endure the humiliations of our fallen estate, madame my mother went with me to Bordeaux, in the hope of finding my uncle, my mother's brother, who she supposed lived there. Her his had sold out his estate to property interests there, and removed, a short time before, to the south of France. Being now without means or friends, my mother engaged herself as governess, a short time and there she has been for five years. These years I grew up to womanhood, without any remarkable event to break the monotony of my life. But the events of the past five days have been thrilling, terrible, and perilous—terrible! and thank God, I am safely through them all.

"Five days ago an English frigate—Lord William Kenworth—was a guest at the chateau where madame my mother and I were employed. He conceived a fancy for me, and, after princely promises, persuaded me to go with him as his lady-in-waiting. We sailed for his wife. This morning—ah, it seems like an age since—the sky lour-ened, we were all down on the beach; his lordship took an opportunity to insult me, and I immediately fled from him. Will with terror as I proceeded along the rocks, I had occasion to be one more frightened. As I lay beneath the cliffs, lulled into a doze by the waves, I was suddenly seized by ruffins and bound and gagged, before I could raise a cry. I was put into a sack and taken out to a ship.

You may imagine my terror and dismay when I found I was in the hands of English pirates. I was thrown into the ship's pits by the grinning chief and locked in, but I should try to escape my horrible fate by leaping overboard. After several long hours the pirate came and opened the door of the hold and dismal den in which I was confined. I had never ceased to call upon God to sustain me—to implore the help and intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary Conceived without sin, and, at the moment of death, I saw my cross than death. An indoor opened quickly darted out, and, ran from the pirates. I appealed to them—appealed to their gentlemanly feelings—reminded them that they had sisters and mothers, whom they would chivalrously defend, were they in my situation. But I was only answered by jeers, laughter and ribaldry. The pirate gave me a small bundle and, at this moment, a terrific gale struck the ship, and the pirate captain had enough to do to keep his attention. The sailors were ordered aloft to reef the sails—a task soon to be done. The storm was full upon the ship before they could take in sail. The masts were snapped like pipe stems, and the ship was now apparently helpless in the hands of the raging tempest. The ship was dashed and plunged about by the angry billows, and soon it sprang aleak and began to settle down. The pirate captain had made ready for the final plunge beneath the waves, when I ran out on the boats and abandoned the ship, leaving me alone to my fate. Even in this terrible situation I thanked God for parting me from the loathsome company of the pirates. I watched their boats as they receded in the distance; and, oh, my heart bled with sympathy for those who had shown so little sympathy for me—I saw one after the other of their boats swallowed up by the waves. Now I was the only living human being upon the dismal sea. Alone! I did not feel lonely—I felt strong in the protection of the Blessed Virgin, whose worship I had never ceased to invoke. I was terrible thing for a young person, in the full vigor of life and health, to die especially in such a cold, cheerless, lonely situation—but I believe I was resigned to my fate, whatever it might be. Just before the ship sank, I plunged into the sea, scraping a piece of wreck upon her that I had observed in the water. I had seen the dim outlines of the coast, and I determined to make for it, firmly and tenaciously to the hope of being saved. Long, long, the cold, benumbed me, and the water nearly strangled me as I plunged again and again beneath the waves, but I clung to the highest part of the mass of wreck, and kept up with motion as much as possible to prevent being chilled. Oh, the horror of my situation, for I knew the Bay of Biscay was infested with pirates, and dreaded lest the waters and Ayes, the storm-king, should be aroused by the thunder, and drenched overhead by the rain, I should be lost in the darkness. I was everything, and I could see land close by, I could hear the dashing of the waves, but my voice was hoarse and weak, and I only moaned."

"But that moan—how it smote my heart!" interrupted O'Neill. "I took through that window. You saw that smoking pile of coals, I ran down to the beach, I fell in it, to make your rescue possible."

"But, monsieur, how did you happen to have an ax, and come to my assistance so soon?"

"I chanced to be in the watch-tower, where I could see and hear to good advantage. But I perceive you are still weak and exhausted, and I shall not tire you with more conversation. I will leave you now to rest and sleep till morning; you may occupy the servant-maid's room, you shall make yourself at home and easy."

Mademoiselle Marie thanked O'Neill again and again; and, bidding him good-night, retired for the night.

Early next morning the Lord de Frontigny arrived at the chateau with all his servants. O'Neill was aroused by the Chevalier, who wished to point out to him the singular destruction of his favorite oak tree. O'Neill arose and dressed, and as he met with M. de Frontignan by the fire, he recounted the wonderful events of the previous night, including every detail in the girl's story. His nobility, generosity and chivalrous sense, was renewed beyond doubt the most moment, when the young lady appeared, he greeted herself through the door.

"My niece" he cried joyfully, embracing her. "the very image of my dear sister! How glad I am to find you at last! I shall go to your mother immediately, and you shall never know want or suffering again."

The mother was soon found, and they all revelled at the Chateau Jeanne d'Arc for some weeks, enjoying pleasant intercourse together.

O'Neill grew stronger daily in the affections of them all, Madame de Lafoungres liking him from the very first. But Madamoiselle! she fairly worshipped her idol here; and, to do justice to his judgment, it must be said that he returned her love with all the strength of his soul. Arrangements were soon made, and, in due form, the nuptials were celebrated; the bridegroom, like a good uncle, gave away with her the title of all his vast estate.

Problems for Atheists.

If you meet with an atheist do not let him entangle you into the discussion of his nonsense. As to many points which he raises, you must learn to make the Habbit's answer, "I do not know." But ask him these seven questions.

1. Ask him, Where did matter come from? Can a dead thing create itself?

2. Ask him, Where did motion come from.

3. Ask him, where life came from, every thing is dead, or lifeless, or motionless.

4. Ask him whence came the exquisite order and design in nature? If one fold you that millions of printer's types should fortuitously arrange themselves into the "Divine Comedy" of Dante, or the plays of Shakespeare, would you not think him a fool?

5. Ask him whence came consciousness?

6. Ask him who gave you free will?

7. Ask him whence came conscience?

He who says there is no God, in the face of these questions, talks simply stupendous nonsense. This, then, is one of the formulas that, one of the things that cannot be shaken, and will remain. From this belief in God follows the belief in God's providence, the belief that we are His people and His sheep of His pasture.

THE COLLEGE OF CARDINALS.

The Views of Rev. J. J. McGovern, D. D., of Lockport, Who Has Been Chosen Likely to be made in the College of Cardinals.

Lockport, Dr. McGovern, the learned Catholic divine who so affectually exposed the recent "Virgin of the Rock" fraud, is an American priest, having been born and reared in Chicago. He was ordained the latter part of his studies in Rome. To a Tribune reporter he said yesterday that the fact that in proportion to its age and limits the Archdiocese of Chicago is ahead of that of New York in every respect, and that Archbishop Feehan will probably be made a Cardinal at the next Papal Consistory. Supposing that he will be, the question will be, Who will be the next Cardinal in this country? Dr. McGovern, the Cardinals are, when they are real Cardinals, Princes of the church, and to-day in the City of Rome they exercise no small influence in the policy of the church throughout the world. We Americans, though, are a practical people, and are not particularly given to attaching a merely ornamental man, to a position of trust. The Cardinals are The Catholic faith here in America is as strong and pure as it is in Rome, but we are living under a different form of government. We have a very participation in the affairs and I say it is not the best of policy to ask for the appointment of Cardinals in this country. Do you remember how it was with Cardinal McCloskey? He came home to spend a few hours in the city, and he was made a successor to Pius IX. Why, he didn't speak a word of English, and it was a matter of supreme indifference to the people of Cardinals whether he was or not. In so far as the Cardinalate is effectual in this country it is simply as well for the Pope to have and benefits to my little church in Lockport.

"But does not the College of Cardinals hold in its power the succession to the Papacy?"

"It does undoubtedly, and the man whom I mention would be bound to be acknowledged Pope throughout the entire world.

"How is it that an Italian is always the successor of Peter? Why not a Frenchman or a Spaniard?

"Ah, there is a little bit of church politics that has been a nonsundrum to more than yourself. But, supposing you had been pointing power, would you or would you not appoint to position your most intimate friend? Would you not be more partial to others who might have an equal right to the position? I guess you would, for human interests. Well, from the fact that the Popes have been Italians for fifteen years have naturally taken care to appoint a successor in the same place, and, in the majority—and a good safe majority—the Italians have chosen their own countrymen, thus securing the Papacy to the same nationality and Italian.

"There seems to be a popular impression that the Pope wants to die.

"I know it, and it is a big mistake. The Italians have a great deal of more respect than the Irish. But some after the Reformation, when Europe swept from the Papacy, and the Italians, it was by a sort of unanimous agreement that the Pope should be selected from a nation that was free from the taint of heresy. Well, I say, that the majority of the Cardinals was appointed from among the Italians, and they were the men who were consciously preserved to them ever since by unconquered Popes. Now, I believe the Cardinals ought to be divided more equally among the great nations of the world, and, in the church, the College of Cardinals is indispensable, but our Cardinals should be men who can perform the duties for which the high and responsible position is created.

"Certainly, the change is bound to come, and it will not be the beginning of the hierarchy of this country is the first to do it. Some people think that it would be insensitive in the Sacred College. Perhaps, I am too young to call for it, but I guess I hardly think it would go entirely unnoticed by the Pope.

"The lack of sacred orders in Cardinals not infrequently gives rise to some unpleasant complications when low grade Cardinals are appointed to the Papacy to Bishops and Archbishops. I remember one instance in which the Pope has never been published. I was in Rome in 1854 and 1855 when the dogma of the Immaculate Conception was promulgated. All the bishops of the world were assembled in Rome, and among them was Cardinal Cullen (Dublin and the venerable Archbishop McHale of Tuam. Indeed Cardinal Cullen was unfortunately tendying to the Castle Government in Dublin, and was keeping back the people from demanding their rights. Archbishop McHale, on the contrary, was bold and true to his sympathy with his poor oppressed people, and urged them on to demand their rights, and by doing so was a good stand there in the eyes of the Government. Cullen tried to dissuade the old man from his course, but he gave reply to him that some people in the world's history had got rich by minding their own business. Cullen let him alone, and he accomplished wonderful results. Archbishop McHale, in the meantime, was called to Rome, and, in the consistory, was been and was in

THE MONITOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—An item published in the Eastern press states that the General of the Jesuits has published the statistics of the Order, showing that it now counts 2,500 missionaries, and that it can boast of having had 248 Saints, 1,600 Martyrs, 13 Popes, 60 Cardinals, 4,000 Archbishops and Bishops, and 9,000 writers.

—If all the ridiculous rantings and ravings carried on at Methodist gatherings could be collected into a volume, it would be an amusing book. A citizen of Davenport, Iowa, was converted recently at a revival meeting, and groaned so long, loud and discordantly over his past sins that he was arrested for disturbing conduct and fined $10. In his case, at least, the way of the transgressor was doubly hard.

—At last the fraud is exposed that 5,000 Cork county women signed the anti-Home Rule petition which was recently presented to the Queen. In all the churches of Queenstown, the other Sunday, the preachers denounced the conduct of those individuals who compelled servant girls to sign petitions of whose contents they were unaware. In civilized Ireland a John Bull can go as low into the depths of moral depravity as the meanest pagan in the British possessions.

—The Sacramento Bee thinks the MONITOR is doing a disservice to the Church in not deciding at once as to whether the Abbé Liszt is a priest or not. From the best information at hand we are led to decide in the negative. The title Abbé in his case is merely honorary. He received minor orders, but in consequence of his long being entirely absorbed by his musical compositions and his phenomenal piano performances, he never received the full sacramental faculties of a priest.

—The full account of the fatal Socialist riots in Chicago and Milwaukee which we print on the third page this week, will give our readers a good idea of the danger which arises from combinations of men whose first principle is to deny God and to disregard religion. Socialism—like Mormonism—is the natural result of Freemasonry. It is with pride, therefore, that we point to the fact that in the sanguinary strife which the Socialists have engendered in Chicago and Milwaukee not a single Irish Catholic name appears on the roll of the bad men engaged in these outbreaks.

—There is no more in this line invented by Methodist preachers in their constant efforts to give their sect notoriety. At the last gathering of the New England Conference it was asserted by some audacious falsifier that the Pope of Rome was a subscriber to the New York Christian Advocate, a down-right falsehood which could only have emanated from the foul soul of some evangelical embodiment of fanaticism. The Pope has no more use for a Methodist paper than he would have for a Mahomedan person among the household of the Vatican.

—An item recently appeared in a great many Catholic papers in which it was stated that Pope Leo had compiled his memoirs and that a certain non-Catholic American publishing house was about to issue the work in different languages. The MONITOR did not copy the item for the reason that we had no faith in its correctness, and now it is stated by the Unita Cattolica of Turin, that there is no truth in the statement. It says that the speculation is of a private character, and that the Pope has never had the time to compile memoirs. The Vaticano, the paper further says, has nothing to do with the enterprise.

—The immense procession of laboring men, mechanics and wage-workers of all classes which paraded through San Francisco last night, was a splendid demonstration worthy of the cause which it typified and creditable to all concerned. There were no Socialistic sentiments embodied in the motions, no "red flag" ruffianism in the demeanor of the masses comprising the parade, but all was orderly and law-abiding, thus proving that the wage-workers of San Francisco are not allied in sentiment with that such of miscreants who recently created the riots in Chicago and other Eastern cities.

—The letter which we publish from a converted Episcopalian this week, contains an exposure of that sect which shows it up in the true colors as the champion sham of modern credulous Christianity. Dr. Sterling knows whereof he speaks, hence his evidence possesses all the greater weight. He also pays a sublime tribute to the holy influence of true religion, when he alludes to infinitelss and other nasatural crimes which are common to Protestantism, but which are shunned by Catholics because the commands of God and the precepts of the Church are a power in every Catholic conscience, whilst those beyond the pale of the Church of God are guided solely by the false light of private judgment based upon their own self-pride or their unadjusted passions.

—The growth of the Church in the Southern States was recently demonstrated by the following statistics inserted in the address which the priests of the Diocese of Wilmington, Delaware, presented to Bishop Becker upon his translation to the See of Savannah, Georgia. Bishop Becker was the first Bishop of the Wilmington diocese and has been there eighteen years. The address says when the Bishop came there Wilmington had two Catholic churches; it has six to-day. Then one Religious community existed there; to-day five Religious orders are doing the work of God in teaching and caring for the little ones. Then Delaware had only five priests; now the Catholics of Delaware are ministered to by fourteen clergymen. On the eastern shore of Maryland three priests ministered to the spiritual needs of the people, and to day seven priests and seventeen churches are found there.

The charge of being "Socialists," brought against the Irish people by their pensioned slanderers the British press, is one of the foulest fabrications of modern falsehood. Not a single grain of the diabolical doctrines of Socialism could be found in the composition of any Irish Catholic in the world. In proof of this we need only cite the fact that no later than last month William Morris, the poet, started out to preach Socialism in Dublin. The audience listened to him for some time, and than several persons replied. him when he arose to make the closing speech of the evening. The disorder was quelled by some astute fellow intoning "God save Ireland," and when the last line was reached the gas was turned off. Mr. Morris proposed a vote that capital should become the property of the State, that children should become the children of the State, and that private property should cease. Such is the way Socialism is squelched in Ireland.

—The adage which tells us that truth is stranger than fiction was recently verified by the following scene as described by the Providence Journal:—Late Friday evening a man about 40 years of age stood upon the Globe Bridge in Woonsocket, with his wife beside him, threatening to commit suicide by jumping into the Blackstone River, if the dog did not give him 20 cents. The wife pleaded and begged, saying she needed the money to purchase food for her family, and he would only spend it for rum. The dog was given up to the husband, who at once put the money in his pocket and left the bridge, saying he intended to be better half to give him the money or he would go. She implored the crowd of people who had gathered near to save him, but no one interfered. A voice from the crowd sang out, "Let him go," but she still clung to him. Finally she released her hold, and putting her hand in her pocket brought forth a silver quarter and placed it in his hand. He seized it eagerly and started on a lively run for a saloon near by, while the poor woman started for her home to offer a prayer for him whose life she thought she had saved for 20 cents.

—The anomalous position which the Church of England occupies in the minds of non-Catholics, is well defined in the following paragraph from a contribution on "Aristocracy in England," which General Adam Badeau is contributing to the New York Sun. "The Church in England is 'established' by law. It is founded, not on the principle of Divine authority, like the Church of Rome, but on the decrees and decisions of Parliaments and Councils. Its head is not the Vicar of Christ, but the Queen. It is not, like our Protestant sects of every denomination in America, a voluntary association based on the consent of those who compose its communion, it is imposed on the people of England by the aristocracy, of which it is a component part. Originally 'established' by Henry VIII., because he wanted to shift his wives, it remained a monument and instrument of royal authority until Cromwell usurped the place of the King in the Anglican system, and then it adapted itself to the change, and became the bulwark and sportsmanness of the aristocracy, which it still remains." What a contrast between this bogus Christian bulwark of British aristocracy and the Church of the poor and the lowly, the humble and the holy—founded by Almighty God!

Catholicity Supplanting Puritanism.

Holyoke, Massachusetts, was at one time a hot-bed of Puritanical Protestantism, but the no-children-in-the-family fashion prevailed to such an extent that it came about there was more Puritanical churches than congregations could be found to support them. So some of the "mestin' houses" were turned into ball-rooms, skating rinks and to other profane uses. But what the still-needed Pilgrim Fathers would call "the worse fate" has overtaken the old-Second Baptist church on Main street in that city. Bishop O'Reilly having recently dedicated it to the praise of God by actually celebrating "a Papish Mass" within its Puritan-built walls! How this bonne of the witch-burners and the priest-hunters of Puritan days must have rattled in their graves at this miraculous enrichonment of the despised and persecuted Church of the Pope of Rome upon the realms where once the decree of death was enacted against any "popish priest" who dared to invade the sanctuary of sectarianism in New England!

Home Rule in Australia.

Ireland is not the only part of the British Empire about which an agitation is now going on for home rule. At the Antipodes also a vigorous Separationist agitation is on foot. North Queensland has grievances against South Queensland, and separation is becoming a formidable cry. Sir T. McIlwraith, the Opposition leader, has declared himself in favor. At the recent election pronounced Separationists were elected for the districts of Cook and Musgrave, as well as for Townsville—the largest town in the North. Branches of the Separationists League have been formed not only in Queensland itself, but in Sydney and Melbourne, in both of which cities much support has been obtained. The Separation petition, which will shortly be presented to her Majesty, has nearly 8,000 adult signatures, including the Anglican bishop of the diocese and most of the influential members of the community.

—Bismarck is very seldom to be seen in the streets of Berlin, at least not walking. If he wants to take open-air exercise he either rides on horseback or promenades in his garden. But April 19 the Iron Chancellor was agreatly surprised to see him leave the Upper Palace on foot and walk slowly along the Leipzig street and past the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, Kongresser street, and of course he received quite a welcome. All the passers-by arrested their movements to get a good look at him, and even the passengers in the street cars left their seats so as not to miss the unusual-toned sight.

—Edward Atkinson, the statistician, presents figures showing that the railroads of the United States give employment to 650,000 people and transport 600,000,000 tons of freight annually, one half of which is food and fuel.

How Irish Tenants are Robbed.

No person can read the following incident which recently took place in Ireland—without feeling that every divine and human law of equity and justice proclaims the relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland to be a disgrace to the statute books of England, and they should be wiped out so that such injustice as here depicted may be obliterated for ever.

A certain Mr. Hunt has just returned to his residence, Castlehyne, county Donegal, where Lord Kingston has been exercising his reversory from his lands situated in Ballykinlaver, near the boundary line of Donegal and Derry. This is a tract of barren mountain land thickly peopled. The little whitewashed houses of the peasant tenants dot the landscape close to each other right up to the crest of the hill in plots of five to ten acres, and show distinctly how the land has been reclaimed. Here the Catholic population, being driven from the better lands in the plains, have taken refuge in time past and reclaimed the soil at their own cost, and built houses there with their own hands.

Mr. Hunt thus narrates his interview with one of the tenants, Patrick McManus, a little old man of seventy, hunched, bent, and bowed, but cheerful under the great weight of his misfortunes

"I found him in a neighbor's house, where I had been taken to through charity. I asked him where he had been born, and he told me in the house yonder where the soldiers, and my wife and little boy died. He had built from the ground up, with his father, who had originally got the place, patches of much green and poor by tillage. He had paid £70 to the landlord for it, and had spent more than this in carrying it up in baskets on his head at a shilling a basket. About that time, having saved up £20, he paid £20 to the tenant right as a bribe of such sorts. But the very next year the rent was raised and he had to pay £5 more. He was unable to do so, but he got together £5 and paid it, and the next year he had to pay £5 more again

Farm and Home.

For a Farmer to Paste in His Hat.

It is worth while for all farmers everywhere to remember that thorough culture is better than three mortgages on a farm.

That an offensive war against weeds is three times less expensive than a defensive one.

That good fences pay better than a lawsuit with neighbors.

That hay is a good deal cheaper made in summer than purchased in winter.

That more stock perish from famine than founder.

That scrimping the feed for fattening hogs is a waste of grain.

That schooling children properly is money lent at ten per cent.

That cows should be milked regularly and clean.

That Chinese labor is unprofitable.

The Right Kind of a Bank.

Down with the little toy savings bank! I believe it teaches children to be selfish, hate to see a child, a sweet, innocent child, with dimpled hands and a laughing face, clutch the penny or the nickel you give it close in its little fingers and run first to drop it into the greedy, miserly "savings bank," and then back to thank you. We teach the child to be selfish when we give it a penny to drop in the missionary box and a penny a week for church, and a penny a week for Sunday school, and a penny a week for the savings bank rattling full. But haven't I a savings bank in my home? Indeed, I have. And I'd like to see you or any other man steep one of my dear friends, the Vanderbilts, pour money into the top of that savings bank as fast as the prince can draw it out at the bottom. That's the way to run a bank. Make her useful. Mix, mix, mix. "Mr. Speaker," said the California legislator, "may I ask how much money there is in the State treasury?" The Speaker estimated about $40,000. "Then, about the sensible thing to rake her. What good does the money do locked up? If you don't spend it, some alderman will get hold of it.

Shipping Currants East.

There is no reason why it will not pay to ship currants East. It has been conclusively proven that they make the trip very much better than cherries and other varieties of fruit. By putting the fruit up in one-pound boxes they are easily handled, and there is no danger of it rolling. Last year Jesse Silva of this valley sent Boat 1,500 pounds of currants as an experiment. The fruit arrived in prime condition and realized 15 cents a pound, and we believe a carload landed in New York at the right time would bring sandy 20 cents a pound. Here is an unlimited market that would quickly relieve us of the annual glut at home. If it could be carried out it would be a bonanza to the currant-growers.—Haywards Journal.

Devotion of a Parisian Husband.

Not long ago the husband of a lovely little woman, whom he had but a few weeks before led to the altar, saw her safe into a carriage in which she was setting out to make some calls. She was the very light of his eyes, and they had spent few hours apart since the wedding day. Imagine his state of mind when late in the afternoon she was brought home senseless and almost unrecognizable. But I must go back a little. The horse that drew the carriage slipped in rounding a corner, the vehicle turned over and the face of its occupant was terribly mutilated with broken glass from the windows.

When the crowd which surrounded the carriage extricated the poor little prisoner, she was taken insensible into the shop of the nearest chemist to have her injuries examined. The cuts and scratches were dreadful, but the worst was a gash from mouth to ear from which a long piece of torn flesh hung. The poor chemist seemed to have lost his head at the sight, for instead of sewing the piece in place again, he cut it off, and seeing that the patient remained unconscious, he washed his hands of her as quickly as possible, and saw her driven in a cab to be taken home. The doctor who is called in breathless haste comes upon the butchery of the chemist's surgery, and says there is nothing to be done but to take a piece out of the arm of the poor victim to supply the piece of flesh which the chemist had so stupidly cut off.

But the frantic husband would not hear of it, and taking of his coat and bearing his own arm, offered it to the doctor and bid him cut from that, and not touch her with his knife. "But," said the doctor, "one mutilated person is enough in a family, my dear fellow; besides the pain would be horrible." However the heroic young man stuck to his point, and, in a word, went through the operation with a smile on his lips, remarking they had vowed to have all things in common, pains as well as joys. The doctor did his work deftly, the tissue of his needle are already faint, and he says that when the healing process is complete there will scarcely be a visible trace of the terrible accident.

Teach Your Children Obedience.

"A child taught to obey until it is five years old never needs anything else. It is not so easy to begin the lesson at that age, harder still at eight, and quite out of the question at twelve. Develope your child, say three or four years old, in all the little whims and fancies, give it everything it wants, especially if it cries for it, make yourself your servants, and your household its slave, allow it to contradict you, to kick and scream—these are wonderfully cute in a baby, you might make a show of resistance, but give up always in the end—then tell your neighbors of the child's little sayings and doings in its presence, talk them over frequently, dwell with little things which it is too young to understand, tell it you are not going out and then slip off. Practice all these harmless little things upon your child, and although it may be endowed with intelligence and a naturally sweet disposition, if it does not grow up a selfish and insufferable daughter or a willful and overbearing son, it certainly will not to your fault.

Facts Worth Remembering.

Well-ventilated bed-rooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude.

A cup of hot water drank before meals will prevent nausea and dyspepsia.

One in a failed should be laid flat on his back; then loosen his clothes and let him alone.

Essence of peppermint painted on a burn causes the pain to cease at once.

It is said by one who has tried it that cayenne pepper sprinkled upon hot flannels will afford instant relief to persons troubled with earache.

Never wash in warm water before going out in the cold air. Such a practice will produce a cold. Warm water should be used only before retiring.

A growing inability to sleep in sickness is ominous of a fatal result; in apparent health, it indicates the failure of the mind, on the other hand, in disease or dementia, a very slight improvement in the sleeping should be hailed as the harbinger of restoration.

A dentist who has charge of the teeth in all the prisons and asylums in connection with the department of charity and correction, reports the teeth, such a one is A. V. Brown, N. B. cor. York and Taylor Sts.

IT IS AS MUCH ONE'S DUTY TO PRESERVE HEALTH AS TO THE DUCKS.

These "Oh's" and "Ah's" which follow the use of Warner's Safe Yeast are as music to DYSPEPTIC NECESSITY. Warner's Safe Yeast is a Vitalizer. It Strengthens and Invigorates. Sold by all Druggists. Warner's Safe Yeast Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Family Fun.

THE NEW "SEVEN AGES."

A Humorously Pathetic Sketch by the Famous Bill Nye.

Man passes through seven distinct stages of being photographed, each one succeeding all previous efforts in that line.

First he is photographed as a prattling bald-headed baby, absolutely destitute of eyes, but making up for the deficiency a week or month that would make a negro minstrel ashamed of his face.

An old-fashioned dollar story album with cerebro-spinal meningitis, and filled with pictures of bald-headed children in heavy brown and white dresses, is the first thing we look on, assuming a house, and nothing from which we reluctantly part.

The next stage we take on the evil road is the photograph of the boy with fresh stripped hair and in which the unit arrestment thumb takes a leading part.

Then follows the photograph of the heavily marked freckled and black of hopeless melancholy.

Next comes the young man, twenty one years of age, with his front hair plastered smoothly down on his brother Hobbing's dome of thought. He does not care so much about the expression of his features, so long as his left hand, with the new ring on it, shows distinctly, and the strong jingling charms on his watch chain, including the cute little bachelor's button on his shirt, stand out well in the foreground. Soon after he has a tinsiype taken in which a young lady sits in the edge of grass, while he stands behind her with his hand lightly touching her shoulder so though he might be feeling of the thrilling circumstance of a horse ear.

This being continued till one day he comes into the studio with his wife and tries to see how many children can be photographed on one negative by holding one on each knee and using the other one as a background.

The last stage in his eventful career, the old gentleman allows himself to be photographed, because he is afraid he may not live through another long, hard winter, and the boys would like a picture of him, while he is able to climb the dark, narrow stairs which lead to the artist's room.

Silently the old finger-marked album, lying so unsententiously on the gouty centre table, points out the mile stones from infancy to age, and back of the mistakes of a struggling photographer is portrayed the laughter and the tears, the joy and the grief, the dimples and the gray hairs of one man's lifetime.

A Shrewd Pedler.

He had a back load of feather dusters as he rang the door bell of an uptown house yesterday, and when a woman opened the door about two inches and said that nothing was wanted, he inquired:

"Madame, you kindly inform me who lives next door?"

"Next door!" she queried, coming out on the step. "Why, it's a new family, and I don't remember the name."

"Lady pals on a good deal of style, doesn't she?"

"Rather."

"I thought so. That's the way with those sorts of people; they put it all on their backs. I asked her if she did her own carriage to dust of her upholstered furniture and bric-a-brac, and she slammed the door in my face. She didn't have any to dust, you see. People who have plush furniture and articles of virtu and taste always want my goods. Pleasant day, madame.

"Yes-s. What did you say the price was?"

"Seventy-five cents, madame, and the woman next door is peering through the parlor blinds at us.

"Is she? Well, I'll take one, and if there should be any other invention to dust here-a-bouts and oil paintings you might call round. You may also bring me a box of polish for my elevator.

After the Medical Commencement.

Two newly fledged physicians met the other day, and the following highly interesting conversation ensued:—

"Ah good morning, doctor."

"Good morning, doctor."

"And how are you to-day, doctor?"

"Pretty well, and how are you, doctor?"

"I am all right. Got a good case of meningitis at your hospital, doctor?"

"Yes, come down and take a look at it. Anything special up your way, doctor?"

"Man fell from a scaffolding and broke his neck two days ago, still alive, but can't swim it. Pleased to have you call at the house, doctor. Thank you, I will, doctor. Good day, doctor."

"Good day, doctor."

A Poor Teacher.

A member of a Lawrence County school board was speaking of the teacher employed.

"That feller sim's givin' no satisfaction at all," he said.

"Why, I thought he came from the East highly recommended."

"Oh, I s'pose he was, but he don't seem to suit, just the same.

"But he has a good education."

"Yes, I guess he's got a straight fork in education, all right enough, but the trouble's right here. Naturally, you know, the big boys have a little poker game at recess, and we correspondence the teacher set in."

"Yes."

"Well, I'm consed if they ain't just bout cleaned him out on his wages! Now what kind of a sample do you call that, lettin' boys down him, that way.

One of the World's Wonders.

Planter—"That's a wonderful boy, Pompey, you've got there, Pompey."

Pompey—"Dat marvel, sah! Dat marvel am one ob de wonders of de world."

Planter—"One of the wonders of the world?"

Pompey—"Yes, sah, dat marvel spilled me outen de wagon yesterday."

Planter—"Is that why you call him one of the wonders of the world?"

Pompey—"Yes, sah, Pompey's spiller, you know. Hah, hah! Dat long dar.

Sweetly Consoling.

John Montgomery Gate of Bethel, Ire., author of the following interesting letter, was a member of the Society of Friends in Bethel and of the Ministry for the Diseases of Women and Children. Peter street, Dublin, Ireland, says to letters and down that he recommends and Lung Balsam and down that he recommends and Lung Balsam and down that he recommends and Lung Balsam

IRELAND'S PROSPECTS IN PARLIAMENT.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

his House Rule scheme. They see the shadow of defeat settling on their banner. What they fail to see is that the democracy are the true unionists, and that in using their newly-gotten power at the first moment in securing justice and liberty for the Irish people the British democracy are laying securely the cornerstone of the real union between the two nations, more enduring than any that could be maintained by representative laws or the power of the sword.

JAMES O'KELLY.

JUSTIN McCARTHY'S VIEWS.

NO. 20 CHERNE GARDENS, TURNHAM GREEN, CHISWICK, LONDON, May 5.—The truce, if it can be called a truce, is nearly over, and the battle begins again next week. The House of Commons meets Monday, but will not take up the home-rule measure until Thursday. The Easter recess has been given up to speech-making for and against the bill. Almost every prominent man on either side has addressed a meeting or meetings somewhere, but it is not worth the pains to analyse most of the speeches. Events pass too quickly now to allow much time to retrospect. The past is dead very soon. Now I only mean to use the past so as to get, if I can, a safer forecast of the future. I am perhaps with the optimists in the matter, but still I think the feeling in favor of Mr. Gladstone's measure is distinctly improving in the country, at all events the chances of any formidable coalition against it have become decidedly less, or and lesser. It is clear there is no point of cohesion between Hartington and Chamberlain. Hartington has committed himself hopelessly against the principle of home rule, while Chamberlain—and this speaks himself against anything of the kind. Mr. Goschen is opposed to all forward movement everywhere. He was supposed to lose the county franchise the other day and it was passed without him or in spite of him, as most of the Liberal reforms are. Mr. Goschen is very much of what would be called in America a crank; he believes in no one's wisdom and virtue but his own, and he is much soured because the English political world will go on listening to and following other men. He is a clever man, but spoiled by self-conceit and consequent dissatisfaction with the world in general, he becomes the world in general will not see him to be some time.

NO COALITION AGAINST HOME RULE IN PROSPECT

for Hartington, Chamberlain, and Goschen among the Liberals. Who else is there to coalesce? Hartington doubtless will propose an amendment on the second reading of the Home Rule measure, Thursday he will propose the bill to the read the second time that day a month—in other words, rejected for this session. I feel well assured he will not carry his amendment. The probability is that it will be rejected by a small majority, and on the second reading will then be allowed to pass without further division. Then will come the important time for the bill. The House will go into committee, and all manner of amendments will be proposed, debated, and voted on division. Every open and secret vote will be fully utilized full chance for discussing it by speaking an amendment and waiting time for its division. Every member will find he has plenty from which to jump up, every one who engages over the political field. If at last he bill emerges out of committee to anything like a vigorous vital condition it will go to the House of Lords at a very late period in the session. Then the Lords will try to make the bill only by declaring it to be too late in the session for them to give such an important measure a full and fair consideration. Thus they will evade the responsibility of pronouncing points blank against any and every home rule measure and at the same time get rid of the bill for this session. What will Mr. Gladstone do? I think in the case as I put it? What will he his course? Will he dissolve? Most people who profess to know say he will.

SOMEHOW I DO NOT THINK SO.

If the bill were killed in the House of Commons, or, coming up in good time in the House of Lords, were held by them to death there, it is likely he would dissolve and at once take the opinion of the country by the other event he appears to me more likely he will have the anomalous session to introduce another measure, and by that time the opinion of the country, much educated, could perhaps come to a final settlement with some of the own fellows who are now doubtful regarding the question of Irish members at Westminster or their withdrawal. By that time some of the Tories, making up their minds that home rule must come, will think it might as well come from them, while at the same time securing them the chance of a prolonged occupation of office.

Remember that two great Liberal reforms bills, each brought earlier in the session than the Home Rule measure, were both killed in committee by a combination of Tories and Whigs, and the end was that the Tories brought in a wider and better reform scheme than the Liberals. It may be so in this instance too. It is to say mind opinion among the possibilities. Meanwhile, then, in this, Mr. Gladstone's measure will must never consent to even listen to an argument on the question of Home Rule. Let me tell your readers that Mr. Gladstone is as much new and rapid conversion as many people think. For several years Mr. Gladstone has been in favor of the principle of Home Rule, but had always too great difficulties, and was not quite satisfied that the majority or nearly the majority of the Irish people was strongly in favor of Home Rule. He has not seen what he considered a satisfactory plan to accomplish Home Rule. The first difficulty was removed altogether by the late elections and the eighty-six Home Rule members. The second difficulty Mr. Gladstone endeavored to solve by trying to devise a scheme himself. That particular scheme may fail, and in all probability will fail; but if it fails it will only be succeeded by a scheme better, more comprehensive, and more satisfactory, which will be passed, may be by Liberals, may be by Tories, but it will be passed. Mr. Gladstone will live and enjoy the Irish Bill as it stands Gladstone.

JUSTIN McCARTHY.

If President Cleveland complied with all requests for a lock of his hair he may would be as bare as a billiard ball in less than a week. The lady from Indianapolis has written that she is poor, and asks the President to instruct his barber to forward to her all the hair cut from the Executive head. He proposes to make this hair into Cleveland charms and sell them to gentlemen to wear on their watch chains. Another person is fishbonned, Va., wants the same hair to stuff a pincushion made of silk, taken from an old United States flag. This cushion she will raffle at a church fair for the benefit of a needy congregation.

OUR IRISH LETTER.

English Support at Gladstone's Irish Policy. Ireland's Freedom Assured. Sad Death from Starvation.

(FROM OUR REGULAR IRISH CORRESPONDENT.)

CASTLE OF THE MONITOR,

Dear Sir—The House Rule Bill for Ireland passed out of the ordeal of the second reading yesterday last. After an animated debate during which Sir Hercourt condemned the conduct of the renegades from the Liberal Ministry, Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Gladstone in reply to the obstinacy of Mr. Gladstone's speech, which lasted for about two hours, the Premier can defy the forces combined of Torydom. The London Daily News says that Thursday (the 8th of April) an irreversible step was taken in the direction of conferring Home Rule upon Ireland. The full has been set rolling, and no power on earth can stop it reaching its ultimate goal. That is a fact which must be faced, and it already has by the leaders of the opposition of the scheme. It is no longer a question of whether Ireland shall have the end accorded by the Imperial upon it of a system of Home Rule, but it is a question of the manner in which it shall be accomplished. Mr. Gladstone, Lord R. Churchill and Mr. Chamberlain, with the time now or after three or four years passed in Parliament, will consider the question of land in a spirit of compromise." For ourselves, we sincerely hope that the worst comes to the worst we desire to profit by the liberal experience and enlightened statesmanship of the Tories. The Conservative newspapers are preaching, and many of the liberal papers, heretofore friendly in their view to Ireland, now seem to have turned their backs upon his policy, yet as we have seen, reached the bottom of the Tory journals. Republic newspaper follows in the usual line of democratic opinion upon the political events of the day. It indicates the sentiment of the Irish people, and it is worth while to quote what it says the Premier will do, as to whether the English people are to be forced to pay millions for Irish compensation, is a set of rackrenters who have by their conduct forfeited all claim to be paid. Ireland. This evening, Friday, April 16th, Mr. Gladstone will bring forward the Home Rule Purchase Bill. The success or failure of this bill, which is broadcasted to be, since it is born to the Irish landlords thro' to the tenants from the hand of Mr. Gladstone, depends in part the fate of Home Rule.

THE TENANTS IN ALL

to link the fortunes of the landlord class with the acceptance or rejection of the bill by the English Lords rejects the Home Rule scheme they will be the last chance of getting favorable compensation for the Irish landlords. The Premier will take his Home Rule Purchase Bill to the Lords on Monday, and by the time a second attempt is made to reject the Home Rule scheme the landlords shall feel disposition in a more hopeless position than they are at the present time. On Monday next Parliament goes for the Easter recess. The recess will bring over from labor to Ireland, and the Irish brigade it will be the time of harder work. For those who will remain there in our Irish life until the end beneath the general relief of the House of Lords.

The speeches which will be poured forth from the Tory benches and Tories during the recess will be for constituents and followers, will have the effect of keeping up the spirits of the Irish that it will not be broken down in Irish sympathy. The landlord Government in Ireland was coming to a very low ebb, and rapidly by the Liberal, away, or meet with a very hard blows from the Liberals and from the Tories. The opening session will certainly be the most eventful of the century. Ireland and Ireland may be able to better yourself. Ireland may be able to better yourself. Ireland may be able to better yourself.

Poetry.

THE CHARITY OF ST. FRANCIS OF ROME.

(Written for the Island "Convert de Salve," said to all of Christian blood.
Rev. of 2 M Burnett, Esq., May 4th, 1886.

I heard pipings and familiar music their tones,
And wrought music world of peace
Within the stricken heart of Rome,
Five hundred years ago.

From as the blackberry lay the dead,
Beneath the snow little grave,
While living spectres wailed for bread,
In anguish of despair.

Yet, where the ministers of wrath
Then wrought with scourging rod,
The Christian found their footsteps path,
Then heroine of God!

Francis of Rome! and may thy name
With reverence be blended, alike,
Hick on the list of earthly fame,
As on the scroll Divine!

Art thou the ringing note long
Will may thy memory glide,
Child of a proud ancestral throne!
To rose so proud alike!

Yet not for lofty lineage grand
Wilt thou thine name, Patrician hand,
But that, with the spirit of God,
Thou saw'st in the wayfarer's need.

And, touch thy lofty palace dome
Unceasingly did of being,
(As knowest to their pity!)
The starved and suffering.

Thou saw'st, Don't know why I want to Prince Edward's island; but I mean to Truro, and so to Tyneo, and then, naturally enough, crossed over to Charlottetown. It is a standard little town, flat, with wide, straight streets, unoccupied warehouses, and a Parliament house, reminding one of the ordinary middle-aged citizen, who has settled himself, after his youthful dreams of importance are over, to a placid, domestic insignificance in a second rate city.

After dinner, I left the town, and walked along by the sea; or, rather, by the arm of the bay which stretches up behind the town. In an hour the little city was out of sight—my guide book placed its population at only two thousand—and I was walking by a sleepy stream, the salt water rising through marshy shore, the salt water rising through the sharp beach at every footstep. Shore-ward was a gentle hill, crowned with a few low trees.

There was no house in sight now; but one fresh pulse was rattle in the distance, rising from a wood on a point of land which jutted out into the bay ahead of me.

CHAPTER II.

I had been walking along the beach an hour or more toward this (which we farther off than I had thought) when I saw an old man shambling over the stones toward me. He was very poorly dressed, with no hat, and nothing on his feet but an old pair of slippers, which slipped and slid on the smooth pebbles. I was going by him with a nod, but he stopped me, and asked me, with a pum'ed expression upon his face.

"Is this Avalon? said he.

"Avalon" said I.

He looked at me musingly, and yet with an empty, distant gaze, as if I were hardly real to him. A suspicion came to me that the man was mad, and I shrank back.

"Avalon?" said I. "Avalon?"—for something impelled me to think, as I stood looking at him, of that fabled island of the blest, in the sea.

"No, no," said he, impatiently. "Avalon. Avalon—in Newfoundland, you know."

Then I remembered the peninsula of Avalon, near St. John, in Newfoundland.

"Oh! Avalon, I answered. No, this is not Avalon."

"Then I must be—I must be—I must be mad," he said, with a sigh of relief, and I saw his face grow dull again, and empty, with the look of balking feeblemindedness that usually marked his face. The man was the great brick building, barrack-looking, with iron shutters on the windows. It evident; the insane asylum of the province, and that was one of the inmates, who, perhaps, an old man like him, from their wandering.

"Up," said he, quickly, as if he read my thoughts. "They let me walk alone, sometimes. I am not to be a madman."

"Why did you think it was Avalon, my friend? I said, gently, for something in his sadness interested me.

At the word, he looked up eagerly. "Avalon, Avalon," he said, "I heard the bells." And truly, there had been church bells rung in the afternoon.

"And why do you wish for Avalon?" I asked him.

"My wife is there, sir," said the old man simply. "And we were to go there and live when I had bought the house. But they will not let me, now."

"But this is in Prince Edward's Island."

I did not know then what I could have said to bring tears in the old man's eyes, but he sat down wearily, and I could see he was crying.

"Yes," he said. "Oh! I remember. And the vessel I had had gone now from them, and left alone the weary one of sorrow. So I asked, and, sitting down with him I got his story. It came, mingled with quotations emphatic of his God, and with the way his keepers treated him, and with sensible, pretty ripples, and broken sequences of story; but now and then, when his mind was with him (and in such times his mood was sadness, and his tone weary and come again), he told it clearly. So simple a story it was! hardly worth telling; but it fresh in my mind, as if it were but yesterday.

CHAPTER III.

It seems he had been born in Avalon; this man of the place he had forgotten; he "But you know, sir," said he, "the village on the cliff there, by the little church? And I told him that I knew it well. He had followed the sea, of course, and as time, he fell in love. Anna, I remember was her name. But Newfoundland was a savage place in which to live; so he had gone to sea, and had been a wild fellow in his time, as he gave me to understand, he had to know. Then, finally, he had known Anna; or more likely, he had known her as a child; but in the end he had married her. Then he had gone to sea again, long enough to buy a little land at home, in Avalon, and build a home for her there. "This the money had been over slow in coming, sir" said poor old man, and then with a little further toward the farm in Avalon. But still at home there, she kept spinning and saving at the little property, and he kept following the sea.

At last he got a chance for higher wages than a common seaman; it was in the saloon, sailing to and fro from Avalon to the island to the mainland. In the summer it was well enough; but in the winter, when the ice blocked the island, it was a terrible life; frightful the boat had to be dragged, or the ice hook added, for miles over the frozen sea; crossing now the open water, now huge fields of ice piled up, with the terrible winter storms, and the snows, and the chance of being carried out to sea. Anna had been loath to have him take to the life from the first, but he had talked to her of Avalon, and the little white house and patch of land for their old age, and so he had persuaded her. Situ had gone with him to Prince Edward's Island, though, and lived there, that she might be with him half the time at least, and even this was better than his long sea voyages. And perhaps, too, his being "but a wild lad" had had a hit to do with that. "for, you know, sir, we sailor men are apt to be fond to drink on shore, with nothing there to do; but sit and see our mates about their grog. But I was always steady, sir, over there on the mainland. Any man would do that you know sir, with such a wife as Anna. And every voyage he made was something added to the little store that was to keep the home in Avalon.

CHAPTER IV

"But she always had a fear of them winter voyages. And, sometimes, I used to get uneasy, sir, in the seas; particular those up our way, as sey so much of what the sea can do. But I was doing nicely, sir; and Anna, she was going to have a baby, and we almost felt as if the house were ready bought; just by the little church there, in the parish field. It was the second time, sir; and then it was an awful cold one, sir; and there

"And then—it was in March, I think, sir—I was over on the mainland; and the ice was so broken and so bad we couldn't get back, sir, for the life of us. But a schooner had got across from the island, sorer we left; and I knew a man on board of her, sir, I knew a man on board of her, sir, and he gave word as how my wife was ill. And I knew the baby was coming.

"Well, sir, I could not leave on the shore, and wish and how the ice would break and go, and look over through the blinding snow, and think of Anna, and think how Anna might be a-dying. An the mates they used to sit around the stove so: the ship, and laugh at me for being a-feared of the ice. Ay, sir, I was afraid, day that there wasn't but half a gale—blow out, sir, as long as ever I'd go back, sir. An the mates, they all said I was crazy. But there was a couple, sir, said they'd go back, if I could do it. And the mail was all ready, and had been waiting for days; and we thought we'd have Anna a collin.

"And in the morning, we started from Cap Tourmentine, three men in the boat, and the mailbags. An that day we made out fairly well; we might a got half way across before the sundown. But in the night there came a storm from the Sou'east; and all the ice began to break up with the sea, sir, go out. I never see such a storm as that! An the ice was all in pieces, a-cakes like a-floes, a-floes a-drag, as then a swim; an so on every quarter mile or so! An in the morning it was terrible cold again, an all our garments they were stiff as boards with the wet, sir, then with the freeze. An the boat was all broke up with a squeeze we got in the blow; and next night we had to break up the ship, and burn the timber, or we would be frozen. An one man froze his foot, and he's both my ears then solid, sir, they'd ha' broke if you lent on 'em. But I thought of Anna, an kept on. An then, the next day, we had to take to the ice altogether, an we left the ship, half a mile from the sea. But we saw the mail sheal, near by Summerside; only

"Well, sir, we got to the mail sheal, and broke lower from the shore. An the mates, they said, sir, we'd ha' to go, if we had to jump into the sea an' it was awful cold; an they put out from the shore—leaving me and other men behind, sir, there, they all said as we—leaving me, I tharemen, sir, as they said we had fever like, a scull; but when I came too, they told me Anna was dead; an they never let me see her; an they brought me here—the old men broke down, and sobbed like a child.

"Is this a prison?" he asked again.

"No, no, I said, not yet.

"I shall be—they don't give me enough to eat, sir; not always. It's a strange place, this asylum country. An they treat me like as if I were foolish; kind of old as foolish. An now, they'd be after me, for stayin' out so long.

"I'm a-feared, sir, to go to wander in sense complaining once more; and after a time, sometimes, he became quiet, and looked across the bay. The sun was just sinking over a distant tract of land; and the broad sea water lay smooth and silent, relaxed in the glow. Suddenly, he cried, "Avalon! the old man put his hand to his ear and gazed far over at the island, listening intently. I had not heard any sound, but I had been noticed in his eyes. They looked, unshaded, at the light, his face brightening in the last rays of the sun; and I forgot his madness and his weakness, watching the one ray of perfect happiness I have ever seen on a human face.

"Avalon! The bells of Avalon" he whispered. "Do you hear them, Anna? The bells of Avalon!

I looked away, across the yellow sea. Silent, intently, I seemed that I, too, heard the bells."

The Strasburg Clock Guidons.

The famous clock of Strasburg is put completely into the shade by "the great World Gt, or the 10 000 year time indicator." It was constructed in Germany some twenty years ago by Mr. Christian Martin, clock maker." The clock works the years and leap years and will run for a hundred centuries, when, as the bill finally admits, its "mechanic works" will have to be changed. The face of the clock is about 10 feet square and has a large number of dials and little inches where 12 little figures have their sliding place. These figures, at the ever roughly regulate, are "a allegorical human life." Every minute a government bell strikes angel bells a bell with a sledge-hammer. When he has done this fifteen times another angel in a red robe appears in the first quarter; "The Feeling, dressed in a Louis XIV, costume, turns a sand glass that the figure is shown. At the same time the figure of a child appears at a lower door. At the third a well-bred gentleman with spectacles and a high hat, and at the fourth, a decrepit old woman, with a white wig.

While all this is going on below, Death, in the shape of a Cossacks Indian with wings, has been vainly endeavoring to hamstring the hour glass. At the last stroke he has headed him off in every case and presents the hour to Jesus family "by raising the right hand in an allegorical relation," as per Baedeker, and then, with fourth quarter, Death gets the better of the struggle, strikes the hour and bundles the old man off into eternity. The twelve Apostles are brought out each hour. Above them is a figure of Christ, "who blesses with both hands each Apostle in passing" as the bill states the unbelievable fact seems. At noon-tide, noon and night a number of bell ringers with their respective bells with ordinance energy and an old man drops upon his knees, as if some one had kicked his legs out from under him. All these and many other wonders, exposing the family secrets of the Strasburg clock, the beetles, the seasons, the moons, and the globe all run regularly for the last 10 years, and will continue to run for 10 000 years, if the mechanism is not worn out before that time. Strasburg is proud of the wonderful clock, and in other cities tours wantonness and patch of land for their old age, and so he had persuaded her. Situ had gone with him to Prince Edward's Island, though, and lived there, that she might be with him half the time at least, and even this was better than his long sea voyages. And perhaps,

Literary Miscellany.

The Bells of Avalon.

A Pathetic Story of Love and Suffering Successfully Told.

CATHOLIC MASSACRED IN CHINA.

Fearful Onslaught by the Pagan Hordes. Cultured Defense of the Priests and their Converts. Resistance used as a Military Fashion.—Grand Victory for the Christian Forces.

Last autumn Cochin China was the scene of one of the most terrible massacres of Christians recorded in the history of Asiatic missions. The whole of the northern province were in insurrection against the French, and almost straight of their lives the Christian villages were destroyed by the insurgent bands, and thousands of the inhabitants were put to the sword, often having to endure prolonged torture. In some cases the missionaries succeeded in saving their flocks from massacre by retiring with them to the hills, or retreating upon some port held by the French. In one instance where a retreat of this kind was impossible they stood on the defensive, repulsed the attack of the insurgent bands, and after a siege of more than three weeks were relieved by a body of French troops sent to their relief. The narrative of their defence recalls similar scenes in the Indian mutiny, where a handful of brave men held out against a multitude of foes, and finally escaped from the hair-raising fate. Engaged and directed the defence, not to save themselves, but for the sake of the Annamite Christians intrusted to their care.

The Abbe Cuenot, the French Catholic priest, with the adjacent hamlet An-Ninh. Dr Lean was a native of the village, the son of a large district and the residence of the Pre-Vicar of the Bishop of Pallet Ninh, and had long been known as among the best of the native priests. He was a man of considerable ability, had been the usual hiding place of the Bishop, and had taught there many years, and a convert of sixty native nuns. At An-Ninh was the seminary for Mass—the two villages stood about a mile and a half or two miles from the Bishop's residence, and there there was a pagan village and a few small scattering craft. The Abbe Cuenot was a man of a high stature, but do not like fighting at close quarters. The Christians of D-Lean met the attack with a sortie. They issued from their stronghold, and, with bamboo lances and long swords and bill hooks, drove back the insurgents, taxing their bamboo spears with good effect and pursuing their advantage for some, until fourth quarter. Then Dauth gets the better of the struggle, strikes the hour and bundles the old man off into eternity. The twelve Apostles are brought out each hour. Above them is a figure of Christ, "who blesses with both hands each Apostle in passing" as the bill states the unbelievable fact seems. At noon-tide, noon and night a number of bell ringers with their respective bells with ordinance energy and an old man drops upon his knees, as if some one had kicked his legs out from under him. All these and many other wonders, exposing the family secrets of the Strasburg clock, the beetles, the seasons, the moons, and the globe all run regularly for the last 10 years, and will continue to run for 10 000 years, if the mechanism is not worn out before that time. Strasburg is proud of the wonderful clock, and in other cities tours wantonness and patch of land for their old age, and so he had persuaded her. Situ had gone with him to Prince Edward's Island, though, and lived there, that she might be with him half the time at least, and even this was better than his long sea voyages. And perhaps,

STOP SWEARING.

And Always Rebuke Whoever You May Hear Uttering an Oath.

The Rev Father Hendricks, of St. Mary's Star of the Sea, Brooklyn, N. Y., recently delivered the following sermon on the "Sin of Swearing." No other name, he said, should be so dear to us and so beloved as that of God, because it is the name of our greatest Benefactor. When we come to pray, we begin by adoring God and asking it really seems strange that there should be any need of keeping our consciousness of our respect for that name, and one would think there would be little need of the commandment against swearing. But what is the reason why so many are guilty of it? It is contrary to God's law, it is a sin against God, it is a sense of dreariness and fear that we feel when we are guilty of it. Do you feel a gentle hand pass over your face in moments of danger, and do you feel as if you were about to death you are restored to health, and that you look for a return of the vigor that you used to recover? Was there not a time when you were afraid of your life, and when you were met and nobody to help you, the merciful Christian came along? I wonder if you go back to that moment, and be thankful for the deed, that you did? Speaking disrespectfully of your benefactor, but rather vaunt the name. Little children are accustomed to do so, and they are the most formidable weapon in the two villages. Christians of the world, and the world of learning houses drew nearer and nearer, and the Christians arrived at the Lean tale how they had been attacked on the march by armed bands, and by coming this among the Christians, and the Christians, the pagans, the Christians and villages which the Christians had abandoned, and the Christians set on fire by the insurgents, and, suppose, by the Pagans of the neighborhood, they advanced upon the two posts held by the insurgents and their flock. The two villages more than 4,000 Christians were huddled together, 800 of them were able to bear arms, the rest were all women and children, and old or infirm men. Join in the fight many men of the Christians, two junks which had been dispatched to Cap for help a few days before arrived in the port of Tourg; a force of fifty man were rapidly marched from Ninh Ninh, Tung to bring in the arms and supplies which were on board the boat. Happily, the insurgents did not perceive the importance and the significance of this movement, and the Christians succeeded in safely reaching and bringing into An Ninh two small cannon, two rifles, a barrel of gunpowder, and a box of ammunition. The cannon were probably of the little guns in the hands in most Chinese villages, where they are kept to fire salutes, and to add their bit and noise to the general uproar of the annual festivals. The matchlocks seem to have been heavy and cumbrous, and the ammunition called jingoes.

While An Ninh was being thus strengthened, the pagans had poured down upon the surrounded the large village of Di Lean. The people of the adjacent heathen village of Tong Lai joined in the attack. The assailants seem to have been but little better than an armed mob. They fought badly and with little discipline, and apparently had the kind of men who are ready enough to massacre and flurry when there is no resistance, but do not like fighting at close quarters. The Christians of D-Lean met the attack with a sortie. They issued from their stronghold, with bamboo lances and long swords and bill hooks, drove back the insurgents, taxing their bamboo spears with good effect and pursuing their advantage for some, until fourth quarter. Then Dauth gets the better of the struggle, strikes the hour and bundles the old man off into eternity. The twelve Apostles are brought out each hour. Above them is a figure of Christ, "who blesses with both hands each Apostle in passing" as the bill states the unbelievable fact seems. At noon-tide, noon and night a number of bell ringers with their respective bells with ordinance energy and an old man drops upon his knees, as if some one had kicked his legs out from under him. All these and many other wonders, exposing the family secrets of the Strasburg clock, the beetles, the seasons, the moons, and the globe all run regularly for the last 10 years, and will continue to run for 10 000 years, if the mechanism is not worn out before that time. Strasburg is proud of the wonderful clock, and in other cities tours wantonness and patch of land for their old age, and so he had persuaded her. Situ had gone with him to Prince Edward's Island, though, and lived there, that she might be with him half the time at least, and even this was better than his long sea voyages. And perhaps,

THE IRISH PARTY.

Notable Counsellors of Parnell. Distinguished Patriots in Ireland's Cause. Representative Men from Several Irish Counties.

BY T. D. P. GILL, M. I.

There are two members of the Irish Parliamentary party of whom it would be superfluous to give a "notice" to the readers of an American journal. They have reached that stage of familiarity in the public mind when it is "stale" of them that are in demand rather than that kind of information which the reader prefers to be supplied by the word "notice." Mr. Parnell, now, has become a personage of such historical importance that we may look forward to a John Morley of the future making him the subject of a book all to himself. While of men like Healy, that cloudy and lightning Celtic genius, who is the least understood of any of the group, and Sexton, the subdued Parliament Jesuit (of political orators) and John Dillon, the Irish Sir Galahad, and T. P. O'Connor, a Canaille Immoulins of press and platform, and William O'Brien, United Ireland's editor, at once the Thersites and the Achilles of the Irish Parliament, the most rigid principled, richly-endowed and most practical idealist that has appeared in Irish politics for a century.

OF MORE MEN OF THEM

the public are only cares for impressions of the moment. Their speeches are for analyses, estimates and so forth, and on some other occasion I may perhaps the present writer may even be bold enough to give his impressions upon the men and the work of these men. But what will gratify curiosity most at this time is a brief sketch or two, count of the numbers of the Irish Parliamentary party with whose figures the public eye is less familiar, the men who, if not brightening influence and the hard strife of the Irish Parliamentary party, the work is done in the silence, but whose work if it has been faithfully done, is not the short sense is one of those rather mysterious forces which make themselves felt in the leader, and which, without ever making a speech during a session, are felt, and it is the very sight of their unexhausted presence here made the English Parliament throughout the area, and my quarter of a mean, assuming too much, I trust, to take it for granted that the curiosity of the public is piqued about the Irish party. They are making history of a great scale times, and looker-on who wish to understand the true bearings of the events, rather than wait till by and by, when books will be written absurdly, will naturally be desirous to learn from their newspaper who these persons are whose influence in shaping the course of contemporary history is so great. To plunge, then, at once into the midst of the Irish party.

THE BEST SELECTION TO BEGIN WITH

may be a group of those veterans who are not in Parliament, but who are in the view as say Messrs. Arthur O'Connor, Timothy Harrington, Dwyer Gray, Leamy, Corbett, and Lalor. I was going to include Mr. Sullivan, who is the present Lord Mayor of Dublin, but surely the author of "Old Ireland" is one of the best of our men. Hon. T. D

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1886.

Exemplary Catholic Irishmen.

The Assistant Order of Hibernians is an organization that contains nothing but Catholics within its ranks, hence it should be subservient to the behests of the Ordinary in every Diocese wherein it may exist. Hitherto the Order has been denounced in one Diocese and supported in another, but we hope the day will soon arrive when this benevolent body of Irishmen may make themselves worthy of the full approbation of every Catholic Prelate in the land.

The thirty-seventh National Convention of this Catholic body recently took place in St. Paul, Minnesota, but prior to its assembling Bishop Ireland sent a letter to the State Officers in which he laid down certain Diocesan rules for the government of the A. O. H., and which should be acceded to if the members desired to be recognized by the Bishop of Minnesota. Like true children of the Catholic Church, these dutiful sons obeyed the behest, and Irish Catholics showed themselves by the honorable manner in which they manifested their allegiance to their Bishop in the following letter:

ST. PAUL, May 5, 1886.

RIGHT REV. JOHN IRELAND, Bishop of St. Paul:

We the undersigned officers of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Minnesota, desire to publicly acknowledge our obedience to our Holy Mother Holy Roman Catholic Church and to her through you our most worthy spiritual guide, would respectfully and officially inform you that the order of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of the United States have adopted the following resolution. They are now a part of the Law governing our order in the State Code:

1 We, members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, desiring one and all to faithful sons of the Catholic Church, and as we claim that our organization is sanctioned by the Right Rev. Bishop as a Catholic Association, we pledge ourselves to conduct all its affairs in accordance with the laws and regulations of the Church bearing upon Catholic societies.

2. We submit ourselves loyally to the ordinances of our Ordinary, the Bishop of St. Paul, relating to Catholic societies, whatever such ordinances may exist, or may hereafter be enacted.

3. In a particular manner we promise to abide by the regulations of the Diocese of St. Paul that prohibit the holding of meetings during any kind of Catholic services, the holding of pic-nics or assisted same holidays of obligation, or of sine-non Sundays of obligation, or of Holy Week, Easter Week, or any sort of interfering which may be offered.

JAS. J. KENNEDY State Delegate A. O. H.
WM. A. MCGARRY, State Secretary A. O. H.
R. W. MERRAY State Treasurer A. O. H.

A Protestant Irishman on Irish Catholics.

We have to laugh every week when we read in the local sectarian press long articles lamentingover the present state of affairs in our sister Protestant Orange brethren in the North of Ireland, when the truth is that their long and lugubrious articles complain for mighty fun about nothing, and much more wind than wisdom. Here is an extract from a speech recently made by Mr. J. Jordan, a member of Parliament from West Clare, a Protestant who lives in the County Ennis, Connaught, and who, by two hundred Years ago, occurred that conflict. What Mr. Jordan says he knows from a life-long residence among the people of whom he speaks, what our "separated brethren" say on this subject emanates from the spleen which is in their system simply because the Irish against whom they air their ignorance are Catholics, and such neither have a more holy regard for Hierarchs than they have for that Church which has planted itself on the ruins of Paganism in the Eastern States—from whence the writers in question derived their antipathy to all things Catholic.

At the close of his speech Mr. Jordan thus alluded to the conduct of the Catholics of Ireland towards the Orange enemies.

He did not think the Protestant clergymen in the North of Ireland had say fear for their lives, their liberties or their property. As their religion, property was a very large part of it. They proved alimentarily to Parliament and to the noble Lord Randolph Churchill, the member for Paddington, that could not tell whether they put their trust in God, in the great Tory party or in the purchase and business they used the phrase indiscriminately. Protestant ladies and farmers' wives said they had no fear, and why should the stalwart majority of the military and in the more aggressive part? The truth was that it was peaceful, and not fear, that prevailed. The Catholics of Ireland had conducted all their affairs, in a peaceful, orderly manner, and no matter in what place and power, said they did not wish now to be put in a position with the other people. The loyal minority, as they were called, were enraged because they would have to go into competitive examination with their Roman Catholic countrymen, and get only their fair share of anything that was going. Protestants, he said, had become a tame, and had they would be quite prepared, from the greatest to the least among them, to make the best of it. During the last five or six years of the Land agitation, Protestant landlords were the priests, continually stirring up the people, and give no offence," and I wish that the same had been said on the other side, for when they were told that they might be the case in the North, but if they went to the South they would find Catholic oppressors of Protestants! I have grown to the South and lived for forty-five years, and I have never seen a Protestant oppressed by the Catholics. I wants their Protestant neighbors, if there was discontent or disquiety it was inconsiderate that instead the feeling. It was another question if they had a Land Bill, and if they changed it, and if they had leftwing in England, why, it would be all right. A very worthy minister had said that it would be injurious to Ireland for the Land Act to close to those! Inter-lorers because they would not pay the tax, but they must do so, otherwise they would not pay up. The question was, would those Unionists vote Irish Bill? Of course, they would not. They had no notion of fighting. The honorable member for South Belfast, Mr. William Johnston, reminded him of a vision of the Apocalypse, he had lately had in a angel with the Bible under one wing and a rifle under the other. The honorable member was going to defend the honorable member was going for death or glory. The Ulster Conservatives never could will whether they were going to be Sentenced mutineers or majors in the new Ulster army. If they intend fighting they would need wise, statesmanlike, a commission and a medical department, and they would have to form a good English general. And when all was ready they would have to fight, not against a national army, but against the Queen's army. The fact was that there not do not intend to fight at all, and their defiant language is mere bouncing. Never objected to what was fair, and, I have been consulted by thousands of tenants, and I have been in Ireland for 45 years, and I am ashamed to stand up in the House of Commons and that the Members of Ireland are unanimous against the Bill. I admit that a majority of them are antagonistic, but here, as with the Presbyterians, there is a thinking and growing minority in favor of Home Rule. I have listened to my pastors from Presbyterians who have changed their views since the last election. Orangeism is a Protestant Association of Home Rule, and not to repeat the blunders of the land agitation by giving land to tenants which would only keep the agitation alive.

—We print seven original poems this week, all on themes that will touch a chord in the hearts of all who peruse them.

A Protestant Preacher on "Catholic Frauds."

(SECOND ARTICLE.

"The list of articles published in some of the dioceses of Lower Spain, as relics of the Saints, would fill five hundred pages. It did not flee him with indignation at the gross imposition. At Naples the blood of St. Januarius, chemically manipulated, liquefies every year and trickles down the glass walls of its receptacle; and when, several years ago, during the French occupation, it pertinaciously refused to work its annual miracle, it required but a threatening note from the French Jacobin member to the priests who had charge of it, to induce a reconciliation or an outpouring of blood and to drive the eyes of the people, who had stationed wonder.—Rev. Dr. Stebbins—a recent sermon.

The gullibility of a large portion of the non-Catholic element in America is remarkably illustrated by the fact that those communities have capability enough to accept as truth any assertion made by Protestant preachers against the Catholic Church. No matter how improbable, nay, incredible even—the statements may be, so long as they impugn the recorded evidence of past activities, cast doubts upon the dogmas or sacramental graces of the Catholic Church, asperse the character of Popes, or ridicule the religious belief of nearly 300,000,000 of the earth's population—non-Catholics are regaled by the nasty narration, accept each fabrication for fact, and give credence to Protestant preachers know this fact, hence they constantly keep projecting bigoted prejudice into the minds of their hearers, so as to keep alive in their souls the sparks of that animosity which was implanted in them by a false system of early education. In this way men—otherwise impartial, independent and intelligent—surrender their reason into the keeping and care of men clad in the garb of Religion, but who are in reality ministers of Satan who sow the seed of falsehood in the minds of their fellow-men, and who project the poison of their religious rancor into the unsuspecting ears of those who listen to them.

Catholics, therefore, are often amazed at how at a single gulp the grossest garbage of gospel sharps who fasten on the falsehoods they fabricate against the Catholic Church. The history of the Pope of Rome, the Vicar Shepherd is an open book to all the world. Every public act of her Popes or Prelates is registered so that all can read it. Hence the wonder is that the masses of non-Catholics who are hoodwinked by half-read, prejudiced preachers, do not make themselves acquainted with such Catholic dogmas, miracles, or Catholic events as may be attacked by men who live by libeling the Church of God.

The reason why they do not do this, we presume, is in consequence of the iron of hate having entered their souls, which prompt once made up their minds that no good can come from Rome, they cut themselves at the feet of their Redeemer, and shut up prose before the idol of their ignorant and insignious infatuation.

The false statement made by Dr. Stebbins concerning the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius is a fair sample of the new crop of slanders which sectarian that not ten Unitarians in a thousand ever heard of St. Januarius before, and we doubt if any of them would take the trouble to investigate the truth or the falsehood of Dr. Stebbins' statement.

This miracle, which the Unitarian preacher pitches outside the region of impossibility by saying that it is merely a "chemical manipulation," has now occurred more than Six thousand times in the fourteen hundred and eighty-six years since its first manifestation. Strange, indeed, that with all the intelligence, penetration, wisdom, knowledge, foresight and keen perceptive faculties possessed by the whole Protestant world, no other "chemical manipulation" has ever been discovered to equal this extraordinary phenomenon of changing into pure fresh blood a mass of congealed matter nearly fifteen hundred years old! "Chemical manipulation" is a handy term to throw at people's heads when a preacher seeks to make a point, but Dr. Stebbins would never have made such a ridiculous assertion if he was a chemist—and here we see the vanity of the homely adage well illustrated in the case of a preacher who seeks to prejudice his people against miracles by giving a most absurd reason for their manifestation. No, deluded and deluding Doctor, chemistry repudiates your assertion, for the man has not yet been born who can perform by any chemical process the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius in the same way that it occurs miraculously. "Chemical manipulation," therefore, is of no force as a factor against the occurrence of this miracle, and we only wonder that some of the graduates of our Indian Lake "Universities," who heard Dr. Stebbins' give voice to this rapid nonsense, did not think it worth while to show up the fallacity of his assertion.

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,"

St. Januarius, Bishop or martyr, suffered martyrdom during the Diocletian persecution. He was arraigned for raising some Christian captives whilst they were in jail, then he and his companions were condemned to be exposed to be devoured by beasts in the amphitheatre; but not one of the savage animals could be provoked to touch him or them. The people were amazed, but they attributed the astonishing circumstance to some magical influence possessed by the Christian martyrs. Like Dr. Stebbins, the pagans thought that the Catholic confessors of the faith could perform some "chemical manipulation" by which they possessed charmed lives which neither lions or tigers could destroy. So St. Januarius and his companions were carried to the scaffold, and the sentence was executed not Pursuit, as fiels tes (life.

The city of Naples (of which St. Januarius is supposed by some writers to be a native), had the honor to become the custodian of his relics, and whenever the origin of Mount Vesuvius—eight miles distant—threatened to overwhelm the city, recourse was had to the intercession of St. Januarius. His relics were brought forth, duly venerated, and the favorable response to the prayers of the people was manifested by the coagulated blood—which is preserved in two glass phials, one enclosed within the other—becoming dissolved and bubbling up as fresh as when it flowed in the veins of the saint—whenever the vessel containing it was brought in close proximity to the religious containing the head of St. Januarius.

This miracle, therefore, is no "modern Popish invention," nor does it come down to us through such much condemned period which people so falsely and foolishly designate as the "Dark Ages," but it comes down to us with the external character of being within four hundred years as old as Christianity itself!

Now let us see what a brigade of writers we can bring into court in order to successfully overthrow the shallow subterfuge of Dr. Stebbins. First there comes Father Ventura, Jullius Cesar Capaccius, Summontius, Chiocarelli, and other early writers of Neapolitan history, who give evidence that this miracle occurred from about the year 400, at which time the relics of St. Januarius were translated to Naples.

Then we have the celebrated Baronius, Fr. Blandus, Pope Benedict XIV., Pope Pius II., and many contemporaneous writers who have come down to our own times who witnesses who saw the miracle and who published to the world their full faith in its miraculous nature. These witnesses are no less personages than the Earl of Perth, Lord Chancellor of Scotland at the fall of the Stuarts, whose letters, written to his sister, the Countess of Errol, are preserved at Drummond Castle, and have been published by the Camden Society. Then we have strayed against Dr. Stebbins singular and silly "chemical manipulation" the distinguished historian, Father Harter, who saw this miracle, but not with the equisiting spectacles of Dr. Stebbins. Then we have the Rev. George Townsend, D. D., Canon and prebendary of Durham, who saw the miracle on May 7th, 1856. Henri Cauvain, one of the editors of the Paris Constitutionnel, who saw the miracle on the 19th of September, 1856, and whose account was published in the Courrier des Etats Unis of New York in October 1856. Rev. J. Spencer Northcote, M. A., of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whose narrative appeared in the London Rambler for February 1857; and Rev. John Virtue, who saw the miracle in 1849, and whose account thereof can be read in the New York Freeman's Journal, in the volume for 1853.

We have selected these eye-witnesses of the miraculous liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius so as to show Dr. Stebbins how shamefully ignorant he was of the facts in the case when he so flippantly denounced the whole matter by the appalling conveyed in that absurd expression "chemical manipulation," as if any book-worm could continuously humbug the world for nearly fifteen centuries by any "chemical manipulation," and stay found out! Yet we are startled by the hundreds of thousands of non-Catholic sceptics who have crowded around the altar of the churches in Naples when the miracle has occurred, and we will leave any further comment on Dr. Stebbins's singular sacrilegious and silly "chemical manipulation" to the intelligent reader.

But there is another side to this question, and we will let him tell in his own words the story of his sacrilegious conduct when he covered the mystery by which this wonderful "chemical manipulation" is made:

"About the elevation it time of the 18th May, the old Gentleman, who was sitting on the bench by upon his place, cry (I say, "Illustra Petro et Pauline Ecclesiae Ecclesiae" in Latin) and brought it to me. I, who had in going out of the sacristy, put on the robe and vestments that belong to the priest who celebrates, and I took the vials in my arms, and with tears I cry to Heaven! I was the only priest that gave thanks for the latter with all the fervor that I could. I was in an ecstasy of joy, and I felt as one for long heard, could offer up; and, indeed, I felt as if I could offer up the sun to you. But, that I was mad—that it was something in my mind—that I was in a state of ecstasy—that I was fit by into the bosom of our dearest Mother, the Holy Roman Church—that I say that it was wonderful in his Saints. The whole people saw the vials, and they saw the blood in the vials, and they had taken pity on them; and they were so pleased with me for having said better, and I was so pleased, I was only a priest, and not troubled at my not being so privileged as to see the miracle, that the very nurse-maid and of the people smiled at me as I passed along the street. I heard the old Man in the sacristy say: And now I have described to you one of the happiest moments of my life, the fulfillment of which I hope shall never leave me, and I hope it may one day be a source of consolation to you too; but this must be in God's work. The Principal Priest of the Cathedral, who came to us at the end of the week Mass, and, to name of all the noble, and, in the name of the Cardinal, he said, and I offer here about it. It is an adoption, also thing to confessed, that nine-tenths of our time honoured priests are ignorant of the approach of the hand. The Roman lady who had gathered it from off the ciborium with a sponge had, in squeezing of it into the glass, let a bit of it fall into the box, which one seen in the blood in this very day.

Frederick Harter, the distinguished historian, and at one time President of the Consistory of the Calvinist Church in the Canton of Schaffhausen, has given to the world a very full account of the deep religious impression which this miracle made upon him—he subsequently became a Catholic—and he then describes the very fully which he witnessed in the church of St. Clara on May 4th, 1844.

The author of evening were just coming on when the peal of bells announced the entry of the Cathedral, and the celebration of Mass and assembled with people. The nave, either of aisles, and the choir, of course, were carried before the main altar, upon which lay the relics of the holy martyr and pure of the kings, Jesus of Naples, encased in a four glistening with the Blessed Sacrament, and other precious shrine. Afterwards the vial containing the blood, and in a spectacle of extra clam, was brought and placed on the altar on the epistle side. It drew as near to the altar as the rails, and I was so overcome with emotion at seeing Pontiff, a step from which I could observe everything clearly. At first I was tempted to think that it was but little consistent with propriety that this ceremony, which, at least according to the rites of the Church in Naples, was of the most eminently religious character, should take place in the midst of such a sight-seeking and fitful-desiring, and, when seen, remarkable, Mass, as to offer, even so case as the highest and last stage of the altar also, by way of caution to other captains critics among the anti-Catholic clergy, that there is no objection they can now forming against the supernatural liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius which has so freely been advanced and relied. This miracle has been attacked by numerous enemies of the Church, each of whom possessed more learning, brains and experience, than all the non Catholic preachers of California combined, but both Catholic and Protestant alike have met and their objections in every instance and refuted them just as successfully as we have routed the Rev. Dr. Stebbins' shallow subterfuge. Pius (and lot us pray) Unitarian Church in the City of San Francisco.

Ne Aut Hostis: Burlesd long before Christ—Sixth Rev.

"Sheets and" can ratify the refined deed, Reveal the Essence of the Eucharistic Bread, Increase the sources of Christian Faith, Hope and Charity, or annual master's baby blood.

Seminary Collections in the Diocese of Grass Valley.

The annual collection for the purpose of providing Priests for the Diocese of Grass Valley, will be taken up in all the churches of the Diocese on next Sunday, which will be the ninth Sunday after Easter, and as any of our readers propose means in order to urge them to give generously towards the work of increasing Almighty God's representatives on earth, we ask them to read carefully the superb sermon on "The Dignity of the Priesthood," by the eminent Dominican Father Monsabre, which we publish in the first page this week.

There are thousands of Catholics who do not fully realize the supreme dignity which is conferred upon a man when he is raised to Holy Orders, and it would be well for themselves if such people could be brought to realize that the Priesthood is the highest and greatest takes precedence of all other acts of respect which we pay to our fellow man. As Father Monsabre says: "Souls of this world for a greater man than a priest, and all of assist in securing for a diocese additional priests to serve God at His altar, will have their reward in great blessings here below, and the bright prospect of eternal happiness hereafter.

The propagation of the faith, the property of the true Church, the conversion of sinners, the salvation of souls, and the glory of God—from the rising to the setting of the sun—depends in great measure upon the numerical strength of the priesthood. Unless Valley is not a rich diocese, but the all-demonstrated love which the Catholics of that diocese have for their zealous Bishop will suffice indicate souls that generous Catholic open-handed charity for God's cause which will result in securing for the purpose of educating priests enough to supply all and enable Bishop Mangnan to provide many additional missionaries for his diocese.

We do not think that any priests have a share in all their good works, and—we come to reflect upon the stupendous work performed by the Church—that in every day, together with the constantly recurring works of charity and mercy which are performed by the Church, a reflection on the part of Catholics in order to convince them that it is a glorious privilege to gain such great indulgences as the Church can bestow, which will supply the defect of the indulgence. The real primary effect of the Rosary is the securing of the salvation of mankind and the augmentation of their eternal beatitude, "which is," as St. Thomas teaches, "infinitely better than the removal of the temporal punishment brought about by indulgences. Good (paramum caritatis) in infinitum melius est quam diminuere poenae temporalis" (S. Thom. in Sentiarum, Dist. 20, Quaest. 2 ad 2 dum. Vide etiam Natal. Alexander, tt. 6., Theolog. Dogmat. et Moral. lib. 2, de Indulgentiis, cap. 1).

The Blessed Mother has herself declared to Blessed Alan, (1. P., that her Psalmists (Rosaries) are doing in this world, in the way the Rosary and in complying with this obligation, what the Blessed are always doing on Heaven, viz., praising and thanking God Almighty and herself—Pauter mo in mundo et quod quod facis in Cuelo Semper facinori Dis ou Deo Fratl., c. 19). The faithful rosarious, whether living or dead, have within their reach many other advantages besides those referred to, because, in addition to the merits accumulated by themselves, they participate in the satisfactory works of all the other members of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, and of the members of the three Orders of Penance, and sisters of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary. All true Christians share then, in the first place, in the merits of the Holy Fathers of the first Order of St. Dominic by their rule are obliged to celebrate annually for all who are entitled to participate in the spiritual blessings of their Order (Constitut. Ord. Praedicat. Dist. 1, cap. 10).

We can safely say, considering the number, it greats in the Order and the number of masses such one has to celebrate for the and spectral, that remarks have a share in every one hundred and fifty thousand masses. They share in all the good done by the Dominicans, and in all the good done by the world by the disciples of St. Dominic concentrated to that in religion. They share in all the good done by the brothers and sisters of the third Order of St. Dominic, a widely spread star Christian, and likewise in all the good effected by the Dominicans, and by many saints, or rather effected by so many saints, or rather effected by so many saints.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION.

The Devotion of the "Forty Hours Adoration" will be held in the following Places at the time Designated for Each:

PARISHES.	PLACES.	TIME.
St Ignatius, San Francisco	Fifth Sunday after Easter.
St. Joseph's, San Jose	Second Sunday in June.
Notre Dame Convent, San Francisco	Pentecost.
Convent of the Visitation, Oakland	Trinity Sunday.
SUNDAYS AFTER PENTECOST.
St. John's, San Francisco	Second
Mary Francis Convent, San Francisco	Third
St. Patrick's, San Francisco	Fourth
St. Mary's, San Francisco	Sixth
Spanish, San Francisco	Seventh
St. Vincent's Asylum, San Rafael	Eighth
St. Dominic's, San Francisco	Ninth
St. Alphonsus, Oakland	Tenth
St. Rose's, San Francisco	Eleventh
St. Vincent's, Vallejo	Twelfth
St. Brendan's, San Francisco	Thirteenth
St. Lambert's, San Leandro	Fourteenth
St. Teresa's, San Francisco	Fifteenth
St. Patrick's, San Jose	Sixteenth

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

MAY 30—Fifth Sunday after Easter.
31—ROGATION DAY.
JUNE 1—ROGATION DAY.
2—ROGATION DAY.
3—Thursday, Ascension, Holyday of Obligation.
4—Friday, St. Francis Caracciolo, Conf.
5—Saturday, St. Boniface, Apostle of Germany, Martyr.

A CAUTION TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Again we desire to call the attention of correspondents to the fact that all matter intended for publication in the Monitor must be in our office by Tuesday noon, as the paper is ready for press Tuesday night, and the difficulties so occasioned are very great, and should be avoided if possible.

DEATH OF REV. EDWARD HARTY.

Again we are called upon to chronicle the death of another beloved Priest of this Archdiocese. Rev. Father Harty, assistant rector of St. Thomas's Church, departed this life yesterday noon, after three weeks of suffering from asthma, heart disease and bronchial affections which he bore with that fortitude and resignation to the will of God which evince true and Catholic faith. Father Harty was born in Ireland in 1844, and consequently was in his 42d year. He made his philosophical and theological studies in Kilkenny, finishing at Maynooth College. He was ordained at Maynooth in 1869, and his arrival in this city he was appointed one of the Professors of Ecclesiastical History in San Jose. When the Seminary was closed Father Harty was appointed assistant Rector of Santa Clara College, which position he acted faithfully up to the hour when he was called to his reward.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Harty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Harty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Harty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

GLADSTONE STILL GAINING.

Good Prospects for the Passage of the Home Rule Bill.

New York, May 23.—Thomas F. sent us the following cable to the New York London: On 23, Gladstone's health is still improving. The physicians are flattering some yesterday's Parliament, and the Ministerial Parliamentary Committee, which is not only thirty two Liberal members were in favor of the Home Rule Bill, and the Liberal majority will stand very strongly with the object of securing the latter's consent to the passage of a bill for representation at Ireland.—Chicago Times.

Irish Thanks to Gladstone.

The most Rev Bartholomew Woodlock, D. D., Primate of Ireland, Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian, Armagh, and Commissaries and the clergy of this Archdiocese have issued the following address expressing the Premier's Home Rule and Land Purchase measures, and the Parliamentary Committee's decision to support the proposals, political and certain reasons, and promote the prosperity of Ireland.

MORMON FRAUDS EXPOSED.

Missionaries Narrowly Escape the Vengeance of a Mob.

New York, May 21.—The Tribune's Fayette City (Pa.) special says: Seven Mormon missionaries from Utah began a series of meetings at the Valley schoolhouse in Washington township, one mile south of this place, last Sunday. The attendance was large, and they had no difficulty in the services. Early Monday morning, Elder Jones, one of the missionaries, was called out of his bed by a party of masked men, who dragged the unfortunate Elder to a neighbor's house, and he escaped the hands of the mob, but was roughly used by the men.

The Mormons fled to Pittsburgh, where they have sent for reinforcements. The people are very excited, and the belief is that the Mormons will be driven out of the township and government of the Confederacy, every true member is admitted during the time of the Most Holy Rosary, in all the good works that are done, or shall be done at any time by any or all of the members of the three Orders of St. Dominic, and the brothers and sisters of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary. All true Christians share then, in the first place, in the merits of the Holy Fathers of the first Order of St. Dominic by their rule are obliged to celebrate annually for all who are entitled to participate in the spiritual blessings of their Order (Constitut. Ord. Praedicat. Dist. 1, cap. 10).

We can safely say, considering the number, it greats in the Order and the number of masses such one has to celebrate for the and spectral, that remarks have a share in every one hundred and fifty thousand masses. They share in all the good done by the brothers and sisters of the third Order of St. Dominic, a widely spread star Christian, and likewise in all the good effected by the Dominicans, and by many saints, or rather effected by so many saints, or rather effected by so many saints.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

Among the mourning relatives of Father Hearty are his father, who resides in Ireland, and his brother, who is a priest in the Order of St. Dominic.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

IN THE COMMONS.

Justin McCarthy Makes a Strong Plea for Home Rule. Will Vote in Debate. Two Weeks More Before Division.

London, May 21.—Gladstone in the Commons this afternoon stated that he would, on Monday next, ask the House for a vote of supply for the month of June, and then to ask for a bill for daily debate until the bill was passed, in order to avoid the necessity of introducing a separate bill for the Act expiring.

Justin McCarthy resumed the debate on the Home rule bill. He said that the provisions of home rule had lightened recently, thanks to the Conservatives, who had made a day of Tory, and they could not afford to wait for the elaboration of the scheme of imperial federation. The Irish Parliament would join federation, when matured. He would rather the Orangemen were friends than enemies. He hoped they did not mean to fight. They might rather to assist in regenerating their fatherland. He hoped the Ulster Unionists would not make the bill a dead letter for another year. Happen what may, Ireland would be a loyal ally, secured self government for Ireland.—Chicago Times.

Chilters, Home Secretary, said that such there was no danger in granting to Ireland the power which Canada and Australia had been enjoying in refusing such powers. He believed that, so far as Ireland was concerned, the Bill would be accepted by Ireland cordially, and would be a boon to the Irish people and a benefit to Ireland on the part of the Irish people.

Sir Henry Bemberton, Conservative member for Kilmarnock, said that he was sorry that the Government had not taken the opinion of the country on the question of the Liberal Government, and perhaps we shall never learn how their redpondence with Ireland. He was sorry that the worst that sorts an arrangement has resulted in a feeling of hatred between the people of Ireland and Great Britain. Hatred is a feeling which ought to be eradicated, and he did not think that the bill would be the best means of doing so.

Sir Lyon Playfair said that he was sorry that he believe the gateway with existing money commissioners, and that the Irish people were entirely relational "That's false."

Mr. Sexton said that he was withdraw his expression.

Sexton rose to speak, but the Speaker at the moment called upon Mayo Sandycoen to withdraw the word "false" which he had applied to the statement of Sir Lyon Playfair.

Sexton said that he was ready to

Farm and Home.

A Child's Manners at the Table.

Nothing attracts attention so much as a child's behavior. And good manners are so easily cultivated as bad ones, if parents will only begin right. Especially annoying is a child's bad manners at the table. An exchange adverting to this subject, truly says:

"There is no excuse for it. It is the parent's fault every time. Children will behave in a quiet and pleasant manner if they are taught to do so from the first. If a very little child must be present, in order that his mother may come to the table, let him have a neat piece of oil-cloth under his plate and cup, and be furnished with a napkin or large bib besides. Every child likes to sit at the table, but he should be made to understand from the beginning that bad behavior invitably insures his removal to another room with the priestage of finishing his meal. Come afterward when no one is present to be annoyed. An occasional lesson of the kind will effectually produce a quiet, obedient, and respectful child, waiting pleasantly for his turn to be served and talking only when it is proper for him to do so. If a mother wants to destroy her influence over her child, let her, with a flushed and worried face exclaim 'Johnny do not act so, I can't do anything with him.' He has won the victory, knows it, and will act as best pleases himself. Mamma will continue to scold, Johnny will go on laughing at ignoring them, she might just as well have made a pleasant, nicer mannered child him as anything else.

The Evils of Violent Exercise.

The cow eats the grass and lies down to chew her cud; the man bolts his dinner and rushes to his business. The cow usually lives her allotted time, unless carried off by some acute contagious or infectious disease; the man becomes a martyr first to dyspepsia, and secondarily to some disease of nutrition and dies very prematurely.

In the Lancet is reported the case of a healthy boy (belonging to a robust, healthy family), who had never suffered from rheumatism, scarlet fever, or, indeed, from any disease save chicken pox, who died suddenly under the saddest circumstances, because his death was so thoroughly preventable. After coming home from school one day he ate a hearty dinner and immediately commenced to play cricket. Finding the time drawing near for the afternoon session, he ran to school, a quarter of a mile, and as he entered the yard fell unconscious to the ground. In a minute he was dead, notwithstanding the faithful and persistent practice of artificial respiration. At the post-mortem examination all the organs were found healthy, but the stomach was found full.

Here clearly was death due to exercise, the load of stomach being the needed exciting cause. We have are this sounded the warning against violent exercise; iron muscles generally indicate a hypertrophied heart; the athlete is not destined to become a long-lived, respectable and useful man; he is all right in his place, and is a popular beast, but he is doomed to an early dissolution. It may be accepted as a general truism that any labor or amount of exercise that will cause the heart to jump against the chest wall is exercise carried to an excessive and shorning extent.

Gates of Happiness.

All men and women should rejoice to remain part child all through life, however long its course may run. The games, the frolics, the roar, are as much a part of humanity as its natural power to laugh or to perceive the points of wit. Amusement is one of the forms of human happiness. This happiness, like that of Thebes, has a hundred gates for its coming and going—the gate of sport, for man weeps when he is happy, and made or in re-visiting his mother's home; the gate of pensiveness, for he is happy when he reads 'Gray's Elegy' or walks in the reeling autumn leaves; the gate of admiration, for man is happy amid the beauty of nature and of art; the gate of friendship, when heart find its companion heart; the gate of hope, for man is happy when the coming days are pictured with those sweet figures of expectation. Of these hundred gates of happiness, amusement makes one—planned by the Builder of human life. It must open before us and we may all pass in and out so long as the heart shall remain unbroken by death or grief.

The New Process of Making Butter.

A resident of Amador county has discovered a new process of making butter. The Ledger describes the process thus: The butter is made out of cream, and the method is exceedingly simple. Fi cousists of boiling the cream for about three quarters of an hour, which has the effect of evaporating the watery matter. After boiling the material it is strained through a cloth, that portion which pass through the cloth is butter, that which remains in the cloth being chosen. It is claimed that the power kind of butter is obtained by this method. We have seen and tasted better made by the process. In appearance it cannot be told from ordinary butter. To the palate, however, it lacks that creamy taste. The cheese is a dark-brown color, and is unpalatable. This butter will keep any length of time, without the least mixture of salt. The inventor does not expect that it will supersede the store made butter for table use, but thinks it is far superior for culinary purposes, being more economical. A larger amount of butter can be secured by this process from the same quantity of cream than by the usual process. A patent has been applied for the process.

—According to the last annual report of the Department of Medicine of the Kingdom of Saxony diphtheria has frightfully destroyed that part of Germany, not less than 20,000 children having died from the scourge during the last four years. Of this number 7,865 died in 1885, while twelve years ago, in 1873, the number dying by diphtheria was only 1,704—which evidence the fact that the epidemic is on the increase.

—The man who intelligently thinks and acts for himself will respect the same characteristics in others, and will extend the same hospitality and sympathy of thought and word that he desires for himself.

—Men who complain most loudly about the inequalities of the human lot are generally a little blind to those great stores of wealth and blessing that no class can buy.

—Why is it that Carroll and Tilton, Clothiers and Furnishing Goods dealers, 873 Market street are so financially strong and carry so large a stock, while so many firms in their line of business went under during the hard times that have been in existence for the past two years? Reason they bought in very best kind of goods for cash, thereby getting great bargains when the firms that have accumulated bought on credit at reduced prices.

—Samuel M. Shortridge, the rising young lawyer of this City, and who made so fine a speech on account of the Pacific Railroad Commission, has opened his office in the Sutter Building. Sutter the soldier of France, as Memorial Day proves, is accepted by its citizens, and therefore the people of France are assured of a "Feast of Reason."

—Ayer's Sarsaparilla has such concentrated, curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and purest blood purifier known.

—Mrs. Hawkins cured at once by "Diffo."

Family Fun.

A "Mixed" Family.

"I got acquainted with a young widow, observes a recent writer, "who lived with her stepdaughter in the same house. I married the widow. Shortly afterward my father fell in love with the stepdaughter of my wife and married her. My wife became the mother-in law and she the daughter-in-law of my own father, my wife's stepdaughter by my marriage, was the stepdaughter of my wife. My father's wife has a boy; he is naturally my stepbrother because he is the son of my father and of my stepmother; but because he is the son of my wife's stepdaughter, so is my wife the grandmother of the little boy, and I am the grandfather of my stepbrother. My wife also has a boy, my stepmother is consequently the stepsister of my boy, and is also his grandmother, because he is the child of her stepson, and my father is the brother-in-law of my son, because he has got his stepsister for a wife. I am the brother-in-law of my mother, my wife is the aunt of my own son, my son is the grandson of my father, and I am my own grandfather."

Wrote a Check Right off.

The other day a farmer looking man entered a Griswold street bank with a check which he handed over to the paying teller.

"No money here."

"What! Are you out of money?" asked the teller.

"Oh, no. I mean that the man whose name is signed there has no money on deposit here," said the teller.

"Is that so? Why, he's one of the nicest men I ever met."

"That may be; but his check isn't worth anything here."

"Isn't ok? Why, he boarded with me a whole month, and we think a great deal of him. Maybe he has got money here, and it has been mislaid some how."

"The check is worthless, sir. He never had a dollar here."

"Never did, eh? I don't see how it comes about. When I asked him for his board money he wrote this check out as quick as a wink. You couldn't pay it and giust him for the money, eh?"

The teller looked at him in a sorrowful way for a moment, and the man continued:

"You'd better do that way. I hate to hurt his feelings, you know."

"I tell you that the check is worthless, and I don't want you to bother me any more!" exclaimed the teller.

"You don't, eh! Well, I won't, but I think it's a mean sort of a trick on your part. When a man goes and writes a check right off like he did it enough to be paid. When I go home and he asks me if I got the money do you s'pose I'm going to tell him what you said? Not enough!" I don't hot nobody's feelings if I can help it."

A Little Lame and Started Early.

They were standing on the front stairs and he was saying, "I could die for you."

"Then the dressmaker's bill is paid and a pair of No. 12 boots came out. The young man started into a deep sigh.

"I thought that thing said he could die for you," said the parent; "where's he gone now?"

"Well, pa, judging from the time of those boots I guess he's gone to arrange for the funeral."

Sad Lapse of Memory.

A wealthy citizen of a neighboring city had been out until the small hours with convivial companions. It was not exactly a "dry locality" that he had visited and he arrived home slightly exhilarated—the gay adjective, by describing several erratic rather than geometrical lines, to get to his bedroom and into a chair! Then he called to his wife in a stage whisper:

"Mary, pa, pulling from the tree of those apples!"

"No money here."

"What! Are you out of money!" asked the editor.

"Oh, no. I mean that the man whose name is signed there has no money on deposit here," said the teller.

"Is that so? Why, he's one of the nicest men I ever met."

"That may be; but his check isn't worth anything here."

"Isn't ok! Why, he boarded with me a whole month, and we think a great deal of him. Maybe he has got money here, and it has been mislaid some how."

"The check is worthless, sir. He never had a dollar here."

"Never did, eh! I don't see how it comes about. When I asked him for his board money he wrote this check out as quick as a wink. You couldn't pay it and giust him for the money, eh?"

The teller looked at him in a sorrowful way for a moment, and the man continued:

"You'd better do that way. I hate to hurt his feelings, you know."

"I tell you that the check is worthless, and I don't want you to bother me any more!" exclaimed the teller.

"You don't, eh! Well, I won't, but I think it's a mean sort of a trick on your part. When a man goes and writes a check right off like he did it enough to be paid. When I go home and he asks me if I got the money do you s'pose I'm going to tell him what you said? Not enough!" I don't hot nobody's feelings if I can help it."

A Question of Quantity.

"Some folks say I'm conceited," remarked young Pepinjay the other day, "but I'm not. I don't believe in hiding what talent I've got under a bushel, that's all."

"That's where you're right young man," exclaimed a by-stander, approvingly. "I wouldn't waste a bushel on it, if I were you. A small eight peat measure would be amply sufficient."

A Smart Reject.

First Boy—"My ma says I mustn't play with you, because your father is nothing but a shoemaker." Second Boy—"Who's your father a shoemaker." First Boy—"My says he is a manufacturer." Second Boy—"Then he must be a thousand times worse than my father. I guess I won't play with you any more."

—"What is the best covering for the head?" demands a western journal. Hair isn't bad.

NEW PLAN OF LIFE ENDOWMENT!

EQUITY BENEFIT ASSOCIATION,

Incorporated under the Laws of the State of California

HOME OFFICE:

Room 6, Odd Fellows' New Building, Cor. 7th. and Market Streets.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

No Medical Examination Required.
Same Rates for all Ages.
Benefits Paid on the Last Day of Each Month.
Old Members Have no Advantage over the Younger.
Ten Cash Benefits Paid on Each Certificate During Life.

THE EQUITY BENEFIT ASSOCIATION OFFERS SUPERIOR INDUCEMENTS TO all working men and women (women are admitted on the same footing as men). Certificates of Membership issued for amounts of $1,000, $2,000 and $3,000, payable to her legal parts, or per ident by by 60 Lines of our Association.

OFFICERS:

W. F. TAYLOR, M. D. ..... President
W. C. VANDERCOOK ..... Comptroller
J. N. RUSSELL, Jr. ..... Secretary
W. S. LUTHER ..... Assistant Secretary
PACIFIC BANK ..... Treasurer
W. H. MUNROE ..... General Agent

AGENTS WANTED

Canada, to whom liberal terms will be given. Address: J. N. RUSSELL, Jr., Secretary, Odd Fellows' Building, San Francisco.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,

873 Market Street,

—WITH A LINE OF—

GENT'S ^ BOY'S

CLOTHING,

Furnishing Goods,

HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible

CARROLL & TILTON,

873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,

And Joy with JONES & CO.

LEBENBAUM BROS.

Fine Groceries,

215 SUTTER ST.

Polk Street, Cor. California.

SADDLERY.

PATRICK DOYLE,

1011 Market Stre t, S. F.

Repairing Carefully Done.

Off Full line of Trunks constantly on hand. '83

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

San Francisco

WHOLESALE—

LIQUOR DEALER.

Established 1870.

We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.

For Sale Cheap

Table Wines ..... 50c. 60c. 75c. and $1.
Angelica Wines ..... $1. $1.25 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard. ..... $2 p. doz. $15.
Old Port or Sherry. $1. $1.25. $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies ..... $2.50. $3. $3.50 and $4.
Bourbon Whiskey. ..... $1.50. $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc. $2 per gal. and upwards

(Also Wines and Liquors at low cut rates

BENZIGER BROTHERS

NEW YORK, 36 & 38 Barclay Street.
CINCINNATI, O., 143 Main Street.
ST. LOUIS, Mo., 206 South 4th St.

Manufacturers and Importers of

Banners and Flags

of all kinds,

Scarfs, Sashes, Collars, Badges, Hats, Caps, Metal Badges, Emblems, etc., etc.

Banner Crosses, Knobs, Spears, Eagles, Embroidery, etc.

Embroideries, Oil Paintings, Silks, Damasks, Cretonne, Fringes, Hosiery, etc.

Send for our Illustrated Price-List

It will cost you any one's advantage and let one see our goods and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

The leading House in Regalia.

TAILORS.

JOHN KAVANAGH,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

6 New Montgomery Street,

PALACE HOTEL, F. P.

The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks Specialty

D. REDMOND,

Merchant Tailor,

1942 Mission Street

Bet. 15th and 16th Sts., San Francisco

Suits from $20 upward. Pants from $5 upward. Good Fit Guaranteed. Satisfaction Well Treated Customers.

N. SWEENY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

113 Second street,

A few doors south of Mission ..... San Francisco

Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty

FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF

SAFES!

Church Safes and Tabernacles.

MICHELL & RICHARDS,

208 California Street. San Francisco

THE GREAT

SILVER Kidney and Liver PILLS REMEDY.

906 Market St., N. F.

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NATIVE WINES.

One Bottle ..... from 25 to 50 cents
Half Bottle ..... 15 to 25 cents
By the Gallon ..... 50 cts. to $1.50

Native and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon and unfermented grape juice.

J. C. RASSELING, 217 Dupont Street

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

KNABE

PIANOS.

Unqualifedly and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 652 Market St., S. F.

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

ESTEY

PIANOS

Formerly the Pat. Arion Piano,

THE OLD FAVORITE!

(Beware of Bogus Albion)

BENJ. CURTAZ & SON,

20. O'Farrell Street, San Francisco

EDUCATIONAL

URSULINE ACADEMY,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

SANTA ROSA, - - SONOMA CO., CAL.

For Particulars Address the Superiores of the Ursulines, Santa Rosa.

H. M. NEWHALL & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,

GENERAL AGENTS

National Assurance Company of Ireland.

Alias Assurance Company of London.

Hoylston Mutual Insurance Company of Boston.

OFFICE, SUNSHINE BLDG. San Francisco

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA

This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies six large buildings, with extensive study halls, playrooms, covered promenades, ambulating yard, etc. It possesses a new complete Philosophical Apparatus, also a fine collection of Mineralogy and Geology. It has the Latest Improved Apparatus for Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Purposes. The latter is a new building (1885) has gas, bath, dormitories, and is fitted up for the purpose.

Diplomas are given in two departments the Classical and Scientific and certificates in the Commercial Course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-annually in advance.)

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once $ 15 00
Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches of Literature, Use of Bed and Bedding, Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Baths, etc., per session 150 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to the Jesuits Novitiate, 214 Hayes Street, San Francisco.

REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J., President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

SAN JOSE, ... CALIFORNIA

This institution offering the most prominent advantages to young ladies desirous to receive a solid and refined education, was established in the year 1868, it was incorporated by the State Legislature, and subsequently the state body conferred on it the rights and privileges of collegiate institutions.

It occupies large buildings, with extensive grounds, and commands a view of the whole Santa Clara Valley and the Mountains. Extensive Gardens and Orchards are attached. The course of instruction embraces all the branches necessary to the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per annum $200 00

EXTRA CHARGES

Piano, with lessons, per annum $60 00
Vocal Music, Class Lessons 20 00
Drawing, Painting, German, and Latin, each 20 00
Drawing, per season 10 00
Painting in Water Colors, per season 10 00
Painting in Oil, per season 10 00
Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00
Graduation Fee 10 00
Physician's Fees in case of sickness.

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

SCHOOL YEAR BEGINS AUGUST 1.

Terms per month (cash in advance.)

Tuition in the 1st and 2d College Classes $ 20
Tuition in the 3rd and 4th College Classes 1 50
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Preparatory Classes 1 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 1 00
Music (Vocal and Instrumental), Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form extra charges, as do Boarders' Washing, Bed and Bedding. French and Spanish are given gratuitously, as also in Plain and Fancy Needle work.

N. B.—A private conveyance is furnished, moderate rates, for the convenience of pupils residing in Oakland, Alameda, etc.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers, offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to obtain a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and corrected in the classroom.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

(Payable half yearly in advance).

Board, Tuition and Washing $192 00
Entrance Fee 10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines 10 00
Vacation at College 50 00
Day Students 60 00

Music and Drawing form extra charges. For further particulars address

BRO. BETTELIN, President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

SUNSHINE BLDG. San Francisco

This institution, founded in 1866, chartered in 1876 by Act of the Legislature of California, and empowered to confer Collegiate Honors, is situated on Hayes Street, opposite the Old Mission Church.

The course of instruction embraces all the branches necessary to the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per annum $200 00

EXTRA CHARGES

Piano, with lessons, per annum $60 00
Vocal Music, Class Lessons 20 00
Drawing, Painting, German, and Latin, each 20 00
Drawing, per season 10 00
Painting in Water Colors, per season 10 00
Painting in Oil, per season 10 00
Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00
Graduation Fee 10 00
Physician's Fees in case of sickness.

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

SCHOOL YEAR BEGINS AUGUST 1.

Terms per month (cash in advance.)

Tuition in the 1st and 2d College Classes $ 20
Tuition in the 3rd and 4th College Classes 1 50
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Preparatory Classes 1 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 1 00
Music (Vocal and Instrumental), Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form extra charges, as do Boarders' Washing, Bed and Bedding. French and Spanish are given gratuitously, as also in Plain and Fancy Needle work.

N. B.—A private conveyance is furnished, moderate rates, for the convenience of pupils residing in Oakland, Alameda, etc.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,

RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.

This academy for young ladies, under the charge of the Sisters of Notre Dame, is situated on an eminence in the pleasant and accessible town of Rio Vista, and is provided with the best sanitary arrangements. The course of instruction includes all the branches necessary to the education of a lady. Particular attention is paid to the moral training of the pupils. The Academy is furnished with the best of apparatus for illustrating the various sciences. Pupils of all persuasions will be received. The Academy is provided with a large and well-ventilated dormitory. Pupils received at any time during the session, but no deduction will be made for those who remain but a month.

TERMS:

(Payable in gold, coin, or its equivalent.)

Board and Tuition, in English, French, Spanish and Latin ..... $ 30 00
Washing 30 00
Vocal Music (private lessons) 10 00
Harp, Guitar, Violin, Piano, Drawing and Painting 10 00
Use of Bed and Bedding 10 00

Terms per month, in advance:

Entire Class $1 50
Intermediate Class 1 00
Primary Class 0 50
Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument 10 00
Music, Piano lessons, without use of instrument 5 00

NB. No entrance fee required. The further initiation $10 00

N. W. CAMILLE, Secretary.

ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,

Golden Gate Ave. San Francisco

CONDUCTED BY

THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC.

This academy pleasantly situated in the Mission Addition offers every opportunity to young ladies desirous of obtaining a thorough education. The course of studies embraces all the branches required in the best academies.

SISTER SUPERIOR

Academy of Our Lady of Angels.

SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA.

This institution, conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame affords an opportunity of obtaining a solid and refined education, a moral and intellectual education. The parents of pupils are earnestly recommended the Academy, as the influence accorded to bring the pupils to habits of economy and to render them useful members of society is important.

The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences on the 1st Monday in August and ends on the 1st Thursday in June.

Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

For quarter, payable in advance.

Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Board, Tuition, Washing and Bedding $60 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.

French and Spanish lessons free.

SACRAMENTO INSTITUTE,

Twelfth and K streets,

SACRAMENTO, ... CAL.

LIMITED NUMBER OF BOARDERS RECEIVED. Every facility to be given to attend Christmas and Easter Holidays. Pupils received at any time during the session. Terms, Tuition and Washing, $25 per quarter. For particulars apply to BRO GENEVIEVE, Director.

A GREAT BOOK ON A GREAT QUESTION!

THE PARNELL MOVEMENT,

AND THE IRISH PARTIES FROM 1843.

BY THOMAS POWER O'CONNOR, Member of Parliament.

The clearest and most forcible statement ever put forward on the Irish question.

A. ROMAN, 1210 Sutter Street,

General Agent for the Pacific Coast

Complete in one large volume, with steel portraits of Parnell, Davitt, Dillon, Sexton, Healy, Biggar, etc. $2 Agents Wanted Everywhere. '83

JOB PRINTING.

Any of the Rev. Clergy, Principals of schools, Society officials or Business men who desire new money by having their Job Printing executed at the Lowest Rates, will find McCormick Bros., 626 (Clay street, the most profitable place in the city to patronize. Call and get estimates and be convinced.

PILES. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. A vegetable ointment. Cures the worst cases of Piles of long standing. One box is warranted to cure. Sent by mail for $1. Circulars free. Address: JAMES MCCARTHY, Druggist, N.Y.

SOAPING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, conducted by the Sisters of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary.

Situated in the delightful locality of the Mission, Corner of Fifteenth and Guerrero streets.

TERMS:

(Payable half yearly in advance).

Board and Tuition in English, French, Spanish and Latin, per annum $60 00
Washing 30 00
Use of Bed and Bedding 10 00
Music, Drawing, Painting, Fancy Work and Dancing form extra charges.

Terms per month, in advance:

Entire Class $1 50
Intermediate Class 1 00
Primary Class 0 50
Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument 10 00
Music, Piano lessons, without use of instrument 5 00

NB. No entrance fee required. The further initiation $10 00

MOTHER SUPERIOR.

School of the Holy Cross.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY, Santa Cruz, Santa Cruz Co., Cal. For other particulars, apply to the Superiores.

Convent of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary,

GILROY, ... CALIFORNIA

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, CONDUCTED BY the religious sisters of the B. M. and I. H. of Mary. For terms, etc., apply to the

MOTHER SUPERIORESS

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY,

ALAMEDA, CAL.

(Branch of the College of Notre Dame, San Jose.)

Term Commenced Second Week of July.

THE HIGHEST OF STUDIES EMBRACING ANY and all branches desired, and solid education, elegant and fashionable accomplishments.

Pupils received at any period of the year.

THE PLEASANT AND HEALTHY SITE OF THE Academy, with its large grounds, and all facilities for recreation for the use of boarders and day pupils, recommends it to the public. Only 45 or 50 can be accommodated.

Terms (according) moderate. For further particulars address,

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY, ALAMEDA

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,

Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.

SACRAMENTO, ... CALIFORNIA.

Conducted by the Sisters of Mercy

TERMS:

(Payable invariably in advance.)

Board and Tuition, per quarter $30 00
Washing 30 00
Use of Bed and Bedding 10 00
Drawing and Painting 10 00
Music and Instrumental Music, form extra charges.

Entire Class $1 50
Intermediate Class 1 00
Primary Class 0 50

Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument 10 00
Music, Piano lessons, without use of instrument 5 00

NB. No entrance fee required. The further initiation $10 00

MOTHER SUPERIOR.

COLLEGE

OF NOTRE DAME

MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.

This institution, established in 1856, chartered by the State Legislature, and endowed with all the rights and privileges of similar College institutions in the United States.

Address, ... COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, Marysville, Cal.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Directs the bile and acts like a filter to remove impurities of the blood. By its regularity in its action or suspension of its functions, bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, yellow complexion, sick spells, biliousness, dyspepsia, sour feeling, and many other distressing symptoms. Bile poisons the blood when its functions are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood regulator.

DR. JOHN BULL—I have long a number of years been prescribing your Sarsaparilla, and find it a valuable blood purifier and tonic. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA gets my hearty endorsement. JOHN GRAY, M.D.

DR. JOHN BULL—I have experienced the powerful effects of your Sarsaparilla in my own Rheumatism, and believe its combination is the best blood purifier and tonic. I have prescribed it with satisfactory results, and have used it both in public and private practice. I cheerfully recommend it. JOHN GRAY, M.D. 1 Pine Street, New York.

DR. JOHN BULL—I prescribed your Sarsaparilla in cases of Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Nervous Debility, and Female Weakness, and have found it a valuable tonic and blood purifier. I cheerfully recommend it. JOHN GRAY, M.D. 1 Pine Street, New York.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body—they and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids from the system. If the Kidneys do not properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing backache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is a diuretic to strengthen the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions and health is at once restored.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE

SCROFULA

Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by the impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficient nourishment furnished to the system through the blood, usually affecting the glands, often causing swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Everywhere it is to be found is often mistaken for Scrofula or cancer, when some cause impure blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by purifying the blood and toning up the system forces the impurities from the blood and removes the system from the morbid condition.

DYSPEPSIA

Various symptoms: faint, gnawing feeling in pit of the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. These are some of the most more prominent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by toning and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

DR. JOHN BULL—I have on numerous occasions prescribed your Sarsaparilla in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Nervous Debility, and Female Weakness, and have found it a valuable tonic and blood purifier. I cheerfully recommend it. JOHN GRAY, M.D. 1 Pine Street, New York.

JOHN GRAY, M.D. 1 Pine Street, New York.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

Our Young Folks.

Bad habits, vicious constitutions of mind will be found the first impediments.

Communications intended for the Monitor should empty their Mail.

Communications should be written on one side of the only, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

Filial Piety.

There is nothing more delightful in the sight of both God and man than the dutiful devotion of children to their parents without it, where due, neither eternal nor temporal happiness can be secured. Children who refuse it disobey God's express command and betrays a disposition which proves him unfit for anything noble as far as this world is concerned.

It is goodness, after all, that is most esteemed among men. They admire great deeds, it is true, but their admiration shortly centers in the spirit which inspires them, the nobility of character in which good achievements invariably have their origin. And who ever heard of an undutiful son or daughter developing works of much renown? None, surely, for in such the inspiration of greatness is poisoned at its fountain-head. They warp their minds, violate the obligations of the most sacred relationship, and become the dupes of those involved in subsequent ruin. As will be judged from the honor of the above, we are not addressing young men in very young children; these are not often guilty of such conduct. We remark so far from old elder grounds, who are close approaching to the meridian of years. Unfilial conduct from young people at this period is more regretable to sensible, pious, and scandalous to juvenile and reprehensible. Before God, since the antiquity is in all respects so much superior. Children of such age are capable of forming a just estimate of the duties, and obeys they are under to their parents, and, if they wish to ignore the obligations, they become monsters of ingratitude as well as ingratitude of the simplest law of nature and right.

Young people at early maturity very frequently labor under the delusion that they are better able to judge and act in things in general than those who have passed the noonday of life. In most cases this is a mistake; but it is true that young folks are occasionally better informed and more "up with the times" than their parents, it should only be their careful study to avoid making those to whom they are under obligations of the fact of their actual superiority. No matter how learned, how wise, how great a genius a child may be, he never can change places in authority with those whom God has placed in and over him. "Honor thy father and thy mother remains the authority, the answer to what heights of superiority the best alliance. Hitty the divine commandment, dear young friends, that you may lay aside for reward in eternity, and that "thy days may be long in the land."

An Old Song Analyzed.

You all know the old "Song a song-man," but have you ever read what it means for?

The four and twenty blackbirds represent a twenty four hours. The bottom of the pie is the world, which is the top or cover is that over earth. The opening of the pie is the day dawn, when the birds (e.g.) are sung, and surely such a night is "Dainty to set before a king (sun)."

The king, who represented as sitting in his parlor counting out his money, is the sun, while the gold pieces that slip through fingers are his counts these are the golden rays.

The queen who sits in the dark kitchen is the moon and the honey with which she is busy is the clouds, while the bird (nightingale) that nips off the honeycomb is the moon in the hour of sunset. So we the whole day, if not in a nut shell, in

Can't Rub It Out.

"Don't write there," said a father to his little boy who was writing with a diamond on a window.

"Why not?"

"Because you can't rub it out."

"I wouldn't want to, pa, my child, that my daily writing that which you cannot rub out. You make a cruel speech the children to another. I wrote could upon being heart and gave her pain. It is wrong, and hurts her when she thinks of it."

"I can't rub it out."

So whispered a naked thought one day to the soul of your parents, and it was in his mind, and led him to do a wicked. It is there now; you can't rub it out.

Your thoughts, all your words, all acts, are written on the book of mine. Be careful, the record is very lasting. You can't rub it out.

Snakes Make Their Toilet.

Some rather funny to speak of snakes being sociable and endowing, yet this they do quite as fully as human beings, only they do it in a quiet, their dredge in silence and less variety of articles than do. After a long sleep, after the dreary dormant or hibernation, and on various occasions, they not themselves in a low down to replace their old worn out garment, and they immediately for where come out. They are as creatures, never shedding their old coat, they are fitted in that dress for life.

So shining too respondent in fresh, a surpass seeks retirement, if possible. He becomes blind for a few days, reclood, and appears to be in a moulting generally. Perhaps, like some things, he has worked too hard on his seat. When all is completed and he exhibiting, he emerges, and presents himself from the old dress, to appear whatever may be in his way. Imitate the matter. The first part of them is apt to be rather tedious, but progresses he works more rapidly, he reaches the rubs, they assist in friction, until finally the old skin becomes, turned inside out, and Mr. Snake is in his new suit.

Now, covered by a perfectly trimmed layer of cuticle, are bright and gal. It is only while this cuticle is over the eye that the serpent is

A Saint's Devotion.

Good John Leonardi, from his earliest bond, longed to be a priest; but his poverty and ignorance seemed hopeless obstacles. He was a shoemaker, and he wish to one Blessed Lady, and did so. He was in poverty, at last he was 36, he was at last enabled to begin Latin, and, after many years, was finally ordained priest. He founded the Congregation of the Mother of God. To our prayers he attributed the fulfillment of his hopes; and forty years thereafter, he said suffering only deepened his love for Mary, and kindled the desire to have her to face.

—Words may appear an angry man words never will. Words may feel on a house in flames in order to rush the fire!

Monitor Mystics.

[Two useful and handsomely bound volumes containing the Mystics of the Monitor, will be sent to the country who answers the greatest number of Mystics correctly. The Mystics are taken from the Monitor of a corresponding date. All answers must reach the Monitor within six days after date.

All communications must be addressed to the Editor, not to any one of the paper staff. Attention to this rule will prevent mistakes and delays. Be explicit, and mind also that the name and address of the writer is plainly written, so as to be easily read. Do not write on postage or other stamps, as they may run their destination.

MYSTICS NO. 84.

Original Enigma No. 134.

I am composed of 51 letters and eight words.
My 1, 11, 7, 45, 29, 31, 50 means boating.
My 2, 21, 26, 50, 41, 38, 32 means judge.
My 3, 26, 6, 22, 29, 17, 48 is an inland river of Illinois.
My 4, 21, 47, 49, 26 is a girl's name.
My 27, 18, 33, 24 means to hinder.
My 17, 35, 19, 13, 6, 29 is a girl's name.
My 7, 14, 27, 33, 21, 49 is to be clean.
My 10, 27, 7, 16, 46, 21 is a city of silk.
My 41, 24, 31, 21, 8, 30, 13, 15, 27, 31, 30 is a place in Illinois.
My 42, 24, 27, 30, 31 means to remove.
My 43, 30, 20 is a distinguished author.
My whole is the name and residence of a distinguished Catholic of San Francisco.

W. T. L. M.

Original Riddle No. 135.

A place where lands and lows may dwell,
And other things would love to tell;
Flowers and fruits of beauty rare,
All blooming in the open air.
Now, last article, to not separated
Another word, and it is ended.
A bird, long sacred held in home,
Is in the place that I have named.
Take a bird learned in story too,
Add a fruit, and a fruit, and a fruit,
Add a fruit, and a fruit, and a fruit,
To change the finding in the skies
Into a bird, and a fruit, and a fruit,
Because it never lays or sits.
Take a fruit, and a fruit, and a fruit,
A whole of a number found in things
Which are in the place, and a fruit,
Because, the other leads the name;
Take a fruit, and a fruit, and a fruit,
That no sound you destroy the place.

FRANCIS.

Original Charade No. 135.

Fairest I am, formed in earth,
All values by I enjoy of earth,
Divide me in two equal parts
Two fruits I make, and two fruits
Add to the three mentioned
Two fruits I make, and two fruits
Take from the three mentioned
Two fruits I make, and two fruits
Add to the three mentioned
Two fruits I make, and two fruits
Take from the three mentioned
Two fruits I make, and two fruits
Add to the three

The Church and Modern Socialists.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

he introduces the subject of the office of the Church in mediæval English Society

"The mission of the Church, then, and the clergy to the people were two important from every point of view. There is a sliding more and less in the history of the human mind than the manner in which that essential portion of English society in the middle ages has been handled by this ordinary economic, abnormal and religious mode. Even silver, said to be purely scientific combinations without any visible hands, or hammers should to tell the truth on this matter. Just as the mechanic detailed can see nothing but anarchy and impossible in the noble aspirations of our people and the feudal nobles, so the sanguine and hopeful can see nothing but anarchy and impossible in the conservatism of our times, the Protestant divine whose creed is the devil take the hindmost and hereafter, fail to discover anything but bastardy, schandery, and hypocrisy in the Church of the fifteenth century.

It is high time that, without any prejudice in favor of that Church, the nonsense which has been foisted on to the public by men interested in suppressing the facts, should be exploded. It is not true that the Church of the middle ages was the organized fraud which some fanatics represent it; it is not true that the monasteries, priories, and abbeys were more receptacles for vice than virtue and laziness; it is not true that the great revenues of the celibate clergy and the religious orders were squandered as a rule in riotous living, or in any opposition of religion. [illegible] It is not true that the Church was ever attacked by members of the Church for tyranny and oppression (that I know, was the main force) but the Church, as a corporation was the rule from the shortcomings of individuals, and from the abuse of which the pale was forced to bow down before the Church and Religion, which reflected power and forced part of William's gang of marauders, could not be a position in which the rough intellectual roughrider prevailed before him. Statues in the Church were adorned not with gutter; one Eaglesham, Nicholas Breakspear, Adrian the Fourth, was a poor laborer's son, and these are but two instances out of thousands of distinguished ecclesiastics of humble birth.

Then he tells how the authority of the Church was used to check the excesses of the dominant class; how the great art of the time was through the religious derived its public use; and even all this was trifling compared to the work done for education "The ecclesiastical establishments and the parish priests did for more than in comparison, by proposed in the direction of elementary teaching." He asks what would Oxford be to day but for the munificence of bishops, priests, and nuns. Their foundations, he says, were largely directed to benefit the children of the people, and he reproaches the Church of England with having turned this into "means preserves for the upper and middle classes." He then proceeds to show how Church property was held in the interest of the people. How the parish priest was obliged to spend only the smallest part of his legal income upon himself, two-thirds of it going to the poor and to the service of his church. He tells how the rotating account-books of the monasteries show how large a part of their revenues was spent on travellers, the poor, the sick, and in other good works, and adds:

Gentlemen, large sums were wasted on the monasteries, and scandals sometimes from some of the monasteries had a well-managed factory and an admirable office of wine and oil. It is certain, nevertheless, that the abbeys and priors were the best landlords in England, and no less so in the Church held in the middle ages were permanent properties was unknown.

He expresses a belief that the monks and nuns were "on the whole popular in England." Even the pain at their suppression in contemporary ballad literature were less bitter in England than abroad. In a long note based on Eden's State of the Poor, he shows that monasteries, abbeys, and priories were a means of useful work in constructing and maintaining roads, between their various possessions. Their monasteries were inns ever open to travellers, and infirmaries for the sick. They did all this at a low cost, by our system of parochial relief. They were public almoners, teachers, physicians, and nurses. They were also chroniclers, copyists of manuscripts, &c.

In these times, to relieve from the world in order to live in seclusion, or devote life to good and charitable works, was not reckoned a wonderful or more or less complete insanity. Men and women of means and of high birth, which we publish ignorance and impudence, who deny every thing to such, the "sons at the cost of other men's labour" were to be found in every parish, and in every Church of England parlor or a village preacher, and were less independent on the labors of their fellows than Baptist ministers and Redemptorist fathers of to-day. . . . That the Church as a whole held its lands in great part in trust for the people cannot be disputed, and all the children of the people in great part formed the inheritance of the Church. Church property is land then meant something very different from Church property in land now.

How little he is influenced in these judgments by any great sympathy with the Catholic Church he proves by immediately after his expressing his belief that it would be simply absurd to sigh for the restoration of Catholicism in England.

In the following chapter he shows incidentally what a noble plan the Church and monasteries had in the social system by describing the widespread misery which followed their suppression, and the consequent nature of Church property. He probably exaggerates the extent of the Church lands when he estimates them at one third of the kingdom. But this is a matter of detail. There is his judgment on the change effected by Henry the Eighth.

"In lands of the Church were, at the accession of Henry the Eighth, of as great not less than one third of the kingdom. But they were not in great part in trust for the people, where or where did it undertake? What social or poverty was never disputed. What social and economic problems, what estate and wealth, friars and some fanatics in the middle age, monks and nuns, friars and in the last chapter. Universities, schools, roads, hospitals, were in the hands, or rather, all were maintained out of Church lands. But the students who were dismissed after the Wars of the Roses, were in great part kept from social starvation by these occupiers of Church lands. [illegible] Nay, a [illegible] was known of all this. Nay, a [illegible] of Henry the Church, until Henry the Eighth wanted to turn an abbey into a [illegible] not an incestuous marriage in the first place, and to get possession of the abbey lands in order to fill his purse as I hope his traveller in the second. Some, no doubt there were, but the abbey which the King had in view was plunder, and was found to be the abbey. It should go hard but I will find and harass between them would make out every monastery in the realm guilty of infidelity. . . . As to the charge of poor, from the beginning of the world it is almost enough to say that Christ, the Father of the Poor, Christ and Thomas Cromwell, the eliminating and Father. The manner in which the middle-class history has been written is evidenced by the elements principle made to wash the gender and the rogue, and to belittle the philosopher and the patriot.

He then briefly traces the immediate effects of the suppression: "The monks and nuns turned out to swell with their dependents the growing mass of paupers, property that had been used for the public advantage, appropriated by the King and his sugary favorites—and he confiscated."

Admitting to the fullest extent, as who ever admits, the evil of the Church, "the need of throwing off the yoke of Rome, a far baser yoke was substituted in its place. The last hold of the English people in their self was torn off for the benefit of the greedy courtiers. The poor who had ever obtained ready relief from the Church, the sick who could always find food and shelter in the religious houses, the children of the people who required to be educated for guidance and benefits, were deprived of one half-way of alms, and of education. A great and powerful estate, which naturally dried with the people, was given to search and the aristocracy, to the lawyers and the nobility in the Church, and many were born of north counties instead of being dependent, and the Protestant Reformation became a fact more of the increasing misery of the mass of English men.

All this means that to England the Protestant tradition as to the blessings of the glorious and immortal Reformation is fast breaking up. It will soon linger only in Low Church pulpits and Sunday Schools in these matters of English Church history the sound be organizers of Protestant Utopia are teaching plain and simple truth. And it is only fair and right to recognize at once that these are not the only people who are at work on the side of truth and economic science. They oppose with sound and weighty argument the Harmonian theory in the form in which it has found and in which Mr. Bradlaugh and his friends have been long seeking to popularize it in England. In this point they are doing good service to the cause of truth and morality. Without accepting their economic theories, we may freely admit that their objections to not a few of the pet schemes of current political economy are matters of current political economy are matters of sound and weight. Indeed on the negative side Catholic economists have several points of contact with their teachings, especially in the recognition of the evils resulting from the present relations of labor and capital, the so-called freedom of contract in the labor market, and the unequal sharing of the profits of labor, not a few Catholic writers, English, French, and German are quite as strongly as even Mr. Henry George. But they part company with the Socialists, because the Catholics refuse to accept a programme of wholesale confiscation as a possible remedy for existing evils, and prefer to take the risk of the [illegible] ment very terrible possibilities of bureaucratic tyranny on a wider scale than the world has yet had to endure. But these differences of standpoint and of [illegible] should not blind us to the existence of many points of contact. In meeting an adversary nothing is gained by refusing to recognize whatever is true and logical in his position, and it would be a miserable piece of folly to defend existing abuses as if the very foundations of the world were at stake. Nothing is gained upon their perpetuation. This is the mistake made by many Catholics and well-meaning Christians in Europe a hundred years ago. In the present hard and difficult times Catholics have nothing to fear if they will only—by acting up to the glorious traditions of the Church in the world see that she is still what she always has been, the friend of the poor and the suffering, and that within her fold the rich and poor, the noble and the laborer are brothers. Everything that tends to link class with class, to bring men of different social station into friendly association in united work for the good of others, all intelligent action of Catholics in this wide field where politics and economics touch, at the centre is well off and dangers, and lead to results of lasting good in the time of trial and change on which we are very gravely about to enter. The poor belong to the Church by right as well as by necessity. Their place is well they should be taught how much the Church has done for them in the past, no matter who are the teachers, for if they have learned this lesson there will be the hopes of their learning that the Church can do something for them in the future.

A. H. A.

DECADENCE OF THE ITALIAN KINGDOM.

The Church in Danger.—Downfall of the Deputyship Ministry.—Measures Considered of the Italian Parliament.—"United Italy" a Misnomer. Grave Fears for Italy's Future.

Mr. F. Hugh O'Donnell, who made the recent visit to Rome, writes to an English Catholic paper in the following vein on the impression of Italy's future, as derived from his own experience and the statistics furnished by contemporary evidence:

Any article on Italian messages against the Pope, some weeks since, I referred to the increasing instability of Italian unity as a grave peril to the remaining security of the Holy See, and even to the prestige of the Supreme Pontiff. In other countries politics instability is exclusively confined to the parties in the countries themselves. If the guarantee of independence and the guardianship of Catholicism shall protected the patrimony of St. Peter, the political instability of such a precious shield, in effect the mushroom throne of the Usurpation at Florence or Milan would be of as little consequence to the Catholic world as the manifestations of Mr. Gladstone himself. But since the Italian Revolution has unhappily invested the most ancient prerogatives of the Universal church within the closing circle or its constitution, and, unfortunately, the political economy in the University of Rome, I have been at pains to follow the reports of the Commission upon the flight, and have arrived at a number of the statistics—Tuscany, its States of the Church, Parma, Naples, and others—which have been brought into the fatal circle of the Usurpation. The burden of taxation weighs heavily, in many districts with monstrous weight upon agricultural industry. The Italian Government will best illustrate this condition of affairs in Rome and Tuscany. The Tuscan revenue derives twenty per cent. of the net income of the agricultural tenants, and it is to be observed that in this respect taxation has increased seventy-five per cent. during the last twenty years. In Corsica, the ground tax takes 20 per cent. in Calabria 30 per cent. of the net income. In the Marches also, and in Sicilia, according to the data in Lombardy also the reports of the Commission show that the taxation of the soil has reached almost exorbitant character.

I have quoted the summary of Professor Pedroni in preference to giving any discussion of my own, because it is the judgment of a liberal professor of Political Economy, in a thoroughly Protestant university, who, however, a friend of "United Italy," and would be an adverse, if he could, of the united Italian constitution. But he could not shut his eyes to the monstrous magnitude of the fact that "during the last twenty years the expenditure of the state increased seventy-five per cent. in provinces occupied by the Usurpation. It is this public money, combined with the growth of the unadministration of every kind, which forms the alarming back-ground of the Italian situation, and which constitutes the grave and increasing danger for the security of the Papacy exposed without protection to the gathering storm of popular violence and disappointed by the social and financial mismgovernment of the occupiers.

OUR IRISH LETTER.

Wenna Bull Hatter in Ireland. Effect at London Address. Home Rule in Ireland. Carnival's Opinion. Gutter Press—Byurtane Subsiding—Bad Markets in Ireland. The Bishop of Derry.

FROM OUR REGULAR IRISH CORRESPONDENT.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

The Papal Bull Hatter Ut Ireland, Effect at London Address. Home Rule in Ireland. Carnival's Opinion. Gutter Press—Byurtane Subsiding—Bad Markets in Ireland. The Bishop of Derry.

[illegible]

DR. LANE'S WINE TONIC!

A Nervine and Blood Invigorator.

KING B BITTERS,

THE GREAT VEGETABLE LIVER REMEDY.

[illegible]

HALL BROTHERS,

Laboratory, 324 Clay St., San Francisco.

O'BANION & DAGENAIS,

712 and 714 Market Street,

Now Have one of the most Complete Stocks of

GENT'S AND BOYS CLOTHING,

Furnishing Goods, Hats, Caps, Etc.

IN SAN FRANCISCO,

and are selling goods Lower than any other house on the Pacific Coast.

We have also added MERCHANT TAILORING to our business and now have on hand

THE BEST GOODS

The Market affords in both Foreign and American Importation.

All our goods are marked in plain figures and but one price asked.

Market Report.

[illegible]

MARRIED.

[illegible]

DIED.

[illegible]

Pere Monsabre on the Priesthood.

WHY THE WORLD HATES PRIESTS.

EVIL INSPIRATION OF THEIR ENEMIES.

Christ's Representatives the Light of the World.

On the Sunday succeeding the one on which Pere Monsabre delivered the magnificent discourse on the "Dignity of the Priesthood," which we published last week, the eloquent Dominican continued his theme by delivering the following instructive sequel to his former sermon

The priesthood, he said, rested so high above the powers of the world, because to the religious life of the nations, so benefactors to humanity, so—I dare to say it—the origin, its character and its functions, might reasonably have been expected to gather round it nothing but admiration respect, and gratitude. But it seemed as though God had designed, in fact, that the priest should become infatuated with his greatness, enemies and contradictors should continually rise up before him.—Eg., [illegible] "Is it a crime to be a priest?" The Saviour had said to him that because the world hated him before the world would hate him; he would be the object of hired lessons of His Name, and since he himself had been persecuted, the priest also would be persecuted.

Why, then, is the priesthood so hated? What were the charges which they brought against him? What was the object they had in view? "We are the motives," they cried. "Superstition has led the people, more enlightened, have cast off the idiotic reverence which they formerly had for the minister. The dragon's tooth is dying out. Freethought has won their suffrages; and we only tread the outstanding half of that power to enable us to put an end to a worn-out institution which obstinately resists the march of progress." That declaration was bold, and could not be made by those who were able to adduce to collect relations as to the state of the consciences and the religious discussions and feelings of the masses of the people. In the midst of the tumult, the priest, the impious man forget to reckon the number of those who have been born, and who have sinistrously towards the great for his similar impact of the passions burst upon them, [illegible] and [illegible] the priesthood, [illegible] of women, who bear in their hearts the tradition of the Gospel, and the devotion only in the sentiment of ground of the Church, and the sentiment of the men of good will who were convinced of the necessity of the priesthood, and of a state of even the vast number of indifferentists, men of pleasure, of business, of science, who have discovered the unpunishable spark of Faith deep down in their hearts, and who have, in spite of themselves, approached, brought the priest to accord them the sacraments, and to open to them the enter the other world. If they entreated the priest, whose wishes were more than individuals! But even granting them their title of the nobility, what had they to show for their impiety?

MEN BY NOT FOR MATERIALS.

Who indeed, is the man of the Divine Priest when he was about to consummate His Sacrifice: The synagogue, the world, the Jewish, the Pagan, the Christian, inhuman, cowardly, all conspired against Him. The multitude accused Him, the Jews condemned Him, the multitude crucified Him. But amidst the tumult, the priest, the man of God, the man of the Church, the man of the Cross, the man of the Sacrifice, the man of the Eucharist, the man of the Sacrament

Poetry.

HEART OF JESUS! DEAREST TREASURE.

Heart of Jesus! dearest treasure!
Joy of angels—hope of heaven;
Thou hast lived on earth without measure,
All Thy riches, all Thy wealth,
Full of sorrow, full of weakness,
Exceeding poverty—of meekness,
By the penetration of Thy presence,
Omnipotent spirits strength receive.

Heart of Jesus! throne of glory!
Humbly kneeling, we adore Thee,
Lets celestial! we implore Thee,
Make us love Thee more and more

Sit and listen, pilgrim on benighted
Sinner! after be affright in:
Hear and help us, Heart, most tender,
Lost in weakness we surrender;
In the strongholds of Thy splendor,
Any Thy children for this war.

THERESA C. DONNELLY.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Some day,
When others flatter your thick brown hair
And drape your form in silk and lace;
When others call you "honey" and "fair,"
And hold your hand and kiss your face
Will not thoughts of a mother's love
Come to you?

Some day,
Strong answers in far distant lands,
In your new home, busy and the one,
When at your lips are baby hands
And children laughing at your knee,
Oh, then, as at your side I lay,
Will you remember other years
When I, too, lived beneath the roof,
And sing memory with thy tears;
Lest such hours be not already
Within their shadows I have prayed.

Some day,
Your death-bed voice or smile or eyes
My face will not—cold, cold, dead,
Will not—I pray this is never empties
Your soul and make you wise will tell
Of your unforgotten prayer
Or that, we at evening used to share.

Some day,
A flower, a song, a word may be
A link between us—a bright and sweet;
Ah, then, dear child, remember "mother" best,
And let pass hour in everywhere—
My love is with you everywhere—
Ye cannot get from my prayer.

Some day,
I longed to meet be long,
I shall with glad impatience wait,
And the joy and the prayer,
For you before the Golden Gate.
After earth's pulse and earth's pain,
Never to part. Never again.

A CHILD'S WISH BEFORE AN ALTAR.

(Here is a tender, sweet little poem of Father Ryan's, that must prove highly disquieting. At the young lady will delight in it, and will remind their poet in mere years that he was once young.)

I wish I were the little key
That locks Love's Captive in,
And late him out to go and free
A dateful heart from sin.

I wish I were the little cross
That thirlies for the Host
Thy God comes down and makes my cross
With hearts He loves the most.

I wish I were the stainless lake,
That holds the Blood of Love
When every flashlight holy prayer
Upon the way shove.

I wish I were the little flower
To raise the Host's canopy,
Or like the light that half an hour
Burns on an altar-tree.

I wish I were the altar where,
As on His mother's bread,
Christ nestles, lies, this a child, Lover
In Eucharistic rest.

But oh! my God, I wish the most

Literary Miscellany.

Paths that Cross.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY WRITTEN BY C. MARTIN.

CHAPTER I.

It is now fully thirty years ago that, on a lovely May evening, two young men were busily disporting themselves on the classical stream of the Isis at Oxford. The day had been hot and bright, and the evening was so idually beautiful that these two, though premedical and skilled oarsmen, were but little inclined for exertion, and were well content to let themselves drift at the pleasure of the tide, and to give themselves up to the languid enjoyment of the hour. At least, so it seemed to the cursory half-nodding, half wondering glances of other men who were peddling of the noel breeze to make their crafts spin along, and to go through with their training, and who merrilled at the unwonted inertivity of this particular couple. Yet a closer observer would have made them aware that though physically idle, they were not in any mental, but were, on the contrary, both wide and the other, pressed in deep and anxious thought. At last the silence of many minutes was broken, and the fairer of the two, and, at all seemed, slightly the younger, and in an emphatic voice, as though in reply to a previous question,

"No, Berrington, it is impossible; I can see no way out of it. It is hard—yet, while even God only knows how hard. But I must go home with it. It is impossible to stint one's eyes to fight."

Berrington, a singularly handsome, dark-eyed young man, shrugged his shoulders slightly.

"The light! What light! There are so many lights to choose from! he said quietly.

"The light of faith! The light of the Roman Catholic church. I can't help seeing it, feeling, and——"

"And? What then?" Berrington inquired, as he hesitated.

"And following it," said the other, in a low voice, "at any cost."

Berrington shook his head.

"My dear fellow, my dear Carruthers, it seems to me that the cost is already counted. Your uncle is—well, about as pig headed a member of the Church of his fathers, not to say as obstinate a Briton, as exists. Hal! never give in."

"I know that. I hope I have faced it. But what can I do? For all the good in the mines of Golconda a man can't deliberately risk the loss of his soul. Why, I should be the spot where the two roads part, and I must choose either."

"Then choose the safe one, the old, familiar beaten track," broke in Berrington eagerly. "After all, one can't be certain, absolutely certain, as one is about a mathematical definition, of the hereafter. The option is always a plunge in the dark, a wan swing forth into the howling wilderness. Hang it all! It is too terrible! Don't you follow the old French boy's example, and 'pour plus de sureté, faire notre Paradis dans ce monde.' Who knows? Perhaps you'll find it turn out just as well in the end."

"Perhaps. Yes, that is just it. But how can a man run the risk? No, Berrington. I feel that I am to forfeit."

His companion made no reply, and as if by a tacit mutual understanding, the two young men suddenly rouse from their dreams, and pulled slightly and silently against the stream, dolphin which they had been so easily gliding, and had, in a few minutes, reached the landing-place. They were dressed in flannels and had been alone companions, yet now both were aware that a rankling gulf had opened between them, and they drew silent, apart, powerless to reach or help the other. They had both passed through the same phases, been touched by the same influences, been impressed by the same causes, and had been confronted with the same issues, yet one had the courage of his convictions, while the other feared to face them. One was powerless to resist the overwhelming force of grace, while the other, young perhaps as closely, was yet a coward at heart, and unable to make characteristic which from conviction demanded, but his friend's expansion to be an eloquent, though silent reproach.

And thus it was that still in silence, the two landed side, side by side, retraced their steps along the familiar road, towards the gray old college, in which such a happy time had spent so quickly away. They were both faithful men, and their course, strictly rather, had admitted of real and intimate neighborliness. By sheer force of habit, Berrington followed Carruthers into his, and the young man stood for a moment gazing out on the dim light, as though dreading and yet wishing for a further explanation, and more definite understanding. At last Berrington said

"You said just now, Carruthers, that you had counted the cost. Do you mind telling me what the cost will be?

The other laughed.

"You were always practical, my dear fellow. Well, as you know, I have a small independence, a very small one, which I should forfeit—and—and—my father's home, my mother's home, and—and—my home, too. That's about the cost."

"But that is not all.

MARRIAGE!

Carruthers flushed up.

"Oh, that is all right. I have written to explain all to her. We shall have to wait, and even waiting will not make us rich. But nothing can change her. She will be true to me.

As he spoke he had struck a match, and was lighting the lamp which stood on the table ready prepared to his hand. A very, what charming, elegant surroundings did the light reveal. Not now, however, Carruthers' nor his friend's eyes were much concerned with the varied collections of objects of "bigotry and virtue," both of their glances having simultaneously fallen on a letter, which the evening's post had brought, and which lay upon the table. At the sight of it, Carruthers had paled vividly, and sagely seized it.

"It is from Florence!" he said. I never thought I could have heard so quickly!" And without further ceremony, he tore it open.

Berrington, also, seemed to have recognized the writing, for his face changed color too, and he watched his friend narrowly. Then followed a little spell of deep silence, which a sudden exclamation, or rather groan, from Carruthers broke. "My God!" he cried, "what does she mean! It can't be true. I am dreaming! Am I dreaming, Berrington! Here read it. Tell me what the girl means!"

Berrington read the latter as follows:—

My dear Mr. Carruthers,—Your letter reached me this morning was a great shock to me; but I will hope that it was written in a state of excitement which made you more amenable for your words. It never seems to occur to you that the great, the terrible change you are contemplating, can make any difference in our relations to one another. I am well, I am sane tell you, that I should no more think of marrying a Roman Catholic than I would of marrying a Jew, or a Mohammedan. I consider you are behaving dishonorably and cruelly to me, in even thinking of making such a change. You talk of conscience. I only pray that conscience ought to tell you that your first duty is to the girl who had promised to be your wife, but who considers herself completely released from her engagement, if she finds I am anxious to impress upon you is, that I never allow strangers to interfere.

Berrington! Carruthers! Father (he said) suddenly, "Berrington, is it really you? Have you been there? Do you? recognize me?

The other man started upset.

"Recognize you! Certainly I do not," he replied in a chilly voice. "You are in mourning, I suppose, and I made a mistake, or I have not the honor of counting many Hebrew acquaintances, but my acquaintance and certainly not a single priest of that persuasion."

Father Oswald was looking at him curiously.

"And yet," he began. But he suddenly changed his mind. "Ah well," he said with a sigh, "I am not the first, and I shall not be the last, to be taken for a Jew, or a Mohammedan. I consider you are behaving dishonorably and cruelly to me, in even thinking of making such a change. You talk of conscience. I only pray that conscience ought to tell you that your first duty is to the girl who had promised to be your wife, but who considers herself completely released from her engagement, if she finds I am anxious to impress upon you is, that I never allow strangers to interfere.

"Berrington!" exclaimed Father Oswald suddenly, "Berrington, is it really you? Have you been there? Do you? recognize me?

The other man started upset.

"Recognize you! Certainly I do not," he replied in a chilly voice. "You are in mourning, I suppose, and I made a mistake, or I have not the honor of counting many Hebrew acquaintances, but my acquaintance and certainly not a single priest of that persuasion."

Father Oswald was looking at him curiously.

"And yet," he began. But he suddenly changed his mind. "Ah well," he said with a sigh, "I am not the first, and I shall not be the last, "so be it. Let bygones be bygones. I am quite content that it shall be so. well, sir, to return to business about that money matter. Do you remember There is the church civil ringing for the evening sermon which I must preach. Perhaps when it is over, or to-morrow morning, you can kindly give me a few minutes, and I don't doubt I can suit of persuading you that this is really an exceptional case.

Mr. Berrington was already at the door of the shabby little room, and looking as he merely relieved.

"This evening I have an engagement, dinner at Baddeely Park," he exclaimed promptly, "and, seems possibly see you, and to-morrow, oh, to-morrow morning, I shall have my hands quite full till twelve o'clock, when my train goes. Oh, no! I is quite impossible, and, I may say, useless—and further discussion, I mean. Good evening, sir. We understand one another perfectly, I suppose sir. No doubt you are unmoved by the best motives," he continued with a patronizing farewell salutation, as the peculiar smile which hovered on Father Oswald's pale lips made him hesitate for a moment.

"But, I assure you my advice is best. Don't let yourself be imposed upon and taken in. In your position it is far better not to listen to all those begging sermons. Good evening, sir; good evening." And he was gone.

But, on looking at his watch, Mr. Berrington became aware that he had still half an hour to spare before it was time to drive for the late dinner at Baddeely Park, and he determined to spend the time in the quiet, a sudden misgiving prompted him to enter it. It was already nearly full, and in the full light he soon found a seat in a safety nook-shaped spot behind a pillar. For worldly no word not have been recognized by any of the congregation, but, above all, by the preacher, who was already tripping up the pulpit, and whom, in spite of his vigorous denial, Mr. Berrington knew perfectly. He no doubt not mistake the voice, the gesture, persuasive smile, which long ago had made him love his friend Carruthers. Ah, but how long ago! and what strange, painful turning memories had this chance meeting stirred! What tramping of remorse and shame! Oh! the pity of it!

Well, to be sure, it was an old, old story now. He had married the woman he had been engaged to his friend, acquiring in all too eagerly to replace the man who had sacrificed fortune, love, and every worldly prospect for conscience sake. And then he had given caution of his friend, dropped him, lost sight of him, and had been only too glad to hear no more about him, for the mere mention of his name was a reproach to him, and a shadow on other had, for a time at least, to cloud the value of consolation to his heart, making the full honest to be known, jeopardy the joy of his wife, and his eyes to the truth which had non-timed

THE GREAT ST. AUGUSTINE.

Celebration in Commemoration of His Conversion in the Catholic Church. Recent Parent of a Mother's Love and Prayers.

Cardinal Lavigerie has sent to Very Rev. Pere Brand, Superior General of the Augustinians, a formal notification that there will be a celebration in honor of the fifteenth centennial anniversary of the conversion of St. Augustine. This occasion is of intense interest to Catholics, and the event will be celebrated in Rome with the greatest pomp. The anniversary of the conversion of the great Father of the Church is a most fitting one for such a celebration, and it will be a most fitting one for such a celebration, and it will be a most fitting one for such a celebration, and it will be

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—The Dean of the Cathedral of Gorin, Very Rev. Father Hilarion, has been appointed Bishop of Tours.

—Canon Walkom has been appointed Administrator of the Archdiocese of Freetown in Brazil. This eminent priest is a convert from Protestantism.

—The learned Canon Greenstere, Professor in the Catholic University in Louvain, has been appointed a Chamberlain to his Holiness Leo XIII.

—The Rev. Mr. Masfoud, lately Curate at St. German's Anglican Church, Roath, Cardiff, has been received into the Church by his Eminence Cardinal Manning.

—His Holiness the Pope has confirmed the selection of the clergy of the Diocese of Limerick by appointing the Rev. T. O'Dwyer as successor to the late Rt. Rev. Dr. Butler, Bishop of Limerick.

—According to Bradstreet's Statistics represent $160,000,000, and demands an even divide amongst the people. There are six millions of people in this country, and this divide will then each just $27.70.

—His Holiness Leo XIII., has at length consented to create three French Cardinals, to that France may again have the representation in the Sacred College which she had before her robes began to persecute the Church and despoil her ministers.

—The Archbishops have selected a Rector for the new Catholic University, and Bishop Spalding says that the nominee is not the Bishop of Peoria. Work on the University buildings will begin next November and continue through the winter.

—A correspondent writes that he saw a statement of Mgr. Capel's perversion in a city paper and wants to know if it is true. This fabrication evidently emanated from the Lodge of Freemasons, and it was copied by their first cousin—Frank Finlay & Mgr. Capel—as already mentioned a month ago in the MONITOR received the appointment of British Catholic Chaplain at Rockaglia, the British government being more careful of the souls of its Catholic soldiers and sailors than our own. But whether Mgr. Capel will accept this office deponent saith not. The "pervert" story is merely a perversion of the truth, which seems as natural to the Argonaut as does pilfering to a kleptomaniac.

—A singular incident in real life occurred in this city last week. The funeral of Rev. Edward Hardy, assistant Rector of St. Teresa's Church, took place on Tuesday, and in the afternoon of that day Rev. John Kenney, Rector of the parish—who had been on a visit to Ireland for over a year—arrived unexpectedly at Oakland, and as the parishioners filled his house to welcome him home and to pay a tribute to the worthy assistant priest whose body they had just seen deposited in the grave, Father Kenney says he never before felt the great force of the truth of the praise "to the midst of life we are in death."

—The British Government has at last taken means to curb the bloodthirsty spirit of the North of Ireland Orangeism. The constabulary have received orders to remove the sashes and addresses of all persons in each district who, during the past three years, have purchased arms and ammunition. The work is being carried on under direction of the Government at London, and the information desired is being furnished by the Government inspectors obtained the directions under which their consignments have been ordered. It is believed that the Government intends to disarm the Loyalists in Ireland, and that Mr. John Morley's motion to continue the Coercion Act of 1881 was made with a view to its application in the interests of public order against the threatening Orange minority.

—Bro. McCrary of the California Christian Advocate has the Pharisaical temerity to say that the Pope should subscribe for his paper in return for the Brother's service in "Waging the Monitor's warfare against the Christian newspaper." This brazen cross on the part of Bro. McCrary is fully in keeping with the arrogance of all Protestant preachers who grow sassy from being spanked. We have been trying to let the light of truth into Bro. McCrary's mind for several years, but he seems to be still wedded to his idols. However, his stubbornness will not prevent us from keeping up our course of Christian instruction whenever the Christian Advocate abuses the Church of God. We this to do good to those that hate us in order that those non-Catholics who ride the gulf is between sectarianism and the sweet yoke of our Blessed Saviour.

—A preacher named Wendte claims to have delivered the sermons in the Unitarian Church which the MONITOR has criticised during the past two weeks. That may be true, but Dr. Stebbins was the author of them and Mr. Wendte was merely his mouthpiece. Dr. Stebbins made the bills, and the pro bono occupier of his pulpit had to take them. We never have any controversy with supernaturalists or inferiors, and when Rev. Charles Wesley Wendte undertakes to show that Dr. Stebbins's sermons in order to shield the latter salesmanager of the Catholic Church, he will have to furnish an better evidence than his own word say so. We can see the ear-marks of Dr. Stebbins in every slander we have commented on just as plainly as if we saw the polecat of prejudice drip from his pen point. No, no, Dr. Wendte, your attempted defamation is "too thin" to throw at off Dr. Stebbins' track.

The Month of the Sacred Heart.

In accordance with our usual custom, we send our readers a small supplement this week as a reminder of the important fact that the month of June has been dedicated specially by devotion to the SACRED HEART OF JESUS. Any words of ours on this devotion would become only weaker by comparison with what has been so well written by the saints and sages of the Church, hence we insert the devotion—inspiring sentiments of the fourteen Prelates of the Province of New York, when they combined in issuing a Pastoral Letter to the faithful concerning this devotion. In that address those Bishops told their flocks that "there is a moral darkness overspreading the earth. The light of Divine Faith, the only true light to guide our footsteps, has become obscured. In some places it is burning dimly, in others it is wholly or partially extinguished. Yet men are seen to "love the darkness rather than the light, for their ways are evil. They have risen in open revolt against God and against His Christ; against the supremacy of His dominion over the minds and consciences of individuals and of nations. The most essential truths of His revelation are rejected; the holiest mysteries of His religion are scoffed at and derided. Our Blessed Redeemer, therefore, will their attendant train of evils, abound on every side. As a consequence, or rather as a punishment for sin, the Church is persecuted. Her Supreme Pastor is held captive.

Her Bishops and priests, in certain portions of Europe, are forbidden the exercise of their rightful jurisdiction and authority over the members of their own flock; some are prosecuted and exiled; religious communities are despoiled of their property, driven from their houses, made subject to indignities and hardships the most cruel and unjust; even the faithful laity are not spared. Although we, in our free and favored country, are happily protected from extreme trials such as these, still, as children of the Church, we are members of one body in Christ; and when one member suffers, all the members suffer with it. Our sympathies, therefore, go out strongly and warmly to our struggling and afflicted brethren in other lands. Our prayers are for them as well as with them. All together we lift up our voices, saying, "How long, O Lord, how long?" "Thy kingdom come" is powerful to save." Still we fear not, we do not despond. We "know in whom we have trusted." We hold the promises; we believe His word "I am with you all days." "Upon this rock I have built my Church and the gates of hell shall never prevail against it." Even now the voice of the same Divine Master, ever present in His Church, is speaking to body souls within her bosom words of sweet comfort and encouragement; telling them whither they shall go for help and protection; how best, in the long protracted struggle, they may obtain courage to endure and strength to overcome. If you hear not these words, you still may learn their import from the practical response that is given to them. Look around you and you will see the fruit of this devotion. Look at the pilgrimages, and all, as if moved by one common impulse, hastening to have recourse for succor and protection to the compassionate Heart of Jesus. Therefore confidently hope to find a sure asylum, a safe refuge from every danger. There, also, is the never-failing fountain of infinite love and mercy—the overflowing source of every grace and blessing. Let us hasten, then, to this same Divine Heart, and we, too, "shall draw waters with joy from the fountains of the Saviour."

You will offer your devotion to the Sacred Heart as an act of reparation for the daily outrages and insults, the sacrilegious and impious, the indifferent and unbelief, which so grievously afflict and wound the Divine Heart, so tender and compassionate, so patient, charitable, forgiving, notwithstanding the ingratitude and wickedness of men. But, above all, you will seek to consecrate your own hearts to the Heart of your dear Saviour. You will attain His for your model. You will study its lessons and teach them to your children. "Suffer little children to come to Me, and forbid them not." See, then, that you bring them to the loving and tender Father who wishes to press them to His heart and have them walk the nearest to Him. But in what way can you bring them to Him and keep them by His side, where they will be secure from harm? You can only do so by giving or securing to them a sound Catholic education; by taking care that their faith and morals shall be guarded from the risks and perils to which they must be inevitably exposed wherever the first essential element of true education, that is to say, religion, is excluded or ignored. Remember that the interests of the soul are higher far than the interest of the body. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His justice, and all things else will be added unto you." Watch, then, and pray both for yourselves and for all those entrusted to you. Pray for our still suffering Pontiff, for the necessities of the Church, for the conversion of sinners; pray for your enemies as well as for your friends. Commend all to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and to the Immaculate Heart of Mary that so you may find help and protection during the days of life, and pardon and mercy at the hour of death.

—The importance of the next consistory of the Cardinals, which will take place on Thursday, the 10th inst., is greatly increased from the fact that together with the public designation of Archbishop Gibbons and Monsignor Chatard, who are elevated to the purple, it is expected that several Bishops will be named for numerous new Dioceses in those United States and other portions of this continent.

—The Very Rev. Dr. Finegan, of St. Patrick's College, Carlow, has received a telegram from Rome informing him that he has been appointed Bishop of Kilmore. This will which the report announces provides that no alien or foreigner who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, nor any corporation (one-tenth of whose stock is owned or controlled by aliens or foreigners, shall have the right to acquire real estate in any of the Territories of the United States.

Tributes to the Mother of God.

No person in the whole world can say that either Luther or Mahomet were men who were likely to be biased by any Catholic feelings in their respect and veneration for the Blessed Virgin, hence we can already realize what astonishment these men must have felt when they pursue these precious tributes which these two celebrated characters unfeigned lavished upon the immaculate Mary Mother of God. If we do not recognize the grandeurs of Mary, it is not upon her but upon Jesus that our insensibility in reality reflects. Not to extol and love Mary argues a fearful weakness of Christian and religious sentiment. Not if we have not all that reverence for her exalted dignity and her endless sanctity, let us, at least in this respect, learn it from the Arch-heretic Luther, whose words should make every Protestant blush and every insensible Catholic tremble. "To be the Mother of God," says he, "is a prerogative so high, so immense, that it transcends all understanding. No honor or humility could ever appreciate an elevation such as that of being in the unreality of the human race, the one only person superior to all others, of having no equal in this prerogative, of having one for its Son who will (Hilarus) then all honor is contained for Mary, and no one can honor her praise things more magnificent than it signifies, though he should have as many tongues as there are leaves and blades of grass upon the earth, stars in the firmament of Heaven, and grains of sand upon the sea shore." (Super Magnificat).

Mahomet says in the Koran: "There is no child of Adem born that Satan does not suffy, and therefore it is that it weeps and cries at its entrance into this world—I except Mary and her Son. O Mary, more illustrious than all men and women O Mary, God has chosen and purified you. He has made you resplendant above the women of all ages.

The Working Classes in the Middle Ages.

A contributor to one of the leading monthlies—in the course of an article on the Labor Question—thus demonstrates how happy the tenants were in the days when the whole world was a unit in Catholic faith and when "man's inhumanity to man" was kept in subjection by the precepts of that power which is man's only guide in his pathway to God. "In the middle Ages," says the writer in question, "landlords were bound by oath to care for their tenants in disease, famine and war. Ecclesiastics administered the tenant-rights of his father. The amount of rent consisted in one third of the produce of the farm, one third belonged to the tenant and the other third was used to defray expenses. When the tenant brought the rent to the landlord the latter had to treat him as a gentleman. The rules of a seventeenth Odinon Mass, required that when a tenant came to pay his rent, "the abbot must give him two new shoes, bread and red wine. If the abbot's servants, they were obliged to leave their spurs and swords outside the door "lest as not to frighten the women of the house." If a landlord wanted to eat test the rent whilst the tenant's wife was sick with child, he could get nothing eat but the hand of a rooster; the rooster itself had to be fed to the sick mother. In case a tenant was too poor to pay the rent, the abbey supplied a poor tenant with the whole heart and soul against the whole British spirit of the age. The consequence was sure and not unexpected. Hardly anybody in England knew the name of such a person." And yet Mr. Mitchell, patriot and Irishman, tells us "I have never yet met a cultivated Irishman or woman, of genuine Irish nature, who did not prize Clarence Mangan above all the poets that their island sang or sang.

Lastly, however, there has come a change. Ireland is becoming more known to England, not alone from her own pleadings for justice and equitable laws, but also from the voice of the new Ireland that has spoken in Parliament. Many of the most liberal Englishmen are studying closer this Ireland of which they knew so little in the past, are studying closer the Irish people, their customs and their literature. By them, even the people of England are taking an interest in Irish literature, that England whose "dictation gave the law to throughout the literary domain of her semi-barbarous tongue," it is a sign that the "Island Saints" has been making wonderful strides of late.

Mr. Connolly's book will be a compendium of Irish poetic literature from the earliest times up to the present day. As will be seen in the prospectus, not alone Irish but also Irish-American writers will find a place in it. Our own California will not be forgotten, and such a volume would indeed be incomplete did it not pay tribute to the genius of Miss Harriet M. Skidmore, Mr. Daniel O'Connell and others will be duly recognized, and we hope Mr. Connolly's undertaking, if so straight, has omitted to include Miss Marcella M. Fitzgerald among his Irish-American poets. Bartholomew Dowling's sweet song—which we quote from Mr. Connolly's published list of writers—will surely not be slighted.

Congratulating Mr. Connolly on the successful completion of his praise-worthy undertaking, we wish his book every success and trust it will receive a welcome in every land wherever the scattered children of the Irish race have found a home.

The Monitor de Rome has the following important news relative to the approaching elections in Italy: "Several liberal journals have spread, within a few days, the most ridiculous rumors about a change which, on the occasion of the approaching elections, is on the eve of being produced in the attitude of Italian Catholics relative to the electoral question. We declare that there is absolutely no change."

New Volume of Irish Poetry.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that Mr. Daniel Connolly, of New York, has at last completed his Cyclopedia of Irish Poetry which lie in the hands of the printers and will soon be published. There have been many collections of Irish poetry, the most noteworthy being those of Charles Gavan Duffy, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, James Clarence McCarthy, Samuel Lover and Edward Hayes. The best of all these is Hayes "Ballads of Ireland;" this work, however, was published some twenty years ago and another generation has arisen since then. Mr. Connolly's book will give selections and short biographical sketches of some 250 writers whereas, in the "Ballads of Ireland," about one-fourth of the number were represented. In the prospectus which Mr. Connolly prepared some time since while the work was so put in an embryotic condition, is thus sketched on outlines of the undertaking: "Believing that an Anthology truly representative of the Irish people in both hemispheres should have a place in standard literature, the undersigned, after full consideration of the labor involved, has undertaken the preparation of such a work on a thoroughly comprehensive plan. It is intended that all Irish and Irish examples carefully selected from collected works, where these are available, and in the case of writers whose productions have not been thus brought together, from periodicals and the newspaper press.

The work is already well advanced and it will be continued until a collection much superior to any of a similar kind yet published is completed. In order that the whole may be presented in a coherent set form, it will appear in a single volume, a uniform handsome 12mo. Paper, printed and finished in a manner to make it worthy of a place in any library. As the field of Irish poetic literature is notably extensive, there is no difficulty in finding a sufficient number of especially choice poems to fill even an hour's reading, and none will be taken to admit only those entitled to this classification. The selection will be chiefly modern and in large extent contemporaneous, but in order that the work shall be thoroughly representative in character all the older poets with a claim to prominence in its pages. A carefully prepared department of biographical notes, separate from the body of the work, will be in itself a feature of interest and value. No effort will be spared to make this Anthology as thorough in every respect that it may be accepted as a standard work of its kind.

In compilers and writers like Mr. Connolly with the Irish people must depend for their tentants in disease, famine and war. Ecclesiastics administered the tenant-rights of his father. The amount of rent consisted in one third of the produce of the farm, one third belonged to the tenant and the other third was used to defray expenses. When the tenant brought the rent to the landlord the latter had to treat him as a gentleman. The rules of a seventeenth Odinon Mass, required that when a tenant came to pay his rent, "the abbot must give him two new shoes, bread and red wine. If the abbot's servants, they were obliged to leave their spurs and swords outside the door "lest as not to frighten the women of the house." If a landlord wanted to eat test the rent whilst the tenant's wife was sick with child, he could get nothing eat but the hand of a rooster; the rooster itself had to be fed to the sick mother. In case a tenant was too poor to pay the rent, the abbey supplied a poor tenant with the whole heart and soul against the whole British spirit of the age. The consequence was sure and not unexpected. Hardly anybody in England know the name of such a person." And yet Mr. Mitchell, patriot and Irishman, tells us "I have never yet met a cultivated Irishman or woman, of genuine Irish nature, who did not prize Clarence Mangan above all the poets that their island sang or sang.

Lastly, however, there has come a change. Ireland is becoming more known to England, not alone from her own pleadings for justice and equitable laws, but also from the voice of the new Ireland that has spoken in Parliament. Many of the most liberal Englishmen are studying closer this Ireland of which they knew so little in the past, are studying closer the Irish people, their customs and their literature. By them, even the people of England are taking an interest in Irish literature, that England whose "dictation gave the law to throughout the literary domain of her semi-barbarous tongue," it is a sign that the "Island Saints" has been making wonderful strides of late.

Mr. Connolly's book will be a compendium of Irish poetic literature from the earliest times up to the present day. As will be seen in the prospectus, not alone Irish but also Irish-American writers will find a place in it. Our own California will not be forgotten, and such a volume would indeed be incomplete did it not pay tribute to the genius of Miss Harriet M. Skidmore, Mr. Daniel O'Connell and others will be duly recognized, and we hope Mr. Connolly's undertaking, if so straight, has omitted to include Miss Marcella M. Fitzgerald among his Irish-American poets. Bartholomew Dowling's sweet song—which we quote from Mr. Connolly's published list of writers—will surely not be slighted.

Congratulating Mr. Connolly on the successful completion of his praise-worthy undertaking, we wish his book every success and trust it will receive a welcome in every land wherever the scattered children of the Irish race have found a home.

The Land for the People.

Readers of the MONITOR will be pleased to learn that Representative Payson of Illinois has prepared a bill to prevent aliens from acquiring real estate in the Territories of the United States. A telegram concerning the important measure conveys the intelligence that hereafter American soil shall be owned by Americans, so far as Congress can control it. The Committee on Public Lands, in the Congress as in the last, is thoroughly committed to the policy of administering our public land system that the agricultural lands of the nation shall be period, without cost, to be held in small tracts, by actual settlers only, for the purpose of cultivation by the owner, entering thereby the thrift of the citizen and economy in his management which ownership always stimulates. This policy, the report submits, should become the national rule.

The report shows that owing to one reason or other, the vast domain of the United States, and other corporations, and the maladministration of the laws by which men of wealth and companies have been permitted to acquire other great areas of the public domain, the vast territory we had at the beginning has become so reduced that less than 2,000,000 acres of arable agricultural land remains for the settler under the general land laws, and about 50,000,000 acres only of lands susceptible of improvement by irrigation. These lands, by devious methods in many cases, have been secured in great areas by capitalists and corporations, foreign as well as domestic. A statement is appended showing that 20,747,000 acres are held by foreigners. Among the large holders mentioned are the Marquis of Tweedale, Sir Edward Reed, the Holland Company, and several syndicates, the possession of each being millions of acres.

This bill which the report accompanies provides that no alien or foreigner who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, nor any corporation (one-tenth of whose stock is owned or controlled by aliens or foreigners, shall have the right to acquire real estate in any of the Territories of the United States.

THE HAIL MARY.

"Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou among women." Luke. 1. 28.

FIFTEENTH ARTICLE.

MARY'S PEERLESS BEAUTY

(CONTRIBUTED TO THE MONITOR BY A LADY OF THE ORDER OF DOMINIC.)

Having profound admiration only for the sublime beauty of Mary's original and unlimited or endless sanctity, exemplified either in her Immaculate Conception, or her virginal conceptions of her Divine Son, Doctors, Fathers, Saints, and Holy Church herself, on the feast of the Immaculate Trinity, on Mary's inexpressible spiritual beauty, we will now humbly add the inadequate witnesses to terrestrial beauty, which go for the purpose of unfolding as on our holy Mother's mental and corporal beauty and also on some other important points relating to her and to us. We have a right to know all about our glorious Mother, and we will have it described only by those who are qualified to do so. Mary's beauty, which is the beauty of Most Sacred Mother of God, and every principle proclaims that the most beautiful of the world must be such as a Mother who is like unto God transcends all others in beauty. But let us for ourselves, and for the edification of those who are of the faithful, they may, and of the faithful, they may, says, by, was singular, there was a Mother who is like unto God, and who is there perfect beauty in all the world, in the Mother of God? Mary, the Mother of God, is the principle of the Eagle of Theologians. "All generations shall call me blessed." Mary,

Farm and Home.

Useful Receipts.

CORNS.—Take a lump of common washing soda, dip the end in water, and rub the corn well with it before putting on stockings in the morning. Repeat this treatment two or three times a week until the corn ceases to cause annoyance.

EAR-ACHE.—Put a few drops of sulphuric ether on a piece of wool or wadding, and place in the affected ear, with the head inclined so that it may soak in. This remedy generally cures instantaneously, and is also an excellent cure for the tooth-ache.

CORN MIXTURE.—Paregoric elixir, five cents worth, and six drops of laudanum. Mix a little molasses with three or four ounces of vinegar, and put on the fire till nearly boiling; then add to it the other ingredients. Pour it into a bottle, shake it, and it will be ready for use; when the cough is troublesome take a spoonful.

CURE FOR WEAK EYES.—Take a small piece of copperas about the size of a pea, put it in a small phial holding about two ounces of water; carry this in the pocket, and, occasionally taking out the cork, turn the phial upon the finger's end, and thus bathe the eye with the moist finger-point. This will effect a cure in a short time.

RHEUMATISM.—The following is said to be an excellent cure for the cure of rheumatism: Take half pint of vinegar, half pint of turpentine, one egg well-beaten. Mix these ingredients together. Apply to seat of pain two or three times a day, and rub it well into the skin.

TO CURE A COLD.—Before retiring soak the feet in mustard water as hot as can be endured; the feet at first should be plunged in a pail half full of lukewarm water, adding by degrees hot water but until the desired heat is attained, protecting the body and limbs with blankets so as to direct the vapor from the water and induce a good sweat. Next, to two tablespoonfuls of white sugar add fourteen drops of strong spirits of camphor. Drink the whole and get into bed under plenty of bed-clothes and sleep it off.

Touching Them to be Disrespectful.

The father or mother, who in the presence of their children, will not only condemn what the priest says from the altar, but at the same time will perhaps speak disparagingly of him and the Church, should know that they are not teaching their children respect for authority. Children are not at all times slow to learn, and they naturally infer that if it is not wrong for father and mother to speak so disrespectfully of priest and Church, it is not very wrong to stay away from them altogether. This, however, is not the worst feature of this bad habit which some parents have.

When they show disrespect for the authority of the pastor in the presence of their children, they are indirectly teaching those children to disrespect parental authority. Many young men and women to day disrespect, because the parents taught them to do so.

Keep Faith With Children.

The child's trust is generally a fair index of the parent's truthfulness. Where a child accepts at once a parent's word, and lean upon it as one would lean upon a word of the living God, there, be sure, the parent's truthfulness has been a sacred thing, not profaned by idle words or accidental falsehoods. Parents, you can make the child has been destroyed by the untruth of the parent. There is hardly a deadlier injury that a parent could do to a child than this; for there is no barrier lost to which a child could be subject than the loss of trust. How great the crime, then, when the hand that robs the child of that priceless treasure is the hand of a parent.

Small Farms.

Four hundred colonists in Southern California convey less than twelve acres each, and yet they clear up from $900 to $1,500 a year not on their small treats, and live comfortably in real elegance. Yet we were told at a recent meeting in this city that the small tract plan in Central California will not pay. But it will; and better far than in the Southern section, for the reason that our lands are not half so high as yet; low labor is needed to secure like production, and greater reliance can be placed upon the annual rainfall, and hence less irrigation is needed. What we need here is activity in colony schemes, the subdivision of large land holdings, and consequent variety in products.

Small farm holdings have proved profitable in this section and there is no doubt that they would further north in some sections—where, only time and experience will determine. A ten-acre farm in Dakota would not be able to make a man a millionaire, neither will it in some sections of California. Where it has not been tried we would advise a man to experiment with ten acres before he sold off all the rest of his domain, then if he failed, he could sold enough more to it till he had found by experience just how much he would need. One great drawback to the State has been the enormous tracts controlled by single individuals; so large that they could not be worked to advantage, and that left lying idle shutting out others who might work a portion and thus sustain a larger population. "A little farm well tilled" is a good adage worthy of being followed by all who till the ground for a livelihood.—Riverside Press.

Cruelty to Animals.

Cruelty to animals is a crime in every family. It takes the child, a young, confiding girl from her father's home under the solemn promise of providing as pleasant a home as his abilities will permit. The result of this union is a family of helpless dependent children. It is a sacred obligation to see that they are cared for. His life and its earnings, present and future, are their only financial dependence. To them it means bread, clothing, education and protection from want and perpetion. Now take a man at thirty-five years, earning $1,000 a year, and, all sentiment aside, the actual cash value of his life at fifty, to his family would be $15,000; that is what they would lose if he should die. That is what they are constantly in danger of losing; and it is against this contingency he should make provision. If he has anything near the amount, apart from all financial risks, he may be said to possess a ready substitute for the money value of his life. But how few can say this! It is then the duty of the head of the family, from his little earnings to provide against the contingency as best he can, in some other way. How can this be done? There is but one way possible. The loss must be taken from the family and distributed over a community organized for that purpose. This is the whole philosophy of co-operative insurance and any prudent, frugal man among the different Catholic organizations, may secure an ample provision for his family, on the safest and cheapest terms that have ever been devised.

—Bolls, blotches, pimples, and all skin diseases are quickly cured by cleansing the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Family Fun.

A Husband's First Experience.

"You had better put them down on a piece of paper," said Mrs. B., on giving her list, order. "Oh, no," said Mr. B., "my memory is good." "Will, then, a spool of cotton, black thread." "Yes." "A pard of not too light and not too dark calico." "Yes. "A small hammer, a set of pastors of the Pasadena brand, a dozen small pearl buttons, two yards of cardinal ribbon, silk on one side, satin on the other." "Yes," said Mr. S. thoughtfully. "A pair of slippers for baby, a dozen lemons, a good tooth brush, a pineapple, two ounces of skyblue German yarn, an ounce ball of home-spun, six yards of rubber tubing." "Wait a second," said Mr. S., consulting on his finger. "And a bottle of vanilla extract and a yard of triple box plaited crepe lisse trimming and three yards of small-checked nainsook and—" But Mr. S. had seized his hat and was running for the station. What the poor man brought home was a pair of bedticking, three yards of black crepe, a bottle of vinegar, eight yards of nankeen, a scrub brush, a pound of green tea, sixty spools of coat thread, a yard of very black calico and a pint bottle of homeopathic pills. "There, my dear," throwing down the package triumphantly, "I don't think you'll find a thing missing. Who says a man can't do shopping!"

Willing to Accomodate.

Gentleman Two dollars for carrying in that coal, uncle Rastus! Why, you never charged me but $1 before.

Uncle Rastus—I know dat, boss, but labor has rix.

Gentleman—I would rather carry it in myself than pay that extra dollar.

Uncle Rastus—All right, boss. Yo'kin gyro wo 81 ear' carry de coal in yo'sel of yo' was' too. Jes mistaken.

The Red Flag.

Dr. Dan Dunlap of Chicago, is a Socrates of the red flag. "Do you sight of red arouse her to a high pitch of sentiment.

"Surely she cannot here any sympathy in common with such outbreaks."

"Yes she has."

"What, Anarchists and Socialists!"

"No, sentiments."

A Hopeless Case.

"My dear friend," cautioned a temperance advocate, "do you know that the liquor you are about to drink will bite like a serpent and sting like an adder?"

"No, it won't," replied the dear friend addressed, who was a robust tramp. "I only wish it would, but I've drank it too long for that. It will go down like as much water."

The Green Above the Red.

Englishman I fancy a great many Irishmen you know. They abounded in the Chicago riots.

American—Uh, yes several of the injured policemen were Irishmen.

Exceeding the Limit.

Prisoner—He said he didn't believe in the eight hour system, your Honor, and so I struck him.

Magistrate—You sent eight hours do you?

Prisoner—Yes, your Honor.

Magistrate—I can do better than that for you. I'll give you ninety days.

The Boy Who Helped Mother.

Baby was sick and fretful, the weather was cold and cheerless, and everything seemed all her into his thoughts and began to consider how he could help mother. He was a little man in the general family, and so he thought and came round to the kitchen door where the baby was.

Ned was head of Baby Bea and Baby Ben Lord Ned, for he always tell very quickly who knows them. He was always stretching out his chubby arms for Ned to take him. Finally, as soon as the log hatter appeared to sight, there was a cry of delight.

"Bunny have a ride!" said Ned, and the bany crowed again.

There was no baby carriage. How often Ned wished they had one, so that he could ride Bunny into the garden and up and down the road. But there was no money to buy baby carriages.

"Will I have to make the old wheelbarrow do for a spell," said Ned, as he lifted the little one gently. Ned was always gentle with the baby.

Then the ride. How it pleased the baby and pleased mother to see the child so interested to her work. And was there a third man to be pleased? Yes, Ned himself, and this third was the largest of the party. Ned was a man in his own estimation, and there is a reward which God gives for every kindness done, if it is one ever so little.

Try it and see. In all the kind acts you can, to every one you meet, for wherever you can, and see if you are not happy.

I Can't and I Will.

When bed time came, Sammie looked as happy his mother and she knew he had something to tell. Sammie was a little man of some grown ups, yesterday I thought. "Oh, I can't, I can't, but now I will, and the first thing while I was thinking these thoughts, some one jumped at me and screached 'Boo,' as loud as he could, and there was that the Chinaman Nick Neal again, and my first thought was, I can't keep my temper, but quick as a flash, I said, I will, so I just laughed and said, 'Nick, that was pretty well done, Nick; suppose you try it again.' Well, he thought one of the way to school, and, that 'can't' and 'will' kept up a battle all the whole way, but 'will' came out victorious.

"Well done" says mother, "I'm glad to hear that.

"But the best of it," continued Sammie, "was when I came home, I wanted to borrow a knife, and some of the fellows would lend him one, his hands were dirty, and he looked so mean. I had another battle with 'can't' and 'will,' but up I marched and handed Nick my knife, and you'll believe it, Mother dear, Nick used it so careful as he could, and when he brought it back, said, like a gentleman, 'Thank you, Sam.' I wish bother I say and more, our work let any of the other fellows alone.

"But after recess I failed in spelling, after I spent an hour over it, I thought I knew my lesson perfectly. Oh, I wanted to play, but then there was another battle with 'can't and will,' but I guess I'm better of my temper again.

"The afternoon, while we were playing in the yard, I was the ball fly right in my face, and gave me the bloody nose, but it hurt. I ached to hit Tom back, and I was sure he didn't hurt me a bit, and kept saying, 'I can't restrain myself, then I thought of what I read in the Bible yesterday, 'Consider thy self lest thou also tempted.' Then I said, 'I will restrain myself.' Then I thought, I can't, I can't, I will, I said, 'Please try and not do that again.' Tom said he was sorry, and I guess he takes a dime his father gave him to spend, but of course I wouldn't.

"The most troublesome boy of the age is the boy-mill.

Our Young Folks.

The Boy Who Helped Mother.

Baby was sick and fretful, the weather was cold and cheerless, and everything seemed all out of joint. Mother was busy and tired, and baby was fretful and cross.

Ned was head of Baby Bea and Baby Ben Lord Ned, for he always tell very quickly who knows them. He was always stretching out his chubby arms for Ned to take him. Finally, as soon as the log hatter appeared to sight, there was a cry of delight.

"Bunny have a ride!" said Ned, and the bany crowed again.

There was no baby carriage. How often Ned wished they had one, so that he could ride Bunny into the garden and up and down the road. But there was no money to buy baby carriages.

"Will I have to make the old wheelbarrow do for a spell," said Ned, as he lifted the little one gently. Ned was always gentle with the baby.

Then the ride. How it pleased the baby and pleased mother to see the child so interested to her work. And was there a third man to be pleased? Yes, Ned himself, and this third was the largest of the party. Ned was a man in his own estimation, and there is a reward which God gives for every kindness done, if it is ever so little.

Try it and see. In all the kind acts you can, to every one you meet, for wherever you can, and see if you are not happy.

I Can't and I Will.

When bed time came, Sammie looked as happy his mother and she knew he had something to tell. Sammie was a little man of some grown ups, yesterday I thought. "Oh, I can't, I can't, but now I will, and the first thing while I was thinking these thoughts, some one jumped at me and screached 'Boo,' as loud as he could, and there was that the Chinaman Nick Neal again, and my first thought was, I can't keep my temper, but quick as a flash, I said, I will, so I just laughed and said, 'Nick, that was pretty well done, Nick; suppose you try it again.' Well, he thought one of the way to school, and, that 'can't' and 'will' kept up a battle all the whole way, but 'will' came out victorious.

"Well done" says mother, "I'm glad to hear that.

"But the best of it," continued Sammie, "was when I came home, I wanted to borrow a knife, and some of the fellows would lend him one, his hands were dirty, and he looked so mean. I had another battle with 'can't' and 'will,' but up I marched and handed Nick my knife, and you'll believe it, Mother dear, Nick used it so careful as he could, and when he brought it back, said, like a gentleman, 'Thank you, Sam.' I wish bother I say and more, our work let any of the other fellows alone.

"But after recess I failed in spelling, after I spent an hour over it, I thought I knew my lesson perfectly. Oh, I wanted to play, but then there was another battle with 'can't and will,' and I guess I'm better of my temper again.

"The afternoon, while we were playing in the yard, the ball fly right in my face, and gave me the bloody nose, but it hurt. I ached to hit Tom back, and I was sure he didn't hurt me a bit, and kept saying, 'I can't restrain myself,' then I thought of what I read in the Bible yesterday, 'Consider thy self lest thou also tempted.' Then I said, 'I will restrain myself.' Then I thought, I can't, I can't, I will, I said, 'Please try and not do that again.' Tom said he was sorry, and I guess he takes a dime his father gave him to spend, but of course I wouldn't.

"The most troublesome boy of the age is the boy-mill.

Monitor Mystics.

Original Conundrum No. 139.

My first is in pear but not in pear,
My second is in pear but not in pear,
My third is in pear but not in pear,
My fourth is in female but not in male,
My fifth is in rye but not in oats,
My sixth is in rye but not in oats,
My seventh is in sister but not in brother,
My eighth is in good but not in naughty,
My ninth is in good but not in bad,
My whole is a member of the United States.

Lina.

Original Conundrum No. 140.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 141.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 142.

I am composed of twenty letters and 13 words.
My 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 is a boy's name.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 is what every boy should be taught to carry.
My 17, 18, 19, 20 is the motto of a State.
My 6, 10, 16, 18, 19 is a prophet.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 is a river and
My 11, 12, 13, 14 is an ocean.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 20 means straight.
My 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 means a builder.
My 4, 5, 10, 13, 20 is a contradiction.
My 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 is a tool.
My 20, 6, 10, 17, 18, 19 is a noun.
My 4, 6, 20, 19, 17, 18 means a beard.
My whole is an old adage.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Enigma No. 143.

I am composed of eighteen letters.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 is what we all wish to have.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 is a noun.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 is what we all wish to have.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 is a noun.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 is what we all wish to have.
My whole is a future land relief.

May

Original Enigma No. 144.

I am composed of twenty letters.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Numerical Enigma No. 145.

My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Numerical Enigma No. 146.

I am composed of three words and 19 letters.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Rebus No. 147.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 148.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Conundrum No. 149.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 150.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 151.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Enigma No. 152.

I am composed of twenty letters.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 153.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 154.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 155.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 156.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 157.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 158.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 159.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 160.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Conundrum No. 161.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 162.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Rebus No. 163.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 164.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 165.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 166.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 167.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 168.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 169.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 170.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 171.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 172.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 173.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 174.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 175.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 176.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 177.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 178.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 179.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 180.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 181.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 182.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 183.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 184.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 185.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 186.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 187.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 188.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 189.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 190.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 191.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 192.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 193.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 194.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 195.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 196.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

Original Charade No. 197.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Conundrum No. 198.

My first is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My second is in Ellen but not in Nell,
My third is in Simon but not in Ray,
My fourth is in Ellen and Nell and Ray,
My whole is a flower blooming today.

Lina.

Original Rebus No. 199.

My first is in the world and in every household,
My second is a kind of grain,
My whole is a relative of first in female of

Miss WILLIAM MCKENNA

Original Numerical Enigma No. 200.

I am composed of twenty letters and 19 words.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 is a proverb.
My whole is a proverb.

Miss J. C. DONOHOE

NEW PLAN OF LIFE ENDOWMENT!

EQUITY BENEFIT ASSOCIATION,

968 and 970 Folsom St.

HOME OFFICE.

Room 6, Odd Fellows' New Building, Cor. 7th. and Market Streets.

No Medical Examination Required.
Same Rates for all Ages.
Benefits Paid on the Last Day of Each Month.
Old Members Have no Advantage over the Younger.
Ten Cash Benefits Paid on Each Certificate During Life.

OFFICERS.

AGENTS WANTED.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,

GENT'S ^ BOY'S
CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We pay for Cash and sell as low as possible

CARROLL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,

Great Credit Sale!

AT AUCTION PRICES

For Three Weeks Only.

25 LARGE, BEAUTIFUL LOTS

$250 AND UPWARDS,

Chapin Park, Mastick Station, City of Alameda.

SALE PEREMPTORY

BECAUSE OF REMOVAL FROM THE STATE.

ONLY 30 MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO, free UP-cars, by commutation, three minutes walk from Mastick Station, water mains, gas and electric lights, one hour's ride, cool climate, no fogs, no mosquitoes, no malaria, no sunstrokes, TERMS: ONE DOLLAR PER WEEK PER LOT, interest per annum SIX PER CENT, interest per annum.

This Park is Highly Improved

With ornamental Trees and Evergreen Hedges. Title perfect. Law taxes, Schools and Churches within easy access. One of the earliest of high winds and Fogs. Pure artesian water. Sewerage is certain, giving full perfect title.

Apply to S. A. CHAPIN, NO. 1 MONTGOMERY ST. SAY AVENUE, San Francisco, or to D. W. CHAPIN, 200 MONTGOMERY STREET.

HOOPER'S
South End
Warehouse,

"Regular" Call-Board Warehouse.

First-Class Fire-Proof Brick-Building.

CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.

TOWNSEND ST.,

Between First and Second, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver REMEDY. 606 Market St., S. F.

LEBENBAUM BROS.

Fine Groceries,

215 SUTTER ST.

Polk Street, Cor. California.

JOHN B. McINTYRE,
Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer,
423 CLAY and 422 COMMERCIAL STS

SITUATION WANTED.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

648 MARKET STREET

BRANCH,

1256 MARKET ST.

LAUNDRY.

12th St., bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

DYSPEPSIA

SCROFULA

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.

WHOLESALE

LIQUOR DEALER,

Established 1870.

We are selling Cheaper for Cash and guarantee our goods.

Table Wines . . . 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.
Assorted Wines . . . $1, $

History of Boycotting.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

month. Lord now were the tutories of the Yeakes ownership. The Connecticut Legislature, if it heard, took no action. But the business men of New London, whose most of the boats were owned, were none the loss greatly incensed. They had a wasps nest their command with which they should strike back, and they believed that its hive would be full. A "boycott" was declared, a league was formed, and a paper was passed about which bound the signers, their wives, their daughters, and their hired men to send into New York neither eggs nor bacon, nor firewood, nor anything whatsoever, and not to purchase from New York their salmon and sealine, their threads and needles, their silks and ribbons, nor to furnish to any craft bound in the Connecticut State any sort of lading, for one year from July 20, 1787. The agreement was faithfully kept, but before the year operated in full the agreement had passed the States ratified the Constitution, and New York was forever deprived of the power to tax her neighbors.

Year passed and there arose a class of people known as abolitionists. The merchants of the Southern States kept a list of those who had "boycotted" them as vigorously and fling him from his palace-store and where him one of their great business he had inherited.

Boycotting is sometimes a wise, offensive weapon, and that, whether it be right or wrong, it is a weapon which Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., has recently contributed to an English paper in which he sets forth the following as the reasons why Ireland's representatives should not be retained in the British Parliament:

I have written and spoken so often on this subject of the Government of Ireland Bill, that I feel a certain shame-faced one in again discussing it; I can only go over again a great deal of ground I have already trodden. The first thing I ask to be conceded to an Irish Nationalist in discussing this question is, that he should get credit for looking at it with a view to the peace and welfare of Ireland as well as with a view to the peace and welfare of England. He can desire the peace and welfare of England without any derogation of the fervor or even fierceity of his Irish Nationalism. For the peace and welfare of Ireland, I believe, the scheme of self government for Ireland contained in the Government of Ireland Bill is, on the whole, much the more have the Irish land, by so much the more have the Irish people their destiny without wanton or vexatious interference from England.

TO OPPOSE THE RETENTION OF THE IRISH MEMBERS

at Westminster then, is in the interest of Ireland as well as in the interest of Ireland. Suppose the Irish members retained, if, by business of the Imperial Parliament are they to take part? In purely Imperial? But Mr. Gladstone has proved conclusively that it is impossible to make any distinction between purely Imperial and other business in the Imperial Parliament as it is at present constituted. Then if the Irish members remain they must be able to take part in something more than Imperial affairs; and yet have no a consequence a grossly unjust arrangement. The Irish are then any interference whatever from the Englishmen or Scotchmen in their exclusively Irish affairs; and on reason the English and the Scotch people are under the absolute domination of Irishmen, not merely in Imperial, but also in purely English and Scotch affairs. I say the absolute domination; and there are the only words that adequately describe the power which the Irish members would exercise in your affairs and the Irish representation be maintained at Westminster. Let me here remark that Gladstone and other opponents of Home Rule are going on a wholesome wrong task when they speak of the power of the Irish members at Westminster as a power dependent on their representation. If that were to be possible it would be the indignant demand of the British Parliament was to allow itself to be intimidated by the discontent of a section of its members, into the surrender of privileges necessary for the maintenance of Imperial integrity and the supremacy of Parliament. But nobody has said that the Irish power in Westminster is a power dependent at greater or even in large degree on the power in Ireland. It is the power to vote that makes the inconvenience of Irish members at Westminster now; for by the power to vote the Irish members control all the political forces of the Empire by their ability to decide whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government shall rule. Take away from them the power of the vote, and, of course, exclude the Irish vote from consideration, and all great party divisions; but such projects belong entirely to the region of dreams. I say, then, that I propose the Irish members at Westminster,

TO DEPRIVE THEM OF THEIR IN THE CER-

TAIN PROSPECTS

and evil to England and Scotland and the Empire in the present arrangement, yet to deprive representatives the lords and masters and dictators of your fortunes by their power to turn great party divisions. The only difference between the present evil and the remedy proposed is substituting for that you add an additional grievance to England and to Ireland, because you give her an liberate Ireland from English control and fester more bitterness in Ireland, because you give her the responsibilities and difficulties of self government, and at the same time, instead of impose her in the means necessary for meeting those responsibilities and difficulties.

I will deal with the latter point presently from the moment I wish to pursue this enquiry from the English standpoint. You have just from the English standpoint. You have your Irish representation at Westminster; and a question of foreign policy arises—let us suppose that it concerns Russia—and which Mr. Gladstone declares to be imperatively the separation, namely, of purely and purely Imperial affairs, what would happen? There might be some pools of concurrency between England and Ireland as to the basis of the self government proposed to give to Ireland; does not everybody in his senses know that in the present state of feeling between the two countries the Irish vote would be given to one Minister and withheld from another; mainly by the view which the different Ministers took of the purely Irish grievances? You would then have that which I hold to be the very worst form of political delineation: deliberation where questions are concerned; and decided, not in reference to their intrinsic merits, but in reference to their bearing on some other question entirely alien. To regret as a simple I have already given; you would have while they were considering Irish affairs. Mr. Gladstone should prove to be correct—he thinks that it would be impossible to make a distinction between purely English or Scotch and Imperial affairs, the case becomes a hundred fold stronger—for then you would have all your internal policy in England and Scotland as well as your external affairs dictated and decided by the Irish representatives with a view purely and simply to their interests and to the single and the narrow question of Irish national demands. I assert that such a state of things is a guarantee, not of the stability of finality of the present, or any other settlement between England and Ireland, but the very strongest inducement to constant agitation for revision and re-settlement of the relations of the two countries. Give the Irish members omnipotence over your own fortunes, and they would be more than human if they did not use that omnipotence for the purpose of extending the rights of their own country; and if they were disinclined to do so, their constituents would not preserve they would find it impossible to resist.

IRISH MEMBERS VOTING ABOUT EGYPT

THE PROPOSED REVENTION IS BAD

from the fact that the new Irish Executive will have a task as difficult as any that was ever entrusted to any body of politicians. I need not go into the difficulties of the Irish Government. They are undoubtedly one, notorious—are regretted rather than denied in English articles and speeches, and yet it will be grasped by everybody that these difficulties will require the flower of the political intellect of Ireland; and all require besides the undivided energies of all the best men of Ireland. It is obviously impossible that Ireland could have the benefit of her best men, and the best energies of her best men, if she had to choose two sets of representatives, or if the same set of representatives had to attend to the joint duties of Irish and Imperial affairs.

Two sets of representatives, you would have another and a not trifling difficulty. Between these two sets there might be a feeling of jealously that would produce constant friction in the government of the country. If you had one set of representatives, you would impose on them an amount of labor that those acquainted with the journey between London and Westminster do not require to have developed. Finally there lies at the bottom of this proposal to reduce Irish representation a hope that the Irish Legislature would thus be shorn of much of its power, and more of its dignity. The idea is that the acts of the Irish Legislature would simply be so many Provincial bye-laws which would have no legislative weight until they received the formal sanction of the Imperial Parliament.

WHAT WOULD THAT MEAN?

Would it be a satisfaction to Ireland? Would it not be rather a humiliation? Would it not be rather a greater nuisance than ever? For this would mean that you would have Irish questions once more monopolizing the attention of the Imperial Parliament—the block of all business, and the postponement of all reform in England, to the block of all business, and the postponement of all reform in Ireland. Do Irishmen desire this question to be settled? Do they desire the peace and welfare of England without any derogation of the fervor or even fierceity of their Nationalism? For the peace and welfare of Ireland without any derogation of the fervor or even fierceity of their Nationalism? For the peace and welfare of Ireland, if it heard, took no action. But the business men of New London, whose most of the boats were owned, were none the loss greatly incensed. They had a wasps nest in their command with which they should strike back, and they believed that its hive would be full. A "boycott" was declared, a league was formed, and a paper was passed about which bound the signers, their wives, their daughters, and their hired men to send into New York neither eggs, nor bacon, nor firewood, not anything whatsoever, and not to purchase from New York their salmon and sealine, their threads and needles, their silks and ribbons, nor to furnish to any craft bound in the Connecticut State any sort of lading, for one year from July 20, 1787. The agreement was faithfully kept, but before the year operated in full the agreement had passed the States ratified the Constitution, and New York was forever deprived of the power to tax her neighbors.

Year passed and there arose a class of people known as abolitionists. The merchants of the Southern States kept a list of those who had "boycotted" them as vigorously and persistently as they were able, and it was not until the reply of Henry C. Bowen, "I call my goods, not my principles," became the creed of the North that the memorials boycott was "smashed."

Our Jewish citizens have demonstrated the power of boycotting when employed in a just cause. When it is strong enough to insult their foes. He refused them admission to his hotel. The Hebrews declared a boycott and fling him from his palace-store and where him one of their great business he had inherited.

Boycotting is sometimes a wise, offensive weapon, and that, whether it be right or wrong, it is a weapon which Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., has recently contributed to an English paper in which he sets forth the following as the reasons why Ireland's representatives should not be retained in the British Parliament:

An Irish Parliament in Ireland.

REASONS FOR NO REPRESENTATIVES AT WESTMINSTER.

T. P. O'CONNOR'S OPPOSITION.

The Question Viewed from All Standpoints.

"WHY WE WANT TO GO" is the caption of an article which Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., has recently contributed to an English paper in which he sets forth the following as the reasons why Ireland's representatives should not be retained in the British Parliament:

I have written and spoken so often on this subject of the Government of Ireland Bill, that I feel a certain shame-faced one in again discussing it; I can only go over again a great deal of ground I have already trodden. The first thing I ask to be conceded to an Irish Nationalist in discussing this question is, that he should get credit for looking at it with a view to the peace and welfare of Ireland as well as with a view to the peace and welfare of England. He can desire the peace and welfare of England without any derogation of the fervor or even fierceity of his Irish Nationalism. For the peace and welfare of Ireland, I believe, the scheme of self government for Ireland contained in the Government of Ireland Bill is, on the whole, much the more have the Irish land, by so much the more have the Irish people their destiny without wanton or vexatious interference from England.

TO OPPOSE THE RETENTION OF THE IRISH MEMBERS

at Westminster then, is in the interest of Ireland as well as in the interest of Ireland. Suppose the Irish members retained, if, by business of the Imperial Parliament are they to take part? In purely Imperial? But Mr. Gladstone has proved conclusively that it is impossible to make any distinction between purely Imperial and other business in the Imperial Parliament as it is at present constituted. Then if the Irish members remain they must be able to take part in something more than Imperial affairs; and yet have no a consequence a grossly unjust arrangement. The Irish are then any interference whatever from the Englishmen or Scotchmen in their exclusively Irish affairs; and on reason the English and the Scotch people are under the absolute domination of Irishmen, not merely in Imperial, but also in purely English and Scotch affairs. I say the absolute domination; and there are the only words that adequately describe the power which the Irish members would exercise in your affairs and the Irish representation be maintained at Westminster. Let me here remark that Gladstone and other opponents of Home Rule are going on a wholesome wrong task when they speak of the power of the Irish members at Westminster as a power dependent on their representation. If that were to be possible it would be the indignant demand of the British Parliament was to allow itself to be intimidated by the discontent of a section of its members, into the surrender of privileges necessary for the maintenance of Imperial integrity and the supremacy of Parliament. But nobody has said that the Irish power in Westminster is a power dependent alt-gether or even in large degree on the power in Ireland. It is the power to vote that makes the inconvenience of Irish members at Westminster now; for by the power to vote the Irish members control all the political forces of the Empire by their ability to decide whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government shall rule. Take away from them the power of the vote, and, of course, exclude the Irish vote from consideration, and all great party divisions; but such projects belong entirely to the region of dreams. I say, then, that I propose the Irish members at Westminster,

TO DEPRIVE THEM OF THEIR IN THE CER-

TAIN PROSPECTS

and evil to England and Scotland and the Empire in the present arrangement, yet to deprive representatives the lords and masters and dictators of your fortunes by their power to turn great party divisions. The only difference between the present evil and the remedy proposed is substituting for that you add an additional grievance to England and to Ireland, because you give her the responsibilities and difficulties of self government, and at the same time, instead of impose her in the means necessary for meeting those responsibilities and difficulties.

I will deal with the latter point presently from the moment I wish to pursue this enquiry from the English standpoint. You have just from the English standpoint. You have your Irish representation at Westminster; and a question of foreign policy arises—let us suppose that it concerns Russia—and which Mr. Gladstone declares to be imperatively the separation, namely, of purely and purely Imperial affairs, what would happen? There might be some pools of concurrency between England and Ireland as to the basis of the self government proposed to give to Ireland; does not everybody in his senses know that in the present state of feeling between the two countries the Irish vote would be given to one Minister and withheld from another; mainly by the view which the different Ministers took of the purely Irish grievances? You would then have that which I hold to be the very worst form of political deliberation: deliberation where questions are concerned; and decided, not in reference to their intrinsic merits, but in reference to their bearing on some other question entirely alien. To regret as a simple I have already given; you would have while they were considering Irish affairs. Mr. Gladstone should prove to be correct—he thinks that it would be impossible to make a distinction between purely English or Scotch and Imperial affairs, the case becomes a hundred fold stronger—for then you would have all your internal policy in England and Scotland as well as your external affairs dictated and decided by the Irish representatives with a view purely and simply to their interests and to the single and the narrow question of Irish national demands. I assert that such a state of things is a guarantee, not of the stability of finality of the present, or any other settlement between England and Ireland, but the very strongest inducement to constant agitation for revision and re-settlement of the relations of the two countries. Give the Irish members omnipotence over your own fortunes, and they would be more than human if they did not use that omnipotence for the purpose of extending the rights of their own country; and if they were disinclined to do so, their constituents would not preserve they would find it impossible to resist.

IRISH MEMBERS VOTING ABOUT EGYPT

THE PROPOSED REVENTION IS BAD

from the fact that the new Irish Executive will have a task as difficult as any that was ever entrusted to any body of politicians. I need not go into the difficulties of the Irish Government. They are undoubtedly one, notorious—are regretted rather than denied in English articles and speeches, and yet it will be grasped by everybody that these difficulties will require the flower of the political intellect of Ireland; and all require besides the undivided energies of all the best men of Ireland. It is obviously impossible that Ireland could have the benefit of her best men, and the best energies of her best men, if she had to choose two sets of representatives, or if the same set of representatives had to attend to the joint duties of Irish and Imperial affairs.

Two sets of representatives, you would have another and a not trifling difficulty. Between these two sets there might be a feeling of jealously that would produce constant friction in the government of the country. If you had one set of representatives, you would impose on them an amount of labor that those acquainted with the journey between London and Westminster do not require to have developed. Finally there lies at the bottom of this proposal to reduce Irish representation a hope that the Irish Legislature would thus be shorn of much of its power, and more of its dignity. The idea is that the acts of the Irish Legislature would simply be so many Provincial bye-laws which would have no legislative weight until they received the formal sanction of the Imperial Parliament.

WHAT WOULD THAT MEAN?

Would it be a satisfaction to Ireland? Would it be a humiliation? Would it not be rather a greater nuisance than ever? For this would mean that you would have Irish questions once more monopolizing the attention of the Imperial Parliament—the block of all business, and the postponement of all reform in England, to the block of all business, and the postponement of all reform in Ireland. Do Irishmen desire this question to be settled? Do they desire the peace and welfare of England without any derogation of the fervor or even fierceity of their Nationalism? For the peace and welfare of Ireland, I believe, the scheme of self government for Ireland contained in the Government of Ireland Bill is, on the whole, much the more have the Irish land, by so much the more have the Irish people their destiny without wanton or vexatious interference from England.

TO OPPOSE THE RETENTION OF THE IRISH MEMBERS

at Westminster then, is in the interest of Ireland as well as in the interest of Ireland. Suppose the Irish members retained, if, by business of the Imperial Parliament are they to take part? In purely Imperial? But Mr. Gladstone has proved conclusively that it is impossible to make any distinction between purely Imperial and other business in the Imperial Parliament as it is at present constituted. Then if the Irish members remain they must be able to take part in something more than Imperial affairs; and yet have no a consequence a grossly unjust arrangement. The Irish are then any interference whatever from the Englishmen or Scotchmen in their exclusively Irish affairs; and on reason the English and the Scotch people are under the absolute domination of Irishmen, not merely in Imperial, but also in purely English and Scotch affairs. I say the absolute domination; and there are the only words that adequately describe the power which the Irish members would exercise in your affairs and the Irish representation be maintained at Westminster. Let me here remark that Gladstone and other opponents of Home Rule are going on a wholesome wrong task when they speak of the power of the Irish members at Westminster as a power dependent on their representation. If that were to be possible it would be the indignant demand of the British Parliament was to allow itself to be intimidated by the discontent of a section of its members, into the surrender of privileges necessary for the maintenance of Imperial integrity and the supremacy of Parliament. But nobody has said that the Irish power in Westminster is a power dependent alt-gether or even in large degree on the power in Ireland. It is the power to vote that makes the inconvenience of Irish members at Westminster now; for by the power to vote the Irish members control all the political forces of the Empire by their ability to decide whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government shall rule. Take away from them the power of the vote, and, of course, exclude the Irish vote from consideration, and all great party divisions; but such projects belong entirely to the region of dreams. I say, then, that I propose the Irish members at Westminster,

TO DEPRIVE THEM OF THEIR IN THE CER-

TAIN PROSPECTS

and evil to England and Scotland and the Empire in the present arrangement, yet to deprive representatives the lords and masters and dictators of your fortunes by their power to turn great party divisions. The only difference between the present evil and the remedy proposed is substituting for that you add an additional grievance to England and to Ireland, because you give her the responsibilities and difficulties of self government, and at the same time, instead of impose her in the means necessary for meeting those responsibilities and difficulties.

I will deal with the latter point presently from the moment I wish to pursue this enquiry from the English standpoint. You have just from the English standpoint. You have your Irish representation at Westminster; and a question of foreign policy arises—let us suppose that it concerns Russia—and which Mr. Gladstone declares to be imperatively the separation, namely, of purely and purely Imperial affairs, what would happen? There might be some pools of concurrency between England and Ireland as to the basis of the self government proposed to give to Ireland; does not everybody in his senses know that in the present state of feeling between the two countries the Irish vote would be given to one Minister and withheld from another; mainly by the view which the different

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

CORK.—The following has been addressed to Dan Gallagher, who is chief clerk of the Parcel Department, by the Vice-Chairman of Kilkenny. We, the people of the county, our first conference of the year, take the opportunity of tendering you our heartfelt thanks for your noble efforts in the cause of our country. Ireland, looks in Parliament and out, has gone forth to the civilized world, and has found an echo in every heart in which the love of liberty and justice walls. The history of an ancient, warlike, and, let us add, proud people is now being read in its true light, and we have confidence England will notify do her part, that our cause has been so fairly stated. We feel hope and joy, and we feel that our efforts may enable you to finish the work, and great can many years be be regaled to behold the happy results of your labors, and for the first time, after long years, to see Ireland free. Signed on behalf of the Parliamentary Committee, Vicar General of the diocese of Kilkenny, at St. Patrick's College, Carlow, May 6th 1887.

Cork.—A fishing basket was launched on May 1 at Gaabinmore. She is bounded for Captain Hannessy, of Queenstown, and will be fitted out for the mackerel and other fishery.

Mr. John Dillon, M.P., recently paid a visit to Kilkenny with Mr. J. U. Sheridan, M.P.

At the monthly meeting of the Bandon Town Commissioners, on Tuesday, April 26, the question of Mr. M. Healy, seconded by Mr. C. Crowley, appointed to meet Mr. Healy, M.P., fixed in the room of a member who has resigned.

At the meeting of the Fermoy of Board of Guardians, on May 1, a letter was read from Mr. Gladstone, in which he stated that the matter concerning the action of a member of the Board was brought under the notice of Mr. Ellicott at a meeting in London, and that Mr. Ellicott at a meeting in London, the Lord Chancellor to remove him from the Commission of the Peace.

Mr. Thomas Cassell Barry, wife of a farmer named Thomas Barry, residing at Banscoughter, near the Ballyhooly Station, gave birth to three strong healthy children on April 30, one weighing 7 lbs. and the other two 5 lbs. Mrs. Barry is the mother of twelve children, and the strange circumstance is connected with the birth of the latter, is that she was confined on the same day in the year 1885, and the four expected at least by the end of October.

Clare.—Lord Inchiquin, who has been a member of parliament for the Ennis, has been a member of years, wrote to the Ennis Chronicle, stating that he will not be a candidate for the Ennis Borough at the next election. The Earl of Dunraven, who is a member of the Ennis Borough, has also intimated his notice, having been appointed without his notice, having been appointed without his notice, having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Clare.

Limerick.—Mr. William Linden, a prominent Nationalist in the county Limerick, has been elected Chairman of the Rathkeale Board of Guardians.

At the recommendation of Capt O'Shea, M. P., the Lord Lieutenant has appointed Mr. Lane to be Clerk of the Peace for the County of Limerick, in place of Mr. Gabbett, who has resigned.

Tipperary.—The fourth anniversary of the Parnell demonstration in Tipperary, which will be celebrated with the usual enthusiasm on Sunday next, the 15th inst., at the monthly meeting of the Tipperary Town Commissioners, on May 3, Mr. Michael Doyle, who is about to change the name of Church street to that of Parnell street, the Commissioners were unable to change the name of Henry street, which, it was stated, Mr. Michael Doyle decided.

On May 6th, at Thurles, a young boy named Patrick Cahill, died suddenly. In the house of Mr. Cahill, a distinguished Holy Trinity, a Chancellor, Mr. Cahill, Mr. Michael Doyle, Mr. Cahill, Mr. Michael Doyle, Mr. Cahill, Mr. Michael Doyle

Poetry.

TWO MESSAGES.

A message from the Sacred Heart:
"My child, may I rely on thee?
My heart has bled for thee.
This is the answer I now send
To my poor heart in day,
And sweet from His throne He hands
To hear what I shall say.

A message to the sacred Heart.
"Oh, Lord, I am only a child
Thy heart is all I need.
Thou, Lord, I'll pray until I rise
Out from thy throne of love
Strength to do my duty
For heart will speak to heart.

M. ROSETTI.

REST IN THE SACRED HEART.

O sacred Heart, all blissful light of Heaven,
Rapture of mortals, beneficent ever bright,
Ravishing joys in rich and radiant splendor,
Flow from Thy glory in torrents of delight.

O sacred Heart, O hope of sinner's sorrow,
Rest of the weary, carworn and depressed,
Beauty land home earth's once outcast exiles,
When Thou smile They love we may lie down and rest.

O sacred Heart, Thy light is oddly rising
O'er the dark night of the world's chariot gloom;
Delight dawn the day of faith's undying glory,
Steadily then unshed a heed but long-long home.

O sacred Heart, as strain of solemn rapture,
Sweet falls the music in their ears as time
"Come unto Me all ye who mourn and labor;
Come, heavy ladies, and I will give you rest."

O sacred Heart, when shadow of death are falling,
Hither Thy children nestle the wings of love,
Hush as to rest in Thine own gentle mercy
Hear troubled spirits to brighter realms above.

O sacred Heart, what bliss, what thrilling raptures
Are to rest near Thee on Tabor one bright hour;
Bear to pass upon Thy beaming enlarger,
Never to part—to weep, to mourn no more.

F. BRANSFIELD.

Literary Miscellany.

The Ladies' Rock.

A LEGEND OF ARRANMORE, WRITTEN BY SAMUEL STONE.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

CHAPTER II.

Next day was a holiday of obligation, and as usual on such occasions the church on the island was crowded, and fervent worshippers during the celebration of Mass.

Not a single person was over the congregation, with the exception of about a dozen persons, gradually dispersed in various directions. The others remained prostrated in prayer for a considerable time, some before the altar, others before the statues of the Lady and St. Joseph, and one or two before the Host on the Cross. They presented a touching and edifying sight, kneeling in the solemn and serene gloom of the old church, there pious descendants of saints and martyrs who in their day bore witness to the undying Faith that illuminates the minds and purifies the hearts of the sons and the daughters of holy Ireland.

One of the worshippers rose and moved slowly to the door.

It was a young girl, with a thick veil drawn over her face.

Her movements were watched by two other young women, who now turned and whispered to each other.

"Do you know who that is, Kate?" asked one.

"No."

"That's Bridie O'Donnell."

"What brings her to the island to day?"

"I don't know. It's a long time since she was here before."

The speakers were Norah Dirlin and Kate Walsford.

They lingered in the porch.

"Now that we are outside the chapel," said Norah, "let us ask you one question. Do you love Gerald Boyle?"

"I do. Why do you ask me?"

"Because I love him too."

"I know it."

"Yes. And I would sooner die than give him up."

"So would I."

"I know that he loves me.

"And I know that he loves me."

"There is some trouble upon him of late; and I think it has some thing to do with me. He doesn't know which one of us to have."

"Ah, Bridie! Bridie!"—the cry was repeated by the loud tones of Gerald, whose voice pealed out the name which was dearest to his heart. He did not know at the time whether it was she or Norah or Kate who remained on the rock.

"The 'Maeve Rhu' came bounding over the billows, her white dripping sail shining in the bright moonlight.

"I am here, Gerald!" cried Bride, and she flung herself towards the boat, into which she was lifted by the strong arms of the hardy fisherman.

"Where are the others?" he demanded in a voice hoarse with alarm and fear.

"Drowned!" replied Bride.

With a groan of anguish the strong man fell to the bottom of the boat.

The rising wind caught the sail; the boat, its rudder no longer guided by the practised hand of its owner, veered round, and sped swiftly out towards the broad Atlantic.

Forgetting their danger, Bride called upon Gerald.

She received no reply. Bending over his prostrate form, and resting his shoulder with her hand, she pronounced his name again.

He lifted his head, and, then, dressed with tears, stared into her calm white face with a sort of stupified expression.

"What is the matter, my darling?" he asked, half consciously.

"We are drifting out to the high sea. Get up and assume the helm."

The young man rose and looked around him. The consciousness of their perilous position upon him; he shifted the sail, grasped the handle of the rudder, and turned his craft in the direction of the island.

But owing to some strange influence, or some unexplained current in the sea, the "Maeve Rhu" instead of making for the island, towards which her prow was pointed, kept drifting back into the ocean. Thick clouds obscured the moon; the breeze increased to a gale.

Gerald took out his oars and pulled with all his might.

Vain efforts! Mysterious hands seemed to push the boat onward.

"It is no use, Gerald," whispered Bride O'Donnell. "We will never more set foot upon land."

"Don't say that, Bride, don't say that, for God's sake," cried the young fisherman huskily. "I can not and we can't reach the island. Hush! listen! You can not see it now. It is covered by the sea. You know the rock I mean? A tall rock, like a lone tower, with a square top."

"It lies there," said Norah, indicating with her hand the position of the rock.

"Look! look! on the top of that rock at sunset, when the tide is out."

"Oh, I see," said Norah: "but the tide will be coming back almost immediately, and would be in danger of being surrounded by the sea."

"That is my plan." We will remain on the rock till the tide, nearly covers it. Gerald will be warned of our danger."

"And then?"

"The first that he will take off the rock will be his bride."

"But if he only takes one off the rock, if the sea is choppy, and he takes take the others off, what will become of them? said Kate Walsford, with a shudder.

"Leave it to the will of Heaven," said little Ashmolly. "Let us part now, and promise not to reveal our secret."

The three young girls separated, having pledged each other not to mention their design to anyone, but to allow Heaven to decide which one should be the bride.

Such is the legend of the "Ladies Rock," as the inhabitants of Arranmore, with a touch of real true poetry, call the rock which was the scene of the tragic events here related.

And it is related that when the moon is in its fullness, and the tide is very low, the weird forms of those three maidens, minus of a human form, are to be seen, at the still and solemn midnight hour, standing on the summit of that deserted rock, their arms stretched out and beckoning for help, and their voices, now rising in piteous shrieks, now sinking in a plaintive wail, now sighing a mournful cadence with the soft, low murmurs of the distant waves.

A THRILLING STORY.

Father Brabant, a Catholic Missionary to British Columbia, Tells of a Narrow Escape from Death.

By the schooner Favorite, just arrived from the west coast of the island—says the Victoria Colonist—there arrived Father Brabant, who took passage at Hesquiat. He brings with him the rusted barrel and lock of an old musket from which—though the stock is gone—a portion of the woodwork still depends, though rotten from exposure and crumbling to the touch. Also the blade and part of the hatchet of a French peasant, really inlaid in a block of wood moulded for the purpose. The weapon, or rather the remnants of them, form a relics of thrilling import to the Father, the inscription on the wood encasing the lock being well known to the Hesquiat Indians.

Recently, on April 29, 1886, by the Rev. Father Brabant and T. McDonald. The knife was destined to be used by Mathias to cut the priest's throat after shooting him down. It was found amongst the Indian remains, and was picked up in the present state as a souvenir by Thomas McDonald, of Cape Beale, B. C.

The attempt on Father Brabant's life to which allusion is made, occurred so far back as 1874, and as the details are no doubt unknown to many of our readers, the following particulars as related by Father Brabant, may prove not uninteresting.

In 1874, "said the Father, "I went to reside amongst the Hesquiat tribe of Indians, living on Hesquiat sound, on the west coast of this island. In the fall of the year the Indians had the middle-class of contract sachems—small-pox; which, as you are doubtless aware, is a disease fatal to them especially, and none of which, moreover, they are mortally afraid. The chief of the tribe was a young man named Mathaw, only some twenty-two years of age, and the father of a little boy then only two years old. His day, Mathaw came to me and asked me to put up a little shanty behind my house, out of the wind, which I gave him permission to do. The weather was bad and I allowed him to sleep in a room attached to my house. Early one morning he came to me and requested the loan of my gun (double barreled muzzle loader). I handed it to him, at the same time telling him that it was not loaded."

"Shortly after an Indian came to me and told me that the chief was sick, and that I had better get my gun out of his hands. Accordingly, I went to Mathaw's shanty and found him crouching in front of the fire, which was to the immediate left of the doorway. As I stood upon the threshold I saw my gun leaning against the side of the hut, behind the chief, and by its side was a bayonet which belonged to him. 'What is the matter?' I asked. He said, 'I want to talk about medicine; for as she gave him some medicine and that he would get all right; but, in a melancholy tone and with a wave of the hand, he repeated, as he got into the fire, 'I want to die.' I asked him to give me back my gun, if he had decided to die. He made a strange expression of contempt on his face, though smiling, he said, 'Not yet awhile.' I then left the cabin, and, on my way home, I met a young man who told me that both barrels had been fired at Mathaw, but that he had not got my hand, which at same instant there was a report and one barrel was discharged—the contents nearly shattering my right hand and wrist. Even at this time the explosion accident, and saying, 'See what you have done, ran stretched out and beckoning for help, and their voices, now rising in piteous shrieks, now sinking in a plaintive wail, now sighing a mournful cadence with the soft, low murmurs of the distant waves.

A THRILLING STORY.

Father Brabant, a Catholic Missionary to British Columbia, Tells of a Narrow Escape from Death.

By the schooner Favorite, just arrived from the west coast of the island—says the Victoria Colonist—there arrived Father Brabant, who took passage at Hesquiat. He brings with him the rusted barrel and lock of an old musket from which—though the stock is gone—a portion of the woodwork still depends, though rotten from exposure and crumbling to the touch. Also the blade and part of the hatchet of a French peasant, really inlaid in a block of wood moulded for the purpose. The weapon, or rather the remnants of them, form a relics of thrilling import to the Father, the inscription on the wood encasing the lock being well known to the Hesquiat Indians.

Recently, on April 29, 1886, by the Rev. Father Brabant and T. McDonald. The knife was destined to be used by Mathaw

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-THREE YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published in the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1898.

Editorial Notes.

—The diploma of merit of the North, South and Central American Exposition has been awarded to the schools of the Sisters of Mercy, San Francisco, for the educational display in the collective exhibit. The Sisters received a special diploma for needlework, plain and artistic.

—His Eminence Cardinal Moran, addressing a meeting of Catholics in Sydney recently, said that some years ago he made a visit to Cologne with the special object of obtaining, if possible, a relic of the great St. Brigid. He was happy to be able to inform them that through the kindness of several friends he had obtained that precious relic, and would in future, on the feast days of the Saint, have it exposed for the veneration of the faithful, on the altar dedicated to St. Brigid and St. Patrick in the Cathedral.

—The manifesto of Gladstone which we publish this week, is a magnificent document which does honor to the head and heart of the "Grand Old Man" who is standing up in defence of Ireland's cause with courage worthy of immortal renown. The outlook, too, for the forthcoming political contest at the polls, all over Great Britain, is very promising, and it is by no means unlikely that the Home Rule for Ireland Bill will be passed by the next Parliament.

—The brutal murders and the public indignities committed by the Dreyfusards of the North of Ireland as detailed in the dispatches which we publish this week, is only in keeping with the well known vandalic character of this blood stained class in Ireland. Next week we will give a brief history of the fearful crimes committed by these revers menins of the Church of Christ, in order that Americans may fully appreciate the diabolical character of these disturbers of the public peace.

—The MONITOR is glad to learn through a friend at present in Rome, that Rev. Vincent Di Maria, O. P., is meeting with great success in Europe in the introduction of his missionary lamp. During last month Father Di Maria gave several public exhibitions of his invention, and the Italian papers are loud in their praise of the marvelous of its reception. From Rome Father Di Maria will go to Bologna, and he hopes to introduce his astronomical lamp into general use in all the principal cities of Europe before his return.

—David Bell of Buffalo recently told this story apropos of the monster Socialist petition signed by the Irish Home Rule Bill, and as illustrating the ignorance and bigotry of some of the Scotch to and the Irish:

"Some years ago I was in Scotland, in the cottage of a shepherd, and in the course of conversation spoke of the good men and power of God, and His might in governing the world, the sky and heaven, and populating the earth with men and women. When he got through I put to him the question: 'Do you believe in God? Did He make' the Eerish, too?' 'Yes, most certainly, was the reply. 'Well then,' was the rejoinder, 'He has made a mistake in the matter.'"

—Ninety-four young ecclesiastics who finished their education in St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, were raised to the different orders of the Priesthood on the feast of the Ascension. Among them were are about to undertake several bishoprics in the Archdiocese who have numerous friends and relatives on this coast who will be happy to hear of their promotion. Among those who received the Tonsure are M. Sonahan, W. B. McKinnon, A. H. Cullen, E. J. Dunne, J. M. Travers, G. E. O'Reilly, J. W. Allen, P. E. Mulligan and J. J. McCoe of San Francisco. Subsequently T. P. Fallon, W. D. McKinnon, A. H. Cullen, E. J. Dunne, C. E. O'Neile, J. W. Allen and J. J. McCoe of this Archdiocese were elevated to Minor Orders. May God grant they may all persevere in the way and will they become laborers in this portion of the vineyard of the Lord.

—The Holy Father has made the appointments from the Gordon Nobles to convey the Cardinalitial berretas to the Cardinals created at the late Consistory. Count Jules Rodinari will be the envoy to go to Genoa the Archbishop of Rennes; Count John Nanoli to his Grace the Archbishop of Rome, Count Ferdinand Fallaldi to his Grace the Archbishop of Siena, Count Stanislas Mundoli to his Grace the Archbishop of Bologna, Count Charles Gaudi to his Grace the Archbishop of Quebec. The ceremony of delivering the Cardinal's berretta to Archbishop Ireland of Minnesota will take place on July 1st. Archbishop Kenrick of St. Louis having received the high honor of being appointed by the Pope Apostolic Delegate to confer the Cardinalitial insignia upon Archbishop Gibbons.

—One of the most cheering labors of a Catholic journalist is to point out the progress of the Church, because we feel delight in referring our readers to our fifth page, where they will find promising signs of the progress of the Church in this State, by reading accounts of new churches commenced or recently dedicated. At the late Provincial Council of the Province of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, the wonderful growth of the Church in that State was succinctly set forth by Archbishop Katzer, who said: "Forty-one years ago, when I first came to those parts, the Church was indeed like the mustard seed. There was not in what now constitutes the whole Province of Milwaukee as many priests as there are now Bishops. Instead of the 600,000 souls that we count to-day, there were then scarcely 8,000. Oh, what a change! And if I have lived to see these things, what may you not and yet live to the near future! In view of this glorious future we have been working."

Society as Seen by Prison Commissioners.

The Penological Commission of this State has recently been in session and the result of its labors developed some facts which it is beneficial to the public to place on record, so that we may have some idea of the means which are being used to stem the tide of crime which is increasing at alarming rate and the methods of both teachers and pupils.

Another cause which the Commissioners discovered for the increase of the criminal classes was the fact that so many boys and girls are brought up in comparative idleness, for the reason that they had no so-called home to call, through God, spring all religions." (sic) Sacramento Daily Bee, 4th inst.

Now we candidly ask the religioners of the Patriarchs and the Prophets what they mean by such a blasphemous reflection on the character of those men of sacred lives whose very names were spoken with reverence and awe by God, by the Apostles and by all their followers! Neither Moses, Abraham, or any other of God's servants whose names are registered in the Old Testament, require any defence at our hands. Their memories have flourished in the world for thousands of years, and we have no fear that the poisonous sting of the Sacramento bee will injure their character in the estimation of a single Christian in Christendom who has served at the age of discretion. But with "the little ones of Christ" the case is quite different. They are tender plants, and the Sacramento bee paper, they lose respect for the Prophets of the Old Law, and, when they grow up, they oppose every teaching of the bee, by throwing off the cloak of Christianity and assuming the garb of infidelity.

It is the same kind that is the author of both the Old and the New Testaments, and if people are led to believe that the Prophets were immoral, that they were worse than the Devil, that they were no better than the Mormons of our time—will they not lose all respect for the Bible, despise religion, and ultimately refuse to believe in God or the Scriptures!

The anathemas of the Church are directed against such and all men who have dishonored the characters of the chosen men of God whom He used for His own wise ends. The Prophets—far from being stepped in the sanctuary—were the greatest of moral lives. They were the preachers of morals and the teachers of spiritual truths. They were the voice of God heard in the world, revealing to mankind the future fate of those who disobeyed their Creator, and prophesying the coming of a Saviour for man's redemption. To what degree of degradation, therefore, must that man be sunk, who can call the spokesmen of God by the vilest names known to the English language! Yet such is the license with which prejudice takes the bee libel the good names of those who were made great by Almighty God, and whose characters stand out as the most exalted in the ages in which they lived.

A proof from the bee and David, Isaiah, Jeremias, Ezekiel and Daniel were published of their renown as Great Prophets of God! A stamp from the bee and Job, Joel, Amos, Abdias, Michias, Jonas, Sophonias, Habacuc, Sophonias, Zacharias and Malachias—as expounders of the Divine will, and as messengers of God! Shall we, then, be more than man the Mormons of the present day! Great Heavens! Was it for this that pruning was invented! Was it for such purposes that intellect was inducted into man!

Any vandal can pull down and destroy the grandest creations of genius and skill, if they be made by human hands, but how much better is the world of when the inparable crime is consummated! The Bible is the book of God's word, and, but how much better does he become by saying so! God called the Prophets into existence and gave them the gift of second sight for the performance of the vocations in life which He allotted to each. He worked many miracles in order to save the lives of those His chosen servants, and yet—stinging bee of Sacramento can blacken the holy character of such and of all those valuable men—simply by poisoning its columns with such putrid falsehood as that which we have quoted above.

The Prophet Moses was the forerunner and figure of Christ. As a law-maker, he was the antitype of Christ. As a leader of the people, he was the most leading type of Christ in the world. As a man of sorrows, he was the type of Christ. As a teacher, he was the most perfect type of Christ! The case is quite different. They were the Prophets of God, and, in the pages of the Sacramento bee will injure their character in the estimation of a single Christian in Christendom who has served at the age of discretion. But with "the little ones of Christ" the case is quite different. They are tender plants, and the Sacramento bee paper, they lose respect for the Prophets of the Old Law, and, when they grow up, they oppose every teaching of the bee, by throwing off the cloak of Christianity and assuming the garb of infidelity.

It is the same kind that is the author of both the Old and the New Testaments, and if people are led to believe that the Prophets were immoral, that they were worse than the Devil, that they were no better than the Mormons of our time—will they not lose all respect for the Bible, despise religion, and ultimately refuse to believe in God or the Scriptures!

The anathemas of the Church are directed against such and all men who have dishonored the characters of the chosen men of God whom He used for His own wise ends. The Prophets—far from being stepped in the sanctuary—were the greatest of moral lives. They were the preachers of morals and the teachers of spiritual truths. They were the voice of God heard in the world, revealing to mankind the future fate of those who disobeyed their Creator, and prophesying the coming of a Saviour for man's redemption. To what degree of degradation, therefore, must that man be sunk, who can call the spokesmen of God by the vilest names known to the English language! Yet such is the license with which prejudice takes the bee libel the good names of those who were made great by Almighty God, and whose characters stand out as the most exalted in the ages in which they lived.

A proof from the bee and David, Isaiah, Jeremias, Ezekiel and Daniel were published of their renown as Great Prophets of God! A stamp from the bee and Job, Joel, Amos, Abdias, Michias, Jonas, Habacuc, Sophonias, Agges

Farm and Home.

Resting After Meals.

A friend of the writer's, who has suffered from dyspepsia during almost her entire life, considers the suggestions in the following extracts from an article in a recent issue of The Journal of Health to be the most in accord with her own experience of anything on the subject lately published.

Hurried eating of meals, followed immediately by some employment that requires the whole attention and takes up all, or nearly all, of his physical energies, is sure to result in dyspepsia in one form or another. Sometimes it shows itself in excessive irritability, or even indicates that nerve force has been exhausted; the double drought in order to keep the food and carry on the business has been more than nature could stand without being thrown out of balance. In another case, the person is exceedingly dull as soon as he has a few minutes of leisure. The mind seems a dead blank, and can only move in its accustomed channels, and then only when compelled. This, also, is an indication of nervous exhaustion. Others will have decided pains in the stomach, or a sense of weight, as if a heavy burden was inside. Others, again, will be able to eat nothing that will agree with them; everything that is put inside the stomach is made the subject of a violent protest on the part of that organ, and the person suffers untold agonies in consequence. Others suffer from constant hunger. They may eat all they can, and feel hungry still. If they feel satisfied for a little time, the least exertion afterwards brings on the hungry feeling, and they can do no more until something is eaten. It is almost needless to say that this condition is not hunger, but inflammation of the stomach. Scarcely any two persons are affected exactly in the same way, the disordered condition manifesting itself according to temperament and occupation, employments that call for mental work, and those whose sense of action lies indoors, affecting persons more seriously than those carried on in the open air and those which are merely mechanical and do not engage the mind.

All, or nearly all, of these difficulties of digestion might have never been known by the sufferers had they left their business behind them and run for a short time after eating, instead of rushing off to work immediately after hastily swallowing their food.

Nature does not do two things at a time and do both well; as a rule. All knows that when a force is divided, it is weakened. If the mind were eaten slowly, without preoccupation of the mind, and the stomach allowed at least half an hour's chance to get its work well understood before the nervous force is turned in another direction, perhaps suffering from dyspepsia would be less.

A physician once said: "It does not matter what we eat or how we eat it. While this is only partly true, it certainly is true, that the most healthful food, hurriedly eaten, and immediately followed by work which engages the entire available physical and mental force, is much worse than a meal of poor food eaten leisurely and followed by an interval of rest.

Eggs by Weight.

It is annoying to the breeder of blooded and fine fowls to find, when he offers his sale eggs nearly issue as large as his neighbors', that they bring no more per dozen than do the smaller ones. Also, the consumer is disappointed to find that he must pay the same price to-day for a dozen eggs weighing a pound that he has previously paid for a dozen weighing a pound and a half. Besides, an egg from a well fed fowl is heavier and richer than one from a common fowl that only had half a chance to grow, compared to size in anticipation of richness. This, one of which eight will weigh a pound are better and richer than those of apparently the same size, of which ten are required for a pound. Of course, with eggs at four and five cents a dozen (and hundreds of dozens have been sold in past years at these figures) it is a matter of quantity rather than quality. It is high time that the old style of selling and buying eggs were discontinued. It is a relic of the past, and reminds us of the time when dressed hogs sold for a dollar each without regard to size, and were dealt rate at that. Incent upon it, then, you who raise poultry and eggs for market, that the price for eggs shall be so much per pound, and then it will be some inducement to farmers to raise a better class of fowls, and all will get what is their just due.

Children's Questions.

Children are undoubtedly very troublesome at times in asking questions, and should, without doubt, be taught not to interrupt conversation in company. But, this resolution made, we question the policy of withholding an answer at any time from the active mind which must find so many unexplained daily and hourly mysteries. They have other teachers besides their mysteries, or have become undiscern as to an explanation, or are not apt to look sympathetically enough upon this eager return on the part of children to penetrate causes and trace effects. By giving due attention to these "troublesome questions" a child's truest education may be carried on. Have a little patience, then, and sometimes think how welcome to you would be a translator, if you were suddenly dropped into some foreign country, where the language was for the most part unintelligible to you, and you were burning with curiosity about every strange object that met your eye.

What Shall We do to be Saved?

The idea that the farmers in this section can do nothing but raise wheat borders on lucidnsm.

California imports annually hundreds of Kentucky mules. The enterprise and capital that would devote itself in this county to the breeding of mules would be profitably employed.

Of course it would not do for every farmer in the county to go into the mule-raising business, yet it would be as wise as for all of them to remain in the wheat-raising business.

Our farmers have resources enough in rich lands, but they lack the concomitant of energy, contrivance, expedicency, application.

Farmers in other sections situated much the same as we are in this county have individually put in pumping machinery upon their farms, and then made their lands intensitatly productive.

Put plenty of water upon any forty-acre tract in the Five Points tract, and its yield will be increased, four, six, eight and tenfold.

A ten-acre orchard, of the right kind of trees, rightly cared for, will produce on an average profit equivalent to eight per cent. investment of $10,000.

"Soft" hogs at three cents per letter than those "hard" sell at $1 50. Let us raise mangel beets and colzas, corn fodder and beet, garden truck and chickens, —anything but the devil and this intolerable monotony of hard times and wheat crops.—Lodi Sentinel.

—The glory of God should be the inspiring reason of every thought and word and act. If it be not, then we think and speak and act to vain. Life is a curse rather than a blessing.

—Scrofula, and all forms of scrofulous disease, are rapidly purged out by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Family Fun.

Daniel Webster's Plough.

On one occasion some Boston friends met Webster as a present an enormous plough to use on his place. Webster gave out word that on a certain day it would be christened. The day arrived, and the surrounding farmers for miles came to witness the event. A dozen teams with attractive company came from Boston. It was expected by every one that Webster would make a great speech on his occasion, rivaling his history of farming back to the time when Cincinnatus abdicated the most mighty throne in the world to cultivate turnips and cabbages in his Roman garden. The plough was brought out, and his yoke of splendid oxen hitched in front. More than 200 people stood around on the tiptoe of expectation. Soon Webster made his appearance. He had been calling spirits from the vasty deep and his gait was somewhat uncertain. Seeing the plough handles and spreading his feet he pulled out to the driver in his deep bass voice:

"Are you all ready, Mr. Wright?"

"All ready, Mr. Webster," was the reply, meaning of course for his speech.

Webster straightened himself up by a mighty effort, and shouted:

"Then let her rip!"

The whole crowd roared with laughter, while Webster with his big plough proceeded to rip up the soil.

What Was in his Coffee.

"Now, sir, I hope we shall no difficulty in getting you to speak up," said the attorney, in a very loud, commanding voice.

"I hope not, sir," shouted the witness, in a very loud voice.

"How dare you speak to me in that way, sir?" roared the lawyer.

"Because I can't speak no louder, sir," said the witness.

"Have you been drinking?"

"Yes, sir."

"I should infer so from your conduct. What have you been drinking?

"Coffee," hoarsely roared the knight of the stable.

"Something stronger than coffee, sir, you're been drinking! Don't look at me like that, sir!" tersely. "Look at the jury, sir! Did you have something in your coffee, sir?

"Yes, sir."

"What was it?"

"Sugar."

"This man is so loud, your Honor—he is worse" exclaimed the counsel.

"Now, sirrah," turning to the witness, "look at me. What beside sugar did you take in your coffee this morning?"

The hostler collected his forces, drew a deep breath, and, in a voice that could be heard been blocks away, bellowed out,—

"A spoon." A pause, as echoes died.

Money in It.

A man skilled with deafness took a prescription to a Broadway druggist, who did it with care and in the latest style. The deed was asked the price, when the following dialogue occurred: Druggist (leaning on the counter and smiling in a wonkyou pep-pop sort of manner—"The price is seventy-five cents." Deaf customer—"Five cents?" (Here it is." Druggist (in a loud voice)—"Seventy-five cents, please." Deaf Customer—"Why, that's your five cents." Druggist (in a very hard voice, with sarcasm)—"I said seventy-five cents." Deaf Customer—(getting angry)—"Well, why don't you say so? I just told you five cents." Druggist (sotto voce)—"Well, go to thunder with your medicine, I made three cents, anyhow."

Woman's Health.

"Well, mother," said a workingman to his wife as he entered from the common, where he had been haloing his cow for the noon with his fellow strikers, "lets have dinner." "No dinner to-day, father," she replied. "No dinner—what's up?" "I've struck for eight hours work and I mean to stay, so Mrs. Johnson, so has Mrs. Spring. In fact we've had a meeting and we have concluded that sixteen hours a day is rough on females when big, strong men can only stand eight. Sam Hi send his hat and ran out to see if he could have a committee of arbitration appointed.

Wasted Sympathy.

Peter Osterhout is one of the most reasonly negroes in Galveston. He was caught stealing poultry and brought up before the Justice.

"The evidence," said the Judge, "shows that you stole the chickens from Colonel Jones' hen coop, and the fine should be five dollars; but I'll let you off this time.

"Who wants ter be let off?" exclaimed prisoner. "I stealn my chickens and pays my fine, and don't ask nuffin oh nobody. Dis bussiness mixing up sentiment and bussiness wh what's runnin' de kountry.

Funnyrapha.

—A St. Paul boy was recently sent from home to boarding school. He was homesick, of course, and, after standing it just as long as he could, wrote: "Dear Father: Life is very short. Let us spend it together. Your affectionate son."

—I'm saved from a watery grave" exclaimed a tramp who was pulled out of a dairyman's milk tub.

—A French barber's sign reads: "To-morrow the public will be shaved gratuitously." Of course it is always to-morrow.

—A Buffalo father, to encourage early rising, offered a prize of money to that child who should rise earliest next morning. At a very early hour a bright little girl made her appearance, claimed and got the prize, and then went back to bed.

—He was a Dublin coroner's inquest, and after sitting quietly for an hour during the inquest, arose, pounced into the face of the corpse, and then turning to the rest of the jury, said: "Mum (hic) dat man is dead."

—Hostey, an old colored cook, was moaning around the kitchen the other day, when her mistress asked her if she was ill. "No ma'am, not zactly," said Hetty. But she far is, I don't feel ambitious enough to get out of my own way.

—The other day a tall peddler's horse balked on the street and refused to budge an inch. Theender began to belabor the animal with a stick, when an old lady thrust her head out of a window and exclaimed "Have you no mercy? "No, ma'am, nothing but mackeral."

—Over the backyard fence—"I say, do you know the Sh-Shiners are going to town this spring?" "No! Are they, though! Well, I am glad! They always get $1 30. Lots of people want them." "Yes, but, then, Mrs. Shiftless has fallen heir to $15,000, and she has brought an elegant house." "Uh, I always liked her! but her young ones—well, they're real fond of dancing, after all."

—Grandmamma, said a Murry Hill young lady, Clara Nea Spuyten aye that you and grandpa kept a second grandma when you were young. Mis mistaken, said grandmamma. I knew she was, the mean, spiteful thing. You, she is mistaken, went on the old lady, retrospectively. It wasn't on a corner.

Dr HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT BLOOD TONIC.—Recommended as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and Kindred Nervous Complaints. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

THE SUNSET RANGE.

Awarded Gold Medal, Mechanics' Institute Fair, 1883.

The Best and Most Economical Range in Use. It Heats Quickly and Works Perfectly.

GEORGE H. TAY & CO.

Dealers in Stoves and Metal. 614 to 618 Battery St., S. F.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,

873 Market Street,

—WITH A LINE OF—

GENT'S A^D BOY'S CLOTHING

Furnishing Goods,

HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible

CARROLL & TILTON,

873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,

and late with JONES & CO.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

(Incorporated under the laws of California.)

This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $3,000 and $10,000, which are payable in five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 55 every four years, in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of the certificate is taken at the expiration of each ten years' membership between 25 and 50 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 55 every four years, in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of the certificate is paid to the members heirs.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the administrators of their own funds (not usually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to members upon mortgage security, and are not will fall due first on part payment thereof at 5 per cent. per annum, and remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date $100,000, no members have had to pay losses $15,000,000. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly exceeds $6,000.

For Blank Forms and Circulars, address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary,

Room 28, Phelan Building, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS

THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver REMEDY. 866 Market St., S. F.

CILROY HOT SPRINGS.

ROOF & TENANT.

THESE CELEBRATED SPRINGS, SITUATED IN A spot of the Coast Range, 12 miles from Gilroy, are now open for the reception of visitors. A complete restoration has taken place, and the Springs have been put in delightful order. WATER STRICTLY PURE. Rates, $10 per week. Special rates and Tickets to the proprietor. Rate for 10 or more persons, $8 per week. Hot, cold, shower and steam baths. Hence by stage to Springs, 12 miles.

TO THE LADIES!!!

Fine Assortment of Artistic MILLINERY,

at 1/2 Most Reasonable Prices.

MRS. S. ROWELL,

IMPORTER OF FRENCH MILLINERY,

149 SIXTH ST.

Under the Brunswick Hotel, cor. of Howard

NOTICE OF REMOVAL!

MRS. K. McGRUDER,

FASHIONABLE MILLINER,

Has Removed from 911 Market St. to

228 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. Howard and Folsom. San Francisco.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE

—Importers and Dealers in—

BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

MANUFACTORY OF

Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.

512 to 516 Sacramento and 419 Commercial Sts., S. F.

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse,

"Regular" Call-Board Warehouse.

First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building. CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.

TOWNSEND ST.,

Between Third and Fourth Sts.

GEORGE H. LEHMAN, Prop.

Advances and Insurance effected at low rates.

Telephone No. 357.

JOHN B. McINTYRE,

Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer,

401 CLAY AND 404 COMMERCIAL STS.

San Francisco.

Bibles, Magazines and Periodicals bound in any style required. Fine leathers a specialty.

J. C. BABBERLING, 317 Dupont Street

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

KNABE PIANOS

Unqualifedly and Emphatically the Best Pianos in the World.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 467 Market St., S. F.

Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Secretes the bile and with bile a bitter to cleanse impurities in the blood. By irregularity in its action or sluggishness of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, dizziness, a languid weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally attributed to a disordered liver. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood purifier.

DYSPEPSIA

Parasitic appetite, faint, gnawing feeling of pit of the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, raw appetite, general prostration: These in no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an unhealthy or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and makes a debilitated or nervous dyspeptic a healthy man.

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through them Kidneys flow the waste fluids containing poisonous matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing headaches and aches, pains in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the organs of the body to remove their natural functions and health is at once restored.

SCROFULA

Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by a sluggish or sluggish functions of the skin and different organs, thereby retaining a multitude of poisonous matter in the system through the blood, causing swellings enlarged joints, abscesses, tumors, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Eryspelas is also in most cases attributable to Scrofula. Scrofula is a disease which requires time to eradicate, and should be treated with a reliable blood purifier, such as BULL'S SARSAPARILLA. By purifying the blood and toning up the system, forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.

BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.

THE POPULAR NEMESIS OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

Near 8th St. ..... San Francisco

WHOLESALE ..... RETAIL

LIQUOR DEALER.

Established 1878.

We are sellers Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.

The following low prices will continue ;pro'ble

Table Wines ..... 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.

Angelica Wines ..... $1, $1.50 and $1.50

Mount Vineyard—try it, it's fine ..... $1.

Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.50 and $2.

Kentucky Whiskies ..... $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.

Bourbon Whiskey ..... $1.50, $1.75 and $2.

Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards.

Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

BENZIGER BROTHERS

NEW YORK, 38 & 38 Barclay Street.

CINCINNATI, 52 and 54 Mercer Street.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., 206 South 4th St.

Manufacturers and Importers of

Banners AND Flags

of all kinds.

Scarfs, Sashes, Collars, Badges, Hats, Caps, Metal Badges, Emblems, etc., etc.

Badges Chasers Knobs, Spears, Laglie, Belts, etc., etc.

Embroideries, Oil Paintings, Silks, Damasks, Galloons, Fringes, Rosettes, etc.

Send for our Illustrated Price-List

Importers of any and advantage to send for our illustrated price-list.

The leading House in Regalia.

TAILORS.

JOHN KAVANAGH,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

6 New Montgomery Street,

PALACE HOTEL, S. F

The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks Specialty

D. REDMOND,

Merchant Tailor,

1924 Mission St.

Bet. 15th and 16th Sts., San Francisco

Suits from $20 upward. Pants from $5 upward. Good Fit Guaranteed. Satisfaction Always Prompt Delivered.

N. SWEENY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

113 Second street,

A few doors south of Mission San Francisco

Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty

FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF

SAFES!

Church Safes and Tubernacles,

MICHELS & RICHARDS,

218 California Street, San Francisco

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NATIVE WINES.

Gal. Bottle ..... From 50 to 56 cents

Doz. Bottles ..... $4 to $5 per doz.

Doz. Gallons ..... $6 to $8 per doz.

Refined and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon and at wholesale prices.

J. C. BABBERLING, 317 Dupont Street

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA

This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1852 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies large buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered gymnasium, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a new complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. Also, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 100x40 Feet and four stories, has been added, at the cost of $40,000.

Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-annually in advance)

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once ..$ 15 00

Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Bedding, etc., per session of ten months 250 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 216 Hayes street, San Francisco.

REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J.,

1x3 President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

SAN JOSE ..... CALIFORNIA.

This institution, offering peculiar advantages to young ladies desirous to receive a solid and refined education, was founded in 1851. In 1855, it was incorporated by the State Legislature, and subsequently, the seat of learning was made a College, and authorized by the Regents and Professors of Collegiate Studies.

The entire large building, with spacious playgrounds, and commodious every thing to make a home home for the pupils, has been fitted for instruction in thoroughness, in all the Departments. Every facility will be afforded to those who may find it desirable to devote their whole attention to the study of the Spanish language.

The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August, and ends about the 25th of June. Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

Per quarter, (payable in advance)

Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and Latin, Washing and Mending of Linen, Bedding and use of Piano ..... $ 60 00

Drawing (per quarter) 5 00

Painting in Water Colors 5 00

Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00

Vocal and Instrumental Music, extra charges.

For further particulars, address

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

San Jose

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,

RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.

This academy for young ladies, under the care of the Sisters of Charity, has been established on an eminence in the pleasant and accessible town of Rio Vista, Sacramento River, and affords to the health and comfort of the pupils. The building is large and well adapted to the purpose. Healthful climate. Depth of all necessaries will be furnished at the Academy, at the following rates:

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once ..$ 10 00

Board and Tuition in English, French and Latin, per quarter 60 00

Washing 15 00

Bed and Bedding 15 00

Piano, Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Fancy Work, each class 10 00

Use of Piano, per quarter 5 00

Use of Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Fancy Work, each class 5 00

For further particulars apply to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

Terms per month, in advance:

Junior Class ..... $ 12

Intermediate Class 1 50

Senior Class 2 00

Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument 4 00

Music, Harp lessons, with use of instrument 4 00

Use of Instrument for practice, per hour 25

(Payable half yearly in advance)

Drawing, Painting, Vocal Music, French, Spanish and German, per quarter $10 00

Washing 15 00

Bed and Bedding 15 00

Use of Piano, per hour 25

Use of Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Fancy Work, each class 5 00

For further particulars apply to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

School of the Holy Cross.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY.

U. Santa Cruz, Santa Cruz Co., Cal. For terms (per session, apply to the Sisters.

Convent of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary.

GILROY, ... CALIFORNIA

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF THE HOLY NAMES OF JESUS AND MARY.

For terms, etc., apply to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY,

ALAMEDA, CAL.

(Branch of the College of Notre Dame, San Jose.)

Term Commenced Second Week of July.

THE COURSE OF STUDIES EMBRACES EVERY branch of a refined and solid education, and careful and Discriminating moral training.

The Academy is pleasantly situated in the Bay Region, from its proximity to the seat of learning.

Application for Boarders should be made from school, early, as it will be necessary to enroll.

Terms (including) Tuition, for further particulars address

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY, ALAMEDA.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,

Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Conducted by the Sisters of Mercy

TERMS

(Payment semi-monthly in advance)

Entrance Fee $10 00

Board and Tuition, per quarter 60 00

Washing 15 00

Use of Piano and instrumental Drawing, French and Private Elocution lessons form extra charges.

SISTER SUPERIOR.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,

OAKLAND, ... CALIFORNIA.

CONDUCTED BY

The Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary.

THIS INSTITUTION IS PLEASANTLY SITUATED in the Suburban Village and Lake Merritt, combining an extensive Frontage on the lake. The building is spacious and all the necessary appliances for a complete boarding school are provided for the comfort and convenience of pupils.

Pupils are received at any time during the year, and are charged from the time of their entrance, to the end of the term, in the complete system of their education, unless an absence from home for a shorter period than one month, shall be occasioned by sickness.

Terms (Payment to be made in gold coin, and invariably in advance) Board and Tuition in English, French and Latin, per annum $250 00

Washing 30 00

Bed and Bedding 30 00

Use of Piano 20 00

Drawing 20 00

Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00

Painting in Water Colors, per lesson 1 00

Vocal Music, per lesson 1 00

Use of Harp, Guitar, Violin, each 5 00

Physician's Fees (in case of sickness) 5 00

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

Terms per month (paid in advance)

Tuition in the 1st and 2nd Primary Classes $ 1 50

Tuition in the 3rd and 4th Primary Classes 2 00

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Grammar Classes 2 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 3 00

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 3 50

Tuition in Vocal and Instrumental Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form a charge, as in Boarding Schools, but lessons in French and Spanish are given gratis to those who are in Plain and Fancy Needle Work.

N. B. A separate compartment is furnished, with a teacher, for the instruction of pupils in addition to the regular course.

Convent of the Immaculate Heart of Mary,

SAN LUIS OBISPO ..... CALIFORNIA

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF THE HOLY NAMES OF JESUS AND MARY.

For terms, etc., apply to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY.

Conducted by the Christian Bros.

FIFTH and JACKSON STS., OAKLAND, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, PLEASANTLY SITUATED in the Suburban Village of Lake Merritt, combines all the advantages of a superior Christian education with the comforts of a home.

The Course of Studies embraces every branch of a refined and solid education, and careful and Discriminating moral training are always the aim of the Teachers. The Building is large and well adapted to the purpose, and has been fitted for the comfort and convenience of pupils.

Terms (Payment to be made in gold coin, and invariably in advance) Board and Tuition in English, French and Latin, per annum $250 00

Washing 30 00

Bed and Bedding 30 00

Use of Piano 20 00

Drawing 20 00

Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00

Painting in Water Colors, per lesson 1 00

Vocal Music, per lesson 1 00

Use of Harp, Guitar, Violin, each 5 00

Physician's Fees (in case of sickness) 5 00

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

Terms per month (paid in advance)

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes $ 1 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Grammar Classes 2 00

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 2 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 3 00

Tuition in Vocal and Instrumental Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form a charge, as in Boarding Schools, but lessons in French and Spanish are given gratis to those who are in Plain and Fancy Needle Work.

N. B. A separate compartment is furnished, with a teacher, for the instruction of pupils in addition to the regular course.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,

OAKLAND, ... CALIFORNIA.

CONDUCTED BY

The Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary.

THIS INSTITUTION IS PLEASANTLY SITUATED in the Suburban Village and Lake Merritt, combining an extensive Frontage on the lake. The building is spacious and all the necessary appliances for a complete boarding school are provided for the comfort and convenience of pupils.

Pupils are received at any time during the year, and are charged from the time of their entrance, to the end of the term, in the complete system of their education, unless an absence from home for a shorter period than one month, shall be occasioned by sickness.

Terms (Payment to be made in gold coin, and invariably in advance) Board and Tuition in English, French and Latin, per annum $250 00

Washing 30 00

Bed and Bedding 30 00

Use of Piano 20 00

Drawing 20 00

Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00

Painting in Water Colors, per lesson 1 00

Vocal Music, per lesson 1 00

Use of Harp, Guitar, Violin, each 5 00

Physician's Fees (in case of sickness) 5 00

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

Terms per month (paid in advance)

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes $ 1 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Grammar Classes 2 00

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 2 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 3 00

Tuition in Vocal and Instrumental Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form a charge, as in Boarding Schools, but lessons in French and Spanish are given gratis to those who are in Plain and Fancy Needle Work.

N. B. A separate compartment is furnished, with a teacher, for the instruction of pupils in addition to the regular course.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.

This institution, established in 1868, incorporated by the State Legislature, and endowed with all the rights and privileges of similar Colleges in the United States.

Patronage solicited. For terms and particulars address

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

Marysville, Cal.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers,

offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL course receive the degree of A. B. (in Science), B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The advantages of this College are unsurpassed for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in all the branches of a complete Commercial Education.

Every proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our aim being to render students Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric correctly, fluently and correctly in the class-room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,

(Payable half yearly in advance)

Board, Tuition and Washing $250 00

Entrance Fee 10 00

Physician's Fee and Medicines 10 00

Vocabulist at College 50 00

Per Student 50 00

Music and Drawing form extra charges.

For further particulars address

REV. BRO. BETTELIN, President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME.

THIS INSTITUTION, FOUNDED IN 1851, is the oldest Institution of learning in the nature of the State of California, and empowered by the State Legislature to confer the Degree of Mistress of Literature and Science.

The Course of Studies embraces all the branches necessary to the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per annum $250 00

EXTRA CHARGES.

Piano, with use of Instrument per annum ..$60 00

Harp, with use of Instrument 50 00

Vocal Music, Private Lessons 30 00

Drawing 20 00

Painting in Water Colors, per annum 30 00

Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00

Vocalist (Pupil of the College) 30 00

Use of Harp, Guitar, Violin, each 5 00

Physician's Fees (in case of sickness) 5 00

Bills are presented and are payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

Terms per month (paid in advance)

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes $ 1 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Grammar Classes 2 00

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 2 50

Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 3 00

Tuition in Vocal and Instrumental Drawing, Painting and Private Elocution lessons form a charge, as in Boarding Schools, but lessons in French and Spanish are given gratis to those who are in Plain and Fancy Needle Work.

N. B. A separate compartment is furnished, with a teacher, for the instruction of pupils in addition to the regular course.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS!

JUST RECEIVED!

WM. WALKER & CO,

MERCHANT TAILORS,

7 Powell St., Opp. Baldwin Hotel.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.

JOHN WIELAND - - PROPRIETOR

SECOND STREET, NEAR PILGRIM.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold in 1881 60603 barrels.

JOB PRINTING.

Any of the Fine, Cheap, Tuftedback of schools, Society circulars or Business man who desire save money by having their Job Printing executed at the Lowest Rates, will find McCormick Bros., 626 Clay street, the most profitable place in the city to patronize. ☞ Call and get estimates and be convinced.

PILES. Immediate relief. Pleasant to use. Sure cure. Dr. Bosanko's Pile Ointment. Prepared only by the Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., 1 Montgomery St., San Francisco. Sold by Druggists. Price, $1 per box.

Our Young Folks.

All stories, original contributions of news will be accepted for this department.

The name of the author of contributions should be written on one side of the paper only, and the paper should be folded separately.

Address all letters to Our Young Folks, Monitor Office.

The Blind Men's Opinions.

Going to the land, the dust, and other things, a certain king called in a very common in India, and composed of blind folk are office living strong rogues, and of a certain village, several of the wisest inhabitants, who had been born blind, disputed much about how what the shape of the elephant. Four of them were so disputing unceasing, when a great elephant, and was heard coming along the road.

"Ah," said one, "here comes an elephant, now we shall be able to settle this matter and end our fall. Let us go and feel what he is like, and then we shall see who is right and who is wrong."

To this they all agreed, and in turn went up to the elephant.

The first blind man, being very tall, felt all up and down the animal's side, and then went back contented to his place. The second came up to the elephant's fore leg, and, being very short, he only felt that up and down. The third on coming up met the beast's trunk, and he also returned. The fourth, coming from the other side, only touched the elephant's tail, which he carefully examined.

"Ah," said number one, when all were seated, "I think I know well what the elephant is just like the side of a house."

"The side of a house!" said he who had felt the fore leg, "it seemed to me more like the pillar of a house."

"What nonsense you are talking," said he who handled the trunk, "why, it is as stiff as a spear."

"Why I am surprised, said he who felt the tail, "I never thought of it carefully, and I can only compare it to a bell-rope."

Some people without being blind are very always confirm their previously formed erroneous opinions.

The Better Spirit.

As too little boys, John and Harry were on their way to school, frolicking as they went, they espied an old lady asting by the side the road with a basket of apples upon her. She had evidently walked quite a distance with her heavy load, for she looked quite tired.

"I say, John," said one one of the boys, "I'll show you some sport.

"What is it, Harry?" asked the other, his merry black eyes dancing in his head.

"Let's rip over that old woman's apples, set up another, and see how quickly we can get them," answered Harry, and he laughed as he pictured to himself the best form of the poor old woman in every endeavor to collect her scattered fruit.

John drew himself up and his eyes flashed. "Would you call that fun? exclaimed he. "I think it would be a very high meanness and cruelty to play such a trick on her. Besides, she may be some body's grandmother.

Harry hung his head and looked ashamed. "I'd not do any such thing, he said after, continued the manly little fellow. "Let us carry the basket for her, if she will let us."

When they had reached the place where the old lady sat, John, taking off his hat, said respectfully, "Please, ma'am, are you going far with this basket?"

"Yes, dear, answered she. "I am going to market to sell my apples, and have half a mile to go yet. I'm very much obliged to you, I'm a long walk for a poor old body like me, with such a heavy load to carry; and she sighed wearily as she spoke.

"We are going right by the market, said John, "and we would be very happy to carry your basket for you, if you will let us.

"Of course I will trust such a well bred gentleman as you seem to be, spoke the faded cheeks glowing and her dim eyes brightening with pleasure at this kindly offer. "And may God bless you for your kindness, my lads!

When the little boys took hold of the basket and carried it tightly between them while the old lady hobbled on behind, it would be hard to tell which of the three was the happiest, or which was the best of the boys and proposed the better spirit.

The Holy Name of Mary.

When the name of Mary was given to a little Jewish maiden nearly nineteen hundred years, ago those who pronounced it then little knew what it implied, nor how it would come to be spoken with ever increasing love and reverence throughout the whole wide world.

The name of Mary is said to mean—Star of the Sea—and she who is

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—On May 31, an answer was given by the Legislature under the other day—namely, that Legislat ender who the Irish Parliament Nationalists in Ireland. A meeting of Protestant gentlemen from various parts of Ulster was held in the Castle Restaurant, Donegall place, and an Irish Protestant Home Rule Association was established, with Mr. Thomas Gallaghan, J. P., Portaferry, as President, and Mr. David Boggs, a Belfast manufacturer, as Secretary. Letters of apology for absence were from Rev. Matthew Macauley, Castlewellan; Rev. George Hamilton, Maghera; Alderman Sinclair, Lisburn; Rev. Dr. Fulton, Ballymena; Rev. Mr. Cooke, same personage, Belfast; J. E. Ross, solicitor and Mosse, T. A. Dickson, Dungannon; Rev. Mr. Hamilton, Lisdoar, (of the form of Lord Macdonnell—a Mr. of Ballinahinch Alfred Walsh, Belfast; Samuel Young (Young, King & Co., Belfast) and other prominent Ulster Protestants; and telegrams were received from a number of persons in sympathy with the meeting. The following resolution, proposed by Mr. Thomas McCullough, J. P., Belfast, and seconded by Mr. Alexander Bowman, the representative of the Liberal working man of Belfast, was passed unanimously: "That we pledge ourselves to support the Government of National Self Government, and to advocate its application to Ireland."

Armagh.—William Moore Miller, Esq., late Resident Magistrate for Armagh, died at his residence, Cathedral Close, Armagh, on May 31. He was appointed to Armagh, and been for many years the Resident Magistrate for Armagh. He was upwards of seventy years of age, since which time he had a pension granted him. Mr. Miller was one of the most resident magistrates in Ireland.

Cavan.—On May 19, a public meeting of Cavan was held in the Town Hall, Ballinalee, the object being to take steps to protest against the Mr. Rev. Dr. Flanagan with a similar address and testimonial to the promotion to the Bishopric of the diocese of Kilmore. There was a large assemblage.

Cork.—The Cork and Passage Railway employs a number of English conductors and drivers, Irish viewed.

The Government of Ireland Act has awarded to Michael Murphy, a pupil of the Cork School, a medal for proficiency in Rudimentary Drawing, and also one of Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M. P., Lord Mayor of Dublin, to Mr. Thomas Cummiskey, Mayor of Dublin, the late Cork Exhibition, has expressed that he will be a wholesale manufacturer by trade, to live in Cork, and will be providing his studies. This is the London paper which has been so unfavorable to the success of the late exhibition on deserving students of the Cork Art School.

These figures give a graphic picture of the hopelessness of dwelling in Ireland, the poverty of Irish tenants. Butterfies of the best quality, sold in the London market at 17 to 20 cwt., and best Cork firsts butter is quoted at 70 per cwt. Could a ruined country, on the principle by the destruction that has overtaken the farmer out of which also tenths of the Munster tenantry pay their rents?

There is a blacksmith in some suburban way in Ireland of Mr. William Monahan, of Ballyfanlon, who is the National man. Mr. Monahan has for a considerable time been confined to bed from the effects of blows received while in prison as one of Forster's suspects. From the peculiar position which he has long been placed his many friends, who know of his merciful labors in the National cause, are deeply concerned for him.

Clare.—On May 16, Mr. Stephen J. Meany attended the meetings of the Ennis Branch of National Leagues, and was made an honorary member. On entering the room he was received with an enthusiasm of indescribable kind, and he seated himself when the following resolution was enunciated: "That the following resolution was proposed by Mr. Stephen J. Meany, and seconded by Mr. Michael Hogan, President of the Irish National League, and Mr. Michael Hogan, Mayor of Ennis, to the town town more, and congratulate him on his recovery from a serious accident which met with during a lecture on behalf of the Irish in America." Mr. Dennis McCarthy seconded the motion which was carried with enthusiasm. Mr. Meany, in response, said he felt it was the task of adequately addressing his fellow-citizens of the town, but he felt it was an honor, and in the presence of old friends, many of whom he had not seen for years, and whose kindness, sympathy, and generosity he appreciated most sincerely. (Applause.)

On May 17 a high tide sweep away about 20 of which will cost from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds. Work already has cost the Board of Works near 2,000,000.

Edward Fitzgerald, Esq., died on May 18, at Ballinalee, Longford, after a short illness. He was the second son of the late Connell Fitzgerald, Esq.

Dublin.—On Sunday, May 3, Christal was closed by a large gathering of citizens. Speeches carrying America and Irish Ex were present, and among them were the Prime Ministers, Irish Volunteers, St. Aprahan's, Town Commissioners and St. Mary's Branch of the Irish Land Leagues. Speeches were delivered by Mr. Dillon, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Harrington, Mr. P. J. O'Brien, the chairman of the Irish Historical Society, Mr. Carbonnier, Nobody, said—They would have great things to tell others when they were in their people. They would have to make their friends, to promote art and science and Irish music. Mr. S. A. Hosty moved the adoption of the resolutions, adding that everyone in the land had to encourage Irish literature, and declaring that the Irish Antiquarian and Historical Society deserves well of the country. The resolution was adopted.

A valuable service has been rendered to Irish industry by the Duke of Abercorn, who also is Lord Lieutenant of Ulster. He had been long in Dublin, and it is known that his sympathies with and desires for the success of the people among whom he lot was temporarily thrown, and those who have seen work a practical form. Among other things, Lady Aberdeen a select reception, organized by the organization of Irish industry, staff in the woman's section of the Edinburgh International Exhibition, now open. Since, her ladies have been successfully in this work, and it is due to her Excellency, the Duke, to measure in which she has directed the practical work of the Irish people, and to whom has attended her efforts to bring Irish industries before the public.

The fabrication of the Dublin horse artillery are now furnished concentrically with horses of Irish breed. The superiority of Irish horses over the horses from the Ardennes, Hibernia' ever, has been fully recognized.

Three months ago, the Rev. Father Yorke delivered in the hall of the Catholic University, Dublin, a lecture on "The Alleged Hell of Pope Adrian IV." which has been in circulation ever and so controverted by the extracts and the Protestant Reformation. Since the controversy man has now published the lecture in pamphlet form, through Cullen and Sons, (Limited) and has attached to it a letter to the

MY OFFERING TO MARY.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

For the blossoms of May all are faded,
Fair their perfumes has all died away—
Yet, dear Mary, thy shrine, my dear Mother,
At thy feet, my poor offering to lay.

There are those who have come to thy altar,
With the gift of a heart pure and true,
Which has wreathed the lilies and the flowers
About thee—a beautiful place.

I would make thy sweet outdoor place lovely,
I would give thee all he has taken
For this heart is so willing to others,
But the gifts they have is not mine.

There are those who in tones of rare rapture,
Sing the loveliest songs to thee,
And their music floats outward and upward
Far beyond where mortals can see.

I can feel this sweet spirit of Music—
Oh it stirs me, and then—I long
For that power to make music to send thee,
But not mine is the gift of song.

There are those who tell beautiful stories,
Which are amusing, yet grand, and sweet,
Some and hearts growing cold or unfeeling,
And are sure to thy grace they touch.

I would tell, if I could, a sweet story,
Of the grace I have had through life,
If there's ask Mother—Mary in Heaven
For the gift of a loser's heart.

There are many who kneel at thy altar,
With the gift they most dearly prize,
And they lay on the altar their treasure,
Little their hearts to thy home is the skies.

But "tempt them who would give, but they have not,
Who would do—but they know not how,
Here I kneel with the gift of much loving,
Use as offering of prayer to you.

And I offer—or time is quite finished
For the harvesting Heaven's gold—
Hoping, through my sad weeping, and wishing,
To be what thou hide's in Is.

With thee lend it, dear Mother—
With thee fill it with all thy love—
Lay it down at the feet of Jesus, and ask it humble,
Make it fit for thy home above.

A. C. S.

June 14, 1886.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

BRING ME SOMETHING, MAMMY.

Unfurl the green banner let it float on the breeze,
Let it not! Life is up! let it wave o'er the trees,
Let it not! Life is up! let it wave o'er the trees,
Unknowing the light of sweet Liberty's day,
Torn, but unstained, it has fain cast aside,
So now shall it bring the land of oppression and pride
Around the shadow of Liberty's day shall
Unknowing the light of sweet Liberty's day.

Let it be green folds, let it flash long the Shore,
And sing into praise round each cabin door
Till the echoes rebound and join in the roar,
Hurrah for our flag and our country once more.

Remember the days of Brien the Brave,
Remember the men that did honor did wave
Over the homes of the children, each forest and Glen.
Remember the days of Brien the Brave

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1890.

By Whom the Office and Mass of Corpus Christi was Composed.

For the purpose of establishing the Office of Corpus Christi, the Sovereign Pontiff, Urban IV., summoned near his person two men united in themselves the profoundest erudition and the most exalted sanctity—the two greatest geniuses of the age, the Angelic Thomas and the Seraphic Bonaventure. "Brothers," said the Holy Father to them "I am anxious to establish a feast the whole Church the greatest and the most touching of solemnities; I desire the Sacrament of Love and Mercy to be fittingly extolled in a proper Office and Mass, and I expect from your hands a work worthy of this sublime object." The two Religious were amazed at the order given them by the Pope, and in vain refused to take upon themselves a task which their most profound humility declared to be far above their capability. All resistance on their part was useless, for the orders of Christ's Vicar had to be obeyed. On the appointed day Thomas and Bonaventure presented themselves before the august body that was to pronounce on their work or composition. "Brother Thomas," said the Holy Father, "commence the reading of your production." The holy religious, remarks a modern author, began by reading the Antiphons, Lessons and Responories of the various parts of the Office composed by him; everything was found to be taken from the Holy Scriptures and wonderfully chosen. The Pope remained silent, but Bonaventure could not refrain himself any longer from making a gesture of approbation, though up to that moment he felt himself compelled to keep silence out of reverence for what he heard. Thomas then read the Hymn of Matins, Sacris Solemnis. Tears streamed from the eyes of Bonaventure, and the reading of a paper whose fragments fell on the floor under his habit was heard by all. The enchantment of Brother Bonaventure continued to increase, and other small scraps rained down at the feet of the holy monk. The reading of the poem of the Office seemed to rivet to a particular manner the attention of the Pope. Being a profound theologian himself, he saw at once in the Lauda Sion a complete treatise of the highest and most sublime theology on the mystery of the Incarnate Word. Thomas concluded his reading with the Pange Lingua, whose fourth and fifth strophes summarized the doctrine of the Adorable Sacrament of the Eucharist. He ceased reading, but his words continued to ring out upon the ears of all present! At last the Pope broke his reverential silence by saying: "Now, Brother Bonaventure, let us hear you." The humble Religious threw himself at the feet of the Supreme Pontiff and thus addressed him: "Most Holy Father, the Spirit of Divine Wisdom, which has dictated what you have alone could have inspired such beautiful thoughts as those revealed by a special grace of the Most High to my Brother Thomas. Most Holy Father, I will plainly acknowledge to you that I would consider that I was committing a sacrilege, had I presumed my weak production to enter alongside of Beauties so wonderful as those that have just been presented to us. No, Holy Father, what remains of my production, pointing to the fragments that littered the floor. The Holy Father admired the modesty of Bonaventure as much as he did the transcendent genius of Thomas.

Clement VIII. granted a Plenary Indulgence to all the faithful who shall assist at his contrite hearts at the Procession of the Most Holy Sacrament which is made by the Dominican communities on the Feast within the Octave of Corpus Christi. This privilege is conceded for ever to them in memory of St. Thomas who, as has just been stated, composed the Office and the Mass of this great feast.

Ireland's Hour of Need.

We publish elsewhere a call for a convention of the Irish National League to meet in Chicago in August next, and we appeal to the friends of Ireland all over this coast to go to work at once and raise funds to send to the Convention by the delegates this side of the coast. It will take at least $500, 000 to carry on an election contest in Ireland, England and Scotland this Fall, and the financial support which the Irish nation will receive from America, depends in a great measure the success or the failure of electing such members of Parliament as will sustain Gladstone and Parnell in their efforts in behalf of Home Rule for Ireland.

This is the turning point in Ireland's history, and the Celt who fails in giving a helping hand now, may live to regret his failure to help Ireland achieve political independence. The Moorites will gladly and gratefully receive, acknowledge and deliver to the Chicago delegation all funds sent in prior to August 15th next, and we hope the friends of Ireland will come to the rescue once more so as to crown their past efforts with glorious victory for dear old Ireland.

Death of Bishop Hendricken.

Our Eastern contemporaries convey the sad news of the death of Right Rev. T. F. Hendricken, of the Diocese of Providence, Rhode Island, on the 11th inst., of paralysis of the tongue superinduced by asthma, to which he had been for years a victim. The deceased Prelate will ever be remembered as the builder of a magnificent Cathedral without a debt, and which he hoped to see consecrated next year. He was a native of Galway, in Ireland, a graduate of Maynooth, and a most eloquent prelate in Rhode Island for years before he was called to preside over it as its first Bishop. May the Lord have mercy upon His soul.

The eight members of the Fourth of July Committee who last night elected a notorious pro-Britisher as orator for the forthcoming national anniversary, have covered themselves with historical infamy.

Rise, Progress and Persecuting Career of Orangeism in Ireland.

(IRISH ARCHIVES.)

The criminal career of the Orangemen of Ireland has been such a destructive element in disrupting the people of the North of Ireland, such a power in the disarmonizing of one family, one blood and one nationality—that it might be correctly described in this couplet:

"Their country's curse, their children's shame, Outcasts of virtue, peace and fame."

Few people in America fully understand the career of crime and iniquity which has marked the blood stained career of Orangeism, which was born of bigotry, fed upon fanatical hate, and has grown up in Ireland as the vipers have done—turns upon the very government that sustained it in its sinful career of injurious injuries towards the Catholics of Ireland.

The first associations organized in the North of Ireland for the purpose of putting down "Popery," and clearing the land of "Popish priests and people," had their origin during the latter part of the last century. They were then known as "Hearts of Steel," and "Peep-o'-Day Boys," every member of which were true-blue Protestants who organized for the sole purpose of maltreating Catholics so as to coerce them into emigrating from their country or to murder them under pretence of Catholic disloyalty to the British Government. The cowardly wretches called themselves "Peep-o'-Day Boys" because they used to call on the houses of Catholics at the dawn of day for the purpose of stealing arms. When the weapons were given up quietly, the marauding party generally satisfied themselves with whistling "Croppies lie down, cursing the Pope, or using epithets that were calculated to drive terror into the hearts of the timid members of the Catholic families who were thus robbed and insulted with impunity.

Scenes of similar outrage, often followed by blood shed, continued for years, until at length the Catholics of Armagh and other Northern counties began to discover that self-preservation demanded a union among them for the purpose of defending their lives, their liberty and their property, as there was no protection against the Protestant outrages to be expected from English officials. The Catholics accordingly organized themselves under the name of "Defenders," and then began scenes of strife and bloodshed in almost every town in the North. In the year 1795, however, the "Peep-o'-Day Boys" finding that they could not root out "Popery" rapidly enough by their process of robbery and continued murder, determined to re-organize their illegal association upon a more atrocious scale, to call into their ranks Protestants of title and influence, so that the ones of the association might be screened up and the illegal depredators be suffered to go unshielded by justice. To this means the Protestants of Ulster hoped to entirely extirpate "Popery" and "Papists" from that section of Ireland. Accordingly grips, signs and pass-words—in imitation of Freemasonry—were adopted, the association was to be spread throughout Great Britain, and not only were the Catholics of Ulster to be rooted off the face of the earth, but a general crusade was to be kept up throughout the United Kingdom until every Catholic priest, person and chapel were rooted out of British soil. Four hundred thousand "Brigs" in their wrath they forgot the sage maxim "Man proposes but God disposes," and it looks now as if Orangeism was in its last ditch, whilst Catholicity is flouring like the big trees of Mariposa!

The Insatiate or Unfordrid Orangeism upon Protestantism, impiously took the bible for their corner-stone. The ceremony of initiation of members was modelled after the fact related in the seventh and eighth chapters of the Book of Judges, and their motto was "The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon." But as neither the Lord nor Gideon were ever on the side of unknown injustice, this bloody library my has long since been laughed at by sensible people in Ireland, who look upon Orangeism as merely base imitators of Bombastus Furioso.

The first Orangemen designated themselves as the glorious, pious and immortal three hundred who were selected by divine inspiration from the immense multitude—(the 29,000 who originally formed the army of the Israelites)—and as those three hundred were composed by directions of the Most High, of men who lapped water without kneeling to drink, so the Orange host who proposed to anticipate knee-bending "Popery" were known as "the men who lap and do not kneel." Death-dealing oaths were administered to the members, in which dire vengeance was vowed against the Catholics of every rank, age, sex and station; the new signs, grips and pass-words were revealed to "the Lord's avengers," who were fondly reminded that with the small number of three hundred men, Gideon had wrought confusion and destruction upon the numerous hosts of Midianites, and thus should the "chosen of the Lord" Orangemen thus treat the Papists, who were the modern Midianites whom the Lord commanded them to destroy, and whose will every Orangeman must obey!

The new fledged Gideonites went to work in Ulster with a will. In a short time, out of the county of Armagh alone, seven hundred Catholic families were driven out by the Orangemen, their personal property was destroyed, the lives of all threatened, some were murdered openly, others assassinated secretly, their houses burned and their bodies with them. Entirely guiltless of arson a venial fault against their neighbor, public morality or the law of the land, they were thus ruthless turned out of the country in which they were born because they clung to the Cross of Christ, and believed in the precise doctrine taught by the Holy Catholic Church! And this happened under the flag of Protestant England, a little over a century ago, yet the Catholic Church is held up to the world as the only social and political power that ever persecuted for conscience sake!

Perhaps some non-Catholic readers may doubt the truth of this terrible crime on the part of Protestant Orangeism, hence we will give the evidence of no less a personage than Lord Gosford, then Governor of the county of Armagh, who gave this testimony at a meeting of the magistrates of the county assembled on December 28th, 1796. He then stated that "this bandit, as he called them, "had commenced and carried on a persecution of a atrocious malignity, that they had spared neither age, nor sex, nor innocence; that neither earliest nor modern history could supply an example of the ruin and misery inflicted by the Orangemen, and, he added—"the only crime of the wretched objects of this outrage persecution was—A profession of the Catholic Faith, an inalienable exception with a person of that faith."

The Insatiate or Unfordrid Orangeism upon Protestantism, impiously took the bible for their corner-stone. The ceremony of initiation of members was modelled after the fact related in the seventh and eighth chapters of the Book of Judges, and their motto was "The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon." But as neither the Lord nor Gideon were ever on the side of unknown injustice, this bloody library my has long since been laughed at by sensible people in Ireland, who look upon Orangeism as merely base imitators of Bombastus Furioso.

The first Orangemen designated themselves as the glorious, pious and immortal three hundred who were selected by divine inspiration from the immense multitude—(the 29,000 who originally formed the army of the Israelites)—and as those three hundred were composed by directions of the Most High, of men who lapped water without kneeling to drink, so the Orange host who proposed to anticipate knee-bending "Popery" were known as "the men who lap and do not kneel." Death-dealing oaths were administered to the members, in which dire vengeance was vowed against the Catholics of every rank, age, sex and station; the new signs, grips and pass-words were revealed to "the Lord's avengers," who were fondly reminded that with the small number of three hundred men, Gideon had wrought confusion and destruction upon the numerous hosts of Midianites, and thus should the "chosen of the Lord" Orangemen thus treat the Papists, who were the modern Midianites whom the Lord commanded them to destroy, and whose will every Orangeman must obey!

The new fledged Gideonites went to work in Ulster with a will. In a short time, out of the county of Armagh alone, seven hundred Catholic families were driven out by the Orangemen, their personal property was destroyed, the lives of all threatened, some were murdered openly, others assassinated secretly, their houses burned and their bodies with them. Entirely guiltless of arson a venial fault against their neighbor, public morality or the law of the land, they were thus ruthless turned out of the country in which they were born because they clung to the Cross of Christ, and believed in the precise doctrine taught by the Holy Catholic Church! And this happened under the flag of Protestant England, a little over a century ago, yet the Catholic Church is held up to the world as the only social and political power that ever persecuted for conscience sake!

Perhaps some non-Catholic readers may doubt the truth of this terrible crime on the part of Protestant Orangeism, hence we will give the evidence of no less a personage than Lord Gosford, then Governor of the county of Armagh, who gave this testimony at a meeting of the magistrates of the county assembled on December 28th, 1796. He then stated that "this bandit, as he called them, "had commenced and carried on a persecution of a atrocious malignity, that they had spared neither age, nor sex, nor innocence; that neither earliest nor modern history could supply an example of the ruin and misery inflicted by the Orangemen, and, he added—"the only crime of the wretched objects of this outrage persecution was—A profession of the Catholic Faith, an inalienable exception with a person of that faith."

An Oregon Paper on "Popish Miracles."

It seems to have become the established custom of contributors to the daily press to persist "to point the moral and adorn their powers, but to write upon the most sacred topics with a levity and an atheistic spirit which is degrading to the person and to the cause they advocate. The same writer will describe a dog fight in one column and give a dogmatic decision on the constitution of Hell in the next. Stocks and the Seven Sacraments, horse racing and the "bombing" of Hell, misengonation and the "absurdity" of miracles—are all dropped by the daily press with a facility, an arrogance and a positiveness of opinion which reminds a non-doubter, but which exhibits all Divinity, all Truth, all Supernatural Power at a single dash of the dogmatic writer's pseudo-reason.

A subscriber in Jacksonville, Oregon, sends us a copy of the Portland Oregonian of the 30th inst., in which some writer lately treats with delight at the easy manner in which he can make nonsense of Catholic belief in miracles. He says plainly that Lourdes, Knock and other pretended cures of character, are merely money making concerns where people are humbugged, and, to judge by his language, he (the writer) would quite naturally conclude that Almighty God never existed in heaven or on earth, and that by some accident or other Nature had endowed the Oregonian writer with all the intelligence and all the wisdom of the whole world—leaving an Unfathomed Void all around and the greatest fools in this whole bonanza (only) Here is what the Sexton inspired aspirant scribe says on pious miracles:

"There is not a character that cannot call a miracle to its support. The Holy Virgin Mary of the world is full of claims of this sort where Christians, some Christs, some Jesus. The shrine of Loretta was the creation of the vision of a young girl, and at the time and when pilgrims were particularly prone both to Spiritual Fancies and Knowledge. There are now eighteen shrines located just such dedications and visions. The Virgin Mary appeared to three children in a cave, and a church was built there, and it was accepted by the faithful.

"There is not the slightest official or scientific evidence, based upon fact, to support the action, whether wrought at Lourdes or Knock, or in Italy, Spain or Ireland. Nothing more than if the exaggeration of enthusiasts and of the ignorant, and the same can be claimed by the imagination of a bigoted and superstitious—nature and passed through the crucible of fancy and credulity, and the result is—nothing left but the cold, cold, hard fact of a lunatic's dream.

"It is by such rotten rodomontade as this that men who write for the daily press seek to undermine faith in God, and doubt in His power—in the minds of those who are foolish enough to follow them on their journey to Hell, and are cheated by the same Satan who has cheated the human race from the beginning. Nothing more than such writers seem to forget entirely the all important fact that the sense, Reason, Intuition and Understanding of man—in the beginning made all things "out of nothing, still lives, still possesses omnipotent power, and still retains the knowledge of creation over all things from "the sparrow's fall" to the most stupendous supernatural action that it is possible to occur even in this enlightened nineteenth century.

Would God be a just God to perform miracles in answer to prayers offered to Him for the purpose of giving glory and worship to our own day.

(To be continued next week.)

Among the candidates ordained by Archbishop Gibbons at St. Mary's Theological Seminary, Baltimore, on the 7th inst., we notice the name of Rev. Joseph J. McCue, of this Archdiocese.

—Archbishop Gross recently purchased a site of a dozen of Protestant places of meeting in Oregon and transformed them into Catholic churches. The time is shortly coming when all the Catholic Bishop of a new Diocese will have to do in order to stock his See with churches will be to advertise in some local paper something like the following: "WANTED—Fifteen or twenty Protestant meeting houses for desirable growing towns in this State, for which a fair price will be paid. Apply to Right Rev. the Catholic Bishop." All honey and Eugene City, in Oregon, have now two Protestant meeting houses less than they had a year ago. And thus the good work goes heavily on!

The compilation and dedication of a magnificent Catholic Church in Stamford, Connecticut, on a recent Sunday, moves public the interesting fact that as late as thirty years ago there were no few Catholics in Stamford that it was at irregular intervals only that they had the benefit of the administration of a priest. Mass used to be celebrated now and then in private houses by priests from Norwalk and New Haven. In course of time a small frame church was built on Meadow street, and as the Catholic population increased it was twice enlarged. The first rector of the parish was Father Conroy, who was succeeded in turn by Fathers Brady, Reynolds, O'Neill, Fagan, Tierney and Rogers. The first four died at their posts. Father Tierney is now in Hartford and Father Rogers is the present pastor. The new church will hold a congregation of three thousand. The history of this parish is the history of hundreds of other parishes all over the land.

—In a recent afternoon there was a large gathering in the Church of St. Eustache, Paris, on the occasion of the funeral of a remarkable widow, named Lemoinier, who played a very prominent part during the Commune. The Abbé Simon, rector of St. Eustache, had been taken as a hostage by the Communists, and, with some more ecclesiastics, he had been shot. When Madame Lemoinier boldly placed herself at the head of a deputation of the Francs-Archers Halles, and succeeded in the Hotel de Ville, Pinchly facing the Executive Committee, she declared that unless the rector were in his church on the following day, which happened to be Easter Sunday, the committee would hear more on the subject from the market women. The Francs-Archers were enamoured of their appeal, and at four o'clock the next morning the Abbé Simon was at his post. All the clergy of St. Eustache attended the funeral of the worthy Madame Lemoinier. Would that France had a few more such heroines. May God bless memory on her sou.

The History of the Rosary: Its Decadence and Restoration.

The history of this devotion presents four principal periods. The first is its golden period which continued about one hundred years, during that period the devotion of the Rosary spread and especially sanctified the Church. "The faithful," says Pius V., in his Bull Consevandum, "adhered to the holy meditations and prayers because all of a sudden changed into a new people, the darkness of heresy was dispelled, the Church shone forth, everywhere shone with majesty and telling effect. In every place the Friars Preachers established in convents of the Rosary, and Holy Mary soon had a great number of people flocked to them with eagerness to have their names recorded in the Registers. Then came the second period, during which this holy devotion was neglected and at the beginning of the great majority of Christians. After that sad and unfortunate period has commenced the third period, the period of the Bull and establishment in the hearts of the faithful. It is one of the mysteries of modern times how such a grand devotion could be allowed to fall into decay for even the smallest compass of time, but to know that it was almost entirely lost sight of by most Christians, and that it was not cared for by the Friars Preachers, is a wonder. Notwithstanding the subsequent glory of the Holy Rosary, notwithstanding its wonderful and divine effects produced by it, it was permitted by Divine Providence to become neglected and almost forgotten in the world. Great indeed is the glory of the Rosary, because it is the Divine Wisdom, the Eternal Word, Jesus Christ, who is the Author of the Rosary, and the Holy Ghost, who is the Author of the Rosary, and the Holy Ghost, who is the Author of the Rosary, and the Holy Ghost

Farm and Home.

The Coming Orange Crop.

Last year was what was known as the "off year" in orange. Notwithstanding the increased acreage of bearing orchards in Riverside yet the other year the crop of 1885-6 was very little larger than that of 1884-5, while the crop of 1884-85, which was the heavy crop year, was nearly ten times as large as that of 1883-4, which was the off year. It has therefore been expected that the crop of 1886-7 would be a heavy one, and it has been seriously estimated at from 1,000 to 1,500 carloads of oranges. But the present season has been in many respects a peculiar one from a horticultural standpoint. Like 1877, the peach trees and some other deciduous fruit trees declined to leaf out and behave themselves as they ought to. It is said that the oranges which set heavily as a rule are dropping from the trees, leaving a very light crop, and that in some instances the crop did not set well. People are liable to overestimate any damage that may come upon them. Every season May or June witnesses a dropping of little oranges. This is a necessary thing the trees cannot mature so much fruit as usually acts. People generally believe that their crop is all going but it does not. We would be glad to hear from our readers on this subject, so as to see what damage is being done. One fact is patent and that is that the orange crop of Riverside has never yet been over estimated and usually it is underestimated. Let us hope that such may be the case the coming year, for prices promise to be good.—Riverside Press.

Useful Household Hints.

Raw oysters are highly recommended as a cure for hoarseness.

Never make tea in a tin pot. The tannin, which is said, attacks the tin and produces a poison.

Never keep vinegar or yeast in stone crocks or jugs; their acid attacks the glazing, which is said to be poisonous. Glass for either is better.

Never use water which has stood in a lead pipe over night. Yet less than a wooden bucketful should be allowed to run before you draw for use.

A simple remedy for neuralgia is apply grated horseradish, dampened the size of an ounce, to the temple when the face or head is affected, or to the wrist when the pain is in the arm or shoulder.

Many ladies made the mistake of letting their children's hair grow long; they are very pretty with their hair down the back, I know, but there would be finer heads of hair men if it were cut short during childhood. It would be better for the constitution too.

Among the prettiest decorations for small fancy tables and stands are fringes or tassel effects, produced by glass balls arranged in a setting of gold or brass chains and links. The glass balls are either white, translucent, or colored to match the plush top of the stand or table.

There is nothing better for a cut than powdered alum. Pound it until fine, and put it in an empty, clean pepperpot with a perforated lid; then you can easily sift it out on the cut; put a soft cloth around the injured member, and rest it with cold water once in a while. It will prevent inflammation and soreness.

Poisonous Gloves.

They have recently had in London several cases of a peculiar herpetic eruption about the lips of children, and which doctors have traced to poisonous dyes used in colouring gloves worn. The rash could be produced at will. When the gloves were taken off and not worn for some time there was no rash. When, on the other hand, the gloves were worn, and the children repeated the practice, the rash returned. Clearly it was a case of cause and effect. Owing to the competition, manufacturers endeavor to cut down expense of production by using the cheapest form of dye; and this yields copper; then by using cheap products. There is not much economy in this, however. The old proverb should be remembered—cheap and dangerous.

To Remove a "Fly" from the Eyelid.

The eye is entirely only a little boil, which perhaps may take the edge of the eyelid. It is a dark red color, much inflamed, and occasionally a great deal more painful than might be expected, considering its small size. It usually disappears of itself after a little time, especially if some purgative medicine be taken. If the eye should be very painful and inflamed, a small warm poultice of linseed meal or bread and milk must be laid over it, and renewed every five or six hours, and the bowels freely acted upon by a purgative drugs, such as the following: Take of Epsom salts, half an ounce; but manna, tea drams; infusion of senna, six drams; tincture of senna, two drams; aperient water, one ounce; distilled water, two ounces. Mix, and take three, four, or five tablespoonfuls. When the eye appears will make pin a door——

"For instance—mine kisses and blisses me till I'm all out of breath, dad, mysel."

"Oh, teasy, weasy, twist, twust, itty sing! Oh is lowsie a sugar!

"One day I thought I'd try it that way. I gave my sweetheart a good bite, but it wasn't half as sweet as sugar! I squealed like anything, because it hurt, and because I was, of course, disappointed.

"I'ra nothing against thumbs, for they're very good in their way. They have, too, can suck one half a day and they're just as good as ever. If you suck sugar in a rag it's all gone very soon, and then you're sticky—which wouldn't matter, only you're sure to get walled.

"But it's no use to talk about being as sweet as sugar, you see.

"Another baby came here one day, and his mother made the same mistake. He isn't half so big as me, and he can't do anything smart. Never pulled a tablecloth down in his life that I heard of.

"His mother said to him, 'Will you stay down on a floor, you cosny mamy! O, how sweety, sweetest sing in a whole world!' Then she set him on the floor. Of course I wanted to find out about that. Crept up, and took a good bite of his ear.

"It wasn't a bit sweeter than my thumb, but he squalled louder than I did.

"You ought to have seen how they grabbed him up and hugged him, and made a fuss over him. And pointed to the pretty little tooth marks I made on his arm, and said, 'Ah-h-h—naughty!'—to me.

"What do you think of that, now, for a way to treat a baby that wants to find out about things?

The Fly Screen.

He had a simple fly screen under his arm, and he turned sadly and entered a little shop in Lafayette street east.

"I thus worry busy to day," said the cobbler, as he looked up.

"Yes, I suppose so, and so are the flies, was the reply. "My friend, have you given any thought to the momentous query 'Shall I Keep the Flies Out or In This Summer?'

"I had to get dis boot done in hall an hour.

"Exactly, and I don't propose to hinder you. I see thing orders for fly screens.

"That is to say, you propose to sit in the shop all summer and accumulate a pile of winged insects. Do you know how much time a man loses in four months in striking at flies?

"Let dem fly off on blim.

"Of course you don't but I have. You will lose just two days in every month, taking eight days thus lost from every month, and multiplying by four, you have lost 32 days. Now, then—

"Dey don't stank some fly screens.

"That is, you think you don't. How many cobs have of dir do you think comes through that door in four months?

"Maybe six.

"Maybe millions! How much dust do you suppose accumulates that all

"I thus very busy.

"Exactly, but more than two bushels of dust enter this shop by way of that door, and you at least inhale half of it. How many microbes accompany the dust?

"Dis shop thus under mortgage, you see.

"That's all right, but for ten hours a day you inhale 100 cholera microbes at a time!

"I can't afford to send a boy to Chicago in July.

"Suppose you do. A fly screen does a portable property. There are flies, dust and microbes in Chicago as well as in Boston. Do you want to die of cholera?

"I don't think dat right. If I live I had to work all dar time. I thus a great hardt to be alone in my shop.

"Curiously you are, but the question remains: Shall flies light on you or not? I will make yin a deal——

"I thus worry busy.

"Don't doubt it, but you owe something to yourself. Two dollars and a half will buy the door complete, and I want to tell you that or——

"Heat hastens 'em away! I thus busy! I don't want some flyscreens.

"You don't! If you don't want a door why did you encourage me? Why did you take a quarter of an hour of my valuable time? Your conduct is outrageous, sir grossly outrageous.

"The shoemaker jumped and locked the door as soon as the man was out. For a minute there was a glare of at each other through the dusty glass, and then the fly screen man said:

"It's a shameful case, and I'll keep an eye on you! It is just such trifling conduct as yours, sir, which has brought this country to short in it. Why didn't you tell me when I came in that you didn't want a fly screen door?

Only a Question of Time.

"Doctor, how is Barker Jones? I heard that he was very sick.

"He had joined the innumerable caravan," said the physician solemnly.

"What! You don't mean to say that Jones has shipped to Canada! Well! well!

Room for All.

Visitor (at Castle Garden)—Are all these immigrants Norwegians!

Official—No, sir. A few of them are Swedenberians.

A Successful Scheme.

"Mrs. Hardrike," said Dumley to his landlady, "will you please add a little hot water to my tea? It is too strong."

After supper Dumley asked Mrs. Hardrike if she would mind waiting until the following week for board money and she graciously replied

"Certainly not, Mr. Dumley."

In a rain man the smallest spark may kindle the greatest flame, because the lightest materials usually take fire the promptest.

Family Inn.

THE BABY TALKS.

Six Views on Matters and Things in General.

"I've been a baby ad my life, but I expect to get sent it some time. I need to be a little bit of a baby and now I am a very large one indeed. I can do lots of things.

"I can pull over the work basket, and tear up the morning paper, and play with the earth in the flower-pots. I can take hold of the table cloth and pull it off the table.

"But I didn't like to. That's a thing you only want to do once, because they will set all sorts of things on a tablecloth, and it isn't nice when they come tumbling down on your head.

"I can walk a little, too, but my feet have a way of wabbling about, and getting all tangled up in each other, and then somehow the floor jumps up and gives me a bump. They think blaming the place stops the hurting, but it don't—though it helps.

"Mothers are very nice things to have. They'd be sister if they didn't keep coming at you to wash your face, and always put you to bed just when you feel like having a big time with paps. They do these things because they know more than a baby does. I am willing to believe that they do some things, but they do make mistakes sometimes.

"For instance—mine kisses and blisses me till I'm all out of breath, dad, mysel.

"Oh, teasy, weasy, twist, twust, itty sing! Oh is lowsie a sugar!

"One day I thought I'd try it that way. I gave my thumb a good bite, but it wasn't half as sweet as sugar! I squalled like anything, because it hurt, and because I was, of course, disappointed.

"I'ra nothing against thumbs, for they're very good in their way. They have, too, can suck one half a day and they're just as good as ever. If you suck sugar in a rag it's all gone very soon, and then you're sticky—which wouldn't matter, only you're sure to get walled.

"But it's no use to talk about being as sweet as sugar, you see.

"Another baby came here one day, and his mother made the same mistake. He isn't half so big as me, and he can't do anything smart. Never pulled a tablecloth down in his life that I heard of.

"His mother said to him, 'Will you stay down on a floor, you cosny mamy! O, how sweety, weetest sing in a whole world!' Then she set him on the floor. Of course I wanted to find out about that. Crept up, and took a good bite of his ear.

"It wasn't a bit sweeter than my thumb, but he squalled louder than I did.

"You ought to have seen how they grabbed him up and hugged him, and made a fuss over him. And pointed to the pretty little tooth marks I made on his arm, and said, 'Ah-h-h—naughty!'—to me.

"What do you think of that, now, for a way to treat a baby that wants to find out about things?

DR. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Unsurpassed as a Remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and Nervous Complaints.

Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

THE SUNSET RANGE.

Awarded Gold Medal, Mechanics' Institute Fair, 1885.

The Best and Most Economical Range in Use. It Heats Quickly and Works Perfectly.

GEORGE H. TAY & CO.

614 to 618 Battery St., S. F.

Dealers in Stoves and Metal.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,

873 Market Street,

—WITH A LINE OF—

GENT'S "BOY'S" CLOTHING,

Furnishing Goods,

HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible

CARROLL & TILTON,

873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,

And the 4th TOWER & CO.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

Incorporated under the laws of California.

This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $5,000 and $10,000, which are payable in ten equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-tenth of the certificate when at the expiration of each ten years' membership between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; and from 45 to 50 every five years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of the amount is paid to the beneficiary.

No large assessments are required in advance, nor contributions of their own funds needed to pay death losses and provide funds for maturing certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates with the balance of the premium, which must be paid at per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $120,000. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly is only $6 00.

Reliable agents desired.

Address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary,

Room 28 Phelan Building, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS

THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver REMEDY.

806 Market St., S. F.

CILROY HOT SPRINGS.

ROOP & TENNANT,

Proprietors and Managers

These celebrated springs, situated in a picturesque valley, 2 miles from Gilroy, are now open for the season. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated and refitted, and the grounds improved. The springs are unrivaled for the cure of Rheumatism, Liver, Kidney, Skin and Blood Diseases, Dyspepsia, Piles, Dropsy, Gravel, Female Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Debility, Etc. Terms, $10 per week. Address as above, or Gilroy, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

Near Sixth. San Francisco.

WHOLESALE

LIQUOR DEALER.

DISTILLERS

We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.

Table Wines - - - 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.

Angelica Wine - - - - $1, $1.50 and $1.50

Mount Vineyard 1877 - - - - $1.50

Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.

Kentucky Whiskies - - $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.

Bourbon Whiskey - - - $2.50, $3, $3 and $4.

Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards

Other Wines and Liquors at low net rates.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST!

THE CATHOLIC NATIONAL SERIES.

Readers and Bible Students.

By Rt. Rev. Rich. Gilmour, D.D., Bishop of Cleveland

Cheapest and Most Popular School Books Published.

The Primer, per dozen.
The First Reader, " " 1 00
The Second Reader, " " 1 50
The Third Reader, " " 2 00
The Fourth Reader, " " 2 50
The Fifth Reader, " " 3 00
The Sixth Reader, " " 4 00
The Primary Speller, Containing Nearly 3000 Words, per dozen.
Intermediate Speller, Words Beyond Primary, per dozen.
Child's Catechism of Sacred History, per dozen.
Child's Bible History, with Illustrations, per dozen.
Child's Bible History, Illustrated, per dozen.
Child's Bible History, Illustrated, per dozen.
English Grammar, arranged according to the Principles of Language, Easy and Concise, per dozen.
Catechism of the Third Plenary Council, Illustrated Edition, Published by Permission of Archbishop Gibbons, per dozen.
Catechism of Christian Doctrine, Prepared by Direction of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore. Paper 20c, per dozen; Cloth, per dozen.
Catechism of Perseverance, Cloth, per dozen.
Catechism, Prepared by Direction of the Council of Baltimore. Paper, per dozen; Cloth, per dozen.
Abridged Catechisms, Paper, per dozen.
Catechisms Abrégées, Paper, per dozen.

Sent by mail or express, postage or express charges paid.

BENZIGER BROS.,

Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,

NEW YORK,

CINCINNATI. ST. LOUIS.

TAILORS.

JOHN KAVANAGH,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

No. 2 New Montgomery Street,

PALACE HOTEL, S. F.

The Making of Clergymen's Clothing Specialty

D. REDMOND,

Merchant Tailor,

1942 Mission Street,

Bet. 15th and 16th Sts., San Francisco

Suits from $20 upward. Pants from $5 upward. Good Fit Guaranteed. Several Years Success.

MERCHANT TAILOR

113 Second street,

A fine choice stock of Woolens.

Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty

FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF

SAFES!

Church Safes and Tabernacles.

Nos. 117 and 119 Sansome Street.

Patent Make-Made Paper Bags.

512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse,

"Regular" Cull-Bound Warehouse.

FIRE-PROOF BRICK BUILDING.

CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.

TOWNSEND ST.

Between First and Second, San Francisco

GEORGE H. LEWRAN, Prop.

Advance on Merchandise offered at lowest rates.

Telephone No. 307.

JOHN B. McINTYRE,

Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer,

425 CLAY and 420 COMMERCIAL ST.

especially of some purgative medicine be taken. If the eye should be very painful and inflamed, a small warm poultice of linseed meal or bread and milk must be laid over it, and renewed every five or six hours, and the bowels freely acted upon by a purgative drugs, such as the following: Take of Epsom salts, half an ounce; but manna, tea drams; infusion of senna, six drams; tincture of senna, two drams; aperient water, one ounce; distilled water, two ounces. Mix, and take three, four, or five tablespoonfuls. When the eye appears will make pin a door——

"For instance—mine kisses and blisses me till I'm all out of breath, dad, mysel.

"Oh, teasy, weasy, twist, twust, itty sing! Oh is lowsie a sugar!

"One day I thought I'd try it that way. I gave my thumb a good bite, but it wasn't half as sweet as sugar! I squalled like anything, because it hurt, and because I was, of course, disappointed.

"I'ra nothing against thumbs, for they're very good in their way. They have, too, can suck one half a day and they're just as good as ever. If you suck sugar in a rag it's all gone very soon, and then you're sticky—which wouldn't matter, only you're sure to get walled.

"But it's no use to talk about being as sweet as sugar, you see.

"Another baby came here one day, and his mother made the same mistake. He isn't half so big as me, and he can't do anything smart. Never pulled a tablecloth down in his life that I heard of.

"His mother said to him, 'Will you stay down on a floor, you cosny mamy! O, how sweety, weetest sing in a whole world!' Then she set him on the floor. Of course I wanted to find out about that. Crept up, and took a good bite of his ear.

"It wasn't a bit sweeter than my thumb, but he squalled louder than I did.

"You ought to have seen how they grabbed him up and hugged him, and made a fuss over him. And pointed to the pretty little tooth marks I made on his arm, and said, 'Ah-h-h—naughty!'—to me.

"What do you think of that, now, for a way to treat a baby that wants to find out about things?

The Fly Screen.

He had a simple fly screen under his arm, and he turned sadly and entered a little shop in Lafayette street east.

"I thus worry busy to day," said the cobbler, as he looked up.

"Yes, I suppose so, and so are the flies, was the reply. "My friend, have you given any thought to the momentous query 'Shall I Keep the Flies Out or In This Summer?'

"I had to get dis boot done in hall an hour.

"Exactly, and I don't propose to hinder you. I see thing orders for fly screens.

"That is to say, you propose to sit in the shop all summer and accumulate a pile of winged insects. Do you know how much time a man loses in four months in striking at flies?

"Let dem fly off on blim.

"Of course you don't but I have. You will lose just two days in every month, taking eight days thus lost from every month, and multiplying by four, you have lost 32 days. Now, then—

"Dey don't stank some fly screens.

"That is, you think you don't. How many cobs have of dir do you think comes through that door in four months?

"Maybe six.

"Maybe millions! How much dust do you suppose accumulates that all

"I thus very busy.

"Exactly, but more than two bushels of dust enter this shop by way of that door, and you at least inhale half of it. How many microbes accompany the dust?

"Dis shop thus under mortgage, you see.

"That's all right, but for ten hours a day you inhale 100 cholera microbes at a time!

"I can't afford to send a boy to Chicago in July.

"Suppose you do. A fly screen does a portable property. There are flies, dust and microbes in Chicago as well as in Boston. Do you want to die of cholera?

"I don't think dat right. If I live I had to work all dar time. I thus a great hardt to be alone in my shop.

"Curiously you are, but the question remains: Shall flies light on you or not? I will make yin a deal——

"I thus worry busy.

"Don't doubt it, but you owe something to yourself. Two dollars and a half will buy the door complete, and I want to tell you that or——

"Heat hastens 'em away! I thus busy! I don't want some flyscreens.

"You don't! If you don't want a door why did you encourage me? Why did you take a quarter of an hour of my valuable time? Your conduct is outrageous, sir grossly outrageous.

"The shoemaker jumped and locked the door as soon as the man was out. For a minute there was a glare of at each other through the dusty glass, and then the fly screen man said:

"It's a shameful case, and I'll keep an eye on you! It is just such trifling conduct as yours, sir, which has brought this country to short in it. Why didn't you tell me when I came in that you didn't want a fly screen door?

Only a Question of Time.

"Doctor, how is Barker Jones? I heard that he was very sick.

"He had joined the innumerable caravan," said the physician solemnly.

"What! You don't mean to say that Jones has shipped to Canada! Well! well!

Room for All.

Visitor (at Castle Garden)—Are all these immigrants Norwegians!

Official—No, sir. A few of them are Swedenberians.

A Successful Scheme.

"Mrs. Hardrike," said Dumley to his landlady, "will you please add a little hot water to my tea? It is too strong."

After supper Dumley asked Mrs. Hardrike if she would mind waiting until the following week for board money and she graciously replied

"Certainly not, Mr. Dumley."

In a rain man the smallest spark may kindle the greatest flame, because the lightest materials usually take fire the promptest.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

DYSPEPSIA

KIDNEYS

SCROFULA

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.

BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.

THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, - - - CALIFORNIA

This Institution is now founded in 1851, and to-day ranks among the first Colleges of the State. It occupies large buildings, with extensive shady grounds, situated in the most pleasant and healthy portion of the Santa Clara Valley. It possesses a complete philosophical apparatus, a Cabinet of Natural Curiosities, a Museum, Observatory, Telescopic, Photographic and Commercial Illustrations, and a Library of over 16,000 volumes. Its Course of Studies has been established for the benefit of Students, Preparatory, Telegraphy, Phonography and Commercial Business and Thorough English Course. Has not been founded, that leaves nothing to be desired.

Diplomas are given to the graduates in Classics and Commercial Business in the Commercial course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-annually, in advance)

Matriculation Fee, $10 00 (but once $ 15 00

Board, Lodging, Tuition, Washing and Mending of Linen, Bedding and Medicine, Baths, etc., per month 30 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to Rt. Ignatius Mooney, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco.

REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J.,

Ist Prefect. President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME.

This Institution, established in 1851, and incorporated in 1868, by Act of the Legislature of California, with the usual powers to confer Collegiate Honors, is situated on De Boom street, opposite the Old Mission Church.

The course of Instruction embraces all the branches requisite for the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per annum $200 00

EXTRA CHARGES.

Piano, with use of instrument, per annum $60 00
Vocal Music, Class Lessons " " 20 00
Vocal Music, Private Lessons " " 40 00
Drawing, per annum 20 00
Painting in Water Colors, per annum 20 00
Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00
Drawing, per lesson 1 00
Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00
Dancing, per lesson 1 00
Dancing, Fees 10 00
Physician's Fees (in case of sickness)
Terms payable half in advance and are payable at the close of each half session, or when.

SELECT DAY SCHOOL.

Terms per session, (paid in advance)

Tuition in the 1st and 2nd Collegiate Classes $ 50 00
Tuition in the Third and Fourth Collegiate Classes 35 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Preparatory Classes 25 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Elementary Classes 20 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 15 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes 10 00
Music (Vocal and Instrumental), Drawing and Painting and Private Elocution Lessons, each one lesson, at the Boarding School, but one lesson, per week 1 00
Pupils received at any time from date of entrance to the end of the session.
Pupils not to be taken from the Academy without the consent of the Principal.
Pupils expelled before the end of the session forfeit the money paid for the session.
Pupils will be required to attend Mass every Sunday and Holyday of obligation.
Uniform—Black Alpaca Dress, Black Sash, Black Hat with Black Ribbon.
Pupils will be required to furnish themselves with the following articles:
Six Dresses, Six Pairs Stockings, Six Pairs Shoes, Six Chemises, Six Pairs Drawers, Six Nightdresses, Six Corsets, Six Corset Covers, Six Crash Towels, Six Napkins, Six Dozen Pins, Six Pairs Sheets, Six Pillow Cases, Six Dozen Pins, Six Dozen Needles, Six Dozen Tapes, Six Dozen Buttons, Six Dozen Spools Cotton, Six Dozen Spools Silk, Six Dozen Spools Thread, Six Dozen Spools Tape, Six Dozen Spools Thread, Six Dozen Spools Tape, Six Dozen Spools Thread, Six Dozen Spools Tape

CANOSSA AT LAST.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

ment would seriously compromise the Papal negotiation of a revision of the May Laws and make known their decision. It was felt at once all over Germany that this announcement, taken in conjunction with Prince Bismarck's speech in September, was the kind of thing Prince Bismarck liked. The speech with which the Prussian Government took what published its decision made this a matter of certainty.

AS SOON AS THE NEWSPAPERS REMARKED, the Chancellor was not only resolved to make peace with the Pope, but was in his characteristic way determined that no hindrance should be his way. The debate in the Upper House was concluded on April 14th. On the 24th, Herr von Schlözer, the Prussian Minister to the Vatican, communicated officially the intention of his assistant Government to propose to the Diet the revision of the May laws. Two days later vision of the May laws. Two days later Cardinal Jacobini replied stating that the Pope was as well pleased with the conduct of the Prussian Government and with their evidently legal desire for the restoration of religious peace, but he would forthwith authorize the Prussian bishops to comply at once with the regulations concerning the oath "Amtsgelübde." And this came, as a sort of dumbfied evidence of the good will sent of dumbfied evidence of the good will selling on both sides, the present of a magnificent piece of wine from the Emperor of Germany to the Pope.

THE PRESENT TERMS AND THE CIRCUMSTANCES under which the Bill came before the Lower House on May 10th are well known. Its second reading has not yet been over-thrown, although it is under criticism. Let us suppose that the Bill passes the second reading. Let us suppose that the Bill passes the third reading. Let us suppose that the Bill becomes law. Still much remains to be done before peace is established. But in the Chamber there are some who either fancied they could stem the tide or wished to have a protest on record. Dr. Gneist, a very distinguished jurist, but not a broad-minded man, led the Opposition. The speeches and arguments of Dr. Gneist and his supporters were the kind we might expect to hear in Exter Hall at this season of the year, only dressed up with a greater display of learning. There is an impossible guilt between the rights of the State and the pretensions of the Roman Church. The history of Germany is the narrative of an unceasing struggle on the part of the State for the upper hand. The Catholic religion is irreconcilable with political freedom. It puts forward claims on supernatural grounds to control the conscience of men in a way which may any moment put them in disobedience to the laws of the land. With such an enemy there may be a short and hollow truce, but peace never. There are no specific conditions of the new arrangement. Where were the guarantees? Before the Diet assented to the Bill the Pope should transmit it black and white its precise contents, so that Prussia should not take a leap in the dark. Prince Bismarck replied to these objections in the town and in the Diet and in a manner of victory. He was not present as a Deputy, but as Minister of the Crown, explaining, as is the case in most continental legislatures, the policy of the Government. He recommended the Deputies to cease a useless opposition. They could not prevent the measure from passing; but they had it in their power to prove that they were more of common men, and would show that Prussia was united in its determination to have peace. He would not follow the historical arguments advanced by the opponents; he would not discuss the pretensions of the Roman Church. Very likely there had been Popes who set up ecclesiastical claims; but have there ever been Popes who claimed west far beyond those of the Pope. There were there not political questions in their own assemblies who put forward demands and attempted to make which would ruin Germany far more quickly than any Papal pretensions? He was not a theologian, nor a philosopher, nor a political historian.

HE WAS A MINISTER OF THE CROWN of Prussia, responsible to the Royal Master for suggesting whatever he deemed of advantage to the kingdom and his fellow subjects, and bound to do the best in his power for the King and for Prussia. He in his capacity had to do what things as he found them. He found at Home a Pope enlightened, liberal-minded, with a character which imposed respect on the whole world. He was called upon for a renewed legislation: no did the King, his master, to do all possible people. The Pope had given an most conspicuous proof of his honesty and sincerity by anticipating the fulfilment of the promise, and consenting "Amtsgesetz." He had unbounded confidence in the honor of the Pope. If it may future time other authorities of the Roman Catholic Church gave them trouble in Prussia they would know how to take care of themselves. The "concessions" made by the State were in taking a treaty of peace after a territorial war, and had to be accurately laid down and the amount of money which was to change hands should be precisely defined. Such arrangements were out of place where consciences, souls and spiritual affairs were concerned. There it was the bona side and the bona substantia that were everything. Where those qualities were present on both sides, as they were here, there was no fear of future quarrels; where they were absent the most astutely worded formulæ would not be sufficient to secure a durable peace.

THE CRIMINAL GOVERNMENT would not go on with the work which they had commenced, and set about a thorough revision of the May legislation. They will consult their views to the Pope, on whose friendly feeling they can reckon, and when they understands the position of affairs in Prussia. His final approval of it would be in the interests of peace; better then have his approval at the outset and save time and discussion. The measure, as we already said, not only passed the first reading by an immense majority, but the Chamber, departing from the usage generally followed in dealing with important Bills, resolved to send it to a special committee. The second and third readings were passed by equally decisive majorities. In Germany now the opinion is that every thing which may any moment put them in disobedience to the laws of the land. With such an enemy there may be a short and hollow truce, but peace never. We have no specific conditions of the new arrangement. Where were the guarantees? Before the Diet assented to the Bill the Pope should transmit it black and white its precise contents, so that Prussia should not take a leap in the dark. Prince Bismarck replied to these objections in the town and in the Diet and in a manner of victory. He was not present as a Deputy, but as Minister of the Crown, explaining, as is the case in most continental legislatures, the policy of the Government. He recommended the Deputies to cease a useless opposition. They could not prevent the measure from passing; but they had it in their power to prove that they were more of common men, and would show that Prussia was united in its determination to have peace. He would not follow the historical arguments advanced by the opponents; he would not discuss the pretensions of the Roman Church. Very likely there had been Popes who set up ecclesiastical claims; but have there ever been Popes who claimed west far beyond those of the Pope. There were there not political questions in their own assemblies who put forward demands and attempted to make which would ruin Germany far more quickly than any Papal pretensions? He was not a theologian, nor a philosopher, nor a political historian.

HE WAS A MINISTER OF THE CROWN of Prussia, responsible to the Royal Master for suggesting whatever he deemed of advantage to the kingdom and his fellow subjects, and bound to do the best in his power for the King and for Prussia. He in his capacity had to do what things as he found them. He found at Home a Pope enlightened, liberal-minded, with a character which imposed respect on the whole world. He was called upon for a renewed legislation: nor did the King, his master, to do all possible people. The Pope had given an most conspicuous proof of his honesty and sincerity by anticipating the fulfilment of the promise, and consenting "Amtsgesetz." He had unbounded confidence in the honor of the Pope. If it may future time other authorities of the Roman Catholic Church gave them trouble in Prussia they would know how to take care of themselves. The "concessions" made by the State were in taking a treaty of peace after a territorial war, and had to be accurately laid down and the amount of money which was to change hands should be precisely defined. Such arrangements were out of place where consciences, souls and spiritual affairs were concerned. There it was the bona side and the bona substantia that were everything. Where those qualities were present on both sides, as they were here, there was no fear of future quarrels; where they were absent the most astutely worded formulæ would not be sufficient to secure a durable peace.

THE CRIMINAL GOVERNMENT would not go on with the work which they had commenced, and set about a thorough revision of the May legislation. They will consult their views to the Pope, on whose friendly feeling they can reckon, and when they understands the position of affairs in Prussia. His final approval of it would be in the interests of peace; better then have his approval at the outset and save time and discussion. The measure, as we already said, not only passed the first reading by an immense majority, but the Chamber, departing from the usage generally followed in dealing with important Bills, resolved to send it to a special committee. The second and third readings were passed by equally decisive majorities. In Germany now the opinion is that every thing which may any moment put them in disobedience to the laws of the land. With such an enemy there may be a short and hollow truce, but peace never.

—The Orange Free State has been detached by Proclamation from the Natal Vice-Regal, and is to have a Bishop of its own. The Bishop has been appointed by the Holy See in the person of the Rev. Father Anthony Gaughren, O. M. I. Father Gaughren is at present Superior of the House of the Oblate Fathers, at Hook Farm, near Liverpool. He is, however, a native of Dublin, and is well-known to many of our readers, where he has frequently given Missions and Retreats. Kimberley, in the "Diamond Fields" will probably be the home of the new Vicar Apostolic.

—Bonness Stalls, 17, 18, 19 California Market (Pine street, one door above Sansome). Meat Market and all Poultry Unsurpassed Food.

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Ancrim.—A young man named George M'Cluskey was accidentally killed on May 22 by falling under the wheels of a train on the Railway while some wagons were being shunted.

The petition inaugurated by the Lady Mayoress has been signed by several thousands in a fast. Throughout the province of Ulster it is numerously signed, and the number of names to be sent forward when completed will be most gratifying. Many Protestants of the fair sex in Belfast, and the expression of the fair sex is the most powerful one, have signed strongly at the door of the petition.

The English mind is now purged of most of the myths about Ireland. It is known to be not by the priests, not the poorest instead of the richest of the people, not the Protestants instead of the Catholics, that the Land Question is chiefly in Ulster. It is known that instead of Ulster being the Land Question is chiefly in Ulster. It is known that instead of Ulster being the Land Question is chiefly in Ulster. It is known that instead of the majority of its representatives are Nationalists, and that the Nationalists and Nationalists would be in a more helpless minority in a Halifax Parliament than in a Dublin one.

The brazen-face about the industrial prosperity of Ulster, of which we have been hearing so much recently, seems to be in a fair way of being exploded as effectually as the whole system of the exclusive Protestantism and the whole system of Protestant Ascendancy. Belfast has been a large party of Nationalists. The party was the party that wished to Home Rule for Ulster. When two large parties of operatives make up their minds to Home Rule within a few weeks, it can be hardly be regarded as a sign of unpopularity of the cause. We should add that an enlightening agent set both parties of mill hands to work. Nothing so effective with Ulster. Ulster now had not the resources of their own to fall back on, and they should be sent to other ones. That is not a sign of prosperity either.

Belfast.—The Irish Prison Board has under consideration the question of the future of the Crumlin Road Gaol, which is now in a very dilapidated condition. It is stated that the Government intends to sell the property, and that the Board will be in a position to offer it for sale shortly. The Board will be in the future at our race has always been a good one, and on the side of the people.

Ballyshannon.—The Rev. Father Gallagher, C.C., of Ballyshannon, has written to the Bishop of Raphoe, requesting him to convene a public meeting to petition their representatives in Parliament for a final settlement of the Land Question. That we approve the course of our Ballyshannon brother, and hope it will be followed by other clergymen throughout the National Conference elected at St. Paul, Minnesota, on the 2nd inst., and which was attended by a great number of delegates from all parts of the State, and which lasted for three days, has adopted a resolution regarding the Land Bill.

Milltown.—On Sunday last, the Rev. Michael Murphy, of Milltown, and Miss Mary Ann Mullarkey, of Ballyhaunis, were married in the parish church of Milltown, by the Rev. Dr. Lynch, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Lynch, the Rev. Michael Murphy, of Milltown, and the president, Father Fitzgibbon, of Ballyhaunis, and the bride's father, Mr. Michael Mullarkey, of Ballyhaunis, and the groom's father, Mr. J. Sheehan, of San Francisco, secretary. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Lynch, treasurer; F. E. Lacke, lecturer; A. Fitzgibbon, chaplain; Miss Mary Ann Lynch, William Tait, sentinel; J. J. Kane, J. P. Farrell, J. Hennessy, W. Scally, J. Fleming, A. L. Vance, W. Scally, J. Fleming, A. L. Vance, W. Scally, J. Fleming, A. L. Vance, Miss Lizzie, Miss Ellen, Jennie, Miss Ellen, Jennie, Miss Ellen, Jenn

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

KATHLEEN ALANNA.

Ah! Kathleen alanna, Kathleen machree,
My heart is on fire and burning for thee,
From the first blush of morning to the sweet day night,
That flame in my bosom leaves tender and bright.

From the hour I first met you when we danced on the green,
Na conie or contentment this heart has once seen;
Wherever I wander or whatever I do
The true image I have I am thinking of you.

Ah! Kathleen alanna I'll never stray away,
If you do not have pity and name the sweet day.
The day that the angels in Heaven will smile
Will see one lark mounted to the harbor of Love.

Sure its eyes I look at the stars in the skies,
As they seem to reflect the light of your eyes;
Sweet Kathleen alanna, you are shining bright
That could match your sweet eyes as they sparkle to-night.

And whenever I look on the rose smiling red,
With the dews of the morning so sweet on its head;
It calls back your form so bashful and meek
And it blushes as much for the blush of your cheek.

Ah! Kathleen alanna, there never was wise
Half as easy or sweet in the ways of love;
There never was joy or rapture so rare
That could taste with the bliss we are sharing there.

The moves that is winter fall soft on the moon tells,
Or the tears that spring from the loss almost forgotten,
Are not half as gentle or pulseless I'm sure
As the heart of my Kathleen alanna is kind to you.

Then Kathleen my darling, Kathleen machree,
Just name the sweet day and be happy I'll be;
Then I'll smile and sing from morning to night,
My heart will be joyful, my thoughts will be light.

With you for my jewel, my own slightest wife,
Defiance I'll cast at the world and its strife,
The home will pass swiftly like blocks of the sun
With my Kathleen alanna, my Kathleen machree.

FARNY, QUEBEC.

MY IRISH MOTHER.

I loved old Erin's time-crowned hills,
Before I trod their slope entranced,
Ere hoard of their rills
Ere I had stood on their islanding;
I knew there some beyond the sea
Whose hills a scale all beauties other,
Because their wealth was pictured me
From memory, by my Irish mother.

She longed to dwell mid sylvan bower
And fahy-covered meadows sprinkle,
And lived among departed hours,
As artist's grace for ever dwelling;
She sang of home, so prisoned bird
Till freedom's note so lure was another
And strengthened with her body words
The youthful spirit—my Irish mother.

Her sorrow-breathing, plaintive songs,
Her friendships and old times recall,
Decaying hunt-unfolding wrongs,
In touching strains, were sound-exhaling;
They gave to boyhood's dream the life
That home defying passions other
Than those would free from yearly strife
The land that bore my Irish mother.

The blood that courses every rein
Of mine, is patriotic chamber,
Where passion's fury is in train—
The home so sought of hate impenetrable;
Oh! every drop of that pure blood,
Which warms to cheer a struggling brotherhood,
Will feel its life in life's sweet flood
Within her breast—my Irish mother.

J. J. McG.

Literary Miscellany.

The Woman with One Hand.

I do not believe in ghosts. I have no faith in any supernatural manifestations or appearances whatever. I beg any one who may peruse this narrative to understand that I am no superstitious coward, afraid of my own shadow, lending an attentive ear to old women's stories and seeing "looming white" in every corner where the shadows grow thickly about dusk. It is scarcely likely that an old surgeon who has round battle so many dying fellows, and watched so many spirits take their flight from wounded and rent bodies, should tremble at the thought of a disembodied soul. I known too well the release death brings to the poor, pain-stricken mortals, to fear their voluntary return to scenes of their sublimeness and suffering. Neither am I the victim of disordered nerves or learned imagination. I have experienced sensations in which one tremor of the hand would have been death—when, had my hand reversed one hair's breadth to the right or to the left, I would have been a murderer. Nay, I, the Physician, can do what many able, energetic men have found impossible, for I have had those dessert to my soul beneath my hand, and though each moan of anguish, each flutter of the heart, went through my every nerve, the kindly cruel knife scarcely or needing as though it carved a block of senseless wood.

I was born in a quiet and retired country village. My father sampled the profession of doctor and apothecary, and at times drew teeth, or set a fractured limb—anything for a living, poor man, for he had a family, and neither property nor expectancies of a long age. His patients were distributed over a large tract of country, and during an unhealthy season he was often on horseback from morning until night, enduring the scorching rays of summer, the cold blast of winter, or the miasmatic vapors of the marshy ground over which he was called to travel upon many a rainy midnight, to prescribe for some poor creature who was "very low with the fever." During his absence, mother I presided over the pills and potions, made up prescriptions, and amused myself by the perusal of several works upon anatomy, which graced the book shelves of the room behind the shop. This science was my chief delight, and in a little while the determination to become a surgeon filled my mind. Month succeeded month—I made me doubt the power of medicine. The mysteries of the human machinery within us might baffle the most learned, but the surgeon, dealing with the outer man, could see his work, and really benefit his fellow-creatures. I knew the strength of my nerves and the calm they would be to me in the surgical profession, and I declared my intention to adopt it before I had reached my sixteenth year. My father was pleased, gave his consent at once, but there were some preliminaries to be arranged, and some funds to be accumulated before I could enter upon regular study. Meanwhile I stayed at home, impatiently, and gathered what I could from books and from my father's instructions. The time passed indeedly enough, for I was anxious to commence my career, and start upon the high road to wealth and eminence, and many were the anxious days and sleepless nights which I spent are the time arrived which witnessed my departure for the city. At last, however, all was ready. I bade adieu to my mother, my father and my brother, from whom I had never been separated for one night, and with a heart which beat with high hopes, even amid the grief of parting, took my place in the stage, and left for the first time, the home of my glad childhood. In a month I became accustomed to the separation, and thought only of my profession.

Medical students are generally wild, careless and dissipated. I was neither. The discretion of old age seemed to have, when suddenly upon me. I shared my comrades' studies, but refused to mingle in their orgies. For I determined to retain my strong nerves and unshaken hand to the last. Nevertheless, I was a general favorite, and formed many friendships among the giddy band, which lasted long after they had scattered from their hospital. There was one among the number whose name was Robert Redlaw—a gay, careless, careless, careless, but a handsome boy he was, full of fun and frolic, and terribly addicted to practical jokes; but nevertheless kind-hearted and generous to a fault, for he would have given his last pump to any one who seemed in need of it. To the living he was all generous; to the wounded wretch at the hospital his hand was as soft as any woman's, and I have seen his eyes fill with tears when he inflicted necessary pain, but to the dead he secured heartless—a lifeless body being of no value, in his eyes, to the living of an old tree.

"Would you value your violin case? he said, when any one remonstrated with him on the subject. "The strings be lost—my the instrument destroyed—of what value is the case which was but used for the purpose? For my part, when my soul has taken flight I care no what you do with the compilation of flesh and bones which now contains it. And upon this principle he seemed to act—substantially.

One night—oh! how well I remember it—I said, black evening in midwinter—I set alone beside my fire, absorbed in meditation. The book I had been reading lay beside me, upon the table, and my candle burned low within the socket, for it was nearly one o'clock, although I had gone to retired. Suddenly I was aroused by a loud ringing of my door bell, and a sound of voices thrown against my window from with out, and, lighting another taper, I descended and opened the door.

There, upon the steps, stood Robert Redlaw and four other fellow students, all the worse for liquor, and all in boisterous spirits. "Let us in, old fellow," cried Robert, "we want to tell you of our lark. By George! we made a night of it, only bunch we have been having at Tom—a while you have been moping over your musty books. You must go with us the next time.

There was no use of remonstrance; and one by one my unexpected visitors mounted the stairs and took their places around my fireside.

"I say, Bob frightened us a while ago, began one of them, after a temporary silence.

"How?" I asked.

"How?" laughed Bob, "why, with this."

And without another word or preface, he drew a folded kerchief from his pocket, and, unfolding it, exhibited a human hand.

"Bob, where did this come from?" I asked, involuntarily drawing back a step or two.

"He took it from a grave which the rain had washed open," answered a tall young fellow, turning away with a shudder. "Cut it off with a knife, as cooly as he might a bit of wood, although I'll swear a sigh, or groan, or scream, or all of them together, came from the body when he first laid his finger upon it."

"Bah!" laughed Robert Redlaw, "your sentimental tricks can never impose upon me. I took the little hand in spite of them, and shall keep it. A pretty creature it must have belonged to. Look at the slender shaped nails, Gregstock."

"A woman's hand," I said, "and, oh, Bob, there is a wedding ring upon the finger."

"So there is," said the boy, leaning across the table, "so there is. Strange that I did not notice it before. Come, gentlemen, Gregstock is in a serious mood—let us leave him." And wrapping his strange prize once more in the kerchief, my wild friend and his comrades departed.

I spent the night in restless dreams, in all of which that pale little hand which had been laid before me played a conspicuous part, and arose at daylight, unrefreshed and ill at ease. I opened my door, and on my surprised gaze there fell a parcel and a letter. The letter bore the words, "Do you do, my dear fellow? Keep the parcel safe, and, if any one calls for it, say you have none. Yours, &c., R. R."

All that time I had never left him, day or night. Study had been thrown aside, and business abandoned—all earthly interest merged in the dying friend, beside whose pillow I watched so anxiously. When the news came that he was delirious, I could have wept for joy.

"For God's sake don't hurt her, sir! She doesn't know what she's doing—she has lost her senses.

"Who and what is this being?" I asked, "and why does she come to the chamber of death in this silent hour? Yes, must tell me, for she is already a murderess."

"She is my wife," said the man. "We have lived in the same house for ten years, and all that time she has been mad. She has not had the sense since her child was born to death in the same fire in which her husband was burned to death. I was a boy then, and I jumped through the window, and I had not the heart to render her. The night she was the doctor, poor fellow, foiled everything with a knife, which, I suppose, he had brought from the dissecting room, and she has been mad ever since. I have not been able to keep her from the wretch who was from this room, for, poor one, she thought the hand was her own, and started back. These times I have followed her and brought her back once when she had the jar in her arms and was bringing it away.

I let the wretched creature go, and he took her about the east very tenderly.

"Do you know what she does?" I asked.

"No," replied the man; "to my knowledge she has done nothing."

"Nothing! Is there nothing! I asked, pointing to the couch. "That is her hand-work this little hand. Her presence frightened him to death?

"I hope Sir, sir, said the man.

"I spoke the truth," I muttered bitterly. "Take her from my sight. Oh! why did I ever do such a thing?

"Why did I carry on the roadside while I profited from the misery of a poor wretch and child enveloped in the shade? Why at this moment, once as a boy, I stood by my dead mamma?" and the strange man sadly.

"It was God's will, sir, and we cannot alter it. Good night, I pray thee, good night."

And this speaking, he led the wretched creature from the room and away over the sloping roof, with the soft, caressing kindness of a young mother, if, sinking upon the floor gave way to a burst of wild and bitter grief.

Enough. My tale is done. In a lonely graveyard, far from the city's bustle, a white stone marks the grave of Robert Redlaw, the victim of one of the strangest coincidences which has ever yet been recorded in the book of fate.

The Wardrobe of the Baby King of Spain.

A lady correspondent in Madrid writes: It is put etiquette for a Queen of Spain to be blessed with a baby. Queen Christina has always been deprived of this pleasure, which she has never had, but Isabella has done, and begged hard to be allowed to do so, but it was not considered to be "the thing," and she had to give her up with a tech to a monastery. Of course so swarthy and dark that they called her in the palace "La African." When Sagasta proposed that the baby King to all whom she wanted him in a large hall, next to the one in which the ball was received, in a remote corner of the shed. Nothing had been arranged for her, and she carried the baby to its mother, saying, "Kiss your King." Mrs. Sagasta was a little out of her long food line, and said with her eyes full of tears: "If anything compensates my sons I descended to the Palace on Sunday, I know not, but I was awakened by a low moan, and lifting my head I saw Robert sitting upright and gazing through the window.

"Bob, my dear Bob, I ejaculated, "what is the matter?"

"I remember the night," he moaned my friend, "and this is the punishment. Great God! I cannot, I cannot, I cannot!

"Nonsense, I said, "you have been dreaming. Put your arm about me, and let me die of the shudder.

Horror stricken, I supported him upon my breast, calling to God for aid, and prayed to him to rise, for I felt as cold as death, I am sure. The voice was hushed forever, the eyes grew glassy, the cold blood chilled in my own, and the white moonlight fell upon a corpse. Some one at my breast my head upon his lips.

Hats you saw attached beside the door, dear reader? Do you know what is in a sea form which was once full of life and joy? Do you know what a pain-drama is? All sweet emotions frozen from within its sunken eyes, and those disappointed, and, loved expressions which charmed you so well in seeing into the fixed and rigid world, which, even in beauty, seems terrible? Do you and tell you that your part in life has thus in blotted out forever. Oh, if you knew the grief of such a scene, I need not tell what I felt as the hours of the next and night were on toward morning.

Hats they lay on the mantelpiece, ticking so lonely answer. 4th, how strange it seemed to think that in master's hand would never rest in it more. I looked upon it, I looked upon the hours in the hand, the night was over and the world day was close at hand. I turned away and walked toward the window. I was alone, for I would not permit another to share that hour of agony with me. I was alone, I say, when the pale rosy light of morning crept stealthily toward me, that one hand was gone, I was no more fancy, if spirits ever come to man on a cold Sabbath morn.

The apparition advanced and so did I. Hitherto, I was not a believer in ghosts. I, I hold it in a firm unshrinking grasp, and I found that it was cold as a thing of flesh and blood, and that it moaned and trembled as if in terror. "Should I call for aid? Thinking, living or dead, had killed my poor young friend. No favored intelligence entered up the form and face which he believed was of another world.

How it was powerless in my hands, and I would scorn it or die. While I stood trembling in the light of the taper gleamed out above a window, and I saw a man standing by the open sash. He looked upon the lad, and the still thing beneath the mourning covering, upon me and the being I grappled with, and then ejaculated:

"For God's sake don't hurt her, sir! She doesn't know what she's doing—she has lost her senses.

"Who and what is this being?" I asked, "and why does she come to the chamber of death in this silent hour? Yes must tell me, for she is already a murderess."

"She is my wife," said the man. "We have lived in the same house for ten years, and all that time she has been mad. She has not had the sense since her child was born to death in the same fire in which her husband was burned to death. I was a boy then, and I jumped through the window, and I had not the heart to render her. The night she was the doctor, poor fellow, foiled everything with a knife, which, I suppose, he had brought from the dissecting room, and she has been mad ever since. I have not been able to keep her from the wretch who was from this room, for, poor one, she thought the hand was her own, and started back. These times I have followed her and brought her back once when she had the jar in her arms and was bringing it away.

I let the wretched creature go, and he took her about the east very tenderly.

"Do you know what she does?" I asked.

"No," replied the man; "to my knowledge she has done nothing.

"Nothing! Is there nothing! I asked, pointing to the couch. "That is her handiwork this little hand. Her presence frightened him to death?

"I hope Sir, sir, said the man.

"I spoke the truth," I muttered bitterly. "Take her from my sight. Oh! why did I ever do such a thing?

"Why did I carry on the roadside while I profited from the misery of a poor wretch and child enveloped in the shade? Why at this moment, once as a boy, I stood by my dead mamma?" and the strange man sadly.

"It was God's will, sir, and we cannot alter it. Good night, I pray thee, good night."

And this speaking, he led the wretched creature from the room and away over the sloping roof, with the soft, caressing kindness of a young mother, if, sinking upon the floor gave way to a burst of wild and bitter grief.

Enough. My tale is done. In a lonely graveyard, far from the city's bustle, a white stone marks the grave of Robert Redlaw, the victim of one of the strangest coincidences which has ever yet been recorded in the book of fate.

The Wardrobe of the Baby King of Spain.

A lady correspondent in Madrid writes: It is put etiquette for a Queen of Spain to be blessed with a baby. Queen Christina has always been deprived of this pleasure, which she has never had, but Isabella has done, and begged hard to be allowed to do so, but it was not considered to be "the thing," and she had to give her up with a tech to a monastery. Of course so swarthy and dark that they called her in the palace "La African." When Sagasta proposed that the baby King to all whom she wanted him in a large hall, next to the one in which the ball was received, in a remote corner of the shed. Nothing had been arranged for her, and she carried the baby to its mother, saying, "Kiss your King." Mrs. Sagasta was a little out of her long food line, and said with her eyes full of tears: "If anything compensates my sons I descended to the Palace on Sunday.

The two little Princesses Mercedes and Teresa were delighted to have a little brother, and said to Sagasta, "Papa, you had said sum him." They were quite satisfied that the baby King had been born dead. The little girls wanted the baby and the new "sum" to share their pretty apartments, but this could not be allowed, and it was decided that the baby should be kept in a room by itself, and another pretty room should be prepared for the new "sum" to share with his sisters. The baby King is a healthy little boy, dark, and showed strength by crying loudly during his christening, which, by the Princesses Sagasta's discomfort.

The baby's wardrobe is very simple. He even uses many little things which his sisters have worn, and the new King is a healthy baby. His is very fond of his sisters, and they are very fond of the baby. Only had been thrown in with business abandoned—all earthly interest merged in the dying friend, beside whose pillow I watched so anxiously. When the news came that he was delirious, I could have wept for joy.

"Only had been thrown in with business abandoned—all earthly interest merged in the dying friend, beside whose pillow I watched so anxiously. When the news came that he was delirious, I could have wept for joy.

A CATHOLIC TRAINING COLLEGE.

A Notable Institution Conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame

The visit recently paid by Sir Lyon Playfair, Vice President of the Council of Education, to the Training College conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, Liverpool, says the Liverpool Catholic Times, whose public attention to the working of the most successful institution of its kind in the United Kingdom. The Sisters of Notre Dame have acquired distinction in duchess, and in the training of teachers, for they were eminently qualified to undertake it. Possessing knowledge on the effect of a mere surface instruction, but if solid practical education, they were thoroughly conversant with the details of an almost boundless experience of teaching. When, therefore, on being introduced into Liverpool, they entered on their important duties they gave by their system of education the assurance that they would win success by earning it. The fruits of their labors have been amply fulfilled. In the students who presented themselves to the visitors found good material for the exercise of their talents, and the result has been that they have reaped the fruit of their labor by placing their college in a position distinctly superior to all competitors. Illustrated the second of the competitive examinations in which their students have been simply a list of triumphs, and the marvellous accuracy of the college has been the admiration of the leading educational authorities of the country. Since the passing of the Education Act in 1870, the building was extended so as to meet increased requirements, and it now contains accommodation for about one hundred and twenty pupils and a very attractive. In the enlarged sphere the good work in which the Sisters of Notre Dame are engaged has increased with wisdom and well directed energy. Since 1850 as many as 1,400 students have been educated in the college, and of these some are now teaching in public elementary schools, some are in private or present in residence and going through a course of training, and others with the view of preparing to take out certificates as assistants. Schools.

THE TRAINING COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME was founded in 1850, fourteen years before the passing of the Education Act. At that time there was no Catholic Training College for a school-teacher. The only means open at Hammersmith had existed since 1840 under the direction of the Fathers de Rodes Oblonnesses. The first examination Queen's Scholarship attended by female Catholic pupil teachers was held at Mount Pleasant under H. M. Inspector, Mr. Wickham, in 1853. Since that time most of the successful candidates were educated at Liverpool, while a few attended a temporary training school opened by the Sisters of Mercy at Nottingham. Very soon after the work was taken up by the Sisters of the Holy Child at St. Leonard's, and in 1855 the Sisters were two Training Colleges sending out teachers, the Nottingham and the Sisters at St. Leonard's closed their college after a successful and honorable career of nearly eight years. The system of payment by results, then introduced, offered a strong prize for students in training, as well as those fulfilment activity. The Sisters of Notre Dame were not the first additional on the success of the students as shown by the Government reports of H. M. Inspectors on their schools.

The Sisters were not the only of the College to be supplied without reference to the pupil teachers' home, which in the case of Catholics, is the Catholic boarding, for the excitement which is had on the subject. Developed a hard, diseased, which made some very difficult needed to be upon the high road to recognition.

All that time I had never left him, day or night. Study had been thrown aside, and business abandoned—all earthly interest merged in the dying friend, beside whose pillow I watched so anxiously. When the news came that he was delirious, I could have wept for joy.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N.Y.

OUR CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

St. Gertrude's Academy, Mission Visits.

RIO VISTA, Cal., June 28, 1896.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Among the many religious institutions for the dissemination of learning throughout the Archdiocese of San Francisco, the Academy of Mount Rose better adapted to the purpose, the healthiest, the most beautiful and the most commodious of the Catholic institutions of this State. The tenth annual commencement of the young ladies and boys attending this school in the Academy hall on Wednesday last was a very pleasant affair, and beautifully and tastefully decorated, the pillars and walls were directly from the woods and groves, and whilst the paintings in oil and water-colors, crayon drawings and painted albums gave to the whole the appearance of a fairy land. The exhibition was held by the pupils of the school, and well were numerous samples of their needlework, drawing, painting and music work. In the spelling school the pupils were that Mr. Gartrelle is a school of age as well as a literary institution. The hall was thronged to overflowing long before the hour set for commencement. Prominent among the friends and patrons of the institution might be seen many of the leading citizens of the Archdiocese, the following Congress were present: Hon. Thomas Nally and Sheridan (Oakland), Lynch, P. J. Sullivan, Sacramento, Sullivan, Sacramento, Sullivan, Sacramento,

THE MONITOR.
PARTY LINE TIME OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30, 1886.

BISHOP MANOGUE'S APPEAL
—TO—
His Priests and People,
FOR IRELAND.

DEAREST BELOVED BROTHERS—We have been so often called upon to alleviate the distress of Ireland, and as often we have, according to our limited means and resources, responded to the distressing appeal. Sometimes we have individually, and sometimes more or less, collectively responded. We have continually indulged the hope that through Divine Providence a bright and cheerful day would soon dawn for Ireland, and that such painful and periodical appeals to the charitable for her distressed children would forever cease.

The dark and sombre clouds which for centuries have overshadowed that fair and beautiful Island, and held its struggling children in despondence and despair, seem at last disposed to brighten and disperse, and are now hovering about without stability or centralization. May God grant it to be so!

Even in this disorganization there are many and powerful elements to be encouraged. Opulence, ease, astuteness and bigotry; regal hereditary titles and attachments, and landlordism, are erecting their strongholds and barricades against freedom's paths and aspirations. Let us now in freedom's name, and in the name of oppressed and suffering humanity, cheerfully give our mite to offset this mighty, engrossing and unjust opposition. A final struggle is now approaching, the aspirations of liberty-loving people remarked in our ears, the future weal or woe of Ireland may be in our hands, and decided by our magnanimity. Coercion, persecution, and even extermination, have for centuries had their full scope and sway. They have failed. The children of St. Patrick are not only living but full of hope and joyful expectation.

Queen Elizabeth's Viceroy, in his message to his royal sovereign, said, "Your Majesty will soon have nothing in Ireland to reign over but ashes and dead bodies."

Precisions has preserved this people against all the efforts of a powerful government, against barbarous oppression and savage cruelty. Make one more effort, dear Priests and People, for these noble children struggling for their homes and freedom, for their liberty and the inalienable rights of man. In every important undertaking success requires system. That this most serious object may not be aimless, and that it will be fail disposed to give a helping hand may be assured of proper action and satisfaction, we exhort you to send your Archbishop to Rev. Father Dalton, Grass Valley, Nevada County, Cal. He will hand them over to me, and I shall forward them to the proper centre where they will be duly, properly and publicly acknowledged. This should be done within a month from date.

We should not forget the NATION's aim, that will entitle us to have our name enrolled on the list of freedom's children, and emblazoned on the glorious escutcheon of liberty.

✠ PATRICK MANOGUE,
BISHOP OF GRASS VALLEY.

Grass Valley, June 26, 1886.

Ireland's Last Chance!

The elections for Members of Parliament to represent the various constituencies in England, Ireland and Scotland, will commence on next Monday—the 5th prox.—and will end on or about the 15th of July, at which time Ireland's fate will be sealed, and, if Gladstone and Parnell are defeated, Coercion—of the most rigorous character will be inaugurated, and Ireland will be made to suffer five sorrows at the hands of her bitterest British foes. Money is required to help in electing national candidates who are too poor to pay the heavy election expenses entailed upon those who aspire to take up Erin's cause against the English aristocracy, the Irish Shoneens, and the Ulster Orangemen. Are you willing to help the lady cause of Ireland now? If you are, do not wait until it is too late, but send your donation by mail, express or private hands to the MONITOR, and we will gratefully acknowledge it and turn it over to Messrs. Donohoe, Kelly & Co., to be added to other sums contributed for the same cause, and edited to Parnell for election purposes. Delays are always dangerous, but in this crisis, when the life or death of Ireland is in the balance, he who hesitates is mistaken, and he who refuses commits a crime against the true spirit of liberty-preaching which should prevail in the breast of every man over whose head floats the star-decked banner of Liberty.

☞ In the contest which Ireland's Parliamentary party have now to meet, they need money. Such help in America, whose citizens and sympathizers can, with due respect for their obligations as such, give to the good cause of human freedom, which long ago Washington and his associates championed here, will, we are assured, be generously and freely given.

—It is stated that T. P. O'Connor, Nationalist Member of Parliament for the Scotland Yard Division of Liverpool, will take no active election contest the borough of Cockermouth, England, now represented by R. U. Pearson-Fitzgerald, Conservative, who was elected by a majority of 106 in a total poll of 5,564.

☞ The glorious victory or the distinct defeat of Gladstone and Parnell is now in the hands of the Irish race in America. If they are prepared to work as they have done, defeat is certain and all we have already gained in this political conflict will be entirely lost—and lost for ever!

☞ Letter-writers who love Ireland will lend more her struggles for freedom, by forming small committees of two or three in every town on the road and collecting funds before July 15th. Send each and lists of names to the NATION, also names of collecting committees, and all will be duly acknowledged.

Editorial Notes.

—The Ascension Day on the new Archbishop of Cologne, Mgr. Krementz, and the Auxiliary Bishop Hoeter, continued no less than 3,100 school children in four churches on that day. This was the first occasion for ten years that the Sacrament of Confirmation had been administered in the Archdiocese.

☞ Help Ireland to gain Home Rule, and your duty to apply the remedy for all Irish grievances.

—Monsignor Lavigerie, and Cardinal Lavigerie, and Cousaugh particularly, seems to have soured on the stomach of our secular press. The Cardinal's exuberant zeal, seems to be regarded as a great crime. Perhaps the Prince Primate's exuberanty

Farm and Home.

Raisin-Making.

This promises to be one of the leading industries of Tulare county, and as it is one peculiarly adapted for small farms, of ten to twenty acres, a few figures concerning the expense and profits of the business will be given. The average income per acre in California is to be $100 net, and 20 per acre has been realized in several instances, under exceptional advantages. The following estimates were prepared by C. M. Blowers, an experienced raisin-grower living near Orangeville:

"The plant from such vine three years old will be 20 pounds; vines four years old, 30 pounds each. With 435 vines to the acre this gives a total yield of 12,600 pounds from young vines, or nearly 7 tons. It is calculated that three tons of grapes will make one of raisins—and allowing for loss in every way, there would be two tons of raisins per acre. The total cost of producing raisins, counting expenses of packing in twenty-pound boxes, is about $100 per ton. This includes cost of cultivation, pruning, picking, cutting, packing, boxes, crates, sweat boxes, building, implements, etc. The price at which raisins sell is usually $4 50 per twenty-pound box. A yield of two tons per acre would give 200 boxes, valued to $900 to $400. Deduct from this $200, the cost growing the grapes and preparing the raisins, and there is a balance of $100 to $200. Take from this last-named sum the cost of hauling, freight, commission, etc., and large profit is still left. The estimate is based on the cost in large quantities. Fancy raisins may always be disposed of readily to advantage.

Coin in Cabbage.

There is much said about the money making in oranges, lemons and grapes in Los Angeles, but the Chinamen are supposed to be making more money out of common plebeian cabbages than any orange grower or vignaron in the country. There is an enormous demand for cabbage for shipment to the East. This food runs at the full from January to April inclusive, but there is more or less of this demand at all seasons of the year. The supply is at all times less than the demand, and the only way of regulating the price is the San Francisco market. Commission men and shippers have to send to that city to fill their Eastern orders, but they pay a little more for the home product, than for that supplied at San Francisco. The Los Angeles cabbage is greatly preferred by the Eastern dealers, hence our northerners would rather fill their orders at home, even if it costs them a little more.

The price at present is $1 50 per hundred or $30 a ton. In this climate there is no trouble to grow two crops of cabbage per year. Big Dreamond hands will weigh fifteen to twenty pounds each and the smaller, more compact sorts preferred for shipping will certainly average all of five pounds each. They are planted about two feet apart, which will give 10,000 to the acre. This is twenty-five less to the crop or fifty tons a year, of an acre of good ground. The gross results of such a crop are $1,500 an acre. It is not probable that, even with white labor, the cure of the two crops would cost more than $500, leaving a net profit of $1000 an acre. It is said that some of the Chinese make this sum.

Cauliflower will pay as well if not better than cabbage. It is not shipped in quantity for the simple reason that it is not to be had. In small lots it has been sent as far as Omaha, and it has gone there in perfect condition. It is said that Visk of Rochester, New York, had an immense patch of cauliflower caught in the frost-zone in Florida last winter, where he has grown it for some years past for the New York market. He is the only one studying up Southern California as a field for a similar enterprise.—Los Angeles Herald.

A Young Wife's Expenses.

One frequent cause of trouble in married life is a want of openness in business matters. A husband marries a pretty, thoughtless girl, who has been used to taking no more thought as to how she should be properly clothed than the lilies of the field. He honors her not liking to refuse any of her requests. He will not hint, so long as he can help it, at sure to trifling expenses—he does not like to associate himself in her mind with disappointments and self denials. And she, who would have been willing enough, in the beginning, to deprive herself of her girlish love, to give up any whims or fancies of mere extravagance, and have herself injured when at last, a remonstrance comes. How much wiser would have been perfect openness in the beginning!

"We have just so much money to spend this summer. Now, shall we arrange matters thus or thus?" was the question I heard a very young husband ask his still younger bride, not long ago, and all the womanhood in her answered to his demand upon it, and her help at planning and economizing proved not a thing to be dampened, though hitherto she had "fed upon the roses and lain among the lillies of life." I am speaking of marriages where two true hearts have set out together, for weal or woe, to learn the lessons of life, and to live together till death shall part them. And one of the first lessons for them to learn is to trust each other entirely. The most frivolous girl of all "the received garden of girls," if she truly loves, acquires something of womanliness from her love, and is ready to plan and help and make her small sacrifice for the general good. Try her, and you will see.

A Chicken Ranch.

Mr. Fred McPherson, one mile from Grangeville, is engaged in the raising of fowls on a large scale with great success. He has two incubators, known as "perpetuals," each of which has a capacity of 800 eggs. As incubation progresses the eggs pass from the portion of the hatcher in which they were first placed to the opposite side by regular stages, and are ready to hatch when reaching that side. Every time a hatch or setting hatches an equal number is placed in the hatcher at the side where the first were put in, and go through the same process. Mr. McPherson has a place well suited for the business and has everything admirably arranged. He raises ducks, turkeys and chickens commercially, and proposes to increase the capacity of the hennery to 10,000 fowls each month. Where all the conditions are favorable this business, with good management, may be made remunerative, and one who gives it the care and attention devoted to it by Mr. McPherson should certainly succeed.—Tuolumne Index.

To Waterproof Cloth.

Dissolve in 6 gallons of soft water 1 lb. of alum and the same of sugar of lead; stir it well, and let it stand for two days, then draw off the clear liquid, and put the stock into the tub, letting it stay there for 24 hours. Another way, which is not injurious to air, but it is as to water: Make a solution of isinglass, alum, and soap, and apply it to the wrong side of the cloth with a brush when dry, brush it again on the wrong side against the grain. When this is dry brush it again with cold water.

Family Fun.

Ben Le Fevre and the Cow.

Ben Le Fevre, the member from the Fifth Ohio district, has managed to retain a seat in Congress for the past seven or eight years upon the hypothesis of being a farmer. I have heard a good story on Ben, illustrative of his lack of farming knowledge. Ben had bargained for a blooded cow at the sum of $200, and as the drover was driving her to Ben's farm to deliver and get his money, he met a gentleman who admired the animal and asked the whole show for sale. The drover replied that she was not sold to someone in Pomeroy, $200. The gentleman replied that if any means could be devised to make Ben run the bargain he would give $50 for her. The drover, anxious to make $50, cudgeled his brain, and, remembering the limited extent of Leferre's knowledge of farm animals, hit upon an expedient. He took the cow to Ben's house, where she was duly and admiringly paraded to an assemblage of friends gathered for that purpose. "Come in and get your money," said Ben. "General," said the drover, "I am a good Democrat and your constituent, and want to deal fairly by you. The cow is all she is represented to be, thoroughbred and a good milker, but I am compelled to state that she is not exactly perfect."

"Why, what is the matter with her, sorrel or bay?"

"Well, the fact is," replied the drover, "she has no upper front teeth."

"Great heavens!" ejaculated the Congressman farmer. "No upper front teeth! That won't do at all, and I don't want her; in fact, I would not take her for a gift. Suit, you shall not lose anything. Here is a five dollar bill for your trouble in driving her here and back."

"All right," replied the drover as he pocketed the V. "I don't want to take advantage of you, General, so good bye." And away he went and sold the cow to the gentleman, clearing just $55 by the transaction. Imagine Big Ben's chagrin when it leaked out, and he learned that no well-regulated cow ever had any upper front teeth.

The Value of Knowing How.

While Judge Tracy was on the circuit, going from court, his trace broke. The judge spent an hour trying it fix it, but to no purpose. His patience was exhausted, and he expressed his vexation in words. A negro came along, and the judge told him of his difficulty. The negro let out the trace, put a hole in it, and the job was done.

"Why," said the judge, "could I not have thought of that?"

"Well, massuh," said the negro, "don't you know that some folks is just naturally smarter than some other folks?"

"That's so," said the judge. "What shall I pay you for my trace?"

"Wah, massuh, fifty cents will do," replied the negro.

"Fifty cents!" said the judge. "You were not five minutes at it!"

"I don ketch charge you fifty cents for doing it," said the negro. "I charge you twenty-five cents for doing it, and twenty-five cents for knowing how to do it."

He Must Go.

There is a postmaster in a village not 50 miles from Detroit who has got to go. Some of the patrons of the office went to the city yesterday to see about it. They want to load up an "ordinary gentleman" in shackles and fire it off at him from a distance of ten feet. Said one of the committee:—

"For one thing, he's so high-toned that he will no longer look at his neighbors. Another is, don't seem to care whether we get any letters or not. The other day I went in and asked him if there was a letter for me.

"'No,' says he.

"'Look pretty hard,' says I.

"'I know there isn't,' says he.

"'But it's from my brother William, and his children have got the measles. I know there's a letter here, for I dreamed of it last night.'

"'Nothing for you,' he says.

"'Don't you look?' says I.

"'I know there isn't,' says he.

"'But it's from my brother William, and his children have got the measles. I know there's a letter here, for I dreamed of it last night.'

"'Nothing for you,' he says.

"'Don't you look?' says I.

"'I know there isn't,' says he.

"'But it's from my brother William, and his children have got the measles. I know there's a letter here, for I dreamed of it last night.'

"'Nothing for you,' he says.

"'Don't you look?' says I.

"'I know there isn't,' says he."

"Not a bad way to get rid of a man who is a fool and a nuisance, is it?"

"Why, no, I guess it is."

"Well, we shall do it."

"Do you think it will be right?"

"Right? Why, of course it will be right. I know a very young husband who still yonger bride, not long ago, and all the womanhood in her answered to his demand upon it, and her help at planning and economizing proved not a thing to be dampened, though hitherto she had "fed upon the roses and lain among the lillies of life." I am speaking of marriages where two true hearts have set out together, for weal or woe, to learn the lessons of life, and to live together till death shall part them. And one of the first lessons for them to learn is to trust each other entirely. The most frivolous girl of all "the received garden of girls," if she truly loves, acquires something of womanliness from her love, and is ready to plan and help and make her small sacrifice for the general good. Try her, and you will see."

A Chicken Ranch.

Mr. Fred McPherson, one mile from Grangeville, is engaged in the raising of fowls on a large scale with great success. He has two incubators, known as "perpetuals," each of which has a capacity of 800 eggs. As incubation progresses the eggs pass from the portion of the hatcher in which they were first placed to the opposite side by regular stages, and are ready to hatch when reaching that side. Every time a hatch or setting hatches an equal number is placed in the hatcher at the side where the first were put in, and go through the same process. Mr. McPherson has a place well suited for the business and has everything admirably arranged. He raises ducks, turkeys and chickens commercially, and proposes to increase the capacity of the hennery to 10,000 fowls each month. Where all the conditions are favorable this business, with good management, may be made remunerative, and one who gives it the care and attention devoted to it by Mr. McPherson should certainly succeed.—Tuolumne Index.

To Waterproof Cloth.

Dissolve in 6 gallons of soft water 1 lb. of alum and the same of sugar of lead; stir it well, and let it stand for two days, then draw off the clear liquid, and put the stock into the tub, letting it stay there for 24 hours. Another way, which is not injurious to air, but it is as to water: Make a solution of isinglass, alum, and soap, and apply it to the wrong side of the cloth with a brush when dry, brush it again on the wrong side against the grain. When this is dry brush it again with cold water.

D. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Recommended as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Loss of Appetite, Nervous Prostration and Nervous Disorders of Both Sexes. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

CARROLL & TILTON, Respectfully announce that they have opened THE LARGE STORE, 873 Market Street, —WITH A LINE OF— GENT'S ^ BOY'S CLOTHING, Furnishing Goods, HATS, CAPS, ETC. Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented. We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible. CARROLL & TILTON, 873 Market Street, Opp. Powell, And also with JONES & CO.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL! MRS. K. McGRUDER, FASHIONABLE MILLINER, Has Removed from 811 Market St. to 226 SIXTH STREET, Bet. Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, —Importers and Dealers in— BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTURERS OF Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags. 512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE. The Occidental Self-Endowment Association. (Incorporated under the laws of California.) This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $3,000 and $10,000, which are payable to the equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members legates.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the custodians of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates will find due first as part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $13,000.00. All claims are paid promptly and in full. Agents wanted everywhere. Address, W. H. WARD, Secretary, Room 26, Flood Building, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver REMEDY. 806 Market St., S. F. BRANCH.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY PRINCIPAL OFFICE, 648 MARKET STREET BRANCH, 1156 MARKET ST. LIVE AND LET LIVE. LAUNDRY. 1128 St., bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

Splendid Set of Teeth, only $5. AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 966 Market Street.

JOHN B. McINTYRE, Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer, 26 CLAY AND 48 COMMERCIAL STS. San Francisco. Bibles, Magazines and Periodicals bound to any style desired. Fine binders a specialty.

I Want Destitute Tuberculosis to supply the demand for my Cure. Sent Free. Address, T. A. SLOCUM, 183 Pearl St., New York. Correspondence solicited. The Tuberculosis Cure. Sent Free. Address, T. A. SLOCUM, 183 Pearl St., New York. Manhattan Beach Hotel, real estate and general building agent.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA. THE LIVER. Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to remove impurities of the blood. Buy it regularly in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile pours into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, nausea, bilious diarrhea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms, yet only temporary troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood purifier. DYSPEPSIA. Formula appetite, faint, gnawing feeling of a void in the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth are symptoms of dyspepsia, yet there is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an unhealthy or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is renowned for curing the blood, tones up the digestive organs and relief is achieved at once. KIDNEYS. Are the secretory organs of the body. Into and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids from living processes matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is all once restored. SCROFULA. Is a peculiar morbid condition of the blood, lists and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids from living processes matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is all once restored. THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE. The lack of sufficient nourishment furnished to the system through the blood, usually effecting the glandular system, causes stiff joints, stiffness, sores, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Erysipelas is liable to and is often mistaken for Scrofula so it is important to distinguish the same carefully. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA purifying the blood and toning up the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels. KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

Our Young Folks.

Monitor Mystics.

How a Lazy Boy Became a Great Saint.

Saint Anscarius lost his mother when he was only five years old. He was sent to a convent school, but he was a lazy boy, he would not learn his lessons nor obey the teachers who had charge of him. He was too fond of play, and spent his time in amusing himself and in distracting his companions, instead of learning his lessons. He might have grown up to manhood in the way, if God had not checked him by means of a dream. It is true we must not believe in dreams, but sometimes even dreams may teach us a good lesson.

One day at school, Anscarius fell asleep over his books, and as he slept he dreamed that he was going through a field which was soft and mossy and that he could scarcely walk, because at every step he took his feet sank deeper into the mire and became all covered with mud. Along the side of the field was a splendid road, and he saw on the one side of it, full of beautiful trees and neat smelling flowers. Turning into that road, he thought he saw our Blessed Lady, surrounded by a multitude of holy women dressed in white, and amongst them he behold his own dear mother.

His heart was filled with joy when he saw her and he tried to run at once and throw himself into her arms, but he could not move from the spot where he stood, because his feet were fixed so firmly in the ground. He stretched out his arms towards her and tried to entreate himself, but all his words were in vain. Our Blessed Lady then said to him, "My child, if you wish to come to me, and be with your mother in heaven, you must become a better boy than this. Your mother wishes to be diligent and pious, and you must do everything your superiors tell you to do, for in doing that you will serve God, and those who serve God on earth will one day see Him in heaven."

When Anscarius awoke he saw that he had been dreaming, but the dream seemed to be always before his mind. Now that day he became a better boy. In a very short time he was at the head of his class, and none of his companions were ever able to get above him.

His masters wondered how this sudden change had been brought about, and how one who had given so much trouble had become all at once so good and obedient. But the boy kept his secret to himself, and kept on one; it was not long afterwards, when he became an apostle that they knew of the dream he had had, and the firm resolution taken in consequence on it.

Remembering he now saint in Paradise, he can be become a pious boy in school. If we imitate the good example he has given us we shall also one day share with him his eternal happiness.

St. Aloysius Gonzaga.

St. Aloysius, the oldest son of Ferdinand Gonzaga, Marquis of Castiglione, was born on the 9th of March, 1568. The first word he pronounced were Jesus and Mary. At the age of five he commenced his life by being to God, by a vow of perpetual chastity. His first Communion was made in the hands of St. Charles Borromeo. At seven years of age he received Confirmation, and in a vision was directed by our Blessed Lady to the Society of Jesus, and he ever afterwards relied on learning his resolve, but his father for three years refused his consent. At length, on the feast of the Assumption, in the thirteenth year of his age, he received the habit of the Society of Jesus, and went through the ordinary course of philosophy and theology. During his last year of theology a malignant fever broke out in Rome. Offering himself for the service of the sick, in nursing the plague-stricken, he caught it, and he died on the 21st of June, 1591, in the 23rd year of his age. He died in the 23rd year of his age. He was canonized by our Blessed Lady, and his feast is celebrated on the 21st of June, 1591, representative of his, however humble, is bound to be received with open arms when he comes back to our shores. But, odds Cousins! it does be a special duty, inasmuch as you are, as a branch of the hierarchy of the Church to which he has been pleased to elevate me.

THE CARDINAL'S HAT.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

Though you may be perhaps a stranger to me, I am sure I know you well by reputation. I have long made that whenever you go over this broad land you will receive that warm friendship characteristic of the Irishman at home, and when you return to your sunny Italy you will be able to tell the Holy Father how much he is venerated in this land of the free.

When the Cardinal finished speaking, all the clergy present approached and kissed his ring and received the ecclesiastical salutation. When the congratulations were over, Mgr. Straniero, who bears the biretta to be imposed on the new Cardinal on this day, entered the room and was formally introduced to his eminence. The presence of the bearer of the biretta in the house was not supposed to be known to the Cardinal but until he had received the conclave, which really makes the receiver a Cardinal.

The ambassadors from Rome, together with a large number of invited guests, dined at the archiepiscopal palace immediately after the formalities were concluded.

Correspondence.

We urgently solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast, particularly the Interior, relating to the Church or the spread of the Faith.

All communications should be addressed to Box 1860, San Francisco, or to Island Station.

OUR LOS ANGELES LETTER.

Catholic Affairs in the Southern Section of the State.—A Prosperous College.—Catholic Education, Etc., Etc.

LOS ANGELES, June 21, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—One of the strongest impulses of the human heart is a reliance desire to communicate the pleasant news of joy to its fellow-beings, especially when their interests are so bound up in the joyous news that it is calculated by public use, practically paint the enthusiasm and joy naturally felt of those to whom they are communicated. This is the sublime source of the motives which prompt us to communicate to the personal readers of the "Grand old Monitor" our joyous impressions of the triumphs and prosperity attendant on the progress of Catholic religion in this city. Among the many pleasant things the advance of Catholic religion and its the head of the most noted, most and most enlightened Catholic College in the educational institutions, during the past year, has been a marvelous one. The many efforts found expression, although in the extreme of our feeling, and the enthusiastic press, compared with the glorious efforts now in the deep, the press, made unanimously unknown, even from the most unanimously unknown, even from the most and popularities sung, are the most, which impulsively, in the most and popularities sung, are the most, which impulsively, in the most and popularities sung, are the most, which impulsively, in

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE DISCONTENTED ROSE.

[I POEM WITH A MORAL.]

The rose in the valley was smiling fair,
Blushing sweet in the morning sky;
Among its leaflets bear the wild bee flew
Singing the honey among the dew,
Brightly the morning sun shone down
O'er mother and child and the cliff-bound town,
And gaily blessed the rose so sweet,
As it raised its head its blue to meet.
Yet, still the rose was not content,
And murmured and wondered why it was sent
To smile unseen and unbeloved there,
Amid the wilderness of the desert air.

Instead of growing some lofty lady's bower,
To dazzling, inside some regal hall
Still the sun kept shining down
O'er meadow and field and far off town.
Till near the noon of that summer day,
A youth came gaily tripping that way
He espied the sweet and lonely flower,
And said it was fit for his lady's bower;
He plucked the rose from its mossy bed,
And joyfully back to his home he sped.
"Here, sweet lady, is a rose I wean,
As fair as any that ever was seen
The lady smiled as he placed the flower
Then said he, "Stay in a golden tower,
Or meadow and field and far off town,
To wear it that night on her bosom so white,
Along diamond-sparkling river and height
But when she called for the same so rare,
And the rose had blossomed on the morning air,
She found it withered and hanging its head,
Its leaves curled up and nearly dead.
With dainty fingers from her casement high,
She flung it down and—the rose died.
And hoarded at the leaves all scattered around
Lay dying and dying on the ground.
"Oh, why did I not content?" it said,
"But now, alas, it is too late,
With shelter and food I have sent my fate;
Then it trembling wept and softly died,
For from its home on the valley side,
Its then tears from the rose to be content,
Among shade and dew and the sun's heat,
Cheerfully take for its the Father's lot
The station in life that He command.

FRANCES QUINN.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

GET UP JOHN, LAZY PAT SIT DOWN.

[AN IRISH SONG FOR THE SEASON.]

On Irish soil, the tyrant's coil
Is victim tightly press,
Through Johnny Bull, poor Pat is full
Of grief and sore distress.
Ah! England's ache be healed
Have gained her sad remorse;
But soon she will feel the sly
Get up John, let Pat sit down.

CHORUS.

Every pation to her station,
While we shall sing
Right out night, should win the fight,
Get up John, Pat sit down.

Oh, Englishmen, will whimper when
Their mighty navy fail,
Against its stalls—confusion's rife
To still the dread alarm;
Much time is spent, in Parliament,
On Ireland by the crown;
"But I know well," cries stanch Parnell,
"Get up John, Pat sit down."

Chorus.

In every land where freemen stand,
Linked by our right,
They have good cause to bless the laws
Which make a man Quakers light
Property is what they are
Yet make not either crowned;
And they sing that song—for right, not wrong,
Get up John, let Pat sit down.

Chorus.

In days of yore, or every shore,
No tyrants bore the crown!
For honor was strong and life made wear long,
The normal lords to down.
"Neath Columbia's fair sky," we cry loud,
Which has our triumphant flows,
Wave the banner of freedom, so
Get up John, Pat sit down.

Chorus.

JOHN P. HOGTOWN.

June 24, 1886.

Literary Miscellany.

The Golden Cross.

A Story of Adventure in the Civil War.

About the beginning of the late war, a man born on neighboring farm, and became prominent in one of the wildest and most thinly-populated parts of a Southern State. He was in the business of a dealer in wood, and not far from a deadly and treacherous swamp. He lived in a rude cabin. He was known by the name of Hogan. He was a man of a robust constitution, and was not subject to fatigue, and no habitation appeared in sight. Dismounting, he led his horse by the bridle and tried in vain to discover by the sense of touch the road he should follow.

"I must find some shelter for the night," he said. "The people hereabouts have not a very good reputation; but I am not afraid of men, and I do fear swamp fever and scorpions. I'll call; there may be some one within hearing." On this he sent up a shout that rented his lungs to be in good condition, and followed it by another and another. After the third he paused and listened. A faint "hallo" seemed to echo his, and in a moment more there appeared among the trees the figure of an old man who held a lantern in one hand and shaded his eyes with the other.

"Who is that?" cried this personage one of the boys?

"A stranger," said the traveller. "I'm lost in this confounded place. Can you tell me where I can get shelter?

"Why, are you, and where do you come from?

"I came from farther north; travelling on business; my name is Hogan. I can pay for anything I ask, and shall be thankful, too."

"All right. Come along. My house ain't far off." And turning he hobbled away into the darkness.

The traveller put his hand upon the pie tol at his belt and followed him. A few steps forward and such a dense mass of foliage they made their way to the door of a hut. Within, a fire burnt upon a rude hearth. Over it a girl crouched, idly looking into the embers.

"That's my darter," said the old man, "we're all alone here, and it's a poor place, and you're welcome. Walk in! We see your horse is cared for."

The girl looked up sharply, and looked down again with a flush on her face. The old man drew a broken chair toward the blaze and lit a pine torch.

"A fire is comfortable these damp nights if it is warm," he said. "Make some coffee an sub-cake for us, Nannie. The gentleman's hungry, no doubt."

"I confess I am," said Hogan, taking the proffered chair. "And I do not know what I should have done to-night without your hospitality."

Meanwhile, the girl, a handsome creature of seventeen, lightly prepared a meal. She moved about as if she did not do her work badly. The coffee smelt well, and the sub-cake was brown.

When it was done she sat apart and watched the man as they ate, and listened to the old man's questions and the stranger's answers.

Afterwards she spread upon the floor a bed of straw and a blanket, and glided out of the room.

"I hope you'll sleep well," said the old man. "Good night, sir."

"Good-night," said Hogan, but he thought at the same time—

"You seem to be a very hospitable old gentleman, but you have the face of a rascal."

Throwing off his coat, he stretched himself upon the bed, and in five minutes found himself fast sinking into slumber. The pine torch flickered on the wall, the embers died out in the grate, then suddenly a hand rested on his arm and a voice whispered in his ear—

"Stranger, I've got something to tell you."

Hogan started up. The girl knelt beside him, with her finger on her lip.

"Hist up," she said, "and put on your coat. The sooner you off the better. The old man had when he said I was his daughter; he has gone for the boys. He said I was just mine." I've found out his business. He must have plenty of money with him. And I know what that means. There will be four of them here in half an hour, and you are a dead man, if you don't go now."

Hogan started to his feet. Sidelond in his belt were several thousand dollars, and he remembered that he had chattered away most indiscreetly, favoring the old man

[illegible]

"I'm a fool, he muttered, twisting to his feet. "This is no stiff joke, I'm afraid."

"Hush truth," said the girl. "I've seen nights that would make you more than fools you're doing now if you had seen them. These get your horse and come. I'll show you which way to take. They'll kill me if they suspect me; but I return I'll warn them off. Come."

As in a dream, Hogan followed her. She led him by the hand through a thick wood until they came to a wide opening.

"Mind," she said, "ride that way. Make all the speed you can. I've done all I can to save your life, Jack Hogan."

"Did bless you" said he. "You know my name. I see. If that time should come when I can do as much for you, I will."

"Perhaps," she said doubtfully.

"Yes, Jack, and more, my child, if I dare. I dare a man don't forget in a hurry—listen! I swear that I never did—anything you ought to forgive. Good-bye, child, and—God bless you!"

"I'm a fool," he muttered, as he rode on. "Not a bad one, I don't forget in a hurry—listen! I swear that I never did—anything you ought to forgive. Good-bye, child, and—God bless you!"

"I came from farther north; travelling on business; my name is Hogan. I can pay for anything I ask, and shall be thankful, too."

"All right. Come along. My house ain't far off." And turning he hobbled away into the darkness.

The traveller put his hand upon the pistol at his belt and followed him. A few steps forward and such a dense mass of foliage they made their way to the door of a hut. Within, a fire burnt upon a rude hearth. Over it a girl crouched, idly looking into the embers.

"That's my darter," said the old man, "we're all alone here, and it's a poor place, and you're welcome. Walk in! We see your horse is cared for."

The girl looked up sharply, and looked down again with a flush on her face. The old man drew a broken chair toward the blaze and lit a pine torch.

"A fire is comfortable these damp nights if it is warm," he said. "Make some coffee an sub-cake for us, Nannie. The gentleman's hungry, no doubt."

"I confess I am," said Hogan, taking the proffered chair. "And I do not know what I should have done to-night without your hospitality."

Meanwhile, the girl, a handsome creature of seventeen, lightly prepared a meal. She moved about as if she did not do her work badly. The coffee smelt well, and the sub-cake was brown.

When it was done she sat apart and watched the man as they ate, and listened to the old man's questions and the stranger's answers.

Afterwards she spread upon the floor a bed of straw and a blanket, and glided out of the room.

"I hope you'll sleep well," said the old man. "Good-night, sir."

"Good-night," said Hogan, but he thought at the same time—

"You seem to be a very hospitable old gentleman, but you have the face of a rascal."

Throwing off his coat, he stretched himself upon the bed, and in five minutes found himself fast sinking into slumber. The pine torch flickered on the wall, the embers died out in the grate, then suddenly a hand

[illegible]

Then she departed.

When she was gone he tore to pieces the letter he had written. Write on another page these words:

"My darling—When you read these lines I shall be dead. It is very hard to leave you. Remember

"JACK HOGAN."

I must see this spy," he said to the sentry, who saluted and led him to a dense wood, and not far from a deadly and treacherous swamp. He lie down to rest, would have been simply foolish. To get his warm with fatigue, and no habitation appeared in sight. Dismounting, he led his horse by the bridle and tried in vain to discover by the sense of touch the road he should follow.

"I must find some shelter for the night," he said. "The people hereabouts have not a very good reputation; but I am not afraid of men, and I do fear swamp fever and scorpions. I'll call; there may be some one within hearing." On this he sent up a shout that rented his lungs to be in good condition, and followed it by another and another. After the third he paused and listened. A faint "hallo" seemed to echo his, and in a moment more there appeared among the trees the figure of an old man who held a lantern in one hand and shaded his eyes with the other.

"Who is that?" cried this personage one of the boys?

"A stranger," said the traveller. "I'm lost in this confounded place. Can you tell me where I can get shelter?

"Why, are you, and where do you come from?

"I came from farther north; travelling on business; my name is Hogan. I can pay for anything I ask, and shall be thankful, too."

"All right. Come along. My house ain't far off." And turning he hobbled away into the darkness.

The traveller put his hand upon the pistol at his belt and followed him. A few steps forward and such a dense mass of foliage they made their way to the door of a hut. Within, a fire burnt upon a rude hearth. Over it a girl crouched, idly looking into the embers.

"That's my darter," said the old man, "we're all alone here, and it's a poor place, and you're welcome. Walk in! We see your horse is cared for."

The girl looked up sharply, and looked down again with a flush on her face. The old man drew a broken chair toward the blaze and lit a pine torch.

"A fire is comfortable these damp nights if it is warm," he said. "Make some coffee an sub-cake for us, Nannie. The gentleman's hungry, no doubt."

"I confess I am," said Hogan, taking the proffered chair. "And I do not know what I should have done to-night without your hospitality."

Meanwhile, the girl, a handsome creature of seventeen, lightly prepared a meal. She moved about as if she did not do her work badly. The coffee smelt well, and the sub-cake was brown.

When it was done she sat apart and watched the man as they ate, and listened to the old man's questions and the stranger's answers.

Afterwards she spread upon the floor a bed of straw and a blanket, and glided out of the room.

"I hope you'll sleep well," said the old man. "Good-night, sir."

"Good-night," said Hogan, but he thought at the same time—

"You seem to be a very hospitable old gentleman, but you have the face of a rascal."

Throwing off his coat, he stretched himself upon the bed, and in five minutes found himself fast sinking into slumber. The pine torch flickered on the wall, the embers died out in the grate, then suddenly a hand

"CONVENIENT CATHOLICS."

They Rush to Have their Beats with as Little Trouble as Possible

We have in this city, and doubtless in every city, a class of church members to whom the above title fitly applies. They go to Mass at the nearest church, generally, because it is "convenient," even though the language in which the instructions are given and the sermon preached may be that which they do not understand. But, then, it may be, that this is also a very great "convenience" to that individual who is ignorant of the knowledge of their duty. As they never attend the church to which by law and custom or intending they should belong, they escape other responsibilities and inconveniences. They never take part in the work of keeping up the schools, relieving the poor, and many other demands on their time. They rent no pew, are unknown to their pastor or the workers in the parish, don't "belong to the parish" whole church attended, and, can tell the "pastor" nothing financially, since they escape paying anything; and as they don't understand the language in which they attend Mass, the "money talk," they so much dread, does not annoy their conscience a bit. They approach the Sacraments but are "always strangers" to the priest, and they like it very well. They go to Confession in one church and receive Communion in another. They have a very convenient way of doing as they please, go to space, and practice their religious duties "convenient," whether their pastor or sacristan. They may send their children to the parish schools, but they never do so. They don't know it, indeed he is not aware of their existence in his parish; they don't keep the feasts and fasts of the Church, because they are ignorant of them; they never inquire about the labor and cost of maintaining churches and schools because they know nothing about it. They which are grass practice is assumed up in attending Mass and occasionally, in a sort of a dodge, dealing say, receiving the Sacraments. Of course, they have confidence may be "squirted" and ring from those as adjunction of their conscience and refuse absolution, they get over (?) that by going to some other confessor "as inquisitive, conceal the fact that I have sinned, and go about in their conversation way.

This is, indeed, a very convenient and cheap way of practicing religion, but one which is very, instead of the requirements of the Church, or have a very elastic conscience to bring some self to consider that it is a proper or sufficient compliance with duty. Every Catholic has duties and obligations to discharge, every other peculiar his avocation or condition in life. The Church is not only the custodian and teacher of the faith, but the authority and guide of her children in the observance of the law. Willful ignorance of the law is no immunity from its observance, and ignoring the opportunities for a knowledge of the law is willful ignorance. It spect for authority is a fundamental principle of all duty, and every Catholic is bound to respect the authority of his pastor. The support of church and pastor, the sending of children to the parish schools and maintenance of those schools, observance of feasts and fasts, and attendance at Mass are some of the duties, with all church regulations, are binding upon every Catholic. A non-compliance or disobedience of them is sin, and that "conscientiousness" Catholics violate all duty, and they do it deliberately. The mode of prescribing their religion is very convenient. It is so easy. It relieves them so much trouble. But is it not a mockery, and a great source of scandal to their neighbors? And what of their children brought up under such example of sharp practice and convenient ways of discharging sacred duties? Are the likely to have much respect for a religion that leads lightly of Well they have a proper regard for justice the proper training of their children in all these things. Every one is responsible for the example of his companions as well as for the example of his conscience as well as misdeeds to others. We fear that our "convenient Catholics" will have much to answer for under his head, in addition to their own guilt of shirking their duty.—Catholic Citizen.

TO CATHOLIC YOUNG MEN.

How to Shun a Degrading Danger.

There is no one thing that does more to demoralize not only boys but grown men, than the habit of frequenting the saloon. A man goes into a saloon, thinking he will take a glass of beer, which of itself will do him no harm, but there Tom and Dick and Harry and Jack have just sat down to a game of cards, and they invite him to join. Dick drinks with Tom, and then you want to go, but Jack says, "Pull out up again, and you don't want to offend Dick, so you pull out again. Now you have taken as much as you intended to, and you feel mad at yourself. You would give anything to go, but Harry says the boys have gone drunk with him, and you worry down another, and you feel as though you were a beer wagon. Then Jack wants to show you how to shuffle the pasteboards, and he puts down on the table, and the boys stand up, and you feel as though drink half of yours and you feel as though you were the biggest fool of the country; but they have all treated example, you to go away now would look small and mean. You would rather give a dollar than pay another slug of beer down under your vest, and you say, "Let's have some cigars, boys." The cigars are brought, you light one and feel as though crazy puff was going to raise then two quarts of beer slopping around in the pit of your stomach, and you finally go out of the saloon with tangled legs, distasted mind, sick stomach and feel as if you wanted to meet yourself. You went into the saloon to spend a nickel, and you spend from fifty cents to a dollar, and instead of enjoying yourself, as you thought you would when you went in, you made a fool of yourself. If, when you went in, and they invited you to sit down, you had said: "No, boys, I am in a hurry, and take this one glass," they would have said it was all right, and maybe they would have been glad that you did not stay. Perhaps they invited you simply from force of habit, or were "sizing you up."

The best way for a young man is to make a rule and stick to it, never to treat or be treated. If you want a glass of beer, go and buy it and pay for it, and go alone your business. If you want a cigar, buy it and pay for it. Do not get into the habit of smoking cigars unless you can afford it, and do not take a cigar with every fellow who asks you to join him. If you do, you'll have to pay for the compliment some other time but if you stop receiving such courtesies, you can easily stop granting them. At first the boys will think you are economizing, and they will laugh at you; in a year they will respect you, and in two years they will admire you, and will ask you how you manage to get through so nicely on a small salary. A firm, "No, thank you," when asked to accept a treat, will do it all, and instead of outsiders saying of you, "He is a good fellow, but poor pay," they will be glad to meet you and talk with you and say, "There is a fellow that will some day fill his place in the world." And when the spendthrifts have lost their money, these same fellows that have thought you small potatoes because you would not join a round of drinks will say, "I'll bet you'll be a loan, and say they always knew you had a good start in you, and when you refuse unless they can show up collateral, they will be offended, but they will respect your business habits all the more.

To sum up: You have a little brain power, thrifty that you will not last or intoxicated, and if you drink or smoke when you feel like it, and then pay for it yourself. Then you will save money, respect yourself, and will not lose the respect of any person you have reason to care about.

THE TRUE DOCTRINE.

The Catholic Minority on the Labor Question

We observe, says Editor Dwyer of the New York Sun, that the Roman Catholic Bishops who discuss the labor question are decidedly conservative. They are conservatives in the Church, and conservatives in the Church, and conservatives in the Church, and

THE MONITOR.
TRUE TABLET OF THE PEOPLE.
WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

—The Colorado Catholic states that the failure of the Propagande to name a coadjutor for that vicariate has caused much disappointment out here. Fathers Riordan, of Chicago, Mate of Denver, and Howlett, of Central, are said to be the persons selected for the place.

—Parnell says the Irish in England hold the balance of power in fifty constituencies. If that is true there is little doubt of Gladstone's return with a tremendous majority. In the meantime, however, let every Irishman and every friend of Ireland in America—both sect and party—pray for a Home Rule Parliament for the Irish people.

☞ Don't wait to call a meeting, but appoint yourself a activiting committee to raise funds to aid Gladstone and Parnell in their fight against the enemies of Home Rule.

—Rev. Wiley K. Wright, a Presbyterian minister of Mishawaka, Ind., writes of Bishop Gilmour's address at the "Congress of Catholics," held lately at Cleveland, O: "I have read the address with great pleasure, and, I believe, with great profit. I heartily endorse the sentiments in it. It seems to be a note of warning which ought in some way be thundered in the ears of the American people."

☞ We will acknowledge in our columns the receipt of any sum of money, from ten cents up, sent to aid the Irish party in the coming campaign.

—Of the 408 Senators, Members and Territorial Delegates who compose Congress 72 are Methodists, 63 Baptists, 41 Episcopalians, 37 Presbyterians, 36 Catholics, 35 Unitarians, 8 Lutherans, 10 Christians, (Campbellites), and 2 Quakers, making a total of 253 who are strictly connected with some church organization. This leaves 125 who either never belonged to any church or who have drifted out of such association.

☞ This is possibly the "last call" Parnell's Parliamentary Party will ever make, as if the elections go against Gladstone, Ireland will again become a corpse on the dissecting table of England, and the budget of Tory coercion will be driven into the helpless victim.

—The Court jeweller of the Vatican is at work on the precious crown of rubies, sapphires, etc., bearing the arms of Pacci, which the Pope intends to send as a present to Alphonso XIII. The new Spanish baby was born a king—the first time such a thing has happened in the history of this country. Queen Christina has three children—Princess Marie de las Mercedes, born 1880; Princess Maria Theresa, born November, 1882, and the present infant.

—During the last few weeks of its approaching dissolution the San Francisco directed several of its dying kicks at the Catholic Church and Catholics of Irish birth. But in doing this it only hastened its own death, and we are glad to record the fact that San Francisco is no longer degraced by the presence of a paper whose outside appearance was respectable but whose interior was filled with rottenness and corruption. Thus may all such enemies perish!

☞ This is the "last call" for funds to help Parnell. Remember! Now or never; Now and For Ever!

☞ No more "pawning the hat" for Irish distress if Home Rule is once won at. He gives twice who gives quickly. Hurrah to the Manitou and cut that your own and your neighbor's subscription are acknowledged.

—Bishop Hendrickson's will, which is dated January 4, 1883, bequeaths the testator's pectoral cross, episcopal chain and ring to the Roman Catholic museum, at Cassoy, Ireland; $500 for Masses for the repose of his soul; all his personal estate to the corporation of Sts. Peter and Paul's church, and the residue of his estate to the Very Rev. Michael McCabe, of Woonsocket, R. I., to hold in trust until the appointment and confirmation of the testator's successor. Very Rev. Michael McCabe, Rev. Dr. M. A. Wallace and Rev. Henry F. Kinnersy are appointed executors.

☞ Help Ireland to gain Home Rule and you help to apply the remedy for all Irish grievances.

—Money is going forward to Parnell every day, and we are glad of it. Money just now is the power that will make English monarchy march out of Ireland. If Parnell had sufficient funds eight months ago, he might have secured ten or a dozen more Nationalist members in Ireland in places where Tories or Conservatives were returned. Thus, for instance, Mr. Sexton lost the Western Division of Belfast by only 36 votes; Justin McCarthy ran only 70 votes behind in Londonderry, and John Dillon lost the North Division of Tyrone by only a couple of hundred votes. An effort is now on foot to make to carry these three seats as well as several other seats in Ulster where the anti-Nationalist candidates won but by small majorities, and for this purpose every man who sympathizes with Ireland in her present struggle should send in his subscription at once.

☞ Why so poor as not to help a nation struggling for freedom? England lost America through Ireland, let us now return the compliment by helping Ireland, to achieve Home Rule through the aid of American dollars and cents.

—The death of the well-known "Old Catholic," Professor Michelis, at Freiburg, is one calculated to inspire awe at the sudden judgments of God. He had public notice to accept a Catholic paper for having published the Papal Encyclical, Inter prudens, "because it contained a libel upon the Old Catholics." He lost the case in course. About four o'clock on one of the last afternoons of May, the unhappy man took his usual walk on the Schlossberg, entered one of the wine gardens, and called for a small measure of wine. A few minutes later three gentlemen came to the same spot, and were horrified to see Michelis stretched lifeless on the ground. Death had struck him as he was in the act of raising the glass to his lips. It is related that the brother of the deceased, Eduard—in his day a well-known writer, poet, professor and chaplain to the illustrious Archbishop of Cologne, Clement Augustus—used to say, "My brother Fritz will become either a saint or a barber."

—In the short interval of a week his Eminence the Cardinal Vicar of Rome has officiated at the solemn laying of the corner-stones of two new churches about to be built in the Esquiline City. The first edifice is a church to be dedicated under the title of St. Joseph, attached to the Monastery of the Giuseppino or Sisters of St. Joseph of Chambéry, situated at the Urti Sallustiani, former Villa Massimo, in Via S. Nicolo in Tolentino; the second church is that belonging to the Ladies of the Perpetual Adoration and Work of the Tabernacle, an institute founded in Belgium by the Countess de Mesus, their present Superior-on General who, forced to leave their former residence in Villa Strozzi, have purchased a portion of the Villa Patrizi on the Via Nomentana, where they propose to erect a fitting convent, whilst a wealthy lady is benefactor will assume the cause of the erection of a handsome Gothic church to be known as the Corpus Domini, the consecrator of which was laid with due ceremony last month, and the institution placed under the patronage of Our Lady of Good Counsel. The church, in facade of which will front the Via Nomentana, a few hundred paces without Porta Pia, is building under the superintendence of a young French architect named Villain.

Ireland's Fight for Freedom.

There never was a brighter outlook for the attainment of Home Rule than that indicated by the political prospects of Ireland in the present elections throughout Great Britain and in Ireland itself. All signs point to a glorious victory for Gladstone, and that will assuredly lead to a joyful Parliamentary victory for Parnell. But, whether Mr. Gladstone wins or loses the battle to be fought through the ballot-box, the voice of the people throughout the United Kingdom has demonstrated to the fact that Home Rule principles have taken deep root in the minds of Queen Victoria's subjects, and it is bound to become an accomplished fact not only in Ireland but also in every other country where it does not at present exist—before the dawn of the twentieth century.

The change which has occurred in the minds of the English and Scotch people regarding the political rights of their Irish neighbors, is almost miraculous. It must, indeed, have been a merciful and a just Providence which raised up the most enlightened statesman in England, and the most exalted English official—to plead the cause of Ireland before a populace who detested him to the echo, but whose past enmity towards Erin has led them time and again to cry out "Cruelty here! Cruelty here!"

Home Rule may be deferred but it can never be destroyed. Its principles are those of Christianity and civilization combined, and, with the sympathy of the whole world in Ireland's favor, it is as sure to be given to God's Green Isle, as the sunlight of heaven is certain to illumine the earth.

But, on the other hand, should victory not perch on the banner of the Irish Parliamentary Party in the present conflict, the friends of Ireland must act give up the fight, but rather harder their strength for the purpose of renewing the fight some day when opportunity offers. The fire of Irish patriotism never dies. It may light as on to glorious victory or to disastrous defeat, but in either case every true patriot will feel that the cause itself is of heaven born; and, that its ultimate triumph is in the hands of Him who chastenetb those whom He loveth.

Ireland has been tried in the crucible of persecution the most revolting, injustice the most injurious, and tyranny the most inhuman. Yet, after centuries of misery and sorrow she is loved by people of every land under heaven with a love only second to the most sacred love of a child for its parent. Smiles, sneers, and sympathetic words have poured down on her from time; prayers and good wishes for her freedom resounded throughout the world, and she—the Niobe of Nations—is greeted as a second Venus rising from the sea.

England—on the other hand—that has ruthlessly avenged the Irish people, is everywhere execrated by those beyond her borders, and condemned at home before the public gaze even by her own Prime Minister! Assuredly such an "open confession" as that made by Mr. Gladstone during the recent Home Rule debate, is enough to satisfy any rational man that England's rule in Ireland has been upon a scale of ruthless barbarity never equalled—much less excelled—by any tyrannical power from the days of Pagan Emperors down to the times of thrice accursed Cromwell.

It is to put an end for ever to England's detrimental and disgraceful course towards Ireland that money is needed now, and we hope that the old spirit of patriotism will inspire the friends of Ireland all over the world to give

"A long pull and a strong pull,
And a pull all together."

in order to hand down the foreign foe emblematic of despotism in Ireland, and to raise up the green immortal banner of national liberty over a land whose sons have been in the vanguard of Liberty's soldiers throughout the world.

Departure of Bishop Mora.

Right Rev. Francis Mora, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, left this morning for Rome. He is accompanied by Rev. Martin Marron, as his secretary and chaplain. The party went by the Central Pacific route and will stop at Omaha on Sunday. If time permits, Bishop Mora will visit Baltimore and pay his respects to Cardinal Gibbons. While in Europe the Bishop will visit his native land, Spain, and place of note in France and Italy. Father Marron hopes to be able to see a little of Ireland during his trip. We wish the party low voyage and a safe return home

Pixley's Perversion of a Plain Historical Fact.

It was nearly fourteen hundred years after the birth of Christ before there was any such thing as a Cardinal.—Argonaut.

The putative parent of the foregoing perversion of truth, is egregiously in error as usual. It seems to be just as impossible for Pixley to tell the truth upon any matter connected with the Catholic Church or Irish questions, as it is for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle.

The word "Cardinal" is derived from the Latin Cardo, a hinge, implying one on whom a system or an undertaking depends and turns. The term "Cardinal," as applied to ecclesiastics, has existed in the Church since the year 100, when Pope Evaristus organized parishes in Rome and the chief priest of each church was known as the priests' cardinalis, or, the cardinal priest. There are dedicated just thirteen churches from the Argonaut's abecinable falsehood.

Cardinal deacons have existed in the Church since the era of St. Fabian, Pope, about the year 240. In the year 769, during the Pontificate of Pope Stephen IV., it was decreed that no person could be elected Pope who had not previously been a cardinal priest or deacon. This Ecclesiastical law was promulgated nearly 700 years previous to Pixley's curiosity on history, as it had been the custom in the Church from the time St.

Even as early as the year of our Lord 1059, ecclesiastical history informs us of the fact that the College of Cardinals in Rome then comprised 53 members, viz., seven Cardinal Bishops, twenty-eight Cardinal priests, and eighteen Cardinal Deacons. Hence the Church has a Sacred College of Cardinals fully four hundred years before the time designated by the fraudulent figure of fanatical Frank.

If the history-perverting Pixley had given this important subject a second sober thought, he would have seen at a glance what an ignoramus he made of himself by the assertion which we give above. As true Englishman, and an admirer of everything English, he must have heard better informed men than himself speak of Magna Charta, which the Catholic Barons of England wrung from King John at Runnymede. This exact occurred June 15th, 1215, and in the very first ten lines of the Magna Charta document itself, we read the name of "Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church." This important historical event occurred nearly two hundred years prior to the period set by Pixley when "there was any such thing as a Cardinal."

We site these facts in order to show all intelligent people how perversely Pixley can falsify even in the presence of historical statistics which are as plain as the nose on a Hebrew face! But the unfortunate crank is so filled with bile, bilingsgate, blustor and bigotry that he rants in falsehoods every fact that has any bearing upon the Catholic Church. He does and dapes his readers every week with misleading information calculated to fill them with the foulest entrails, and all this he does because he derives his inspiration from the Father of Lies.

In olden times men were known to be possessed of devils, and the same law holds good to-day concerning all people like Pixley who willfully, wantonly and deliberately print untruths against the Catholic Church for the sole purpose of tradicing her character and misleading the reading public into the same slime-filled cotter in which they themselves wallow.

The Bible cautions us regarding the fate of those who are foolish enough to follow the lead of a blind man, because both tumble into the ditch, and bigotry has so blinded Pixley, and his many blasphemers have so covered his soul with sin, that he has become a veritable leper—a leper whose every breath is laden with death, and whose presence poisons the very atmosphere surrounding him.

It is due, however, to a decent reading public that it should be cautioned against the wanton lies of such a libeler, lest it becomes incumbent on us to occasionally use our "whip of scorpions" in order to scourge fanatical Frank for disseminating his public gem matters concerning which there can be no two opinions, but which he purposely and viciously misrepresents and misstates. We have learned against the Holy Church which proclaims the glory of that Creator he would gladly have reviled and blasphemed had he been among the ruffianly rabble who insulted, mocked, scourged and put to death the Son of that Creator as he hung on a cross with an intensity which typifies his infernal origin.

The Power and Province of Parish Schools.

No pastor ever feels satisfied with his labors until he has the children of his parish in a school where moral training as well as intellectual culture is given. To secure Christian education to the youth of his flock is a work dear to the heart of every true Shepherd. He knows that the men and women of the future are the boys and girls of to-day, and that they will become noble, God-fearing Christians only by enlightening their minds with Christian truths and inspiring their hearts with a love of Christian morality.

Even if the secular writer had not commended Christian schools to bring up the child "in the way he should go," experience would have convinced us of the necessity of doing so. Hence it is that the Catholic Church, knowing the importance of Christian training, has, at all times, made children the object of special care. Her pastors have ever been zealous for the education of youth, and although, in many instances, unable, for a time, to establish schools, they have not failed to do so, even at great personal sacrifice, when a favorable opportunity presented itself.

In this Archdiocese much is being done for Catholic education. The many convents flourishing in our midst have established parochial schools for their daughters in the care of Sisters of numerous Orders—teachers as efficient as they are zealous—thereby securing to them the advantages of an education truly Christian.

Equal facilities were not afforded for the education of boys, and parents were compelled by the force of circumstances to send their sons to public schools. But the dawn of a brighter day is breaking. Parish schools are now being rapidly established. Already many are in operation, and the happiest results are anticipated.

Zealous and energetic as have been the endeavors of the pastors and people throughout the Archdiocese to establish parochial schools, Oakland is the only place thus far in this diocese supplied with them. Every parish in our sister city—with the exception of St. Francis de Sales which has such has its parish schools. The girls of each parish are under the care of the devoted Sisters and the boys under the direction of the Brothers of the Christian schools.

Rev. Father Sorin, the zealous pastor of Sacred Heart Church, Temescal, has left nothing undone to secure a similar blessing for the children of his parish. A convent school has been in operation there for years, but the devoted pastor would not rest content until a school for boys should bless his parish. At last his desire has been realized. A magnificent school for boys, with teachers residence, attached, has arisen in the vicinity of Sacred Heart Church. It is a building of which a Christian pastor, filled with zeal for the spiritual welfare of his flock, may be proud of. It has five class rooms, all large, lightsome and well ventilated, every modern improvement having been called into requisition to make the Sacred Heart school all that could be desired from a sanitary standpoint. A large playground is essential to the health of the youths, and with its sheds and water supply, shows how thoughtfully this school has been planned. It is but simple truth to say that there is no better appointed school in California. The Brothers of the Christian Schools will take charge of this establishment. They will be installed there to-day, and will begin school on next Monday morning.

It is a consummation devoutly to be hoped for, that the people of every parish not already provided with Catholic schools may so assist their zealous pastors that this great want may soon be supplied. The parish school is indispensable. The child receives there not only that Christian culture—devoid of which the educated man is little better than an educated animal—but, moreover, a good practical business training. The higher branches, the sciences and the languages, are taught in the column of a well conducted parish school. To introduce such studies would mar the efficiency of such an institution. It would be to give a solid, practical education—one that will fit the student for the struggles of life, the course of study should be confined to the end. Reading, writing, spelling, geography, arithmetic and grammar are the branches upon which the success of a parish school should lay particular stress. Let the pupil know these subjects—not by rote merely, but intelligently, and practically when the nature of the study will permit—and the parochial school will have effectually accomplished its work.

That, at all times, is a consummation to be desired, but it is especially so at this period. With such knowledge for a foundation to can, if the opportunity is afforded, perfect himself later in those branches the knowledge of which constitutes what is called a polite education. That the studies to which we have referred are those that should be taught in parish schools, we will deny. The greatest educators in the land insist upon these, practical business and practical ideas, as being the most important. The Brothers of the Christian Schools, with the accumulated experience of two centuries, have thrown forth the most results are obtained in parish schools, since the majority of the pupils leaving their care have to depend at school, cannot apply themselves advantageously to many studies, hence the necessity of devoting their time to essential matters only. From this it must not be inferred that the Brothers disregard the higher branches; but they believe in having every thing in its proper place.

According to their system, the pupil, having successfully completed the course mapped out for the parish school, is prepared, when circumstances permit, to pursue a higher course in an academy or college. Thus Sacred Heart School at Temescal, and we feel confident that the blessings it has so abundantly showered on other lands will be copiously shed upon our own beautiful California.

All the Glory of the Dominican Order is Due to the Rosary.

The Dominican Order owes the very beld that its members now wear to the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary, for when Blessed Reginald was laboring under an infirmity which in the order of nature was about to prove fatal to him, as the physicians attending him announced, the Most Blessed Virgin accompanied by two other virgins appeared corporally to him, and with her own most pure hands administered to him, as a sacred Viaticum Unction. She anointed him with oil brought from Heaven, on the eyes, ears, nostrils, lips, hands and feet. When the companions who did not yet know what had happened, admonished him to prepare for his last struggle by the reception of the Sacrament of Extreme Unction, he replied to them: "I await with joy the conflict, for the Mother of Mercy in whom I place all my confidence has already anointed me." After that the Most Holy Mother of God announced to him that he would become perfectly well very soon, imparted many favors to him, bade him to enter the Order of St. Dominic, and showed him the habit that is now worn in the Order, saying to him: "Ecce habitus Ordinis tuo." Reginald hold the habit of the Order which it is my duty and pleasure to bring to the child "in the way he should go," experience would have convinced us of the necessity of doing so. Hence it is that the Catholic Church, knowing the importance of Christian training, has, at all times, made children the object of special care. Her pastors have ever been zealous for the education of youth, and although, in many instances, unable, for a time, to establish schools, they have not failed to do so, even at great personal sacrifice, when a favorable opportunity presented itself.

In this Archdiocese much is being done for Catholic education. The many convents flourishing in our midst have established parochial schools for their daughters in the care of Sisters of numerous Orders—teachers as efficient as they are zealous—thereby securing to them the advantages of an education truly Christian.

Equal facilities were not afforded for the

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1886.

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION.

The Devotion of the "Forty Hours Adoration" will be held in the following Places at the Time Designated for Each:

SUNDAY—SIXTH ANNIVERSARY.

CHURCHES.	PLACES.	DATES.
Corpus Christi	South San Francisco	Fourth
Holy Cross	San Francisco	Fifth
St. Mary's	San Francisco	Sixth
Spanish	San Francisco	Seventh
St. Vincent's Asylum	San Rafael	Eighth
St. Dominic's	San Francisco	Ninth
St. Alphonsus	Suisun	Tenth
SUNDAY—SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY.
St. Vincent's	Vallejo	Twelfth
St. Brendan's	San Francisco	Thirteenth
St. Leander's	San Leandro	Fourteenth
St. Teresa's	San Francisco	Fifteenth
St. Patrick's	San Jose	Sixteenth
Bolinas	San Rafael	Seventeenth
St. Matthew's	San Mateo	Eighteenth
St. Mary's Hospital	San Francisco	Nineteenth
Sacred Heart	Temescal	Twentieth
Presentation Convent	Powell st.	Twenty-first
Mission	San Pablo	Twenty-second
Alameda Asylum	Alameda	Twenty-third
St. Rose	Sacramento	Twenty-fourth

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

12—Monday—St. Veronica, Widow.
13—Tuesday—St. Anacletus, Pope and Martyr.
14—Wednesday—St. Bonaventure, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor of the Church.
15—Thursday—St. Henry, Emperor of Germany, Confessor.
16—Friday—Our Lady of Mount Carmel.
17—Saturday—St. Alexius, Confessor.

MONTH'S MIND FOR FATHER HARTY.

There will be a Requiem High Mass at St. Teresa's Church, Potrero, on Thursday next, at 10 o'clock, for the repose of the soul of the late Rev. F. Harty.

MISSION AND LECTURE AT ST. ROSE'S.

The mission at St. Rose's Church was a great spiritual success and Father Prendergast's lecture, Rev. Father Cook will lecture at St. Rose's Church on Sunday next, July 11, at 8 p. m., for the benefit of the schools of the parish.

REDEMPTORIST MISSION AT ST BRIDE'S.

On next Sunday, at 10:30 a. m. the Redemptorist Fathers will open a mission at St. Teresa's Church, Potrero, and will be glad to see all those Fathers can give to the parish the year, it would be well for every Catholic in the parish attend it regularly.

HOME RULE MEETING IN OAKLAND

To-morrow (Thursday) evening, at Temperance Pavilion, John P. Irish, A. T. Rankin, and other distinguished speakers will address a Home Rule meeting, under the auspices of the Home Rule for Ireland, at the Park Theatre.

REDEMPTORIST MISSION NEXT SUNDAY.

The Mission at St. Peter's new church, Alabama Street, between 24th and 25th, will open next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. The opening sermon will be delivered by Rev Father Cook. All persons who have not received a ticket and desire to attend, as this will be the last in this city during the present year.

PROCLAIMING THE DECREES.

On last Monday there was a meeting of all the Brothers of the Northern province of the Christian Brothers at the Mission Dolores. Bishop Mora promulgated the Decrees of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, the action having been previously taken for the Southern portion of the Diocese.

GRATEFUL THANKS FOR GENEROUS CONTRIBUTIONS.

On the part of Rev. Fathers Barnabas and Louis the Monks of the Holy Sepulchre, grateful thanks are tendered to the Ladies for their kindness and generosity in the spiritual support of the Holy Sepulchre, and for the generous contribution of the Catholic of St. Bridget's parish are now in the Holy Land, and have received from the hands of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, the Custodian of the Holy Sepulchre, and the Superior of the Franciscans, the Holy Land, the Holy Sepulchre, the Holy Cross, the Holy Crib, the Holy Sepulchre, the Holy Cross, the Holy Crib, the Holy Sepulchre, the Holy Cross, the Holy Crib

Farm and Home.

Sending Fruit East.

The fruit lately shipped East from this station by the California Fruit Union has fully demonstrated the fact that there is an unlimited market for our choicest fruit. Not only this, but another very important thing has been learned, and that is how to ship fruit East. This is alleaning rapidly in this branch of the fruit business, and the more experienced the Fruit Union has in shipping fruit East the more perfect they will understand every point of the business, and in a few seasons it will be as easy as rolling off a log to ship fruit across the Rockies. The time of shipping strawberries East brought from $1 25 to $1 75 chest, and this currants and also at from $1 to $1 50 per crate of twenty pounds. It seems that the people in Chicago and elsewhere have not yet learned to fully appreciate our luscious currants, but we are satisfied that in a short time they will be happy for them. The unsettled condition of business East, caused by the labor strikes, and later followed by the threats of the anarchists, Herr Most and others, has completely knocked business in the head, but of late things are better, and there is every hope that the old time demand for our fruit will appear.—Rural California.

A Famous Orchard.

The oldest orange orchard on the Pacific Coast is the Wolfskill orchard, located on Alameda street, Los Angeles. It consists now of nearly 10,000 trees, but only about 2,000 of these are very old. The first trees in this orchard were planted by William Wolfskill, in 1841, and they are now giantic in size and produce from eight to ten barrels of oranges each per year, and at times this orchard has yielded an income of $1,200 to $1,500 an acre per year. The soil is a rich, sandy loam, and it is treated in a peculiar way by Mr. J. W. Wolfskill, the present owner. Instead of plowing for new for irrigating streams, says the Rural Californian, he floods the entire surface of the land with a stream of nearly 200 inches of water, one row at a time, except a strip some three feet wide ridged up a little, in the center of which the trees stand. The water never touches the trunk of the tree. The land is nearly level and it requires nearly an hour for the stream to run across a twenty-acre orchard, and it is turned off as soon as it reaches the last tree. This irrigation is given about every six weeks and the land is plowed after each irrigation. Mr. Alex. Crow, who has charge of this famous orchard, says that the trees seem to do very much better under the system of deep culture than by any other which they have tried, and the magnificence of the trees and the abundance of the crop both attest the success of orange culture under the Wolfskill method.

Don't Undervalue the Bay.

The following sound reasoning we find in the American Agriculturist. It would be a benefit to both fathers and their sons if its precepts were more often regarded.

Too many men make boys feel that they are of little or no account while they are boys. Lay a responsibility on a boy, and he will meet it in a manful spirit. On no account ignore their disposition to investigate. Help them to understand things. Encourage them to know what they are about. We are too apt to treat a boy's seeking after knowledge as mere idle curiosity. "Don't ask questions" is poor advice to boys. If you do not satisfy inquiring things to them, you oblige them to make many experiments before they find out and through experimental knowledge is best in one sense, in another it is not, for that which we learn by bitter dearly-bought experiment sticks. If the principle involved is understood, there is no further trouble, and the boy can go about intelligently.

Do not wait for the boy to grow up before you begin to treat him as an equal. A proper amount of confidence, and words of encouragement and advice, and giving him to understand that you trust him in many ways, helps to make a man of him long before he is a man in either stature or years.

The Boston Journal of Commerce also makes a good suggestion to parents apropos to the above.

Give him heels, says the writer, and let him find out for himself whether he has got any mechanical taste or not. Do not discourage him, as parents are apt to do, by saying: "Oh, it is no use for you to try to do anything with tools. I never had any taste that way, and of course you have not." If a boy finds he can make a few articles with his hand, it tends to make him rely on himself. And the planning that is necessary for the execution of the work is a discipline and an education of great value to him. The future vulture and happiness of his boy depends on the surroundings of his youth. When he arrives at that period in his life when he is obliged to choose what profession or what line of business to follow, it highly important that he should take no false step. And if in his youth he has cultivated a taste for any particular branch, the choice of a profession or business will be made more easy.

A Special Fruit Train.

It is an event in the history of California that to day was inaugurated the shipment of California fruit to the East by special freight train sent through on passenger train time. The rate for a car taken by a passenger train is $600, but this price per car, when fifteen are taken by fast freight train is $300 per car, which makes a very material difference to growers and shippers. This afternoon such a train was sent out by W. Strouse & Co. and Edwin T. Earl, both of this city and members of the Fruit Growers' Association. Eight cars were loaded by the firm first-named and seven by Earl, the shippers having bought the fruit outright. The cargo consisted of fruit outright. The cargo consisted of plums, peaches, apricots, a car and a half of vegetables, 150 boxes of oranges and the first Bartlett pears of the season. The pears were grown mostly in Sacramento County. The fruit arrived here yesterday and to-day from points in Solano, Yolo, Sacramento and adjacent sections, and, in consequence, 100 men have been kept very busy during the last twenty-four hours packing and loading the rich products of California's glorious. Omaha will be the distributing point of the cars, which will go in all directions.

SACRAMENTO, June 22.—The shipment weighed 150 tons, and was raised at 875,000. The engine and cars were beautifully decorated with flags. The train was photographed before leaving, and as immense concourse of people witnessed its departure, inaugurating a new era in California fruit growing and shipping. The same firm, together with others of the Fruit-Growers' Association, will continue to dispatch similar trains twice each week, or oftener during the season.

—Three years ago, after a tornado had devastated the farm of a Georgia farmer, he found a ten-year-old boy among the shrubbery of his garden. No one claiming the waif, the farmer kept him and cared for him. Last summer the farmer took the boy with him into Mississippi, and then another tornado took the child, and he has never been heard of since.

—Plug's Remedy for Catarrh is agreeable to use. It is used in a snuff. 50c.

—"D-D-D" will cure Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

Family Fun.

Giving Her Census.

When the census taker rapped at the door of a certain cottage on Sutter street the other day, and wondered if the woman would set the dog on him or douse him with dish-water, a great disappointment awaited him. She opened the door softly, smiled the air to see if he smelled of lightning-rods, and threw it open for him to enter.

"Madam, I am making a census of the city," he began.

"Ah, sit down," she replied, and as he began opening his book, she continued:

"There are few of us in the family, and we paid one hundred dollars down on this place. My husband's name is Peter, his age is forty-two, and he earns from a mean family. His father was always having law suits about dogs, and his mother was the greatest gossip in Elmira. Have you got that down?"

"Ha, yaaa

HELP FOR HOME RULE!

San Francisco's Generous Golden Gift.

NEARLY SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS DONATED.

Funds Flowing in Like a Tidal Wave.

Great Enthusiasm for Erin's Cause.

The crowds of people who flocked to Metropolitan Hall last Thursday night, proved that the old spirit of patriotism still pervaded the breasts of the Irish people and that they were determined to stand by Parnell and Home Rule until the hope of martyred patriots had been realized and Ireland granted the right of self government.

Shortly after eight o'clock J. J. O'Brien of the Young Ireland Parliamentary Club, stepped forward and announced that nomination for order, when the spokesman had ceased he spoke as follows:

"In behalf of the Young Ireland Parliamentary Club I thank you for your presence and I thank you for your kindness in fully another of the many public enterprises we have met on this side of the Atlantic."

MAYOR SARTIN'S SPEECH.

He then introduced Hon. Washington Bartlett, Mayor of this city, who was received with great enthusiasm and hearty welcome. After a few other preliminary remarks he called upon the audience to read the list of Vice-Presidents. Several communications were then heard with gratification by the entirely attentive audience, and as the nominations were announced the name as of approval were very enthusiastic.

Letters of regret for absence and of sympathy for the cause of Home Rule were received from Hon. A. S. Hewitt, who enclosed the sum of $50; from Senator George Hearst who sent a donation of $100; and from C. O. Pond who declined to act as Vice-President.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

At his request the Secretary read the following list of Vice Presidents:

Hon. Geo. Stoneman, C. T. Rylands, Jas. Jose, W. H. Mullally, Dennis Ryan, Hon. E. C. Marshall, Louis Loughlin, Hon. A. L. Rhodes, Hon. Jas. Stanton, Hon. R. F. Morrison, John Dugan, Capt. J. Poett, Chas. Cronan, Hon. S. E. McKee, Hon. D. J. Oulahan, Hon. J. D. Phelps, Hon. J. P. Coghlan, Hon. Irwin Lawton, Hon. J. J. Ayers, Hon. T. H. Selby, Hon. E. McGinty, Gen. R. P. Hammond, Hon. J. K. Sharpstein, Hon. J. P. Jones, Hon. Thos. Fitch, Hon. M. H. Sullivan, Hon. W. H. Barber, Hon. W. J. Shafter, Hon. E. R. Sharon, Hon. J. S. Hager, Hon. E. R. Reeder, Hon. M. H. Beach, Hon. J. D. Phelan, Hon. J. K. Wilson, Hon. J. S. Spear, Hon. G. C. Perkins, Hon. J. P. Irish, Hon. M. G. O'Toole, Hon. J. Sullivan, Hon. J. F. Sullivan, Hon. J. Mandin, R. O'Donnell, J. F. Coffey, J. Maloney, Thos. Walsh, Myles D. Sweeney, W. H. Lacy, Hon. J. H. Stanley, Hon. J. Pedro, Hon. J. H. Dunphy, Hon. J. H. Dwyer, Hon. J. D. Ryan, Hon. J. K. Wilson, Hon. J. D. Ryan, Hon. J. J. Wilson, Hon. J. D. Ryan, Hon. J. J. Wilson, Hon. J. D. Ryan, Hon. J. J

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

THE MURDERER'S PRAYER.

Oh, Thou that dwelest above the angels shine,
In Heaven—sweet land of glory!
Hear, oh, hear this prayer of mine,
A wanderer's weary story.
Strengthen this heart, which has grown so cold,
This soul bowed down with sin,
Oh, bid my troubled heart be stilled—
Mother Mary hear my prayer!

Protect me from the snares of sin
Which lie in my path;
Protect me from the wicked one
And the avenging Wrath;
Pain, oh, turn this soul to thee,
From jeering dangers lair;
And Heaven's door open obtain for me
Mother Mary hear my prayer!

Guide my steps whe'er I stray
By lonely moonlight or
By busy noon-day crowds passing by,
Oh, Mother of Sorrows! from
Out the snare behind me
Keep me safe with care,
And let my heart thy dwelling be—
Mother Mary hear my prayer!

And when my days are drawing near
And Death shall claim its prey,
Be Thou my guardian angel near
Lest I with evil stray;
And when that solemn goal or hi
Whether on land or sea,
Be Thou my stay, my refuge still—
Mother Mary hear my prayer!

FRANCIS QUINN.

NO GOOD-NIGHT KISS.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Between a father and a little daughter.

At close of day to mother's arms
Came her little child with fears
"Do you were a naughty girl to-day,
Who would not do the right?
My little girl who can't say
I cannot kiss good-night!"

The little mouth, it trembled so;
The bright eye held a tear;
"I said, "I will not give kiss me, though,
In the morning, mamma, dear!"

"Yes, in the morning, when you call
A childish heart to pray,
She turned her fair face to the wall
And wept herself to sleep.

She woke not here: Death called her name,
To make in Heaven instead!
And when, at dawn, the mother came,
She found her darling dead.

O mother-heart! thy wrong confessed,
What is thine anguish now!
She slipped her dead face to her breast,
Kissed lips and eyes and brow.

Starting from her sleep, What can alone
Mothers, remember this,
Send no child to sleep by bed unknown
Without a good-night kiss.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Where, where are all the birds that sang
A hundred years ago?
The flower that all in beauty sprang
A hundred years ago?
The lips that smiled,
The eyes that wept
In fashion shone
Soft eyes now—
Where, oh, where are lips and eyes,
The joys and sorrows of our sires's sight,
That lived so long ago?

No people all the city street
A hundred years ago—
Who fill the church with focus meek
A hundred years ago—
The unerring tale
Of sister frail,
Of sister frail,
Of a brother's hurt,
Where, oh, where are glory and money,
The poor man's hopes, the rich man's fears,
That lived so long ago?

Where are the graves where dead men slept
A hundred years ago?
Who were they lay the living wept
A hundred years ago?
Yet where
Their bones are filled
Yet where their
Yet where their
Yet where their

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

— The municipal elections in Rome have resulted in a decisive victory for the Catholics.

—There is no truth in the assertion that the Pope has intimated to the Irish Hierarchy that they should abstain from "politics or party strife."

— It is stated, as the result of the recent elections in Belgium, that the Chamber, as newly constituted, will be composed of 86 Catholics and 65 Liberals.

— According to the Univers, the Pope is preparing an important document on the Labor question. It will probably see the light in the form of a letter addressed to an illustrious European Catholic.

— The German Press of all shades of opinion agree in stating that the enthronement of Mgr. Dinder at Posen assumed the character of an impudent manifestation of confidence in the new Archbishop.

— Gladstone told a startling truth when he remarked—in connection with the present election—that the great British quality "England will have to learn here, but slowly and painfully."

— The Workmen's Congress convened by the Socialist leaders at Brussels terminated with a public meeting, at which one of the speakers said—"To us belongs the State, with its laws and its powers. We will make of Belgium a people who will expel the priests, the exploiteurs, and everything else opprobrious and shameful." Such a "parallax" would smell of brimstone and Bradaubh!

— Through the kindness of many friends of the MONITOR and the numerous friends of Ireland of all nationalities, we were enabled to place one thousand five hundred dollars in the bank of Messrs. Donohoe, Kelly & Co., on Friday last for the Irish Parliamentary party. This amount—together with $3,500 from other sources—made up the $5,000 added to Mr. Parnell yesterday.

— A very interesting account of the attempted murder of the late Bishop Hendricken by brutal members of the Native American Party, will be found on the second page of this issue. It is of peculiar interest just now to ventilate the bloodthirsty demonstrations of such brutal bigots, as there are rumors of a revival of that disgraceful party among certain political aspirants who are too unpopular to be claimed by any respectable party.

— Citizens just returned from England say the Tories on the other side have been almost enough to one, with apparently good effect, the dynastic utterances of the irreconcilable faction in New York against England and the English to show what sort of men were backing up Irish Home Rule. Placards containing extracts from them were posted up in Ireland and all through Somersetshire. What was done there, no doubt, was done with like effect elsewhere.

— Alluding to the English Elections Labouchere says: "As things stand now it looks to me as though the new Parliament will be much like the old. The Liberals will not have a decisive majority, nor the Conservatives, even with the support of the Liberal and Radical Unionists, who have made common cause with them. What then will happen? I suppose Lord Salisbury will be installed in office and be supported by Hartington's friends and the members for Birmingham. And what then will be the duty of the Radicals? To render it impossible for any one else than Gladstone to carry on the Government. This they can easily do by a strict alliance with the Irish."

— Cardinal Gibbons has received a cablegram from Rev. Dr. O'Connell, Secretary of the American College at Rome, announcing that Rev. A. A. Curtis of Baltimore, had been chosen to succeed Bishop Becker, of the diocese of Wilmington. Father Curtis was formerly rector of Mount Calvary Protestant Episcopal church, Baltimore. His resolve to embrace the Catholic religion caused something of a social sensation some fifteen years ago. He is comparatively a young man and is very popular. There are now nearly a dozen members of the American Hierarchy who are converts from the sects, and all of them are bright lights in the one true Church—a gain to God's fold and a loss to those Lucifer-crossed souls they left behind them in the march with Lucifer!

Falsehood versus Truth.

A subscriber sends us an Oregon paper

> There are serious riots at Hilgo, Ireland, on the 12th. Catholics attacked the houses of Protestants and wounded quite a number of them. The Orangemen did not retaliate, the riot act was read, in which no attention was paid. The soldiers were then ordered out and charged upon the crowd with bayonets, a general stampede then scaring and pace was restored.—Oregonian Times, Jacksonville.

Here is the truth as printed in an Irish paper.

> An unfortunate riot took place in Hilgo, on Saturday morning. Some persons committed a disturbance outside the Catholic Cathedral, and the excitement caused by this culminated in the breaking of glass in a few Protestant houses. Some Orangemen fired revolver shots, and a boy named Barney, a Catholic, received a slight face by a bullet. The military were called out, and the riot suppressed. It is very regrettable that this should have happened, but it originated, as Irish riots have generally done, in the bigotry and violence of Protestants and Orangemen.

It is remarkably singular how even the most insignificant items are garbled in order to calumniate the character of Irish Catholics, and this is done even by papers professing to be friendly to the Irish race. The MONITOR is always glad to have its subscribers send along such slanderous paragraphs so we can effectually "snuff them out."

— A large number of men are now being employed on the site of the new Cathedral, excavating, digging for bedrock, upon which the foundation of the building will rest.

Suppose Gladstone is Defeated—What Then?

"(GLADSTONE'S) DEFEAT" is the caption displayed by the daily press, and many unreflecting persons are led to conclude that because Gladstone has not carried the majority of seats in the present English elections, the Irish Home Rule Bill is thereby buried out of sight forever. This is a most mistaken conclusion, because no legislation is possible in the English Parliament—no matter what Party may be in power—until the Irish question has been settled to the satisfaction of the Irish people.

Gladstone's defeat may defer the passage of an Irish Home Rule measure for a few more months or years longer than such a measure would take to become a law under a Parliament in which the majority were in sympathy with the Grand Old Man, but his defeat can in no way effect the ultimate triumph of Home Rule—not only for Ireland but for Scotland and Wales as well. Man die, political parties cease to exist, but true principles live for ever, and whether the reins of the English Government fall into the hands of Liberal Unionists, Conservatives or Tories, there is no possibility of any union between them to perpetuate their power beyond a single sitting of Parliament. The Irish question will not down; it will prove an "apple of discord" in the English Parliament, and the English people have been educated out of the rut of bigoted views which they held concerning their dread of "danger" from any "disintegration" of the British Empire—through the passage of a Home Rule measure for Ireland.

Such a system of education is about to be inaugurated by the Irish party, a number of whose best speakers are to be selected for the purpose of preaching a political crusade throughout England for the purpose of explaining to the stolid masses the meaning of Home Rule and the scope of the measure regarding its influence upon the integrity of the British Empire. When this necessary enlightenment has been imparted to the English masses, their prejudices will give way to their intelligence, and another election contest may have very different result.

The English people are slow to take up new propositions which Irish agitators and political law or custom, hence it could hardly be expected that they would vote in Gladstone's favor at the first opportunity. The Irish people have battled patiently and hopefully for Home Rule in one shape or another for nearly a hundred years, and although they have been often disappointed and defeated they have never been dismayed, but they gathered fresh courage and fresh determination with each repulsion. This is the living influence that animates the Irish people everywhere to-day, and the vital hope will yet be consummated by the very people who have just helped to defeat Gladstone for the time being.

Brother McCrary's Criticism Criticised.

Cardinal Gibbons received the tiempo, which boldly makes him a Cardinal, and Baltimore Protestants, who have a horror of our Church, are shocked at the idea of a Cardinal being a native of Baltimore, and all the respect for office and the dignity of our Church, which is accompanying it, as wholly pagan, barbarous and idolatrous. Strange things happen in the New Testament, and without things like this the New Testament, and without things like this the New Testament, and without things like this the Apostles would not have been Apostles, and Christ would not have been Christ. As long as Cardinal Gibbons confines his duties to spiritual matters, Americans will not object to his Cardinalship, but if he is the reputation of being a "jolly good fellow" he will be hunted down like a mad dog. Brother McCrary is very fond of the Pope, but he is not quite so fond of the Pope's flock of such wolves in sheep's clothing:

> A Paris correspondent states that the church on Mont St. Michel is to be closed on the 31st of August. The Monde says—"The Republic is about to prescribe the worships in a temple open for nearly twelve centuries. No sanctuary in our country has equal associations, or wears the same patriotic character. St. Michel is for France what St. James is for Spain—a national patron." Now that the French government has got rid of God it has no use of His tabernacles.
>
> Father Curtis is now contributing his million for the new Cathedral, in St. Patrick's parish, and a meeting of the Protestant Episcopal clergy wherever he goes.

Do California Citizens Desire to Revive the Native American Party?

There are demagogues and demagogues, but of all the debased and despicable demagogues who disgrace and defile the high and honorable citizenship of an American, the most diabolical is he, who as LINCOLN'S NATAL DAY—will take advantage of the sacred memories of the occasion to the base use of political prescription. The fanatical firebrand who flung his foulest epithet at Catholics and "foreigners" on his national homage on the late celebration of independence day in this city, thereby demonstrated himself to be the vile and unscrupulous demagogue depicted by those who have repeatedly and unsparingly denounced him both through the press and in private conversation.

In advocating the organization in this State of a Native American Party, based on the rotten and repulsive principles of Knownothingism, Frank Pixley and his sympathizers exhibited themselves in their true color, and, in order to accomplish the designs of these despicable demagogues, it would be well for adopted citizens of every nationality hereafter to vote solid against every candidate endorsed by the Anglophobiac who edits the Argonaut.

The fanatical wretches who would revive proscription are so many traitors to the great cause of human freedom. They are the foes of the most sacred principles of our American Constitution, and the deadly enemies of the dearest principles regarded under the aegis of Christian liberty.

We have no fears whatever that the diabolical demagogues of a demented and despicable firebrand like Frank Pixley will ever be adopted by even a decent minority of our American people, but when such anti-republican sentiments as he gave voice to on last Independence Day are heralded forth by the daily press, it is but right that they should be denounced as they deserve, hence the MONITOR raises its voice with that intention.

Any man—no matter how humoral his life or how obscene his language—can find followers, hence the value of remembering the well-known axiom: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Those who love this land—citizens who have helped to achieve its present prominence and prosperity—must not only watch over its welfare, but they must be ever vigilant to guard its integrity and its peace against the silent and stealthy assaults of the scum of creation who would plunge the whole land into carnage and civil war in order to gratify their hatred against Catholicity and adopted citizens, and, when they had inaugurated a reign of chaos and crime, they would gloat over the destruction and death they had designedly disseminated.

The riots and bloodshed precipitated, and the bigotry engendered by political combinations of creeds like those that formed the Native American and the Knownothing Parties of the past, may never again be repeated in this Republic, but when firebrands like Frank Pixley publicly recommend the destruction of Catholic churches, when, week after week, the highest and the lowest, conditions combine among our Bishops are constantly concentrated, when prejudice is permitted and considered against our priesthood, when slanders are spread broadcast against the stainless characters of our Sisterhoods, when insinuations of the vilest and most vituperative character are hurled forth weekly against honest, law-abiding married men and women whose only crime is that their mothers did not happen to reside in Boston when they were born, or that they worship God according to the Christian code of the Catholic Church, the time for organization of secret societies and published from week to week, we can not help coming to the conclusion that there is an evil spirit abroad in our midst which must be quietly, legally and effectually exorcised before it grows irrincible to human control and transforms itself from a turbulent theory into a remorseless reality.

The reading of history teaches us that when well-minded men—whose hands are raised against their fellow-man of other faith or lineage—keep constantly harping upon the same unchristian topics from week to week and year to year, the fire of such fanaticism soon forms itself into a serious fire, for the reason that it takes but a single spark to inaugurate a blaze—once the bigotry which time has thus engendered. The inflammable inflammable of an innocent and infidel populace are the magnets which designing demagogues like Pixley hope to store up their slenders day by day until the time is ripe for precipitating a catastrophe, that they will shackle over the necks of their scheme and gloat over the disgrace and the destruction they have encompassed. The "no Popery" cry was repeated continuously for ten years prior to the Philadelphia Riots. The voice of Proscription against Catholic citizens resounded from press and pulpit; its times were not more sanguinary than those resounding from the slander-covered lips of our local firebrand, but the result vermon-ne the page of American history with unrailed for carnage and unheard of crime. For ten years Catholics were ruthlessly denounced as the tools of "a foreign despot," and "the foes of American freedom." Is not this Pixley's policy in San Francisco to day? The press, the pulpit and the platform were then utilized and subsidized in order to propagate and perpetuate the most bitter bigotry and the most intense prejudice against the Catholic Church and Catholic citizens. Are we not the familiar firebrands of San Francisco engaged in the same work now? The mob who burned the Ursuline Convent at Mount Hill, and who destroyed the homes of the innocent living as well as consecrated graves of the saintly dead—had not an atom of cause for personal spite against the Sisters, but their hatred was engendered by reading papers edited by the Pixleys of that day.

The bad blood and prejudice thus generated culminated in crimes which will incarnadine the pages of American history for ever! Yet there was no real cause even remote cause for this horrible infamy. It was solely the result of precisely such ruffianly attacks by the press on the Church and Catholic citizens which Pixley projects into his paper.

Here is the truth as printed in an Irish paper.

> An unfortunate riot took place in Hilgo, on Saturday morning. Some persons committed a disturbance outside the Catholic Cathedral, and the excitement caused by this culminated in the breaking of glass in a few Protestant houses. Some Orangemen fired revolver shots, and a boy named Barney, a Catholic, received a slight face by a bullet. The military were called out, and the riot suppressed. It is very regrettable that this should have happened, but it originated, as Irish riots have generally done, in the bigotry and violence of Protestants and Orangemen.

It is remarkably singular how even the most insignificant items are garbled in order to calumniate the character of Irish Catholics, and this is done even by papers professing to be friendly to the Irish race. The MONITOR is always glad to have its subscribers send along such slanderous paragraphs so we can effectually "snuff them out."

All the Glory of the Dominican Order is Due to the Rosary.

THIRD ARTICLE.

At the celebrated Council of Trent St. Thomas was present by his writings, in spirit, and through his numerous disciples and brethren, and this noble son of the Rosary exhibited the wonderful influence his writings were placed in front of the Church, and they furnished the Doctors and Fathers there assembled with weapons to confound and destroy the doctrine of the ministers of Satan. Know the invincible logic of Aristotle, the prince of philosophers, was made triumphant. Those writings to do grand work there for the Church, and to deal destruction to all heresies. We may here remark that Aristotle would have forever remained branded as dangerous, and the power of his logic would be unknown, only for St. Thomas. Miraculanus has well expressed this idea when he says: "Non Thomas, nisi ope Aristotelis—Only for Thomas the voice of Aristotle would never be heard in the Church." There were present among the Fathers at the Council of Trent in the flesh and with their towering intellects twenty three Dominican Prelates, and among the theologians nineteen picked theologians of the Order. The Dominicans were the Pontifical theologians of the Council. Twenty-two of the twenty-four voices of the Council, while a fourth—Pius V.—was a Dominican, and the twenty-fourth (Gaudini, Summus Pontifex) in the most beautiful and vigorous manner utters the most sublime sentiments on the doctrine of St. Thomas, and touchingly refers to the help which the illustrious Fathers the Friars Preachers and the Franciscans, gave to the Holy See, in the realms and science of labors in the propagation and extension of the Christian Religion. Benedict XIV., the preeminently learned Pope, honored upon him the titles of "Prince of Theologians," "the great light of the United Friars Preachers," and "Doctor of the Church," and he declared and decreed that if there was any good in his own works, the glory of it was due to the teachings of great Master S. Thomas. But we must cease quoting from such sources, for our pages are too short, and we must be concise and pithy. We must be concise and pithy. We must be concise and pithy. We

Farm and Home.

A Modern Dry Goods Store.

I wonder if the average merchant ever stops to think what a big hypocrite he is and what a lot of mockeys he makes of his clerks. In the days agone the lady who entered a dry goods store was met with a cordial salutation from proprietor or clerk. She stated her wants, and they were attended to in a business-like manner, and a "good afternoon" followed her as she went out.

What a change has come over the scene! Recently as I entered a dry goods store the floor-walker put on his accustomed grin and "good-afternooned" me. He rubbed his hands together, grinned some more, bowed five distinct times, and was so pleased to show me to the towel and napkin counter that he skinned his shins on a stool without losing one bit of his angelic countenance.

Then the towel and napkin man bowed and grinned and twisted and smirked and "good-afternooned" me and "beautiful-weathered" me for three minutes. If I had bought him a new tin whistle, or a red rag he couldn't have been more pleased. I wanted some cash towelling at about a shilling a yard. I knew that before I left home. I asked direct for what I wanted, and the clerk grinned and smirked and twisted some more and said:

"Ah — yes — exactly — yes. Certainly, ma'am, with the greatest of pleasure. You did't want Turkish towels?"

"No, sir."

"Ah—so!"

"I want cash towelling."

"Certainly, ma'am—crash towelling—I see. We are having beautiful weather—very beautiful. Here it is, ma'am."

At that moment the floor-walker suddenly appeared. His face bore a look of great anxiety. I couldn't tell at first whether he had a toothache or had lost a hard of a death in the family, but it all came out after a bit. He had been endeavoring ever since the idea that I might have gone down cellar or up stairs to hunt for the towel department, or that I was not being properly waited on, or that the crash towelling was off on a vacation. He had run back to make sure, and what a relief it was to him! He bowed and smiled, and ducked and twisted, and backed off.

Then the clerk bowed, and grinned, and curtsied, and backed down some towelling. "I want four yards."

"Certainly, ma'am—I see—beautiful day, yesterday—four yards—think it will do, eh?"

Just then the proprietor came up, and his face carried such a grin. He was delighted to see me. Didn't I want two clerks to wait on me? I was a beautiful lady. I was beautiful. Did the towels suit? If not he would order from Europe. No trouble at all, you know—certainly—certainly again—good afternoon.

The clerk had cut off four yards of towelling, and I laid down a fifty cent piece.

"Ah—yes—nothing else—table-cloths or napkins—dish-towels or anything of the kind?"

"No, sir."

"Ah — certainly — ah boy! — beautiful day, isn't it—a thousand thanks—package you am—all again—good afternoon."

He smirked and smiled. The floor-walker ran across my path to grin and bow. The proprietor followed me to the door to bow and twitter. I had saved the three of them from the gallows by purchasing four yards of crash towelling at a shilling a yard, and they were duly grateful.

Yes, I am a modern woman. I hope I have a fair share of common sense. I know lots of other plain women with common sense who are looking for some merchant to open a store where grinning baboons will not be employed to wait upon customers. One woman out of fifty may appreciate all this soft-soap and tender taffy, but the other forty-nine are disgusted with it. We want civil, courteous treatment from shopkeepers and their clerks, but let it end there. The proprietor who exacts all this grinning and grimacing and twitching on the part of a blue-coat toward female customers is mistaken in the set. They have more brains than he credits them with.

Seven Trifles worth Remembering.

For the disagreeable sensation known as heart-burn, which so often accompanies indigestion, a tablespoonful of common salt, dissolved in half a wine-glass of water, and drank, is as effective a remedy as a dose of saleratus-water, and a much pleasanter and safer one. Nobbing a brose in several and then in spoons of turpentine will usually prevent the unsightly black and blistered face not only tells tales, but deforms. When there is an unpleasant odor about the feet, a small quantity of a weak solution of salicylic acid in the footbath is a sure destroyer of the offense. Many of the potent extracts and bitters are compounded of an alcohol derived from wood, and this is said to be peculiarly dangerous form of alcohol, capable of producing very serious brain disorder. Use of the most trustworthy medicines in all the pharmacopeias is the hydrate of chloral which is so commonly used; cases are reported where 200 grains have been taken in safety, and other cases where ten grains have proved fatal, or at least only a narcotic escape from death by timely and active effort; this drug should never be taken but with the advice and assistance of a physician. Iron articles will seldom rust if they have been cleansed from oil by hot soda-water, and after being dipped in hot lime water and dried. Collodion, spirits of turpentine, and the common olive oil are called oils of one, are such an invaluable remedy in apply to burns and scalds before a physician can arrive; do better, if better is to be done, and sweet oil and lime-water beaten up together make a cooling and healing ointment for them as good as any medicament known.

A Too-Totaler.

Senator Spooner, the eloquent young senator from Wisconsin, who made a reputation a asley on the late Vice President Hendricks, is a too-totaler, but he does not make a parade of his temperance principles. It is noticed that he does not drink interesting liquors of any kind, and when he is asked the reason he does not hesitate to give it. He says: "I have three boys I love. They have never smelled liquor in my breath and they never shall." The reason why he avoids strong drink is a very satisfactory one. There is not one man in a thousand who will admit its force, although not more than one in a thousand may be guided by it.

Shavings for Upholstery.

For stuffing purposes pine shavings are now largely used. They are being at Toth, in an extensive factory devoted exclusively to the production of such shavings, and there, by the aid of machinery, are reduced to such a degree of fineness that the product closely resembles tow. Shavings of this kind are superior, it is asserted, to every other substitute for horse hair in connection with upholstering purposes, alike as regards elasticity, softness and durability; for bedding they are recommended on account of the room contained in the wood being an effectual preventative of vermin, the utility of the material in this line, especially for hospital and barracks purposes, having been satisfactorily tested by the German Government. After having been used as stuffing for five or six years, the shavings can be removed by being exposed to the heat of the sun or a boiling heat temperature.

Family Fun.

A Question of Arithmetic.

Jim Webster was tried last week in Austin for raining chickens from Colonel Yerger. He was convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. After the trial was over Colonel Yerger said to Webster.—

"Now that you have been convicted, just for the fun of it, I'd like to know how many of my chickens you have stolen at one time and another."

"I ain't gwinter tell yer, boss, how many chickens I fetched yer jest like dem."

"Jim, here is half a dollar if you will tell me the number you have taken."

"No, sah, I ain't gwinter tell yer for no half dollar how many of dem chickens I took. Ise knows de number pretty sakely, but I ain't gwinter gib hit away for no fifty cents. I ain't no fifty cents on de dollar nigah. If you wants de hull troof yer must yer a hull dollar."

"Well, Jim, here's fifty cents. If you are willing to tell the whole truth for a dollar, of course you will tell half the truth for fifty cents. You can afford to tell one half the number of chickens for fifty cents can't you!"

"Sartinly, I'm a square nigah. If you pays for half the troof, dat's what yer gits.

"Well, give me half the number of roosters you stole."

"Leetuns see. Half de number of rosters are five."

"Very well. What's half the number of pullets."

"Eh, Eh!" Hafe de pullets sah an' two pullet over."

"How about old hens!"

"Hafe de hens an' de."

"Do you stole ten roosters!"

"Dat's hafe! How de dibbel did you come yer find out!"

"Jim, you stole fifteen pullets and twelve old hens."

The astonished darkey started back in dismay, and rolling his eyes at Colonel Yerger, exclaimed:

"You is a dangerous man. Dar's some hocus pocus about de hull thing."

"One question more, Jim. How did you manage to find out half the number of chickens you stole. You don't know any thing about arithmetic.

"No, sah, of course I don't know nuffin 'bout rahmetic, but I know half de number ob chickens I got, bekase de older nuggah what was watchin' outsider daforce he took half de chickens and I got de udder half."

Sambo's Shrewdness.

An old negro, much alarmed, went to a judge and said: "Judge, dar's er lot er niggers kept stole down in my neighborhood lately, an' fust thing yer know somebody's gwine ter be arrested. I hope who took 'em, an' if you'll let me tura State evidence I'll tell yer."

"You were concerned, eh?"

"Yas, sah; an' if yer'll jes' let me do de evendence, I'll tell yer cactly who tuck dem hangs."

"All right."

"Won't do nothin' wid me?"

"Not a thing."

"Will yer sw'ar it?"

"Yes, if necessary."

"But will yer put in writin?"

"Yes."

The judge drew up an agreement, and when he had read it, the old negro said:

"Dat sounds sorter like a Sho' dee dockyment I'd stan'."

"If it suits you well. Now tell me who stole the hogs."

"Yer's dis nothin' wid me!"

"Not!"

"Well, judge, I stole dem hogs myself, jes' dis day, sah. I thank yer for yer kindness."

A Feeble Congressman.

The other evening the little daughter of a Congressman was paying a visit at a neighbor's, and the respective mothers were talking of physical ailments and their remedies. After a while the little girl saw an opportunity to make a remark.

"My papa," she said, "always drinks whiskey when he is sick."

"Then she stopped for a minute, her eyes softened and saddened, and she continued slowly:

"And poor papa is sick nearly all the time."

Political Economy.

"My dear," said an anxious wife to her husband, who was running for office, "at most economies in every possible way." "Yes," he replied, "I can. I can do it handily. You spend $10 or $15 a day in treating a lot of bar-room loafers to beer and whisky just to get them to vote for me. Do you call that economy? Certainly. That's political economy."

A Wife's Curiosity.

"Grover," said Mrs. Cleveland, shortly after her arrival at the White House on Tuesday, "what are all these long naked bottles doing in this closet, and what do they contain? "They're did contain 'Jefferson simplicity,' stammered the President; "but I believe they are empty now." "Humph," said the first lady of the land, taking one of the bottles from the closet; "this is the first time I ever knew that Jeffersonian simplicity smelled like a snake bite cure."

German in the State Camp.

One of the guards who was on duty last night was approached by a short and stout man in uniform, who walked with his hand placed upon the base of his stomach.

"Who goes there?" called the guard, presenting his musket.

"I am de sand," and the stout man in a moment was gone.

"Well, have you got the countersign?" asked the guard.

"No," said the stout man, sadly, "but I had gos dar garlic. Hisse let me pass till I go by der hospital tent."

Mic Circumcision.

An editor was taken seriously ill and a doctor was called in at once.

"How is your circulation?" inquired the man of pills.

"Oh," replied the editor excitedly, "my circulation is steadily increasing; it is the largest in the country; it is more than double the circulation of the Daily Totem and is way out of sight of the Weekly Hooter. It is the best advertising medium this side of the provinces. How many squares would you like doctor?"

The Family of the Future.

Peter-familiar Watkins—"That little shaver over there by the wall is my second child by my first wife; and the one near him, with light hair, is my wife's first by her second husband. The other one, with the spot on his nose, is my second wife's by her first husband, and we've got some of the last batch around somewhere—but, oh! it's awfully mixed; can scarcely keep track of them. However, we call them all Watkinses."

If a cough distracts your sleep, take Piso's Cure for Consumption and rest well.

D. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC.—Unsurpassed as a Nerve Food Builder, Sleep Producer, Appetite Restorer, Blood Purifier, and Strength Giver. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

CARROLL & TILTON, BLIKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE, 873 Market Street,

WITH A LINE OF—

GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING, Furnishing Goods, HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be found as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible

CARROLL & TILTON, 873 Market Street, Opp. Powell, And late with JONES & CO.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

Incorporated under the laws of California.

This association is conducted on the natural assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $3,000 and $5,000, which are payable in five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 15 and 20 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 35 to 39 every eight years; 40 to 44 every seven years; 45 to 49 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the nearest legatee.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the stockholders of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates will fall due first as part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $170,000. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The average number of members is three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly is nearly $1,000.

For Reliable agents are desired. Address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary, Room 28, Phelan Building, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver REMEDY. 1206 Market St., S. F.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY, PRINCIPAL OFFICE, 648 MARKET STREET BRANCH, 1156 MARKET ST. LAUNDRY, 19th St., bet. Folsom and Howard s. P. Cal

LIVE AND LET LIVE. Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.

JOHN B. McINTYRE, Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer, 423 CLAY and 418 COMMERCIAL STS San Francisco

Silver, Magnetics and Perforators found in any Style Board. Fine Backing a Specialty.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

LIVER DYSPEPSIA

Corrects the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By its regularity in its action or suppression of its functions, the liver, the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weakness, yellow diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms. Prompt and effective remedy. These are the results of the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, its great liver regulator.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids and poisonous excretory matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing backache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions and health is at once restored.

SCROFULA

Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood as by the lack of sufficient nourishment furnished by the blood. Scrofula is the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA

BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.

BULL'S BOWEL REGULATOR.

THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

LEBENBAUM BROS. Fine Groceries, 215 SUTTER ST. AND Polk Street, Cor. California.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St. San Francisco

LIQUOR DEALER. Established 1876.

We are selling Cheap to Cash and Customer our goods.

Table Wines 20c. 40c. 75c. $1.
Angelica Wines $1. $1.50 and $1.50
Mazzi Claret Wine, qt. 15c. 25c. 50c.
Old Port or Sherry, $1. $1.25, $1.50 and $2.
Sauterne Whistler, $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4
Bourbon Whiskey, $1.00, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards

Office Wines and Liquors at local rates

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST!

THE CATHOLIC NATIONAL SERIES

Readers and Bible History.

Chaspel and Most Popular School Books.

The Primer, Primer, The First Reader, The Second Reader, The Third Reader, The Fifth Reader, The Sixth Reader, The Primary Speller, The Speller, The Speller Word Book, The Catechism, Part I, Part II, Part III, Catechism Explained, Catechism Illustrated, Catechism Illustrated Edition, Catechism Illustrated Edition, Fourteen Stations of the Cross, Christian Doctrine, Bible History, Bible History Illustrated, Bible History Illustrated Edition, Bible History Illustrated Edition, Abridged Bible History, Bible History Illustrated Edition, Bible History Illustrated Edition, Bible History Illustrated Edition

PECULIAR FEATURES OF ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

result for the Conservatives. The late sitting members are again returned, while in Salford matters were even worse, the sitting Liberal members being defeated by Conservatives. But the net result is that the Liberals gain one seat in Liverpool and one seat in Leeds. All that is proved by the results of these elections is that Mr. O'Connor was mistaken in supposing that the Irish vote would prove the decision of the last election in these particular boroughs.

MRS. GLADSTONE ON THE STUMP.—THE GRAND OLD MAN'S SECRETARY.

In the absence of the Grand Old Man Mrs. Gladstone has taken the stump. Mrs. Gladstone as an orator is a lady of the same order as Mrs. Arnold while at Mile End. But it was the Grand Old Man's eloquence after all, for she read a letter from her great husband which at once fired the enthusiasm of the closely-packed audience. She said:

"My friends—I may call you so because the East End of London is well known to me—I thank you with all my heart for your touching reception, but I will know for whom she is it given—for my husband? Let me tell you his heart is with you, though his voice cannot travel this distance. And now, my friends, I think I cannot do better than give you a message from him which, if you will allow me, I will read. He has written it in his own unique handwriting. Look back upon the history of the past and forward to the prospects of the future. Listen, Freedom, everywhere. What a privilege it is for you to help to decide the destiny of England. The battle is begun. You are to help win it. Rally round our friend, Mr. White. Think of all his works of mercy and devotion on other occasions. As my husband says, in the beautiful words of our great poet: "Ring out the old, ring in the new"; ring out the sins of misery of the past decade, so that you may ring in the blessed reign of peace. God grant it may be so."

Mrs. Gladstone in an old hand, if I may use the expression, is a parliamentary orator. Long ago she learned the secret of talking phrases. Last night she was in capital form. She stepped up to the platform without a touch of nervousness. She was shod in a loose gown and bonnet, her shoulders enveloped in a cloud of lace, crowned by a diamond star, and Mrs. Gladstone's voice is low and tremulous, but reaches to the end of the room. The effect of her was alone sufficient to evoke the most tremendous loyalty.

Father Neyron of Notre Dame.

ROMANTIC CAREER OF A PATRIARCH PRIEST.

With Napoleon at Waterloo.

THE TREACHERY OF NEY DESCRIBED.

Ninety-six Years Old and Still Serving in God's Sanctuary.

There is living within 100 miles of Chicago a remarkable man who in the day has been a surgeon, soldier, priest, and university professor. He was a surgeon in the army of the First Napoleon, accompanied the Emperor during his campaign against Russia, and was present at the great conqueror's downfall at Waterloo. He was a soldier of special interest to the Catholics and old settlers of Chicago, as he was the second one, Marquette being the first, to celebrate mass within the limits of that city. The man is the Rev. Louis Joseph Neyron, Professor of Anatomy and Medicine in the University of Notre Dame, near South Bend, Ind. Father Neyron is in his 96th year, but is as active as some of the men half of advanced age. His intellect is as clear as it was fifty years ago, he can walk unassisted or can take a street car as a soldier, and, in a word, is in complete control of all his faculties. During the commencement exercises of the university his appearance on the campus attracted the attention of hundreds of visitors when come of the students and his identity learned. He was walking up the shady avenue leading to the place of commencement, his long black coat and a black skull cap, and was accompanied by a pal terrier that is his constant companion in his walks. Every one who saw him remarked bitterly the resemblance to the pictures of Victor Hugo. He is above this medium height, has broad shoulders, surmounted by a large, well-shaped head, partially bald at the top on account of the absence of hair and long flowing white locks. His beard is almost white. When he noticed that he was attracting attention he turned from the walk and went over to a fountain in the center of the grounds, closely followed by the dog. The priest sat down on the curbing of the fountain, and at a signal from him the dog jumped into the water and began to swim about.

Several well-known Chicago people accompanied by a reporter, went over to talk to him. He said: "Myself and my friend Jack are here taking our morning stroll. Jack is a smart dog and a terrier to rats and snakes. He has a special fancy for killing rats and shaking their heads off."

"Were you at the battle of Waterloo, father?" some one in the group abruptly asked.

"Yes, I was present at the battle of Waterloo, and received the medal which I have been telling you about me! Yes sir, I was at the battle of Waterloo, and I was born as a soldier."

"You must be well advanced in years?"

"I am in my 96th year, but I have a brother in France who is several years old-er than myself, and he isn't married yet, either."

A reporter thought the venerable priest in his room in the infirmary of the university.

"Won't you kindly favor me with some of your reminiscences of the First Napoleon, the campaign against Russia, and the battle of Waterloo?" asked the scribe.

"My reminiscences are not smart, sir! Well, you want someone to run talking at my length, for I have many times refused to be interviewed. Of what use can my stories be to outside of the public? What you would ask of me has all been recorded in history, and the narration or opinion of a poor old man unlettered as I am would be of no use to any one."

"Did you have Marshal Ney personally?"

"Indeed I did, to my sorrow."

"There have been a great many stories about the effort that Marshal Ney never executed, but was allowed to escape and that he came to settle in this country."

"Yes, I have heard a story to that effect. It is as amusing as it is ridiculous. I am positive beyond any doubt that he was shot. I had occasion in some of the campaigns of soldiers from which the detail of men was drawn for the firing squad. Upon it that, had the men to whom he said, 'My comrades, fire!' been disposed to let him escape, the English would have seen to it that they did not."

"Did the soldiers sympathize with Ney in his downfall?"

"If they did they indulged in a bit of false sentimentality. Ney was a traitor, nothing but a traitor, to his sovereign, his country, his own honor, and the unlucky soldiers whom he hoodwinked and voluntarily turned over to Napoleon to be slaughtered at the battle of Waterloo. He richly deserved his fate, and I don't believe that the sad remnant of the army ever really betrayed shed many tears over him."

"Were you with Ney a army when he turned to from Napoleon?"

"I was, and I well remember the day that Ney's act of treachery took place. Ney's and the struggling army of Russia met at Orse bridge, better known at the time as the Bridge of the Holy Ghost. Napoleon's army was encamped a few miles from the bridge opposite our lines. The morning after our encampment we saw some dags of troops in advance of Napoleon's army, and it was then that the men first began to suspect Ney's plans, but the suspicions were not even whispered. Soon the flags disappeared, and Ney gave orders to prepare for an attack. We were prepared to attack and marched on to the bridge. When we reached the opposite side of the bridge we noticed about a dozen men advancing from Napoleon's army on horseback bearing flags of truce. Our army, which still did not exceed 20,000 men, came to a halt. The men on horseback advanced and the news was at once whispered to be Napoleon himself. At sight of Napoleon our army cheered.

Napoleon also demounted and was warmly embraced by Ney and his officers. It occurs a short in honor of Napoleon went up from our ranks. The history has recorded the rest. We were forced to combine with Napoleon's army of hope between the ages of 18 and 20 years and go to Waterloo and defeat."

"Were you taken prisoner at Waterloo?"

"Yes, although I might have escaped had I not stopped in my flight to dress the wounds of an officer to whom I was much attached. Our flight was a mad dashing along on my horse, dodging a storm of bullets. I saw the General stretched upon the ground, bleeding from a fatal wound in the shoulder. I dismounted to dress the wound, and while I was doing so a squad of Prussians came upon me and captured me. They stripped me of nearly all my clothing and what money I had and turned me over to the English army, where there was a lack of surgeons, nearly all the English surgeons having deserted their posts. Gen. Lowton was the commander of the division to which I was assigned, and I was treated by him and his army with the utmost kindness and gentlemanly courtesy. The General also allowed me a stipend, and put none of the usual restrictions of prisoners of war upon me. When I was taken to Paris by the English I found myself a complete prisoner, so to speak. I was a prisoner of Louis XVIII, because I was in Ney's deserting army, and a prisoner of the English because I was taken with a fighting them. However, the French Minister of War knew that I was with Napoleon against my will, and he forthwith assigned me to duty as Surgeon-in-Chief to the First Regiment of artillery. I want to report this assignment to the English General, and he positively refused to surrender me, saying, in a good-natured laugh, 'No, Sayron, you are our prisoner, and we need prisoners of your profession badly just now. Therefore, I will change the program. I hereby order you next to minister to the wounds of the army at Calais and Dunkirk.' It is needless to say that the order was carried out. In fact, I never saw the Prussian Minister of War again. The order allowed me double pay from time of my involuntary assignment until I was discharged as a prisoner.

"How did it happen that you became a priest?

"Well, to begin with, I was a soldier against my will, but at the conclusion of the war I made up my mind that I would either be an officer in the regular army or a priest. After due consideration I chose the priesthood, and entered the Seminary of Lyons, and after studying theology for three years I was ordained a priest by the Diocese of Bailay in the spring of 1828."

"How did you happen to join the American church?

"In the year 1835 Bishop Brute of Vincennes, Indiana, came to Lyons in the interests of France asking such of them as had the spiritual ability to accompany him to Western missions. I recognized the appeal as a voice calling me from home to do the work of my Master in a foreign land. So did a young friend of mine, Father Shadier. We obtained leave from our Bishop to join the American mission, and forthwith started to Bishop Brute's diocese. Bishop Brute became, like myself, he had been a physician and surgeon before becoming a priest. In the early spring of 1835 Father Shadier and myself arrived at Vincennes and were warmly greeted by Bishop Father Shadier was forthwith sent to Chicago and myself to New Albany, Ind. But in one year, during 1836, I had been on missionary duty in nearly every part of Illinois, Indiana, and part of Kentucky. The ravages of the cholera in Kentucky rendered my services necessary there, and many poor victims died in my arms as I was administering the last sacraments to them. In 1837 Father Shadier died and was buried somewhere in the Village of Chicago. Bishop Brute sent me to succeed him, with the understanding that as soon as Bishop Rosati of St. Louis sent a priest to New Orleans I should be sent there. I was stationed at Chicago not quite five weeks when Father St. Cyr of St. Louis arrived there, having been sent to take charge by Bishop Rosati. Then you see I was the second priest of the present great Catholic community of Chicago, not for a long time, it is true, but I don't think that people in Chicago know that I was ever priest in charge there, the general impression prevailing that Father St. Cyr was the first priest.

"I remained in charge of New Orleans after my return to Vincennes I went with the Rt. Rev. Bishop Odin, the Bishop of Galveston, to the Texas mission, arriving in New Orleans Christmas Day in 1837, and in Galveston New Year's Day. After spending one year in Texas I returned, at the request of my Bishop, to my first parish, New Albany, Ind., where I built the Church of the Holy Trinity, and was pastor of Holy Trinity parish for twenty-seven years. I resigned the pastorate and came here twenty years ago on account of the climate, which I found too severe for me while traveling through the malarial swamps doing missionary duty. Soon after I came here my Bishop requested me, and I decided to remain here. I teach my medical class every day, and take great pleasure in doing so. I wouldn't know what to do with myself unless I was actively engaged in some duty."

"What is your opinion of Napoleon the First?"

"He was the greatest soldier that ever lived. His had some great qualities, and the bad ones predominated in his character. Twice he fought and fell for his country, France, but finally he sacrificed France, his faithful soldiers, and was himself to be one insatiable ambition. I look upon him as the deliverer or murderer of thousands upon thousands of brave soldiers whom he marched over the snow-covered valleys and mountains of Russia for no other reason than to increase his own glory. What sense had he for making war upon the Emperor and people of Russia? No, the blood and honor of the French nation had to be left lying on mountains, in valleys and roadways during that terrible winter march

DR. LANE'S WINE TONIC!

A Nervine and Blood Invigorator.

KING B BITTERS,

THE GREAT VEGETABLE LIVER REMEDY.

HALL BROS. GRATE Have used your adapted remedy "King B Bitters" and by Druggists Wines and Bitters and find very satisfactory results and have ordered more to meet demand. Yours truly, GEORGE W. SUTTY, 171 Texas Street, Portland, Oregon. Sole Proprietor, Office 1 Montgomery Block, Portland, Oregon.

HALL BROTHERS, Laboratory, 324 Clay St., San Francisco.

O'BANION & DAGENAIS,

712 and 714 Market Street,

Now Have one of the most Complete Stocks of

GENT'S AND BOYS CLOTHING,

Furnishing Goods, Hats, Caps, Etc.

IN SAN FRANCISCO,

And are selling goods Lower than any other house on the Pacific Coast.

We have also added MERCHANT TAILORING to our business and now have on hand

THE BEST GOODS

The Market affords in both Foreign and American Importation.

All our goods are marked in plain figures and but one price asked.

IN MEMORIAM.

MARRIED.

DIED.

Market Report.

MONETARY STATISTICS.

Twin Foes to Life

Are Indigestion and Constipation. Their primary symptoms are nausea, sick headache, loss of appetite, dizziness, and a host of diseases, specially in outlying districts, attacking the liver, stomach and bowels, and in one word, the whole machinery of digestion. Ayer's Pills, Sugar Coated, Purge, Regulate, Stimulate, Tone, Heal, Relieve, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Headaches, Heartburn, Fever, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Kidney Diseases, Piles, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Dropsy, Nervous Disorders, Female Complaints, and all those numerous maladies caused by derangement of the stomach and bowels.

A Thorough Purgative medicine is the first necessity for one who is sick and needs medicine to make him well. In a mild degree, just sufficient to meet the requirements of constipation, and at the same time the liver, kidneys and bowels, Ayer's Pills are unsurpassed.

Ayer's Pills

Accomplish this result in a most satisfactory manner. They do not gripe the patient, and are lasting in their effect, so as to be free of other remedies. Without this process speedy recovery is impossible, hopeless and tedious, or the blighted life is a burden.

Absolutely Cure

All diseases proceeding from disorder of the digestive and assimilative organs. The genuine are of AYER'S PILLS. To correct the first indications of restlessness, attack the system with a dose of Ayer's Pills, which will prevent the development of the disease. Ayer's Pills are recommended by the leaders in medicine as well as prominent individuals, as the safest and most reliable family cathartic.

AYER'S PILLS,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

THE MONITOR.

A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to

P. J. Ryan, Business Manager.

Office, Nos. 508 & 510 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal.

Business Office, Nos. 508 & 510 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post-Office as Second-class Matter.

The Monitor.

VOL. XXIX. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1886. NO. 42.

THE MONITOR

is now in the thirteenth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a denominational patriotic Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation, and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Items intended for insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Correspondence intended for publication should be written on one side only, and be as concise as possible. Long letters are seldom inserted.

Communications on business should be addressed to the undersigned, not to the Editor.

All communications and remittances, whether on business or intended for insertion, should be addressed to the undersigned.

THE CORRESPONDENT

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Correspondence intended for publication should be written on one side only, and be as concise as possible. Long letters are seldom inserted.

Communications on business should be addressed to the undersigned, not to the Editor.

All communications and remittances, whether on business or intended for insertion, should be addressed to the undersigned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GOOD HEALTH BETTER THAN COLD.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA. TRY IT. TRY IT.

Made By H. B. SLAVEN, For Sale by all Druggists.

GOLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING.

Every Description of Church and Silver Ornaments

HOUSEHOLD GOODS Repaired and Plated

With the above machine in the most beautiful and durable manner at the

SAN FRANCISCO Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works, 653 and 655 MISSION ST.

Bet. New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco.

E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

MOORE & MURPHY,

Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of

Ladies' and Gent's BOOTS AND SHOES.

Full Line of the best Eastern Manufactures. Different Grades, Prices and Qualities to suit everybody.

Remember the Number: 138 SIXTH STREET, 138

Bet. Mission and Howard

S. F. STEVENS, D.D.S.

DENTISTS

Painless Extraction

With Vitalized Air.

48 SIXTH ST., COR. MISSION, SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE HOURS: 8 A. M. to 5 P. M.

JOHN DUNN STACK & LACOMBE, Practical Hatters, 659 MARKET STREET, Under Palace Hotel. SAN FRANCISCO.

IRON FENCES AND CRESTINGS.

CHAS. MONTGOMERY & CO. 41 Sixth St., and 227 & 229 Second St.

A. S. Ehrenclou, 18 and 20 Fremont St., S. F.

JAS. R. KELLY & CO

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF

PAINTS, OILS and GLASS

221 and 223 Market Street

Just Below Sansome—the New Block.

PACIFIC Business College, 320 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO.

Life Scholarships - $75

APPLY FOR CIRCULARS '86

GILROY HOT SPRINGS.

ROOP & TENHANT, Proprietors and Managers

THESE CELEBRATED SPRINGS, SITUATED IN THE CENTER OF THE FAMOUS SOUTHERN RESORT, NOW OPEN FOR THE SEASON. A complete hotel, unless has been made therefore, and the whole place has been put in complete order. RATES STRICTLY REASONABLE TO ALL. FOR SUPP. ETC., and for Pamphlet, Containing Map of Springs, Analysis of the Waters, etc., apply Proofs and Testimonial Gilroy Hot Springs, Gilroy, or Hotel, Gilroy, Cal.

DEASY BROTHERS, 118 Third Street, Importers and Manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES A Large and Well-Selected Stock of LADIES', MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S BOOTS AND SHOES Of the Best Quality Constantly on Hand. Every Pair Warranted. Orders Promptly Attended to. Goods Sent C.O.D. Subject to Examination.

To Lovers of Fine Stationery.

P. M. BECOE, Stationer, Engraver and Manufacturer of Fine Stationery, 1 Montgomery Avenue, Cor. Market, San Francisco.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, Proprietor (Late Broadway Hotel.)

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA

Cures all Diseases originating from a disordered state of the BLOOD or LIVER, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Scrofula, Tumors, Salt Rheum and Mercurial Pains readily yield to its purifying properties. It invigorates Blood pure, the Liver and Kidneys healthy and the Complexion bright and clear.

J. E. GATES & CO., Proprietors, 417 Sansome St. San Francisco.

McCORMICK BROS., Book and Job Printers, 636 Clay Street, 636

A Tract for the Times.

USEFUL KNOWLEDGE FOR KNOWNOTHINGS.

Some Forgotten Chapters of American History.

WHAT CATHOLICS DID FOR THE REPUBLIC.

The Home Rule Battle.

CAUSES WHICH LED TO DEFEAT.

SEXTON'S SUCCESS AND HEALY'S STRUGGLE.

Interesting Incidents Narrated by Justin McCarthy.

Mr. Gladstone and those who fought and hoped with him believed two well of Ireland and of the voters. As those devoted men planned and fought for the fight, and the issue was to be settled upon the Irish question. They had to be sure the truth of the logic of their arguments, and the justice of their cause. Ireland proved against the sophistry and weakness of the Liberals on the other side. Ironically the fairness, candor, and honesty of the Gladstone party, the Irish voters showed that they could be trusted, and the weakness of the Liberals, and the ridiculing of the free of Smithfield

Poetry.

THE MARCH OF THE IRISH RACE.

O, spirits that watch for this sunrise dawn at the premier Arcadian gate,
Have you read your fate in the arching skies, and the lines in the Book of Fate?
Have you seen the spear-lane of last month shed with the vision that was to be?
That the alien's cause, like the chosen it invoked, is facing in death away

(1) Patrick hearts that have throbbed to be free, as free as your sires of yore,
Do you feel the thrill of the Dismania Hope you cannot but feel better?

(2) Leader, you may hoist your requiem days — the loss of our clarion gone,
Or the Irish race, made the banner of old, is speedily marching on.

Out from the valley of sin and death, down from the barren trees,
Where the prisoner tested that a bed might at times while his children slept in rags.
Out from the secrets of selfishness, and from the dangerous grime,
Out from the lair where gyves and chains encumbers each Irish foot!

Up, on to the isles of living light, on, on to the uplands, where Man knew at the shrine of Freedom's God, and the skies look over fair.
On, on to the shores where the sands be gone that are kissed by the rival nationsal
On, on to each plain where the waving crain from the golden meadow glance.

Up, up from the swamps where the fatal gases of the poisoners rapid grow!
Up, on to the mountains, where the air is cool, with the cool breezes of a people's will.
On, on to the shores of the human race, to the light of a better day.
Where upright thrones shall be sceptered dense be ruthlessly swept away.

Where the earth shall not store the states of a savaged country's bones
And the world will look in peace and rest 'neath the glow of the young peace.
Then Israel's hands (for the onward march to the gates of the promised land
Where never again the weapon of war shall be sought to move off, as I hence for ward to catch Horace's parting words.

O, shader of our Hugh and Owen Roe, and Emmet, and Orr, and Tone,
The land then you died to disenthrall is boldly marching on.

On, on through the night to the morning bright where the green flag points the way.
While the tribal years to serve thy chosts at the dawn of the day.

Till the castle be wrecked and the last red coat of the invaders hordes be gone,
They Irish race, through time and space, shall ever go marching on.

JAMES MARTIN.

Literary Miscellany.

An Opportune Witness.

Well, I'm mighty glad to get home" said Mr. Briscomb, sympathetically.

And I am too," said the tiger with a beaming face, and hurried up the front walk; while behind him a man who had driven him home from the station, turned into the lane with a flourish and rattle down toward the barn.

Anybody might have been glad to get back to such a home, and to be unmistakable a welcome.

A big dog came bounding around the house to meet him, prancing, around him ecstatically, and making frantic attempts to lick his face.

Mrs. Marks, the housekeeper—Mr Briscomb was a bachelor—had been passed in preparation for supper to smile and nod from the window; and two young people, who were sitting on the front steps, jumped up hastily, little dreaming of Mr. Briscomb's satchel, and dragged a chair out on the porch and pressed him into it.

Those were Mr. Briscomb's boarders—Ruth Haines, who had come from the neighbors' house, satchel and Horace Bennet, among to take Ruth to church.

It was whispered that most of the envying had been done in the neighborhood of the schoolroom, the children hearing Horace to the fact that the young surveyor was a frequent visitor, and that hardly a day passed that he was not on hand to walk home with the teacher.

"Well——" said Mr. Briscomb, removing his travel-stained hat and wipine his forehead.

And he stopped short, and appeared to fall into a reverie.

His companions were silent. They were used quite enough to hear what he was going to propose—sympathy or congratulation.

Mr. Briscomb had been to a point several miles distant to receive the money left to him by a brother who had died six months ago—the six months having been consumed by a slow and sone system of probating.

"He was worth more than anybody thought," said Mr. Briscomb at last, abruptly. "He left Martha and the boys more than they ever saw up if they try, and he left me six thousand dollars."

The surveyor and the little school-teacher looked at each other breathlessly.

To them, working hard for their modest earnings, and more than appreciating the value of money, it seemed an overwhelming amount.

"I've got it right here," Mr. Briscomb continued, tapping his breast pocket, and it worried me all the way home. You see, I don't know what in the name of goodness to do with it."

"That's the last thing that would trouble me," said Horace brisk, and Ruth laughed, as she thought of Mr. Horace's silence.

"There's the bank," Mr. Briscomb went on musingly; "but I'm afraid of banks. And there's the railroads; I suppose I might take stock in some of them. But I don't patch on railroads either. I guess I'd better keep it by me till I've looked around a little," he concluded, rubbing his chin thoughtfully.

"Where will you keep it?" said Ruth wonderingly.

"Why, I've been thinking about that," Mr. Briscomb responded, looking at the porch floor with unmoved brows. "I guess I thought of the back of the old settee, and the inside of the straw trick, and the clock case; but I've come to think that they'd be the first place anybody'd look. Finally I thought of the carpet bag. There's a loose board up in the floor of my room—the northeast corner—just wide enough for a box under it. I can put my trunk over it, and there I is. Nobody'd think of going there.

"Nobody but me," said Horace cheerfully. "I should know exactly where to go."

At which Ruth laughed again, and Mr. Briscomb smiled absently.

He was very fond of his boarders; he was wondered how he could have thought the old house cheerful before they came, and what he should do when they were gone.

"I'd better get it off my mind," he said, rising, "I'm tired to-night."

And he went into the wide hall and up the stairs.

"He ought to invest it at once," said Horace, disapprovingly; "he'd always be uneasy while he has it on his hands."

"I am afraid so," and Ruth, looking after him regretfully.

And then the conversation drifted to less practical subjects than that of Mr. Briscomb's money, and was carried on in a rather low tone.

It was of Mr. Briscomb's money that Ruth was thinking, however, as she sat in her window that night looking down the sleeping road and listening to the chirp of a belated cricket.

Horace had heard a slight jarring sound from the carriage—her boot's, and her thoughts had flown immediately to the loose board and Mr. Briscomb's inheritance.

She sat quite alone, as it star la tiny, listening intently.

A soft step crept down the stairs she heard it plainly; and the front door opened with a creak.

Ruth felt her heart beating fast and her hands trembling; but she stole to her feet and leaned far out over the window, straining her eyes.

A tall form stepped softly to the ground and made its way through the yard with a careful, stealthy movement.

But at the sight of it, Ruth gave a sigh of relief and laughed softly to herself.

Other sound warning than the stealthy figure, retiring as it turned and came towards the house—until the front door closed softly, and the stairs creaked under an exceeding tread.

Curiosity, perplexity, and amazement had filled her face in turn, to be followed by regretful pity.

"Poor man!" she said to herself compassionately. "It will worry him into his grave if this rate."

School closed, a week or so later, for one of those seemingly needless holidays which school-committees are fond of designating, and the surveyor drove Ruth to the station—she was to go home for the holidays.

Those two had come to an understanding. Ruth wore a ring on the proper finger, and all their conversation of late had been upon one subject—which was, upon how little a young couple of extremely modest wants could start out together.

They had not yet succeeded in bringing the probable amount within the sober limits of Horace's salary although their talks on the subject had been marvellous, but they had not dreamed of being outrange.

"I shall begin cutting rags for carpets as soon I get home," said Ruth, cheerfully, as the train came rumbling in. "Dear me! what will another bag?

She shook her handkerchief from the window as the train moved off, and leaned forward to catch Horace's parting words.

"I'll be home to-morrow night!" he cried.

With that assurance still in her ears, it was no wonder that, when she had spent the three two weeks later, and looked around with an eager smile, the sight of the deserted little station should have seemed to her something like dread.

Nobody was in sight except the stationmaster, and he was tipped back in a chair against the baggage room door, half asleep.

Ruth walked to the edge of the platform, and looked anxiously up and down the road. There was a cloud of dust in the distance, and she watched it with a lightened heart.

But the wagon which lumbered up slowly and stopped before her was not Mr. Briscomb's nor was the tall young person who stepped out a awkwardly, the pers-n she had hoped to see. She recognized him as a laughing of Mr. Briscomb, and her fears returned.

"Going down to Briscomb's, ain't you?" said the young man hesitatingly. "Wasn't you? I'd ha' been take you down as well as not."

Ruth climbed into the wagon silently. Why had Horace not come? Something must be wrong.

"Heard about that surveyor fellow?" her companion observed, as they drove away, and he looked at her sympathetically.

"About what?" said Ruth clutching the edge of her high seat trembling.

"It was the day after school let out," said the young man, cheerfully, "I met him twen-ty-five for her dinress and his enjoyment of telling a startling story. "Was coming down to the mill that day, and the surveyor (Bennet) he went out to Crawford to see the widder; I telegraph to the railroad company about something or other, and they sent him down. Well, I don't know he had a lot money willed to him lately—a Welsh by gol to Briscomb, I reckon, and he went to see if it was all right. He kept it in his inside pocket—like this with a buttoned up coat. Well—he didn't, not the money wasn't there."

He paused to note the effect of the announcement, and started at his companion in amazement.

"For there was something like amazement in her face.

"Well," she said calmly, "what did he do?"

"He told the neighbors about it—if you'll believe it, he hadn't thought of anybody capable of taking it; he always was good-natured. He thought it must have been a rate thief, and he hunted up the right away of the surveyor, and when he found out that Briscomb had been simple enough to tell him where he kept it, we were pretty sure it was him. Mean to! So we went out to Crawford—two or three of us—and got a warrant and had the constable arrest him. We didn't expect to find the money on him, of course; and it wasn't. He swore he didn't but what he'd got it somewhere, Anyhow, he's having his trial to-day, and Briscomb's money was after all against him. We do things up quick out this way," he concluded with an air of satisfaction.

Truly, this little school-teacher was a strange person. The amusement had died out of her face, and a profound indignation had filled it.

She grasped his arm eagerly

"He did not take it!" she said emphatically. "Why! I know it this minute. You poor fellow are not to Crawford (emphatic)

She snatched the whip from its socket as she spoke and touched the horses lightly.

The Crawford court-house was filled to over flowing. The trial, coming on late in the midst of the sleepy summer days, when excitements were few, had proved a great attraction.

It was an exceptional trial, too. The culprit had been investigated, prosecuted, and seemed condemned ever since it had been talked and doing so. A prisoner was the most honest looking of gentlemen, and behaved remarkable, as an innocent person would have done, and the evidence against him was very slight, and purely circumstantial. Hot in spite of these confusing facts, the rest majority believed his guilty, though rather against their wills—he was such a frank looking fellow.

Mr. Bennet was sitting with downcast eyes and a troubled expression. Horace sat, with his hand in his hand, looking weary and hopeless, and the plaintiff counsel was demanding of the jury, for the twentieth time, why if the prisoner had not taken the money, he had come to Crawford on the day of the robbery upon an obviously trumped-up errand? Clearly, he had come to hide the money in safe hands; his accomplice was probably in their midst.

The door opened suddenly and forbidly, and a young girl, with a flushed and eager face, came hastily in. At the sight of her Horace raise his head and his face brightened.

She gave him a swift smile, unmindful of the astonished observers, and made her way to Mr. Briscomb's side.

"You bursed it yourself under the locust tree!" she cried, grasping his coat front, and shaking him a little in her eagerness.

"Hey?" said he, startled out of his sleep, of course; but I didn't know it then. You came down the night you came home with it, and dug a place under the locust tree and put it in!

Poor Mr. Briscomb stared at her in bewilderment; the spectators looked at each other and whispered softly; the plaintiff's counsel looked disgusted.

There was a solemn pause, which the plaintiff's counsel broke by demanding tetrily, that the evidence of this person be taken in the proper way.

But nobody seemed to hear him.

"I used to," said Mr. Briscomb at last, slowly. "I used to walk in my sleep; scary night regular, and do queer scrapes things. I guess I did thinkt I'd put over it.

Horace, who had risen at the room clapped a loud pair of hands, and the next instant the room re-sounded with the cheers of a dole school crowd.

How a committee of three was appointed by the judge to go and prove the young lady's remarkable statement; how that committee returned in triumph, and pronounced Mr. Briscomb with a small box of decentfully modest appearance, and the enthusiasm of the spectators, lies for a considerable period everybody appeared to be perfectly delighted with the result.

Perhaps Mr. Bennet was a little with the exception of the prisoner, who sat the entire side of him, and relied and happiness beaming from every feature. Perhaps the faces of the chief topics in Crawford for a week, after which Mr. Briscomb's money was forgotten.

But Horace and Ruth had unfortunately seen the end of it.

It was Mr. Briscomb's money that unsettled the way of the marriage, a few months later, and that built the snug little home they called home.

The Christian Brothers.

After the disasters of the Prussian campaign, Mr. I. F. Wilson, in 1871 the city of Boston, in America, placed at the disposal of the French Assistance a special grant of 2000 francs to be given to whoever should be judged most worthy of the honor conferred by the French Assistance,

THE MONITOR.

ORGAN OF THE ROMAN CATHOLICS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1886.

"The Catholic press is a power for Catholicity, and every Catholic society should do what it can to extend its influence and religious spirit. Catholic papers take into account, and come and go, and change, but there will become better. Illustrate and better Catholics."—Cardinal Gibbons, A.D. 1886.

Editorial Notes.

A Rome correspondent commenting upon the conversion of Mgr. Sauvesse from the sphere of Protestantism into which he plunged through pride, says that it is rumored in Rome that Ex-Canon Campello has likewise returned to the true fold. If this be true the Protestant camp in Rome must be nearly deserted by all its former fellow Catholics.

In stating that the recent Independence Day celebration in this city was a disgrace to those demagogues who got it up, we did not know that even some of the communistic vers. in accord with the MONITOR. At the final session of the Committee on Thursday last, Mr. Steinbach remarked "We have had a miserable celebration; in fact, it was no celebration at all," and "so say we all of us."

—We invite the attention of our readers in advance to an article which we intend publishing next week from the pen of Professor Scolpy of Amherst College, in which that learned and far-seeing Protestant plainly proves that to the world of religious teaching in our public educational system is due crime, vice, infidelity and general deterioration of morals among the American people of to-day. It is a hopeful sign to see such prominent Protestants take up the Catholic idea—even at this eleventh hour.

—From a correspondent in Omaha, Nebraska, we receive the gratifying intelligence that Rt. Rev. Francis Mora, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, and Rev. Father Mora, arrived at Omaha on the 11th inst., in time for the Bishop to celebrate Mass in the Cathedral. The party left for Chicago on Sunday evening, where they will be the guests of Rev. Daniel Riordan of St. Elizabeth's. Bishop Mora intends to pay a visit of courtesy to Cardinal Gibbons at Baltimore and also to visit Washington, prior to his arrival in New York, from whence the party will embark for Europe.

—The Princes struck off the French Army List by virtue of the expulsion law comprise the Duc d'Aumale, General of Division; the Duc de Chartres, Colonel of the Cavalry; the Duc d'Alençon, Captain of Artillery; the Duc de Nemours, General of Division in the Reserve; the Comte de Paris, Lieutenant-Colonel in the Territorial Army or Second Reserve; the Prince de Joinville, Vice-Admiral in the Navy; the Duc de Panthièvre, Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve; Prince Joachim Murat, Brigadier-General; still his son, Prince Joachim Napoleon Murat, Lieutenant of Dragoons.

—On the occasion of the presentation of the young King of Spain a most impressive scene took place in the Atocha Cathedral. After the Te Deum had been sung the Queen stood alone before the altar and made a solemn offering of her child, Alfonso XIII., to the Blessed Virgin. The altar was adorned with lights, and by the Queen stood the Cardinal Primate, the Bishops, and the leading clergy of the Cathedral and realm. Around were the Grandees of Spain, the Diplomatic Corps, the Ministers, the great officers of the Throne, the representatives of the Army and Navy in brilliant uniforms, the principal authorities of the capital and the provinces, with deputations of the Cortes and the great cities.

—The Golden Rose which has been presented by the Pope to the Queen of Spain is a work of the highest artistic value. Being wrought in massive gold, it weighs about two pounds, three ounces and a quarter avoirdupois. It is not a single rose but an entire plant, with nine leaves, fourteen buds, and one hundred leaves. The roses are modelled upon real specimens collected in the gardens of the Vatican. The plant is inserted in a squatty-bellied vase of solid silver, which bears an effigy of St. Christina and the following inscription, said to have been dictated by the Pope himself: "Maria Christina, Alphonsi XIII., Pontifex Maximus, D.D.D., Anno MDCCCLXXXVI." The work was executed by the jeweller of the Apostolic Palace.

—The death is announced of a distinguished Sister of Notre Dame and a great benefactress of Catholic education in England. On the feast of Corpus Christi, in the Mother house of her Order at Namur, Sister Mary of St. Francis (the well-known Honorable Mrs. E. Petre), went to her reward. For the last thirty-five years this good nun has watched over the foundations of the Sisters of Notre Dame in England. In 1860, in the prime of life, she renounced every attraction that the world could offer and sought a retreat in which she could spend her life for God and for His poor. There was then one convent of the Sisters of Notre Dame in England; now, thanks to her, there are twenty, in which thousands of poor children are instructed in their religion by the Sisters of her congregation.

—The international arrangement providing for an alternate English and Prussian Protestant Bishop in Jerusalem has been abandoned, and Prussia will now supply funds for the endowment of an independent See. It will be remembered by Catholics that the establishment of this bishopric evoked a solemn protest from his Eminence Cardinal Newman, who regarded it as an irregular ecclesiastical creation, and that it led to his being received into the Catholic Church. Referring to the subject in his Apologia, his Eminence says: "As to the project of a Jerusalem Bishopric, I never heard of any good or harm it has done, except what it has done for me, which many thinks a great misfortune and I one of the greatest mercies. It brought me on to the beginning of the end."

Those enemies of the Irish Catholic race in America who are so fond of barging upon the fact that a few Catholic Irishmen deserted during the Mexican war, will learn more about that matter than they care to know from an article on the first page this week. To the Catholics of Ireland belongs the proud boast that in no way it cause good soldiers to desert, and there must have been some great inducement which impelled Sylvester rather Americans to desert their standard in company with their adopted fellow citizens. The Irish Catholic soldiers were driven by persecution to desertion, but to what shall we attribute the desertion of non-Catholic Americans who had no such grievance to complain of and whose religious rights were so flagrantly outraged as to call for the interference of the President of the United States to prevent a recurrence of the monstrous iniquity.

Through the generosity of our readers and friends the MONITOR's fund for Irish Parliamentary purposes has already exceeded two thousand dollars. As the British elections are all over for the present, we will ask our friends not to send any more funds for that purpose, and we sincerely thank them one and all for the generous response they have given to the MONITOR's appeal for funds to forward the holy cause of Home Rule and human freedom—a cause that is despised and denounced in this country only by Anglomaniacs and traitors to true American principles. The man who says that he is an American and then proceeds to the search of liberty in any land, is unworthy of the land he claims as his birthplace—of the freedom he enjoys—but which he would deny to others.

—It is charged that the extra session of the Legislature which has been so suddenly and unexpectedly called by Governor Stoneman, is in the interest of certain California capitalists who design to secure a monopoly of the water of the State. For the information of such of our readers as may be interested in this subject we print on the fifth page of the present issue some facts for their consideration. Monopoly in water will ever prove an incubus on the industries of this State, hence every citizen who values the prosperity of California, and the development of its agricultural, horticultural, mineral and mechanical industries, should give expression on his sentiments in opposition to any charter or corporation controlling an element that of right belongs solely to the people. If the legislature now in session plays into the hands of monopolists, there is a remedy for the people in the near future, and that is to elect new members who will stand by the people against the monopolists of monopolists.

They have learned some clever political tricks in England—judging in this case we think them dull. Here is in miniature one of the blaring Tory posters that now decorate the dead walls of London:

The 1886 Flag. Flower Bally rose! Red and white the Disraeli-Beaconsfield Ireland Red Save the Queen

Of course there is much that is mysterious about the poster. It begs the question and does not put the case at all, but it is clear. They are a rather lively lot over the water still.

Death of a Great French Cardinal.

The Church in France is called upon to mourn the loss of one of her greatest champions at a time when she needs every soldier of the Cross to fight in her behalf. JOSEPH HIPPOLYTE GUIBERT was born at Ais, Faence, December 11th, 1802, and—next to Cardinal Newman—was the oldest member of the College of Cardinals. He finished his theological studies at Rome after having entered the Marseilles chapter of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, won the favor of Pope Gregory XVI. by his brilliant examination, was ordained priest in 1826, became Superior of the Grand Seminary at Ajaccio, Corsica, in 1830, was subsequently Grand Vicar of that diocese, and was made Bishop of Viviers in 1841. He wrote several religious treatises; became an assistant to the Pontifical Throne in 1843; was promoted to the Archbishopric of Tours, by Pope Pius IX., February 4, 1849, and to the Archbishopric of Paris in July, 1871, after the assassination of Mgr Darboy by the Communes.

He was made an officer of the Legion of Honor, August 11, 1855, and was created a Cardinal Priest December 22, 1863. Cardinal Guibert published many letters and pastoral charges, and took an active part in opposition to every legislative attempt to limit the powers of the clergy, especially in February, 1876, respecting the salaries of the priests, and in April, 1881, protesting energetically against the infamous Ferry laws upon education.

A cablegram from Paris says that the funeral of the deceased Cardinal took place on the 16th inst., and that the ceremonies took place in Notre Dame Cathedral. An immense procession, composed of deputations from various Catholic associations and institutions, marched to the Cathedral, where the clergy in a body awaited them. M. Grévy, Minister of Public Worship, a number of public officials and many Senators and Deputies attended the services. May the Lord have mercy on his soul.

Cardinal Taschereau's Revenia.

QUEBEC, July 18.—The sharper rumors of last evening, brought to us by Pilot Lavin from Liverpool, which arrived at Point Levis this morning, brought to shore the Cardinal Taschereau, who was received by a large number of the citizens, and escorted to the Cathedral, where he was welcomed by Vicar-General Lavoie, and proceeded immediately to the church dedicated to Notre Dame Lavie, where he celebrated Mass. After dinner he was driven to Quebec, where he was welcomed by about 10,000 people.

How Islanders Against God's Church are Connected and Circumvented.

(In last Thursday we received the following communication.)

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, July 17, 1886.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR.

Dear Sir: I send you a supposed extract, taken from a speech or sermon delivered by Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia. It appears to contain a lot of the facts of it. Still, for the good of our Catholic interests, the MONITOR might give it to the Times. A few years ago a gentleman connected with a local paper, which, I must say, gives justice to all sides, called my attention to this extract. I promised to have it fully answered in the course of a short time. Hoping you will then scan light on it at the earliest opportunity I remain,

Yours truly,

VERITAS.

Here is the extract alluded to in the forgoing communication

ORIGINAL AND RARE.

From the London "Christian."

Party politics are not within our province, and we would not otherwise take up either side in the controversy without seriously interfering with the duties and interests of our office as Bishops. We must, however, urge upon our people the necessity of voting against that the true character of the Democratic party, which has long been a fine place for low thieves and rascals to hide in. In the past let the Holy Inquisition bear witness. The Roman Catholic Bishop Ryan, speaking at Philadelphia, said:

"Let the Democratic party see that Rome is interested—that is, that she uses every means and every influence she can command, but for her assistance in the rectification of her infallibility. She claims that her Church is infallible, and that she alone has the truth. The Catholic Church, however, has not been infallible for years, but she hates them with a healthy hatred, and seeks a cause that is despised and denounced in this country only by Anglomaniacs and traitors to true American principles. The man who says that he is an American and then proceeds to the search of liberty in any land, is unworthy of the land he claims as his birthplace—of the freedom he enjoys—but which he would deny to others.

"It is charged that the extra session of the Legislature which has been so suddenly and unexpectedly called by Governor Stoneman, is in the interest of certain California capitalists who design to secure a monopoly of the water of the State. For the information of such of our readers as may be interested in this subject we print on the fifth page of the present issue some facts for their consideration. Monopoly in water will ever prove an incubus on the industries of this State, hence every citizen who values the prosperity of California, and the development of its agricultural, horticultural, mineral and mechanical industries, should give expression on his sentiments in opposition to any charter or corporation controlling an element that of right belongs solely to the people. If the legislature now in session plays into the hands of monopolists, there is a remedy for the people in the near future, and that is to elect new members who will stand by the people against the monopolists of monopolists.

"They have learned some clever political tricks in England—judging in this case we think them dull. Here is in miniature one of the blaring Tory posters that now decorate the dead walls of London:

The 1886 Flag. Flower Bally rose! Red and white the Disraeli-Beaconsfield Ireland Red Save the Queen

Of course there is much that is mysterious about the poster. It begs the question and does not put the case at all, but it is clear. They are a rather lively lot over the water still.

"Tis to crushed to earth shall rise again
The slanted years of evil are numbered
But Eternal, wounded, stiffen with pain
And the mocking hearts worshippers.

The evil-inspired fanatics who forged Archbishop Ryan's name to the infamous libel upon truth to which we have referred, are truly lost sight of in serial importance pro in connection therewith, which facts completely refute the foul calumny so slightly as the rays of the noon-day sun dispel the mist of a San Francisco fog. Now for the proof.

First: Mr. R. A. Bakewell of St. Louis, has publicly stated over his own signature that he wrote the article in question. Hence, that fact being established, it proves that the names of both Archbishop Kenrick and Archbishop Ryan were forged to a false document for the purpose of slandering the Catholic Church and of defaming the good name of two prominent American Prelates.

Secondly: Archbishop Ryan was not born until 1832, hence he was but twenty years old when Mr. Bakewell wrote the article which was garbled in order to raise the gorge of Know-nothings against Catholics. He was not even ordained until 1852, nor was he consecrated Bishop until 1872—twenty years after the article from which the calumny was concocted appeared in the Shepherd of the Valley.

Here, then, the case may rest so far as full proof of the fraudulent text and the forgery of the illustrious names of Archbishops Kenrick and Ryan are concerned. But will this exposure of the calumny stop its circulation? By no means. Truthfulness has prospered through prejudice, it feeds upon falsehood, flourishes by fanaticism and gains strength through slander. Men who call themselves "preachers of God's Word" will willfully write commentaries upon the "dangers of Catholicity, and preach from Protestant pulpits and Sectarian organs extracts like those we have reproduced from the London Christian. It makes no difference to the members of the Catholic Church how diametrically opposed to truth and possibility their polluted pretended sermons may be as long as "Popery" is the target and the devil furnishes ammunition for its destruction.

Our Blessed Lord designated one of the markers of His Church when He said to His followers these memorable words:

"Blessed are you when they shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all evil against you, for my sake, lying. Be glad and rejoice, for your reward is very great in heaven. For so they persecuted the prophets who were before you."

The light we have thrown upon this lying article will, we sincerely hope, help to open the eyes of non-Catholics to the disreputable "dodges" to which anti-Catholic detectives must whenever they dare not to deceive their dupes and to degenerate the character of a religion they cannot injure even through calumny. The Church has no fear of any lie which appears her through honest motives and on legitimate grounds. But as the inventor of that did not save our Blessed Redeemer from the traducing tongues of His enemies, so it cannot be expected that the servant will fare better than the Master, or that His Church will escape the malignity of evil-minded men.

There is not a single charge which the enemies of the Catholic Church can bring against her that is not as susceptible of refutation as the one we have thus thrilled. Blessed Redeemer, if Thou is passed on my way, I shall be in whatever they find and falsehoods floating around through the world during my pilgrimage. It is the one process under which we have sent in here, and in the fragments and analysis the authenticity of the base usual if bigotry which invariably forms their ignorance composition.

The Modern Apostle of Charity.

Monday last was the festival of a great servant of God, who—next to the Blessed Virgin—is the most dear to the Christian heart, and who is the most honored by the Catholics of this Republic, where numerous churches, colleges, hospitals and schools attest the veneration accorded to St. Vincent de Paul.

It is now a little over three centuries since this great saint was born in the hamlet of Ranquine, in the south of France, not far from the Pyrenees Mountains. He was ordained priest in the year 1600, and while still a young man, he had fallen into the hands of Turkish pirates and was carried by African pirates and sold into slavery. While in slavery St. Vincent accomplished much good in ministering unto Christian captives and the terrible hardships he was obliged to undergo, he never lost sight of his duties to God and to his fellow-man. In the great work of charity in his heart and caused him to love the poor, helpless, and forlorn, he found his true vocation.

In this excerpt from slavery, St. Vincent commenced the great work of his life in Clichy, near Paris, where he at once changed the moral atmosphere of the place by his piety, good works and good example that he ever after kept up in other places.

The Pope, as we have already stated, the only thing that prevented Mr. Vincent from being canonized as a Saint, was the fact that the Bishop in question had made a mistake in the name of the Saint, and that the Bishop in question had made a mistake in the name of the Saint, and that the Bishop in question had made a mistake in the name of the Saint, and

Farm and Home.

Fun That Farmers Have.

There is a popular belief that newspaper men are not paid on farm matters. But this is a mere and a delusion. If you doubt it, read this:

It is a frequent saying that the farmer has nothing to do but enjoy himself; that when the blizzards send in their reds he can draw his chair up to the stove, put his feet in the oven, and spend the day reading the Fliegende und Himmel Herald, and other moral works. According to tradition, this occupation is only disturbed when he adjourns to the table, and banquets on mince pie and dried meats. This is all a mistake. A close observer will see the industrious farmer crawl out of bed four hours before daylight, soften his boot with a hammer, and commence his day's work with a lantern in one hand and a bucket of slop in the other. He has from one to a thousand hogs, which shove their noses in his face, and tip the contents of his bucket on him, where it freezes until he looks like a skating rink. When he has escaped from the hog pen, he hoses up six or seven bushels, and crawls through a wire fence to mill twenty-seven cows. These animals wait until he has the bucket nearly filled, when they kick it over, sinning so that the contents will baloonize each parts of clothing as the hogs spared. Now and then they vary the monotony by kicking him inside of the bucket, which makes him feel tired and homesick. When the cows have been milked and he goes to feed the horses he finds the sorrel mare doubled up in the manger with colic. He then has to mix up a lot of assafoetida and water, which he attempts to pour down the animal's mouth, when it hits him on the teeth with its front foot and makes him wish he had never been born. He works around all morning with the old mare and then proceeds to carry the dun mules, which try to see which can kick the hardest, and by the time he is through he feels as though he had passed through a corn-sheller. When he has fed the hens, and watered the cattle, and hoisted three hours for a twenty cent pig, and dropped half a cord of alfa for the horses, and carried forty buckets of water for the horses, and shoiled three bushels of corn by hand, and shovaled a road through ten feet of snow, and milked the cows, and carried the mules, and doctored the old mare again in the evening, he goes to bed, and gets up again in the morning just three hours before daylight and commences the whole thing over again.

Dish-Washing and the Hands.

A writer for the Household, who ought to know, claims that with a little care, dishwashing will add to the looks of the hand rather than detract from its beauty. "My hands were swollen and red, but also plump, soft and warm; rubbing them with cream or vaseline keeps them so. Dora Smith wishes to practice on the piano after washing dishes, because she has her hand in the best order for the key-board. The best work for any one troubled with cold hands is dish-washing."

Removal of Warts.

A correspondent of the Therapeutic Gazette announces through its columns the virtues of castor oil in the removal of warts. Constantly applied for from two to four or six weeks only, he claims, in one day—it has not failed in my hands, says the writer, in any case of any size or long standing. The time it takes may try the patience of the user, but if faithfully used they will get their reward in the removal of the wart without leaving any scar. I have used it with some success in other growths, and it might be used with effective in the removal of certain kinds of cancer, especially cutaneous forms.

Breaking a Sitting Hen.

Which has been a problem, and hundreds of suggestions have been made in regard to the best method. Many of the proposed remedies are cruel and inflict unnecessary punishment on the poor hen for simply endeavoring to satisfy her natural inclination. The easiest method is to make a box composed of strips of laths. If lath, which is cheaper, have the top, sides and bottom of that material, and place the box on some kind of support, so that it will not touch the ground, or expand it from a hook. There ground, or expand it from a hook. There being a free circulation of air all around her, she will soon become disgusted.

What Bogus Butter Would Do.

Bogus butter has not only depressed the value of dairy products, but also strikes a much more serious blow at the dairy cow and the like breeds of butter cows. There are now in the United States about fifteen million dairy cows. A depreciation of ten dollars per head would represent a loss of one hundred and fifty million dollars, and this is no exaggerated representation. First, a reduction in the profits of dairy products, then a depreciation in the price of dairy stock.

Things a Housekeeper Should Know.

That salt should be eaten with nuts to aid digestion. That milk should not long make bitter butter. That rusty flat irons should be rubbed over with beeswax and lard. That it costs you in sewing to change your position frequently. That a hot, strong lemonade taken at bed time will break up a bad cold. That tough beef is made tender by lying a few minutes in vinegar water. That a little soda will remedy the headache caused by indigestion. That a cup of strong coffee will remove the odor of onions from the breath. That a cup of hot water drank before meals will prevent morning headache and heartache. That one in a faint should be laid on the flat of the back, head low, his clothes loosed, let him alone. That consumptive tight lacers may be arrested by sponging the body slightly in salt water. That a fever patient can be made cool and comfortable by frequent sponging off with soda water. That to heat eggs quickly, add a pinch of salt. Salt cools, and cold eggs froth rapidly. That the hair may be kept from falling out, after illness by a frequent application to the scalp of sage tea. That you can make cut glass from wash goods by rubbing them with the yolk of eggs before washing. That white spots upon varnished furniture will disappear if you hold a hot plate over them.

California Fruit in the East.

The California Fruit Union has received the following telegram relative to the arrival and condition of fruit recently shipped from this State to Eastern markets:

CHICAGO, July 14, 1886.

H. A. FAIRBANK, SECRETARY CALIFORNIA FRUIT UNION.—Apricots and peaches arriving in fine condition and are selling at from $1 to $1 25 per box for choice.

Pears which come in, in zero fair order, sell at from $1 50 to $1 75 per box.

Plums arrive in fair condition and sell at $1 50, $1 75 to $2 per box.

Earliest pears carry well and arrive in good order and sell readily at $3 50, $3 75, $4 and $4 25 per box according to condition.

The weather with us is fine, being cool and fruit should keep well.

PORTER BROS. CO.

Family Fun.

Beeswax for a Wedding Fee.

The story about the Vermonter who proposed to add 30 cents to the amount which the "law allowed" the parson for marrying him has brought a brand-new story of another wedding fee transaction in Vermont. It is from a glen village away back from the Connecticut in the hills, where money is scarce and the ways are primitive, and the people frequently prefer to pay for their purchases in kind. One day a young couple came to the parson as the village was stirring. They hadn't a cent of money, and it had been arranged that the bridegroom should bring a specified quantity of beeswax with which to pay the minister. The parson was thrifty—they have to be thrifty up that way—and took good care before he performed the ceremony, to weigh out the beeswax and see whether there was enough to pay his fee. There was.

"Why haven't you brought all the beeswax you agreed to?" asked the minister.

"All I had, parson."

"And you haven't got any more?"

"Not another ounce.

"Have you got any money at all?"

"Not a mite, parson."

There was a period of uncomfortable silence, during which the young farmer began to grow very much alarmed. He was afraid the parson wouldn't marry him unless he produced his stipendiary ounce of beeswax, and the prospect struck terror to his souls. The parson was inclined to let him "stew."

"Look s'here, parson!" said the countryman, finally, "I tell ye what ye do; you take the beeswax and marry us as far as it goes."

He Had to Do So.

Among the excursionists sitting on the City Hall steps yesterday noon to eat lunches were a young fellow who had a white awka lock and a girl in a pink dress who insisted on holding his hand and lopping on his shoulder. The two three gentlemen observed the situation and hatched for a second look. Their actions were noticed by the young man, and he released himself and came over to them and said:

"Gentlemen, let me explain. Did either one of you ever live in the country?"

"No," they replied in chorus.

"Then you don't understand the country girl. She requires to be hoed after a certain fashion. She wants a practical realization of the fact that you love her. I might tell her how much I adored her, beginning now and talking until dark, but she wouldn't realize it a tach part as much as if I put my arm around her waist and let her head drop on my shoulder. The one is talk—the other cold facts."

"Exactly—that's so," remarked the gentlemen.

"When a city girl is in love she consults the fact, or true to. The country girl is only too proud to give it away. I'm sure we squeezing hands. You've got to squeeze a country girl's hand almost so often as she's imagin you have got used about something."

"Exactly—that's so," observed the auditors.

"You may have noticed that I fed her crackers and she fed me cheese. It must have looked very silly to you, but that's another change of scenery. Perhaps you noticed that I put my head on her shoulder. You felt above her. I tell you, gentlemen, it's been exciting—somewhat so, even to my last ten years, and I'm giving you a solid pointer that there is only one correct way and this is it."

"Exactly—that's so," replied the gentlemen in chorus and they lifted their hats to the girl and walked off.

Every Number of Life's Couplet.

—Said the small boy: "Ma make Bob behave himself. Every time I hit him with the hammer he hollers."

—Lady to small boy: "Then you never had educational advantages! Don't you not that I know of. I've had airy eglas. If what you said is sense nor not. I don't cannot catch it."

—O mamma," said a child of five, "I'm so glad there was a Noah's Ark. Why, my child! exclaimed mamma. "Because, if there hadn't been any ark, I shouldn't have had a Noah's ark, and I do love my ark."

—Little Millie (to her father who has given her the smallest piece of pie on the plate): Pa, why is my piece of pie like Europe? Papa, thoughtfully: I don't know, why is it? Millie: Because it is the smallest of the grand divisions.

"Ma, what is this coal poul. I read about in the papers?" asked a little boy. "I am sure I don't know, was the reply, "unless it is where the sunset go in evening."

"My dear, said a mother, annoyed at some disparaging remarks of her little girl, "why can't you keep a secret? "Why, mamma, I can, I can keep a secret, cause," said little mischief demurely, "two of my front teeth are gone, mamma.

"Papa, what is heavy? Father—It is something, my son, that we can do without. Legend boy—What a luxury a mouthfull must be.

—Said the little girl nine, called her father to her bedside the other evening, "Papa, not the little diplomat, "I want to ask your advice. "Well, my dear, what is it about?" "What do you think will be best to give me on my birthday?

In a Big Hurry.

"If I buy some dress goods," asked a lady in a dry goods store, "can you deliver them at once?

"Yes'm," said the clerk.

"There will be no delay?

"No'm," said the clerk.

"Dammed! am in great haste.

"Yes'm," said the clerk.

"Very well, you may show me your sample."

In four hours and forty minutes the lady had selected what she wanted, and the tired clerk ordered the goods delivered at once.

His Father's Misfortune.

Old Lady (to small boy)—Aren't you afraid of catching cold, little boy, going about in your bare feet?

Small Boy—I never wear shoes, cept in cold weather.

Old Lady—Why not? Can't you get them?

Small Boy—No'm. My father is a shoemaker.

Good German Sense.

When the employees in an Indiana furniture factory operated by a German struck for eight hours a day he granted it, but when they wanted ten hours pay for eight hours he refused them on principle. "My friends, maybe I do as you like. I have an order from Shoppe for ten dozen chairs, I shift sleep him eight dozen and bill him for ten. If he does kick on me it shows me dot der rule works both ways and was then all right." The idea didn't work, and his men are receiving eight hours pay.

The story goes that the poet Whittier once lent a volume of Plato to a neighbor, and when the book was returned asked if he had read it. "Read it? Yes, I read it. "First rate," said the farmer, "I see he's got some of my ideas."

—Gentleman (just presumably married) to child:

D. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Unsurpassed as a remedy for Weakness, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and Nervous Debilitated Conditions. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

CARROLL & TILTON, 873 Market Street, Opp. Powell, Respectfully announce that they have opened THE LARGE STORE, WITH A LINE OF— GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING, Furnishing Goods, HATS, CAPS, ETC. Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our customers will be represented.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE, Importers and Dealers in BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS. Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc. MANUFACTORERS OF Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags 312 to 318 Sacramento and 419 Commercial Sts., S. F.

We pay for Cash and sell as low as possible. CARROLL & TILTON, 873 Market Street, Opp. Powell, And Also at 1008 & 1010 Clay St.

NATURALIZATION! Naturalization Certificates Obtained Here. Office Open Every Day and Evening. No. 313 BUSH STREET. All persons who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States can now obtain their naturalization papers at this office. Naturalization Ceases August 3, '86

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse, "Regular" Call-Board Warehouse, First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building. CAPACITY 15,000 TONS. TOWNSEND ST., Between First and Second. GEORGE H. LEMAN, Prop. Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates. Telephone No. 827.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE. The Occidental Self-Endowment Association. Incorporated under the laws of California. This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $1,000, $2,000 and $3,000, which are payable in five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: Members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every five years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every six years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the nearest relative. No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the contributors of their own family insurance, the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who hose certificates will fall due first as years pass; thus the money is put to great interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $164,000 to members, and paid in death and in full. The membership at present exceeds three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly exceeds $2,000. Reliable agents desired. Address, W. H. WARD, Secretary, Room 20 Phelan Building, San Francisco.

SILVER PILLS THE GREATEST Kidney and Liver Medicine Sold. Sold by Druggists and Dealers. DR. SILVER MED. CO. 1008 Market St., S. F.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY, PRINCIPAL OFFICE 648 MARKET STREET, 1156 MARKET ST. LAUNDRY, 12th St., bet. Folsom and Howard S. P. Col. JOHN B. McINTYRE, Book Binder and Blank Book Manufacturer, 423 CLAY and 428 COMMERCIAL STS. Rulings, Machine and Perforating Stamps to any style desired. Lines Machined a specialty.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. Extraction Painless. Specialties of Teeth, only $5. At THE DEAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 301 A. Market St.

West Droitwich Property to supply the wants of customers, please send for particulars. Sample 25 cts. Agents wanted everywhere. Mahogany opened Brilliant, cheap and quick. Address, Lyon & Healy, Chicago.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA. THE LIVER Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. Symptoms of its inaction or suppression are headache, dizziness, sallow complexion, sunken eyes, tongue discharge, a tongued, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These symptoms will disappear if you use BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood restorer. YPSEPSIA Variable colic, flatul, gnawing pretite at 4 or 5 hours after meals, acid stomach, heartburn, indigestion, constipation, bad breath in the mouth, costiveness, nervous headache, sleeplessness, low spirits, despondency, general debility, etc., are form of dyspepsia more prevalent than dyspepsia, and in all cases be treated with the same remedy, namely, BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, which is a cleanser for your blood. KIDNEYS Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through its tissues flow the waste fluids consequent on the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every five years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every six years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the nearest relative. No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the contributors of their own family insurance, the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members whose certificates will fall due first as years pass; thus the money is put to great interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $164,000 to members, and paid in death and in full. The membership at present exceeds three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly exceeds $2,000. Reliable agents desired. Address, W. H. WARD, Secretary, Room 20 Phelan Building, San Francisco. SCROFULA THE BLOOD, peculiar morbid condition of the blood, lets and through its tissues, is the blood or life. The great and manifestation of Scrofula is found in often minute specks, pimples on the face, eruptions, swellings of the glands, joints, etc. Scrofula is a disease of the blood, and BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is purified and being at the fountain, eliminates the blood and cleanses the system through the channels of life. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, BULL'S WORM DESTROYER, BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP. THE POPULAR REMEDIES THE DAY. KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., San Francisco. WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALER, Established 1875. We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods. The following are prices will answer quote:

Table Wines	50c, 60c, 75c, And $1.
Angelica Wines	$1, $1.50 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard Cal. Brandy	$1.
Old Port or Sherry	$1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies	$2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.
Bourbon Whiskies	$2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc.	$2 per gal. and upwards.

Orders Without Remittance Sent C.O.D.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST! THE CATHOLIC NATIONAL SERIES. Readers and Bible History. Ed. D. Sadlier, Publisher, 115 Pearl Street, New York. Cheapest and Most Popular School Books. The Primary, with The Intermediate, with The Grammar, with The Third Reader, The Fourth Reader, The Fifth Reader, The Sixth Reader, The Seventh Reader, Elementary Grammar, Grammar, Ward's Book, Catechism, Catechism of Christian Doctrine, Catechism of Christian Doctrine, Illustrated Edition, Catechism of Perseverance, Catechism, Abridged Catechism, Kathenkamp Katechismus, Catechisme Français, Catechismus Abrenlandes.

BENZIGER BROS., Printers to the Holy Apostolic See, NEW YORK: 36 Barclay St. CINCINNATI: Cor. Jackson and Deaborn Sts. CHICAGO: 178 Madison St.

TAILORS. JOHN KAVANAGH, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL. S. F. The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks Specialty.

MERCHANT TAILOR 113 Second street, A few doors south of Mission. San Francisco. Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES! Church Safes and Tabernacles. MICHELL & RICHARDS, 524 California Street, San Francisco.

WINES AND LIQUORS. NATIVE WINES. One Bottle, Half Bottle, From 20 to 50 cents. 10 to 25 cents. Native and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon and at moderate prices. J. CRABBENBLOM, 217 Dupont Street.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. KNABE PIANOS. Unqualifiedly and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World. A. L. BANCROFT & CO., Sole Agents for Pacific Coast. ESTEY PIANOS. Formerly the Fair Arbion Piano. THE OLD FAVORITE! (Removed Hogan Address) BENJ. CURTAZ & SON, 20, O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

H. M. NEWHALL & CO., Shipping and Commission Merchants. GENERAL AGENTS National Assurance Company of Ireland, Atlas Assurance Company of Hoylston Mutual Insurance Company of Boston. OFFICE, 308 BATTERY ST. San Francisco.

CATARRH Positively Cured by the Use of Dr. Sanford's Radical Cure. Sold by Druggists, or Sent Free, $1. Dr. Sanford, Chemist, New York.

DIVIDEND NOTICE. The German Savings and Loan Society. DIVIDEND NOTICE. THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY. Practical Tailor (cutting from the life), 104 Bush Street, corner of Kearny. The German Savings and Loan Society, has declared a dividend on its deposits for the year ending June 30, 1886, at the rate of four and one-half per cent per annum, on all sums of five dollars and upwards, payable on and after the first day of July, 1886. By order, HEIN, LETTE, Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL. URSULINE ACADEMY, FOR YOUNG LADIES, SANTA ROSA, - - SONOMA CO., CAL. For Particulars Address the Superiores of the Ursulines, Santa Rosa.

EDUCATIONAL. SANTA CLARA COLLEGE SANTA CLARA, - - CALIFORNIA! This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It now consists of large buildings, with extensive shady play grounds, covered promenades, enclosing gardens, etc. It possesses a complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It also has practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Civil Engineering, Mechanical Drawing, Painting, etc. The library is now building 10x40 feet and has nearly 5,000 volumes. Its collection is constantly increasing. Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific and Certificates in the Commercial course. TERMS: (Payable semi annually in advance) Matriculation Fee, to be paid first year, $15 00. Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches Washing and Mending of Linen. School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Bedding, etc., per session, at the lowest rates. For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to Rt. Rev. Bishop Alemany, San Francisco. REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J. President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME SAN JOSE, - - CALIFORNIA. THIS INSTITUTION (OFFERING PUPILS every advantage that a home could afford) is ready to receive a still enlarged attendance. Situated in the Garden City, it is easily accessible by the State Legislature, and enjoys a reputation second to no other Institution of the State. Its Graduates are to be found in every Institution. Its Graduates are to be found in every Institution. Its Graduates are to be found in every Institution with the London guilds, which own most of the land in Derry. He, of course, will find a seat elsewhere, as will Mr. O'Brien if really beaten in Tyrone, which is unlikely. At least three of this new Nationalists by. At least three of this new Nationalists will be Protestants in pursuance of a general policy of having Catholic constituencies return them as a rebuke to Orange bigotry. Mr. Pinkerton, who is returned for Carlisle (Salvary, where Mr. Lysaght declined to run, is an Orange Protestant of impeachable talents. Pierce Mahoney is a Kerry landlord, who will be a marked figure in Irelands interest. He is tall and handsome, a fine speaker, and was a sub-commissioner in the first land court, being dropped as a result of a landlord intrigue because he reduced rents. He will come to Parliament to efface that stain this lowest rents in Connemara are an impossible burden on the tenantry, and will throw a flood of light on the social miseries in Ireland. The third Protestant is Mr. MacDonald, who will come from Omagh. He is an honor man of Trinity College, with splendid powers of speech. He has been blind from his birth, and is, as Henry Fawcett was, led by his wife.

THE HOME RULE BATTLE.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

ALTHOUGH THE ODDS IS TWELVE WITH SIX

all sorts of speculations, yet is pretty safe to predict that Mr. Gladstone will resign before Parliament convenes. He cannot do this otherwise, since he withdrawal Lord Salisbury on sharply for clinging to office in the face of an adverse election last winter, thus preventing the Liberals from going at the head of an Irish bill at once. It is the prerogative of the retiring Premier to advise the Queen who his successor shall be sent for to form a new Ministry, and it is an open national question whether Mr. Gladstone will say Lord Salisbury or Lord Hartington. The balance seems, however, that the latter will be beaten to-day, but in any event he would find it next to impossible to form a Ministry. The Spectator is all sagacious for the experiment of a Hartington Ministry, but this is probably in recognition of the fact that this is the last chance, such as it is, with which moderate Whigs will enter have at the Premier-ship.

There is an obvious lack of elation among the intelligent opponents of Mr. Gladstone at the victory. They see that their troubles are only beginning. No man is wise enough to imagine the policy on which the Tories and Unionists would be able permanently to agree and which Mr. Gladstone and the Irish cannot tear to pieces.

Monday's Daily News will contain letter from T. P. O'Connor announcing his intention of bringing in a bill during the first days of the session for the suppression of that vast boycotting institution known as the Primrose League, and inviting people everywhere to send his proof of the great minister power it is exerting in the present election. He can easily make out a stronger case against the Primrose League than the Tories can against the Irish League, and thus emasculate the policy of coercion.

"SOTHWELL IS DOWN"

in the elections here, and many a pretty tear with Bobbie Burns. Gladstone is down—has been flung clear out of his saddle as Edinburgh.

Trevelyan is down, as an Irish member and Home-Ruler I am bound to rejoice over Goschen's fall. He was a worse enemy of the Irish cause by far than Chamberlain. Every one knows Chamberlain is to be an ambitious politician in your American sense of the word—a man determined to succeed in Parliamentary life—to succeed honestly if he can, but to succeed anyhow. Goschen, on the other hand, is a high-minded independence, professes no ties for regard independence, professes not to care a rap for office, and is an independent English principle only. I doesn't say that is my opinion of Goschen, but it is the common opinion; certainly it is the opinion Goschen likes spread abroad concerning his political character and purposes. Therefore, when Goschen spoke up against Gladstone and home rule a certain class of persons declared that Goschen spoke in the voice of English public opinion and was English and Protestant and prophetic guide.

I cannot help rejoicing that the Elimbargh constituency, which elected Goschen by a few months ago by a large majority, has rejected him now by a majority still larger. The issue was distinctly home rule or anti-home rule. Goschen pronounced against home rule. his constituency has pronounced against him.

ANOTHER PRETTY FELLOW DOWN

is Sir Charles Dilke. I am sorry for Dilke. He is a Home Ruler on principle—has been so for ever so many years. It must have cost him a keen pang to separate from Chamberlain on this question and home rule. They were too strong, does friends when the Gladstone Government was formed in 1880. Dilke, then a man of far greater mark than Chamberlain, refused to join the Administration unless Chamberlain was offered a place in the Cabinet. Gladstone at first demurred. He afterward agreed to Dilke's terms for the sake of securing Dilke; so Chamberlain became a member of the Cabinet, which he was content to hold a position in the Administration outside the charmed circle of the Cabinet. Dilke rose to a Cabinet office in good time, but it is to his credit that he preferred his friend before himself and lifted Chamberlain by one push to a place it would otherwise have cost Chamberlain years and years to attain. Now they separate; Dilke goes one way, Chamberlain another; Dilke out of Parliament, Chamberlain in.

Yet another pretty fellow is Joseph Cowen of Newcastle. Cowen is not conquered. He merely fell out of the ranks, drop to the behind, not being indined, or rather not able to carry on the fight any longer. Cowen is in feeble health and failing skill. He is in a feeble health and failing skill. He is comparatively a young man in political life, but of modest, shrinking temperament, and not quite content with the responsibility of managing political affairs through the canvass. The House of Commons loses in Cowen one of its very finest speakers; more than that, one of its greatest orators.

THE SONG OF THE SWINE PRESS

the result is not altogether unsatisfactory. Sir George Trevelyan's grizzly visage has been added to-day to the sculpture of Mr. Goschen, Mr. Kumser, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Heald, Mr. Jenkins and John Ramsden, which hang on the portcille of Hawarden Castle, and Albert Grey's mug inevitably follows. This is worth something particularly to a chieftain so fond of Jingo matches. Chamberlain is reported to be. On the other hand, not many raised hemlets men of Lord Cliff Mac have gone down in the fray. Doubtless Mr. Joseph Arch, who was unfortunately beaten by the landlords and the haymakers at work all day, will be the most conspicuous. Joseph Arch is the veteran of the House of Commons smoking-room of the Tuesday lingers.

Among those who assumed the party split will make many curious fands inside of families and among old-time friends. John Bright, whose inability to keep out of a single one is the pride of his friends, is reported to have lost his seat before him. Bright members to lose his seat before him. Bright members to lose his seat before him. Bright members to lose

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

RED GUAY'S REVENGE

As steel dark thoughts to vee so
Make the shadows frown and lour,
Over the plains of Texas
Over a marauding band
Over a maiden Mexican
Over a young—young Guay.
Over a young man the prisoner
The prairie wilds and wild.

"Ugh! ugh! the sound of my wooing
Is music unto me!
Red as a rose's crowd
"I'll plant the betrothal bed
Thou spake the chief—red Guay,
Woo, woo, you maidenly—Mary
Woo to the home on the prairie"
The prairie wilds and wild.

A table—spread in ashes,
A crook—dark, sooty heart; and alone
A gray sire sorpel in gashes
A wrath—dark! red—eye with hair
Told of the ire of Guay,
Told of the woe of Mary
Of rule wrought on the corpse
The prairie wilds and wild.

An silent ruthless flying
O'er mountain mountain fled,
And wized as unknown sighing
Over the wreath and bed.
Old Tobin's daughter—Mary,
Found on a heart wild Guay,
Spud shrieking over the prairie
The prairie wilds and wild.

Stalked in sombre silence
Gathered the candle for chase,
From the day's toilet and plain
Blood for the blood of Guay!
Blood for the blood of Mary
Blood for the wreck on the prairie
The prairie wilds and wild.

Quoth Rockdale: "See to the rifle
And bathe bowie sharp!
Let the lamon out a tetter
And make fleet your steeds,
In ranger as, nor dare ye
Stay or pause—but hasten
Black hander! death on the prairie
The prairie wilds and wild.

When wakel the chief—than slaughter
Gnd from the rifle blazed,
Tobin's widow'd daughter
Fought bravely—but perished.
He lifted hel—his wooing—
Lad as a crow's cooing—
Found Guay corpsed and raving
The prairie wilds and wild.

P. S. Dugan.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SHADOW THAT GOES BEFORE.

Oh! faint the power of Beauty's dower
Is unknown to Beauty's day;
Unknown the power of Beauty's dower
Is unknown to Beauty's day.
Beauty is frail and tempters assail
Her bower with their subtle lie,
And tempers are wrought, and sorrow and pain,
And alone is her sin as die.
Yet, vain she seeks to struggle alone
To the place she has lost, once more,
For the Spectre of Guilt still hauntes her ever,
And the Shadow goes on before!

The shadow of Guilt! the Shadow of Sin!
Where her wanderings she may be,
Still Death follows her ever, and ever
To the night of Eternity.
Oh, gilded sins—gilded Age
Who scoff! Virtue and Right!
Oh, Pities! dazzled! Oh, Pities!
Whose wills are a fatal blight!
How little repent! the wretch yet wrec.
Are a curse to themselves a curse;
Yet little a wrec, that the never dies
That the Shadow goes on before!

Cultured Beauty may avoid Sin
In the halls of the great on Earth,
And be petted with wealth and pomp,
With flattery and with mirth;
But the spice so enhanced by her dull dear ear
Upheard in the cries of glee,
For the laurel leaves of Black Despair
Have planted Love's sympathy.
Can song be her only companion start
To a dirge for the days of yore,
Or amongst Virtue's flowers will fad her heart
For the Shadow had gone before!

Lonely! lonely! lonely! lonely!
Lonely! lonely! lonely!
Lonely! lonely! lonely!

THE MONITOR.

FIFTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 1896.

"The Catholic press is a power for Catholicity, and every Catholic society of the same should support it. Its defends our religion against the attacks of infidelity, and by sustaining it, we, to a certain extent, sustain our religion. Therefore, as a Christian duty, subscribe for it, pay it, and induce your wives and daughters, by parening it, with spotless conscience, to do the same and follow Catholic."—Father Dennis, D. D.

Editorial Notes.

—Archbishop Riohard, of Lariss, will succeed Cardinal Gulbert as Archbishop of Paris.

—Bishop Gilmour's address at the late "congress of churches" is receiving the commendation of Protestant ministers.

—Rev. Landelinus Hoek, of Alsace-Lorraine, has been elected Provincial of the Brothers of Mercy in the United States.

—The Tammany Society of New York contributed $30,000 to the Irish Parliamentary Fund and the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Conaty, over $20,000 for the same patriotic purpose.

—The University of Notre Dame has COMPLETED THE ELECTRIC PLANT FOR ITS BUILDINGS, and on Major Henry F. Brownson, son of the late Dr. Brownson.

—His Grace the Archbishop of Melbourne has laid the corner-stone of a residence for the Carmelite Fathers, near Port Melbourne. This is the first house of the Order erected in Victoria.

—The members of the Irish Parliamentary Party selected as delegates to the Chicago convention next month are Michael Davitt and William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland. We hope they may be induced to visit this coast, where they will receive a hearty welcome.

—A good Catholic of Charlottetown, P. E. I., has offered $40,000 towards the building of a new Cathedral, if a similar sum is raised by the congregation. We suggest to some equally good Catholic of this State make a similar offer in the interest of our new Cathedral. Who speaks first!

—While Mass was being celebrated on a recent Sunday morning in the Church of the Holy Spirit at Prague, the building was struck by lightning, and the officiating priest for the moment appeared as if enveloped in flames. He nevertheless remained entirely unhurt.

—A Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Indulgences of January 19th last, reduces the indulgence of 200 days, to be gained once a day, and applicable by suffrage to the souls in Purgatory, by any one who, at least with contrite heart, devoutly recites the Litanies of the Holy Name of Jesus as they are published in that Decree and not otherwise.

—The Unita Cattolica reports the ordination of Mgr. Sbarretti, Secretary of Consistory, born in Florence, and educated in St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. He became a convert to the Catholic Church in 1884, and has been ordained priest.

—Among the hundreds of ecclesiastical students recently presented by Archbishop Walsh of Dublin, we notice among those of All Hallows College who received Subdeaconship the names of Rev. Cornelius Sheehan of the Diocese of Grass Valley, also Rev. Jeremiah Leahy and Rev. Wm. Quill of this Archdiocese. At the same time Rev. Thomas Kirby, also for this Archdiocese, received the Order of Deacon.

—A decree of the Congregation of Rites, approved by his Holiness Leo XIII., and solemnly published on the Feast of St. Camillus of Lellis (July 15th) proclaims that Saint, with St. John of God, protector of all hospitals and of the sick in general. The names of these two heroes of charity will be added to the Litany of the Dying. They were especially remarkable for their tender devotion to the sick and suffering.

—Our esteemed contemporary, the Boston Pilot, says: "The change of Puritan regard for Catholics may be seen every day by such straws in the wind as the Presidency of the Boston University Alumni (Law School) association being given to a Catholic priest, the Rev. Father Charles J. Harna, of Providence, R. I., author of the famous "Freedom of Worship Bill." Father Horne presided at the annual reunion of the alumni last week in Boston, in which fifty gentlemen participated, many of whom were eminent in their profession."

—The letter from Cardinal Manning which we publish on the first page is a grand defence of Irish Catholics and a masterpiece of logical argument. It is resplendent with epigrammatic gems that will live in literature long ages after their renowned author has been called to his reward. Here are a few samples from the mine of the Cardinal's mind: "The Catholic people"—"have been always conspicuous examples of tolerance respecting that liberty of conscience which has been cruelly denied to them."—"Children of martyrs are not persecutors."—"From suffering persecuted they had learned to be merciful."—"Force may make hypocrites: it never generates faith."—"The time is come when Ireland shall be handed over to itself. Its people have attained their majority."—"The transfer of self-government is not to Mr. Parnell nor to the Parnellites, but to Ireland and the Irish people."

—"What Mr. Parnell and his singularly able lieutenants have accomplished will never be forgotten, but it is Ireland that, by self-control, will order and uphold herself."—"We are beginning in the nineteenth century to undo the miseries of the seventeenth and eighteenth." "If our Irish brethren have faults, they are for the most part what England has made them."

Why Cardinals and Priests wear Vestments. Brother Hughes, a Methodist Brother.

Notwithstanding the churlish manner exhibited towards us by our evangelical Methodist confirer, in return for all the literary light we are pouring into his hitherto darkened mental region, we shall continue in charity to instruct

Dear Brother Hughes:
Who hates the "Hail Mary,"

in many matters connected with Christianity, but regarding which also that we have to say it!—his mind is as dark as barn full of black cats!

Our benighted brother does not seem to understand how it is possible for Cardinal Gibbons or any priest in the Catholic Church to wear what he literally styles a "fantastic outfit," and he thinks he settles the whole matter by asserting that the Son of God—"our great High Priest, did not wear such things, nor did Peter, nor Paul, nor John."

The poetical adage which truthfully tells us that

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,"

holds true in religion just as it does in secular affairs, and we feel deep sympathy for the half-shell education which many Protestant preachers possess concerning even the commonest attributes of Christianity. Man like our mistaken Methodist fellow journalist—

Good Brother McCrary
Who is to contrary,

sees a priest celebrating Mass in a Catholic Church, and the first object that excites their curiosity is the "fantastic outfit" which he wears. They cannot imagine why he wears such "theatrical toggery," and yet—as in many other matters connected with the Catholic Church—the priest has the Word of God, scriptural sanction and the law of ancient custom on his side, whilst those who so foolishly criticise him—do so out of their illiteracy concerning ecclesiastical history, or their invincible ignorance.

For the information of all such people as may think it "cruel fun" to criticise the "fantastic outfit" of a priest when celebrating Mass, let us simply state that every article of his dress has a particular meaning, and we feel deep sympathy with the priest when we see him confused and cranky confirer, who knows how goshingly he would pose his Pharisaical lips and utter the affirmative "yes, verily!" But our Blessed Lord had no wife, and our worker in the iniquity of Wesleyanism has, it is an open contradiction when "knocks out" Brother McCrary on "the first base." Nor did Peter, Paul or John wear ever closed "Temples of Worship and went on a jonkatting tour for summer vacation! Yet the Methodist preacher performs this duty faithfully every year—leaving their flocks to feed short gospel grass during their interval of idleness! Does the Bible nonsenseance much less commend such a mockery of devotion! Methodism, it would seem, is a kind of meteorological mongrelism of Christianity, because its ministerial attires in winter and falls below zero in summer! Where in the scriptures do we find the Apostles carrying in a Pacific Grove like the Methodist marriage-market in Monterey? To use the words of

Good Brother McCrary
Who is to contrary,

neither "our great High priest, nor Peter, nor Paul, nor John," constituted any of these curious pranks of crooked Methodism, and hence our mistaken Methodist confirer is in the wrong company if he desires to imitate our Blessed Lord or the Apostles in his rule of life.

Almighty God has directed that ecclesiastical edifices should be erected specially for His worship and for that purpose alone. Are the meeting-houses of Methodism such tabernacles? Most assuredly not. They are used for what is fantastically called "worship" on "Sabbath," a political meeting on Monday, an itinerant jaggler on Tuesday, a woman's rights ring-around on Wednesday, a tee-totallers out on Thursday, a free-love feast on Friday and a gingo-pop pogel gathering on Saturday! Such are not the tabernacles which Almighty God means when He says: "My house is a house of prayer." In the same way, precisely, our Heavenly Father designed that those engaged in His service, offering up sacrifice in His name and for His greater honor and glory, should have vestments prepared and blessed for that purpose alone, and not only by those who are consecrated to His service. How is it with Methodist parsons? Doubtless, in their evangelical genius, they imagine that the shabbiest suits they wear are so filled with sanctity as to arouse the admiration of all the angels and saints in heaven! The embroidered perfume of their Christian perfection permeates into the precincts of paradise and makes the very saints scowl sinners in their own estimation! When Brother Hobblegaper stands before the Lord, in his blue-black suit of broadcloth, no doubt he feels that Almighty God ought to be proud of having such a huge mountain of holiness to represent Him on earth! This is Methodism hypified, and when such people set out to criticise the Catholic Church, they should first possess themselves of sufficient knowledge to do so successfully, or else hide their ignorance beneath the mantle of silence.

We do not like to have to speak our sentiments: Brother so frequently, but we feel that we should do so, lest we spoil the child—hence we pelse the editorial whipper in the act and bring it down slap-bang! Methodism is so full of such things we feel bound to do so, and we do so with deep sympathy for our Methodist brothers and sisters, who are so ignorant of Catholicity, and then free from the wrath to come. Every sin brings its own punishment, and if

Good Brother McCrary
Will be contrary,

he must only expect to have his sect scourged scientifically upon all subjects wherein his Wesleyan teaching has turned truth into falsehood and transformed into a "fantastic outfit" the vestments designed by Almighty God and ordered by Him to be worn by His priests—but which He never intended should be so desecrated as to deform the human character or to cover the shoulders of sectarians. Here for the present we must end:

Although we shall never pray unto Pluthing the truth to Brother McCrary.

Home Rule Must be Granted.

It is now generally admitted by both the adversaries and the friends of Ireland that some measure of Home Rule will have to be granted to Ireland by the Conservative Tory Administration. Mr. Justin McCarthy says so very plainly in his letter which we publish on the first page, and now we find an Independent Tory, C. F. Thorold Rogers—the well-known Oxford professor and author, predicting that no legislation is possible in Parliament until the Irish difficulty is solved. In a letter on this subject Professor Rogers says "the settlement of the Irish Home Rule question is inevitable; for a dead-lock in Parliament is unavoidable, and justly so, till at least as much as the late bill is conceded. The present situation is due partly to an intrigue of some Radicals against Mr. Gladstone personally, and partly to the hatred of the antisemitic Whigs. The form or have made a tool of Mr. Bright. His great and just reputation has discouraged thousands of Liberals from voting at all, and it is to their honor that they have hesitated to think him in the wrong. Long and well as I have known him I can find no reason for his action beyond his dislike of the past tactics of this Irish party, in which, as I stated in the House of Commons, they made, I think, a tactical error. That the Home Rule policy will finally and speedily prevail, I have no doubt. Politically, this religion, truth has its merits and its persecutors, some of the latter acting blindly and honestly, some of them from interested motives. I earnestly hope that the friends of Irish liberty or Irish progress will not martyrize, nay, can of the Dreyfusses of Southwark, in the last Parliament, but I can hardly see this election because of his advocacy of Home Rule.

Martyrs for the Faith.

The Rev. Directors of the Foreign Missionary Seminary have just published their report upon the labors of the missionaries belonging to their order during the year 1885. It is sorrowful, and yet consoling reading. For over two hundred years this Foreign Mission Seminary has not unceasingly suffered from barbarous persecution in distant lands. But some of the years that have passed have witnessed so many terrible calamities as that of 1885. Ten of its missionary priests put to the sword, twelve native priests massacred, together with thirty-five native nuns, and 50,000 Christians, one mission destroyed, with its 200 established missions; 200 churches and chapels, 2 seminaries, 40 schools, 70 residences of missionaries and native priests, 12 orphanages, 12 Religious Communities, 1 printing establishment, and the private homes of 50,000 Christians sacked and burned—such is the dreadful record of the year 1885. The sadness of this narrative of persecution and martyrdom is somewhat assuaged by the consoling knowledge that the Seminary of Bayieux was during the same year, administered to 12,705 adult pagans, 200 heretics, and 19,966 pagan infants in danger of death.

New York, July 26.—There is a sensational report in Brooklyn that William J. Sherman, a Catholic priest, has broken his vows and married a girl, however of whose refusal to marry him several years ago he became a priest.

It is just as well to state that William J. Sherman is not a Catholic priest. He has been for some time studying for the priesthood, but if he discovered that he had no vocation, he has acted wisely if—as the dispatch states—he has married. The whole dispatch—it looks to us—is one of that class which anti-Catholic calumniators cannot occasionally so as to create a sensation and to show to the world that the devil is neither dead nor sleeping.

—The press of California—with a few exceptions—deserves well of the people of the whole country for its fearless exposure of the water-rights of the people and against the gluttonous maw of monopolists who would steal the very air we breathe if they could bottle it and purchase a legislature to legalize their action. The water in every river and rivulet in the land is the public property of the people, and the legislator who votes to give it to any corporation or individual so he can charge his fellow-citizens for using it, is an enemy of the people and a foe to true progress. The manner in which the monopolists manage to hood-wink the people on this subject is well set forth on the fifth page of this issue, and is sufficient to put every citizen of California upon his guard so as to protect his common rights of its people against the designs of corporation commissioners who grease for gold in their only god.

A NOTABLE ROMAN PRELATE.

A Friend of Ireland in Her Darkest Days.

Bishop Eric Maria Fitzsimon Molloy, is at present in the city and is the guest of the Jesuit Fathers. He is an Irishman with the dignitary of the Church, a Monsignor representative present at the second plenary Council of Baltimore, where he was consecrated Bishop of Ardfert and Aghadoe, Archbishop Gibbons with the dignity of Cardinal. After a brief visit to Boston, Monsignor Molloy will be the guest of his old friend and fellow-countrymen, Very Rev. A. Mottet, O.M., Provincial of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate in Our Lady of Sorrows on West Madison street, leaving Chicago on the 19th inst. Mgr. Molloy arrived in this city on the 6th, and he is enjoying great delight at the magnificent scenery and the expansive country through which he passed to reach the Pacific coast. He is somewhat familiar with many Eastern cities, having been invited by Archbishop McCloskey during his Eminence's visit to Rome in 1875, to make out of his country on a visit to his friend, Mgr. Mortel, accordingly, resided in New York from 1875 to 1881.

When the Italian journal known as the Unione was started in Rome as the official organ of the Nineteenth Parliament, Mgr. Molloy was on the staff of Mgr. Theodolo Mario Schiaffino, editor-in-chief, and view obtained for him the position of Chaplain to all readers of the Minerva at that time will remember, was a leading friend of Ireland in her darkest days, and many of its brilliant articles were translated for those columns by our countrymen, Rev. E. J. Hartleton, who was subsequently elevated to the ordinate of the Bishopric of Ardfert and Aghadoe, and Rev. Dr. Kelly, the Irish Parliamentarian, whose name will be greatly cherished by the Irish people throughout the world—outside of England.

Mgr. Molloy is a distinguished linguist, speaks the English tongue with a rare purity of accent, and many millions of Catholics of Ireland, who have visited Rome in past years, found through him a friendly introduction to illustrious members of the Vatican Court. All those who have enjoyed his friendship, have spoken with enthusiastic admiration of the noble qualities of his heart, and of the charming conversation and wit of his tongue. His large erudition and the extensive linguistic knowledge which he found himself possessed of, have won many friends for him in Archbishop.

On the Sunday Mgr. Molloy celebrated Mass and preached in the Italian Church, and on next Sunday—feast of St Ignatius he will celebrate the Mass and preach in the Jesuit church. We will return from Europe in order to hear the eloquent discourse of his friend, the pastor of the celebrated Cathedral of Florence, which he is one of the Canons—a distinguished ecclesiastic—and which he will deliver in the Cathedral of Florence after his return from the American Continent.

In conversation Mgr. Molloy is affability itself, and a stranger finds himself in his presence immediately at ease. He is a man of the people, running all sophistication—thus commending a man who, in appearance to be thoroughly an Italian, about 50 years of age and the cultivated manhood and happiness combined. He speaks English with a rich Irish brogue, and pleasure and enthusiasm upon the ground that he is speaking to a people of generous and intelligent nationality. He feels it as a blessed duty to visit the Jesuits, who are as Amerige Vespucci, the notable Italian navigator, from whom the name of that portion of the Western Hemisphere, the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, in the exercise of all the religious ministrations, of all ministrations, of all sacrifices, of all self-denials, of all heroic virtues, of all intellectual and scientific attainments, in fine, the exercise of all the Christian faculties, in fine, the exercise of all the virtues of a true priest, in a true spirit, and in the exercise of the Vice of Christ, the Jesuits are the Fathers. Rome owes the name of the New Hemisphere, perhaps a little, in fact, in such of the papal visions of Rome may be found at least one century dedicated to the Lady of the Rosary, but in the Vatican halls are three. (Annales de Rosario, Oct. 1896.) Dedicated St. Francis Borgia, St. Ignatius, and the Lady Rosary. Such is the way, notwithstanding the immense and, we fear, well-founded apprehensions of the official position, found him in one's every day the Rosary and to meditate in its mysteries. It was consoling to hear his devotion to the Mother of God that he became a little pale in the world, the strength of intellect, and the blessed attributes his vocation in the Dominican Society of Jesus (Pierrefique Sa. Jesus, Pere Jerdin de Rosario, en 1884, vol. 1, page 270).

THE MYSTERIES OF THE ROSARY.

Of the Rosary, the Mysteries of the Rosary every day. One of his courtiers who was not a group as he, having discovered him on one occasion in the chapel in his hands, expressed somewhat astonished at seeing him prayers, and to the astonished people he answered, "Ah, I have nothing to do, I have nothing to do." Thus, my nobles, my lords, I have nothing to do, I have nothing to do, I have nothing to do

Farm and Home.

The May Business.

Ranchers are naturally discouraged in their attempts at raising hay as a profitable crop and with reason. The cost of raising the hay and baling it amounts to just about $6 50 per ton. If it is sold in San Francisco, which is about the only market available at this season, the shipping and commission brings up the cost to $8 50 more, making a total cost per ton when delivered of $15. High as our bringing $17 a ton is San Francisco, which leaves the small margin of $1 per ton to the producer. Land devoted to hay produces an average of two tons to the acre, which leaves the profits of an acre of land only $2. The present prices are lower than any that have been quoted, by reason of the immense supply on hand, and also on account of the poor quality of the first shipments, it being baled too green, and the inferior quality being taken as a sample of that which followed it. Farmers are growing on all sides, on account of the low price of hay, but as it is the first crop they use of hay, but as it is the first crop they can raise, they throw it into the market in order to get the cash to go ahead with a more profitable harvest. But it seems a shame to cultivate the magnificent land of this valley at a profit of only $2 to the acre. A generally new other crop would pay better than the hay crop of this season.—Hollister Free Lance.

Kid Bodquitts.

One of the very latest ideas for ladies whose time hang heavy on their hands is to make a patch work bedquilt out of the backs of discarded kid gloves. To match and combine the colors, look of the kid and the ornamental stitching, and to fit in the shapes, affords an occupation for more fascinating and prolonged than "crazy patchwork." When finished, the quilt must be lined with a delicate soft silk or satin. It will really be little less than a little nearer to being worth the trouble of making it than might be imagined.

Tons of Dried Apricots.

On Wednesday, O. W. Thimel shipped five and a half tons of dried apricots to Boston office. They were fine—just as natural in color as the fresh fruit, and not dried too much. Mr. Thimel put 15 cents per pound for the apricots. The fruit will go to the Eastern markets.—Winters Express.

Fruit Packed in Tubs.

A little but lies on the reporter's table that looks as if a revolution was to be wrought in the shipping of fruit to a long distance in a natural state. The box is lined on all six sides with tule woven together, and the inside is filled with the same substance, cut up into fine particles. The tule holds the lining and in the dust is dry as timber, and almost without weight. Much has been said about shipping grapes and other fruit East in a natural state in cork dust, and fruit dealers in the large cities are sending for tules to see with this object in view. It looks as if the whole question was solved. There is plenty of tule in California. It is easily accessible at many places in the State. It is cheap, easily gathered, dried and prepared for use. The cost of the material is the very light as compared with the grand results to be obtained. The added weight to the box of fruit will be very little and trivial freight to pay. The lining of the tule strips on the sides of the box will prevent glass from breaking when wine or brandy is shipped in glass. Altogether, for a cheap, light and dry product of all the river bottoms and other damp places in the State. If it works as one must expect it will, the whole question of shipping fruit is solved, and a great industry is formed in the State.—Los Angeles Herald.

Prices of California Products.

The Vacaville Reporter of the 15th inst. says: To prove that our orchardists and vegetable raisers are making money this season, we produce some statistics. M. Fox has taken from 55 acres in fruit and vegetables—only part in bearing—$5,000 clear of all expenses. Dr. Cargill, from 29 acres in vegetables, raised among green pea vines, the net proceed $2,000. Mrs. E. Sahrbrecht has planted 20 acres of 50,000 cash received her place for $1,500 each, which has been paid, besides netting at least $1,000 clear profit to the parties who had the place. A. J. Lyons, from 125 plum trees, realized $222; from 20 trees of another variety, $160; clear, and from 150 apricot trees, about $400. He has contracted his entire peach crop to Flower & Co., Sacramento, at 90c for 4½ inch boxes (boxes furnished). Mrs. M. Jagger sold little year, from 400 4-year old trees, over 2,000 boxes of apricots, netting about $1,500 from less than 4 acres. H. J. W. Brink had, on about 25 acres of apricots, 100 acres of fruit, which they sold at 1½ per lb., they picking the fruit, everything else furnished. They also sold their crop of early peaches at 6c per lb. net, and their early peaches at 6c per lb. and entire large crop at 1½ per crate of 50 lbs. each (crates and packers furnished). F. B. McKevitt has just finished shipping his apricots from 4 acres of 5-year-old trees and 4 acres of 4-year-old trees, the net proceed on which is $5,000. These are no exceptional cases produced for sugar-coating, as we know that all of our fruit and vegetable raisers are doing extra well.

"A Family Doctor" on Suppers.

But as to suppers: I have always been of the opinion that sleep was bad. I have not the slightest doubt that my readers will bear witness to the truth of what I say from their own personal experience, and is ten times more pronounced, and is ten times worse if beer is to be partaken with it. Beer and disorded kid gloves. To match and combine the colors, look of the kid and the ornamental stitching, and to fit in the shapes, affords an occupation for more fascinating and prolonged than "crazy patchwork." When finished, the quilt must be lined with a delicate soft silk or satin. It will really be little less than a little nearer to being worth the trouble of making it than might be imagined.

Tons of Dried Apricots.

On Wednesday, O. W. Thimel shipped five and a half tons of dried apricots to Boston office. They were fine—just as natural in color as the fresh fruit, and not dried too much. Mr. Thimel put 15 cents per pound for the apricots. The fruit will go to the Eastern markets.—Winters Express.

Fruit Packed in Tubs.

A little but lies on the reporter's table that looks as if a revolution was to be wrought in the shipping of fruit to a long distance in a natural state. The box is lined on all six sides with tule woven together, and the inside is filled with the same substance, cut up into fine particles. The tule holds the lining and in the dust is dry as timber, and almost without weight. Much has been said about shipping grapes and other fruit East in a natural state in cork dust, and fruit dealers in the large cities are sending for tules to see with this object in view. It looks as if the whole question was solved. There is plenty of tule in California. It is easily accessible at many places in the State. It is cheap, easily gathered, dried and prepared for use. The cost of the material is the very light as compared with the grand results to be obtained. The added weight to the box of fruit will be very little and trivial freight to pay. The lining of the tule strips on the sides of the box will prevent glass from breaking when wine or brandy is shipped in glass. Altogether, for a cheap, light and dry product of all the river bottoms and other damp places in the State. If it works as one must expect it will, the whole question of shipping fruit is solved, and a great industry is formed in the State.—Los Angeles Herald.

Prices of California Products.

The Vacaville Reporter of the 15th inst. says: To prove that our orchardists and vegetable raisers are making money this season, we produce some statistics: M. Fox has taken from 55 acres in fruit and vegetables—only part in bearing—$5,000 clear of all expenses. Dr. Cargill, from 29 acres in vegetables, raised among green pea vines, the net proceed $2,000. Mrs. E. Sahrbrecht has planted 20 acres of 50,000 cash received her place for $1,500 each, which has been paid, besides netting at least $1,000 clear profit to the parties who had the place. A. J. Lyons, from 125 plum trees, realized $222; from 20 trees of another variety, $160; clear, and from 150 apricot trees, about $400. He has contracted his entire peach crop to Flower & Co., Sacramento, at 90c for 4½ inch boxes (boxes furnished). Mrs. M. Jagger sold little year, from 400 4-year old trees, over 2,000 boxes of apricots, netting about $1,500 from less than 4 acres. H. J. W. Brink had, on about 25 acres of apricots, 100 acres of fruit, which they sold at 1½ per lb., they picking the fruit, everything else furnished. They also sold their crop of early peaches at 6c per lb. net, and their early peaches at 6c per lb. and entire large crop at 1½ per crate of 50 lbs. each (crates and packers furnished). F. B. McKevitt has just finished shipping his apricots from 4 acres of 5-year-old trees and 4 acres of 4-year-old trees, the net proceed on which is $5,000. These are no exceptional cases produced for sugar-coating, as we know that all of our fruit and vegetable raisers are doing extra well.

Family Fun.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Two little fingers toying with a nice-
Flag! want the powder and then there was ches.

Nine little fingers firing rockets steight Fly! Stick Yankee! and then there were eight.

Eight little fingers pointing up to Heaven—
Roman candle "bursted," and then there were seven.

Seven little fingers pack and ponder out—
Peak was spoiled, and then there were six.

Six little fingers for a "chaser" strike—
One went off with it, and then there were five.

Four little fingers handling for a roar—
Boom went the cannon, and then there were four.

Three little fingers with a pack wake free—
"Crack" went a cracker, and then there were three.

Three little fingers found the fuse burned blue—
Bombshell too previous, and then there were two.

Two little fingers hankie lots of fun—
Pistol exploded and then there was one.

One little finger fooling with a cannon—
Didn't know "how loaded, and then there was none.

He was a Noodle.

"Are you are a boodle?" asked a small boy of his sister's new beaux.

"Hush, Johnny, hush!" said the sister, blushing and looking very much like a peony.

"You must be," persisted the small boy. "I don't know what you mean exactly.

"You are my sister's husband, ain't you?"

"Yes, of course."

"Well, then, you are a noodle, 'cause sister said a noodle husband would catch her every time."

His Brother Would Walk.

"How much does a ticket to Lansing?" he asked at the Third street depot yesterday.

"Two forty."

"Make him 22."

"No, sir."

"But I like to go out and see my brother."

"The price is two forty, sir."

"How far was he?"

"Eighty six miles."

"Of you 22, and maybe I go out again next Lil.

"No, sir."

"You don' take him?"

"No, sir."

"My brouth, dut shas all right, I like to see my brodder, but now I dean go out."

"Can't help that."

"Mebbe you think my brodder comes in to see me and gin you two forty. You shas off. He thals ashey shlep of dat way, and you dean gin me nuthing, and I tank not his cost tulle." My frendt, good day."

An Improbable Yarn.

"One of my ancestors won a battle during the Crusades by his skill in handling his artillery," said the baron.

"Bat, my dear baron," said his friend, "at the time of the Crusades gunpowder had not been discovered.

"I know that as well as you do, and so did my ancestor."

"How did he win the battle then?"

"He brought his artillery to bear on the harasses, and the stupid fools, seeing the guns, supposed that powder had at last been discovered, and fled in dismay."

Judgment Temporarily Suspended.

Mrs. Blabb—So your church has a new minister.

Mrs. Gabb—Yes, he preached for the first time last Sunday.

"How do you like him?"

"I can't tell. I haven't seen his wife yet."

She was an Indefinitable Worker.

Discontented Wife—If I had known that I should have to work so hard after I was married I should have remained single.

Husband—I thought you liked to work, the way you worked to get me.

That Makes a Difference.

"Got any eggs to-day, Mr. Goldbeus?"

"Yes, sir, plenty of them."

"Are they fresh?"

"Fresh, sir, as the flowers that—show!"

"Then, I don't want away."

"Don't want eggs?"

"No, sir; I'm going to a lecture tonight, and I thought I'll could run across some stale eggs."

"Stale, sir! There hain't an egg in that barrel that was laid this year."

Little Laughlets.

At a Ball.—"May I ask you for the next dance?"—"Pray excuse me, I am not fond of eating, and prefer to sit it out."—"Then will you permit me to sit it out with you?"—"Oh, then, perhaps we had better dance!"

An advertisement extolling the virtues of a new baby food concludes with the pathetic words appended thereto: "When the baby has done drinking, it must be unscrewed and laid in a cool place, any under the top." Poor baby!

Ten persons at an hotel ordered lemonade, namely, one No. 1 lemon, half lemonade, No. 2 for bliss nonge, No. 1 for blancmange, No. 1 for bling mong, No. 2 for blemonge, No. 6 for blemong, No. 1 for blamonge mange, No. 1 for blemongo, No. 3 for bling mongo and No. 10 for blamonge.

"I assume washed overshoed," exclaimed Mrs. Faculy, as she read a newspaper headline; "but perhaps he was so dirty they hadn't enough water on the ship."

A lady was once lamenting the ill-luck which attended her efforts, when a friend, wishing to console her, bade her "look upon the bright side."—"O," she sighed, "there seems to be no bright side." Then peeling up the dark one," was the quick reply.

Cholera Morbus

is about as sure to come as Summer is. It comes suddenly and is frequently dangerous and often fatal.

ARE YOU PREPARED for it coming?

If any of your family are attacked PROMPTLY with only one dose will save life. For 40 YEARS ONE medicine has CURED CHOLERA, CHOLERA MORBUS, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY and all SUMMER COMPLAINTS which can't take it with perfect safety. This medicine is

Perry Davis' Pain Killer.

To be on the safe side get one NOW and have it on hand. For sale by all Druggists.

PERRY DAVIS & SON, Providence, R.I.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

(Incorporated under the laws of California.)

This association is conducted on the usual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at nominal cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $1,000, $2,000 and $3,000, which are payable in five equal yearly installments to the heirs of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate at the expiration of one year; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one fifth of certificate is paid to the members legatee.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the consultees of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to these members who have certificates will full due from no part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $164,000 to members, and paid in death losses $15,000.00. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds 1,000.

Reliable agents desired.

Address,

W. H. WARD, Secretary,

Room 24 Phelan Building, San Francisco.

I GURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made Epilepsy or Falling Sickness a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because other doctors have failed is no reason for my case not receiving prompt relief. Send at once for a treatise and a free bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office address. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

648 MARKET STREET

BRANCH,

1126 MARKET ST.

LAUNDRY.

15th St., bet. Fulsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

Importers and Dealers in

BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

MANUFACTORY:

Paper Mill at Blanchard, Alameda Co.

Paper Warehouse, 510 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

NATURALIZATION!

The Democratic County Committee have established a Naturalization Bureau at their Headquarters, No. 313 MISSION STREET.

All persons eligible to naturalization, intending to support the Democratic ticket, will receive proper assistance.

Naturalization Classes August 3, '86

By order Democratic County Committee.

JAS. J. BERRY, Secretary. A. J. DONOVAN, Chairman.

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse,

"Regular" Call-Board Warehouse.

First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building.

CAPACITY 14,000 TONS.

TOWNSEND ST.,

between Fifth and Sixth.

GEORGE H. LEHMAN, Prop.

Cars transfer from the dock and from the east of the C.P.R.R. and C.P.R.R. free of Charge. Storage at current rates.

Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates.

Telephone No. 227.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.

Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.

THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. DOLTON, 960 Market Street.

Want Desirable Property to supply the demand for Cottages, Flats and Houses. Also Business Chances, Ranches, Mines, Mining Stocks and Mining Claims. Call or send stamp for "The Tradesman." J. C. GREEN, 22 Montgomery Block (Opposite Exam Bazaar), real estate and general business agents.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,

968 and 970 Folsom St.,

San Francisco

Near Fifth

WHOLESALE

LIQUOR DEALER.

Established 1857.

We are satisfied to sell good liquors and guarantee our goods.

Hazelnut Wines

Sweet Vineyard, 1875, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.

Old Port or Sherry, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.

Kentucky Whiskies, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.

Bourbon Whiskey, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.

Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards.

Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!

The most luxurious and perfect Turkish, Russian and Hydroelectric Baths for Ladies are NOW established in the

NEW HUNGARIAN BATHS,

218 Post St. bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST

CATECHISM NATIONAL SERIES

Readers and Bible History.

By Rt. Rev. Gibt. Gilmour, D.D., Bishop of Cleveland.

Cheapest and Most Popular School Books.

The Primer, per doz. ... $ .60
The First Reader, " ... 1.00
The Second Reader, " ... 60
The Third Reader, " ... 1.00
The Fourth Reader, Cloth, " ... 1.60
The Fifth Reader, " ... 1.60
The Primary Speller, Containing Spelling and Reading Lessons, per doz. ... 1.00
The Speller and Word Book, " ... 75
The Pupil's Pen, per gross ... 1.00
The Bible Reader, Cloth Compendium of Bible Search Illustrated. Illustrated, per doz. ... 1.00
British Grammar, arranged according to the principles of Attwood's simple English Grammar, per doz. ... 1.00
The Catechism of the Third Plenary Council, Illustrated Edition, Cloth, per doz. ... 1.00
Catechism Abridged, Nos. 1, 2, Paper, 1 cent; per doz. ... 10
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Cloth, per doz. ... 1.00
Catechism Abridged, No. 1, Paper, 1 cent; per doz. ... 10
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 1 cent; per doz. ... 10
Catechism Abridged, No. 2, Paper, 2 cents; per doz. ... 20
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 2 cents; per doz. ... 20
Catechism Abridged, No. 3, Paper, 3 cents; per doz. ... 30
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 3 cents; per doz. ... 30
Catechism Abridged, No. 4, Paper, 4 cents; per doz. ... 40
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 4 cents; per doz. ... 40
Catechism Abridged, No. 5, Paper, 5 cents; per doz. ... 50
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 5 cents; per doz. ... 50
Catechism Abridged, No. 6, Paper, 6 cents; per doz. ... 60
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 6 cents; per doz. ... 60
Catechism Abridged, No. 7, Paper, 7 cents; per doz. ... 70
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 7 cents; per doz. ... 70
Catechism Abridged, No. 8, Paper, 8 cents; per doz. ... 80
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 8 cents; per doz. ... 80
Catechism Abridged, No. 9, Paper, 9 cents; per doz. ... 90
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 9 cents; per doz. ... 90
Catechism Abridged, No. 10, Paper, 10 cents; per doz. ... 1.00
Catechism Prepared by order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Paper, 10 cents; per doz. ... 1.00

Sample copies sent at half price.

BENZIGER BROS.,

Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,

NEW YORK:

CINCINNATI: 343 & 45 Barclay St. ST. LOUIS: 206 & 208 Fourth St.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,

873 Market Street,

WITH A LINE OF—

GENT'S "BOY'S CLOTHING, Furnishing Goods,

HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.

CARROLL & TILTON,

873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,

And like with JOHN A. CO.

D. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.

THE GREAT BRAIN TONIC. The Standard and Popular Preparation. Prepared by Druggists, Chemists, Physicians, Hospitals, Institutions, Families, Invalids, Convalescents, Nursing Mothers, Dyspeptics, Sleepless, Nervous, Debilitated, Aged, Young, Middle Aged, Men, Women, Children. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY THE GENUINE.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By its regularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, nausea, sick headache, constipation, costiveness, piles, diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms, commonly known as liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood renovator.

DYSPEPSIA

Furnishes nourishment to the blood, and by its tonic and invigorating effect on the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. There is no cure of dyspepsia equal to Bull's Sarsaparilla, and it can be all cases be traced to a disordered condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and makes a strong and healthy stomach. Dyspepsia is a disease of the blood.

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body. Bright's disease, diabetes, gravel, pain in the back, and other kidney troubles are the results of disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is at once restored.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE

SCROFULA

Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficient nourishment furnished to the system through the blood vessels, causing enlargement of the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, and ulcerous sores, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck, eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Erysipelas results if not treated in time, affecting the glands, often resulting in enlarged blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by purifying the blood and tonicing the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE PEOPLE'S REMEDIES FOR THE DAY.

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

LEBENBAUM BROS.

Fine Groceries,

216 SUTTER ST.

AND—

Polk Street, Cor. California.

Our Young Folks.

All short, original contributions of moral or useful tendency for the Instructor.

The proper place for all articles of a moral character is a separate Department.

Contributions should be written on one side of the paper, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

THE VALUE OF OBEDIENCE.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR, AT THE REQUEST OF QUESTIONS BOY.

Winter had passed and with it all the amusements of the school room, and even the falling rain and whistling winds presentative for keeping indoor. Summer had taken the place of heavy winter and Hector Jones anticipated having a glorious time. Already he had trapped several of the feathered choir, and had proved several baskets of the choicest berries for his mother. Every day he hurried from school eager for an afternoon's sport. But one day he walked slowly home, and his welcome for his mother was not as hearty as usual.

"What is the matter, Hector?" asked Mrs. Jones, for mothers are sure to detect any trouble which their children feel.

"I have to go to Jack Wilson's house because he's home sick from school near two weeks, its such a long distance, too, and I'm not going."

"Well, it's certainly a long distance," assented mamma, "but, my dear child, think of the Saviour on His journey to Calvary. No shoes on His feet, a crown of thorns on His head, and the heavy cross His bruised and bleeding shoulders, and all this was for you as well as for any one else. Think of this on the way, George, and you will have a pleasant journey. Your home more quickly than you expected."

George could not resist the gentle, loving voice, so taking his hat he started for his schoolmate's house. The Wilson residence was a long distance and George had not continued throughout the house until the last room was reached. Here George heard voices, and, opening the door cautiously, what a specially interested thief! The comfortless bed lay a pale and emaciated form, and kneeling beside her was Jack weeping bitterly. Two ragged children, not comprehending the great loss about to befall them, were peeping on the door. Jack was imploring his mother not to leave him, when she was replying as best she could.

Not able to control himself any longer George entered the room. What a scene! Poverty, disease and sorrow, but the children looked thunder-struck, for George was the idol of the neighborhood. Jack looked confused and sorrowful, and the poor, sick mother cast a piteous look at the intruder. George wanted to say so much that he really forgot half of it. Nevertheless, he succeeded in telling Jack that he would bring him his mother only and something else besides. He succeeded in telling them that he had to be promised to go with them to the Sabbath school, and in such the eyes of all sparkle with delight, plainly showing that they had been without food for some time.

On reaching home George related to his mother his afternoon adventure, and she caused the good dame to prepare quickly a basket of food and accompany her to Mrs. Jones and George approached the Wilson residence they saw two little faces at the window, and then the children ran to meet them. Being a thorough housewife and fine carver, Mrs. Jones, after a time, soon had the house looking better than it ever had before.

It would seem that Mrs. Wilson's home was somewhere on earth and that she should soon reach that glorious home where sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Jack had been petrified by Mr. Jones, a man as strong as a lion, being visited every day by George and his mother, and under the care of a skillful physician Mrs. Wilson soon showed signs of recovery. Attentively Jack's mother was soon pronounced pronounced somewhat of her former vigor and was able to return to the Wilsons' new home in Edinburgh and take her children with her. Jack's friends, and as a crippling friend, and as a crippling friend, George, and the children from the country to one of their city residences, where Jack's mother now one of the comfortable circumstances bought his farm. So, equally delighted, the children now go home to the day, when Mr. Jones returned from his visit to Jack's home. He made some speculations which turned out to be bad ones, and he now finds himself in comfortable circumstances. Those who hitherto called themselves his friends, and who were willing to lend him a helping hand when he needed it not, have deserted him from the right time in such. How many such people there are in the world. Willing to everything in their power but you when you are prosperous, when you can open the sea of adversity, when trials and troubles encompass you, the friends of old are friends no longer, in fact, they seem to forget your very existence.

George Jones and his mother and father sat one evening pondering over their good fortune, when suddenly there was a light tap sounded at the door, and in response to the appeal a young man, or rather, boy, entered. He was Jack Wilson, and boy-like, Jack Wilson into a tall, finely proportioned lad, so that his former benefactor who had not seen him for many a day, knew him not as he stood in their presence.

"Do you remember, and the stranger, addressing George, "a poor and poor parents once befriended and helped a poor boy who was dying mother, and then set them up in a most profitable business?"

"Yes, replied George. I remember the incident very well, and could, from memory they have gotten along, I never regretted that I helped them."

"Well, continued the still unknown stranger, they are such, for a short time ago a vain of gold was discovered near their residence, and knowing that you have befriended them, Mrs. Wilson sent me to find her son Jack, to see if we can help you."

The three sprang to their feet to welcome their young friend, assuring him that it required but very little to help them out of their difficulties. Needless to state Mr. Jones was soon all right in business, and moved back to the country that he might be near his true friends.

How clearly this story proves that a boy's friend is his mother. George Jones followed his mother's directions on that day, and so long as he obeyed him he was doing his teacher's message to Jack Wilson; and surely you will agree with me in saying that his obedience was abundantly rewarded. As I wrote at the beginning, the value of obedience, sitting in her easy-chair inhaling the fragrance of the rose, thought carefully over the incidents of memorable day, when, if he had disobeyed his mother, he would have gone to school and when she should look at trial.

Boys, if you will follow more her advice and quickly the gentle counsels of the Bible, you will be more happy, and you would be less visitors on the sad world would be more cheerful. Let us say the true, truthful words once more. "A boy's best friend is his mother."

Chicago is to have a new Roman Catholic church.

Monitor Mysteries.

Two and all contributed letters to be addressed to the Editor of the Monitor, and must be in the hands of the Editor not later than the Wednesday of each week, in order to insure insertion in the following issue. Contributions should be written on one side of the paper only, and should be in the Editor's office not later than the Wednesday of each week, in order to insure insertion in the following issue. Contributions should be written on one side of the paper only. Although we do not insert the real names of the writers, we do not insert anonymous communications, and unless the writer's name is given, we do not insert the communication. Contributions should be addressed to the Editor of the Monitor.

MYSTIC NO. 13.

Original Riddle No. 232.

A good, birthday present which, not only pleasant

Put pains and people may well enjoy.
We're so well pleased that, I am quite delighted
They are to me all I can desire.
As mountain streamer, I was at its danger,
In law of perils I did not know.
And, when then, been secured, all at once, rescuded,
Thy rule reward was always close.
Thousand, nowhere else, and no one else
Would be more remember in deadly circle.
Thy kindness, I'm sure, I'm sure, I'm sure, kindly Thy love when that then, cared my life.
Yes, then dear, I'm sure, I'm sure, I'm sure,
Always my.

Original Enigma No. 233.

My tired is tired and not in day,
My second is to rest and to lay,
My third is in Tom but not in John,
My fourth is in Peter but not in Pope,
My fifth is in hear but not in stay,
My sixth is in Sarah but not in Ruth,
My seventh is in Pamela but not in Flora,
My eighth is in Ann but not in Eve,
My ninth is in rest but not in sleep,
My tenth is in Ann but not in Eve.

ANNIE M. DUNNIGAN.

Numerical Enigma No. 234.

I am composed of seventeen letters.

My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 is a kind of fish.
My 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 is a kind of fish.
My 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000, 1001, 1002, 1003, 1004, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1009, 1010, 1011, 1012, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1016, 1017, 1018, 1019, 1020, 1021, 1022, 1023, 1024, 1025, 1026, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1030, 1031, 1032, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1038, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1049, 1050, 1051, 1052, 1053, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1062, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1074, 1075, 1076, 1077, 1078, 1079, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1089, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1102,

Farm and Home.

The Hay Business.

Ranchers are naturally discouraged in their attempts at raising hay as a profitable crop and with reason. The cost of raising the hay and baling it amounts to just about $6 50 per ton. If it is sold in San Francisco, which is about the only market available at this season, the shipping and commission brings up the cost of the hay, demanding the entire cost per ton, when delivered in San Francisco, to $8 50 per ton. Hay is now bringing $11 a ton in San Francisco, which leaves the small margin of $1 per ton to the producer. Land devoted to hay produces an average of two tons to the acre, which leaves the profits of an acre of land only $2. The present prices are lower than any that have ever before been quoted, by reason of the immense supply on hand, and also on account of the poor quality of the first shipments, it being baled too green, and in inferior quality being taken as a sample of that which followed it. Farmers are growing on all sides, on account of the low price of hay, but as it is the first crop they can raise, they throw it into the market in order to get the cash to go ahead with a more profitable harvest. But it seems a shame to cultivate the magnificent land of this valley at a profit of only $2 to the acre. Apparently any other crop would pay better than the hay crop of this season.—Hollister Free Lance.

Kid Redoubtie.

One of the very latest ideas for ladies whose time hangs heavy on their hands is to make a patch work bedcover of the backs of discarded kid gloves. To match and combine the colors, both of the kid and the ornamental stitching, and to fit in the shapes, affords an occupation for more fascinating and prolonged than "crazy patchwork." When finished, the quilt must be lined with Turkey red, and quilted. It will really be a delicate soft silk comfort, and will have about as little weight to bring worth the trouble of making it than might be imagined.

Tons of Dried Apricots.

On Wednesday, G. W. Thissell shipped five and a half tons of dried apricots to San Francisco, a sample of which he left at this office. They were Moorpark—just as natural in color as the fresh fruit, and not dried too much. Mr. Thissell got 14 cents per pound for the apricots. The fruit will go to the Eastern markets.—Winters Express.

Fruit Packed in Tule.

A little box lies on the reporter's table that looks as if a revolution was to be worked in the shipping of fruit to a long distance in a natural claim. The box is lined on all its sides with tule grown expressly for the purpose, and the same substance, cut up into fine particles, is packed in the fruit in layers, and in the dust is dry as timber, and almost without weight. Much has been made about shipping grapes and other fruit East in a natural state in cork dust, and fruit dealers in the large cities are making experiments with this object in view. It looks as if the whole question of shipping fruit is a plenty of tule in California. It is easily accessible at many points in the State, the stuff is very easily gathered, dried and prepared for use. The cost of the material will be very light as compared with the ground results to be obtained. The added weight to the box of fruit will be very little and trivial freight to pay. The lining of the tule strips on the sides of the box will prevent glass from breaking when wine or meat glass from breaking when wine or brandy is shipped in glass.—Los Angeles Herald.

"A Family Doctor" on Suppers.

Set as suppers: I have always been of the opinion that sleep was bad. I have not the slightest doubt that any medicine will bear witness to the truth of what I say from their own personal experiments. A dainty supper generally spoils, and in ten times worse if beer is to be partaken with it. Beer and malt, or porter, would ruin any digestion. No; let the little you do take be easily digested of digestion, so as that the best and pretty well boiled and allowed to get cold, with a slice of cold toast and butter, is a simple supper, but one that agrees. Meat should be eaten at noon, mutton, say, as a rule. But, anyone should satisfy to an of you, if one had found fault with. The food we eat—the food we drink—the exercise and the amount of sleep we take, are all of more importance than its actual amount. Disturbed, restless, or dreamed sleep is not refreshing, no matter how much thereof we obtain. Even pleasant dreams among the good effects of sleep. Now, having been complainte out of the question, I have always observed, then, that persons of sedentary habits, known to medical men as irritability, with partial suspension of the living mechanism of the digestive organs, whether in whole or in part, is to variably accompanied by nervous and disturbed sleep. The restlessness by day takes the form of nervousness and excitability; but by night there are often frightful dreams. Well, would one some portion of indigestible food lying about the system be likely to produce the same nocturnal symptoms? I leave my readers to medicine upon the question and answer it for themselves.

—Confirmed cures permanently by "DDD."

Family Fun.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Ten little fingers tying with a mine—
Boys want the powder and then there were nine.

Nine little fingers fading rockets straight—
Some made "bunted," and then there were eight.

Eight little fingers pointing up to Heaven—
Roman candle "bursted," and then there were seven.

Seven little fingers pack and powder mix—
Pack was lighted, and then there were six.

Six little fingers for a "show" skyrocket—
One went off with it, and then there were five.

Five little fingers loading for a roar—
Cannon went to smash, and then there were four.

Four little fingers with a pack make free—
Crack went a cracker, and then there were three.

Three little fingers found the free bormed blue—
Bombshell too previous, and then there were two.

Two little fingers hatter lots of fun—
Pistol exploded and then there was one.

One little finger toling with a cane—
Didn't know Texas funded, and then there was none.

He was a Boodle.

"Are you are a boodle?" asked a small boy of his sister's new bonnet.

"Hush, Bobby, hush!" said the mother, blushing with mortification.

"You must be," persisted the small boy. "I know what you mean exactly.

"You are my sister's husband, ain't you?"

"Yes, of course."

"Well, then, you are a boodle, 'cause sister said a boodle husband would catch her every time."

His Brother Would Walk.

"How much was a ticket to Lansing?" he asked at the Third street depot yesterday.

"Two forty."

"Make him 62.

"No, sir."

"But I like to go outt unnit see my boodder."

"The price is two forty, sir."

"How far was he?"

"Eighty six miles."

"I guy he fly, and mabbe I go outt again next fall.

"No, sir."

"You don' take him?"

"No, sir."

"My freedh, dot shus all right, I like to see my boodder, but now I dean' go outt. "Can't help that."

"Mabbe you think my brodder gonne in to see me and gile you two forty. You wey, and you dean' get so much as one look mit his cost-tail! My freedh, good-day!"

An Improbable Yarn.

"One of my ancestors was a battle during the Crusades by his skill in handling his artillery," said the baron.

"But, my dear baron," said his friend, "at the time of the Crusades gunpowder had not been discovered."

"I know that as well as you do, and so did my ancestor.

"How did he win the battle then?"

"In the heat of fruit will be very little and trivial freight to pay. The lining of the tule strips on the sides of the box will prevent glass from breaking when wine or meat glass from breaking when wine or brandy is shipped in glass.—Los Angeles Herald.

"Why, simply by pouring a hogshead of all the river brandy and other damp places in the vicinity into the powder mill, and then is about as sure to come as Summer is, it comes suddenly and without warning, is dangerous and often fatal.

Cholera Morbus

ARE YOU PREPARED for its coming?

Many of your family are attacked PROMPT ACTION only may save life. For 46 YEARS ONE medicine has proved a sure cure for CHOLERA, CHOLERA MORBUS, DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY and all SUMMER COMPLAINTS. Never contake it with perfect safety. This medicine is

Perry Davis' Pain Killer

To be on the safe side get one bottle of it on hand. For sale by Druggists.

PERRY DAVIS & Son, Providence, R.I.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Describes the bile and acts like a filter to purify the blood. By its wholesome influence on the digestive organs, it regulates the bile, prevents the blood, causing headaches, sallow complexion and jaundice, relieves dyspepsia, a languid, weary feeling, and many other disorders of the liver, such as costiveness and liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

Dr. JOHN BULL—I have been for a number of years afflicted with a disease of the liver, which I tried many remedies without effect. Hearing of Bull's Sarsaparilla, I was induced to try it, and am happy to say it has cured me. JAMES HOURE, Lawrence, Kan.

Dr. JOHN BULL—I have experienced the good effects of your Sarsaparilla in my family for the last three years, and will unhesitatingly recommend it to any one in need of a good blood purifier. I have used it both in powder and pill form, and it has never failed to give satisfaction. I have also used it in my family for the last three years, and have never had occasion to use any other medicine. Yours respectfully, W. P. FOWLER, Cor. Fifth and Market Sts., San Francisco, Cal.

DYSPEPSIA

Parlade's especially valid, promoting healing of all of the stomach, bowels, kidneys, in the nervous, low spirits, general prostration. There is a vast difference between the Sarsaparilla of the druggists, and it can in all cases be traced to its wholesome influence on the constitution of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and makes it obtained at once.

Dr. JOHN BULL—I have been troubled with Dyspepsia for the last three years, and have tried many remedies without effect. Hearing of Bull's Sarsaparilla, I was induced to try it, and am happy to say it has cured me. JAMES HOURE, Lawrence, Kan.

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body, lets and through the Kidneys is the waste matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not perform their duties, the poisons are left in the blood, causing headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, dropsies of feet, ankles, and other blood and bowel troubles. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great excretory of the body to return their natural functions, and health is at once restored.

Dr. JOHN BULL—I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for the last three years, and I will take pleasure in recommending it to any one in need of a good blood purifier. I have also used it in my family for the last three years, and have never had occasion to use any other medicine. Yours truly, THOS. R. BEVERLY, Rome City, IN.

SCROFULA

In a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficient nourishment furnished to the system through the blood, causing the glands, often resulting in a wasting and enlarged glands, causing the face or neck, ulcerations, pain in the joints, and many other symptoms. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is a blood purifier, and taking up the system performs the imperfection from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TOKEN SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY.

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
— Importers and Dealers in —
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
— MANUFACTURERS OF —
Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.
510 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Clay Sts., S. F.

NATURALIZATION!

The Democratic County Committee have established a Naturalization Bureau at their Headquarters, No. 313 BUSH STREET.

All persons eligible to citizenship, intending to organize the Democratic ticket, will receive proper aid.

Naturalization Classes August 3, '86

By order Democratic County Committee.
JAS. J. BARRY, Secretary. A. J. DONOVAN, Chairman.

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse,
"Regular" Call-Board Warehouse.
First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building.
CAPACITY 14,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST., Between First and Second.
GEORGE H. LEMAN, Prop.
Grain taken from the dock and from the cars of the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. free of charge. Storage at current rates.
Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 527.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.
The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.
(Incorporated under the laws of California.)
This association is conducted on the pooled assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actuary cost. Certificates issued in amounts of $2,000, $5,000 and $10,000, which are payable in five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 30 years of age receive one fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of 5 years; members between 25 and 35 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 45 every eight years; 35 to 50 every seven years; 40 to 55 every six years; 45 to 60 every five years; 50 to 65 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one fifth of certificate is paid to the members legatee.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privileges of being the executors of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned on those members who have certificates and will fall due first as part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. This association has loaned to date $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses, supposed that profits have all been discovered, and fled in dismay.

Reliable agents desired.
Address,
W. H. WARD, Secretary,
Room 20 Phelan Building, San Francisco.

I CURE FITS!
When I speak of a cure I mean not a temporary one and then have fits again, but a radical cure. I have made the disease of Fits, Epilepsy or Falling Sickness a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for my not curing your case. Send at once for a treatise and a free bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office address. DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
BRANCH,
1126 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY.
Bet. 5th and 6th, Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.
AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. DOLTON, 930 Market street.
A Revolver Given.

Want Desirable Property to exchange. Have one of the finest ranches in Sonoma County, and want some for "The Tenderloin." J. C. GREEN, 30 Montgomery Avenue, Opposite Blue Ribbon, real estate and general dealing agent.

D. HENLE'S CELERY BEEF IRON
Gold Medal Paris Exposition.
NEW YORK CITY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.,
San Francisco
LIQUOR DEALER.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Wine and Liquor Dealer and Importer in all kinds of goods.
Sole agent for the following fine goods:

Public Wines	50 cts.
Anchor Wines	$1, $1.50 and $1.75
Mount Vineyard, dry	$1, $1.50
Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies	$3.50, $4, $5 to $10
Bourbon Whiskey	$1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc.	$3 per gal. and upwards

Other Wines and Liquors at best rates.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!
The most luxurious and perfect Turkish, Roman and Medicated Bates for Ladies are NOW obtainable at the
NEW HAMMAM BATHS,
216 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST
— THE —
CATHOLIC NATIONAL SERIES.
Readers and Bible History.
Approved by Most Rev. Wm. H. Elder, D.D., Bishop of Cleveland.
Changed and Most Popular School Books.

The Primer, (of series)	5 cts.
The First Reader, (Illustrated)	15 cts.
The Third Reader,	45 cts.
The Fourth Reader, (Cloth)	75 cts.
The Fifth Reader,	90 cts.
The Sixth Reader,	$1.25
The Spelling Speller, (Containing Script and Text Alphabets)	25 cts.
The Speller and Word-Book,	15 cts.
Lessons in Morals,	50 cts.
The Bible History for Catechetical Instruction, (Illustrated)	50 cts.
Bellah Grammar, (arranged according to the Latin Grammar of Bellah)	50 cts.
Catechism of Christian Doctrine, (Illustrated Edition, Approved by order of the Third Plenary Council, Baltimore, Md.)	15 cts. per doz.
Catechism, Abridged, No. 1, Paper, 4 cts.; per doz.	$3.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 2, Paper, 6 cts.; per doz.	$5.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 3, Paper, 8 cts.; per doz.	$7.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 4, Paper, 10 cts.; per doz.	$10.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 5, Paper, 15 cts.; per doz.	$15.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 6, Paper, 20 cts.; per doz.	$20.00
Catechism, Abridged, No. 7, Paper, 25 cts.; per doz.	$25.00
Sample copies sent at half price.

BENZIGER BROS.,
Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,
NEW YORK:
CINCINNATI: 343 & 345 Main St.
ST. LOUIS: 206 Market St.
CARROLL & TILTON,
Respectfully announce that they have opened
THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
— WITH A LINE OF —
GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.
Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.
We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible
CARROLL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,
And late with JOHNS & CO.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
KNABE PIANOS
Unequalledly and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.
A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 121 Dupont St., S. F.
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.
ESTEY PIANOS.
Formerly the Pat. Avion Piano,
THE OLD FAVORITE!
(Beware of Bogus Advertisements.)
SENJ. CURTAZ & SON,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
No. 6 Tarrell Street, San Francisco.
H. M. NEWHALL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
GENERAL AGENTS
National Assurance Company of Ireland.
Atlas Assurance Company of London.
Boylston Mutual Insurance Company of Boston.
OFFICE, 310 SANSOME ST., San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA, - - - CALIFORNIA
This Institution was founded in 1851, and is in every respect equal with the privileges of a University. It occupies 4 large buildings, with 10 acres of ground, 3 gymnasiums, covered gymnasium, swimming bath, 1 mile of gas pipe, 1 observatory, Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable cabinets of Mineralogy and Geology. It has practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 100x40 has just been finished, that has been added to be the finest.
Diplomas are given in two departments: the Literary and Scientific, and Catholicism is the Commercial course.
TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually in advance.)
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once, $ 10 00
Board, Tuition and Washing, 250 00
Washing and Mending Bed Clothes, 30 00
School Stationery, and attendance at Vocal and Instrumental Music, 50 00
For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 811 Hayes street, San Francisco.
REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J., President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
SAN JOSE, - - - CALIFORNIA.
This Institution offering the advantages of a secondary lady school, to receive a solid and refined education, was founded in 1851, it was first conducted by the State Legislature, and subsequently, the same body granted the original College Charter under all the rights and privileges of Collegiate Institutions.
It occupies large buildings, with extensive grounds, and has every facility to make science familiar and attractive, under the direction of Professors of the Department. Every facility is afforded to students who desire to prepare for a profession.
The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August, and ends about the 25th of June. Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance.
Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and if desired, Drawing, Music, and Use of Bed, Bed-ing and use of bedding, $75 00
Washing, per quarter, 15 00
Plaiting in Water Colors, 1 00
Use of Piano, 10 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charge.
For further particulars address
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
San Jose.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,
RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.
This Academy for young ladies, under the direction of the Sisters of Mercy, is beautifully situated in an embrace in the pleasant and wonderfully healthy town of Rio Vista, commanding the building, yard, and full grounds which are ample for the exercise of the pupils. The Academy is furnished with all the modern conveniences. Pupils of all persuasions will be received. The Academy is provided with all the useful branches of a solid education, and the Sisters will use every exertion to make home, and well regulated Academy.
The scholastic year is divided into two sessions of five months each. Next session commences and ends in June.
Terms per Session, Payable in Advance.
BOARDING PUPILS.

Board and Tuition, use of bedding,	$112 50
Instrumental Music,	15 00
Use of Piano,	10 00
Washing,	15 00
Bedding in sheets, Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, free of charge.

DAY ACADEMY.

Entrance Fee,	$5 00
Tuition, per month,	7 50
Music, per month,	7 50
Music, Piano Instrument, with use of instrument,	10 00
Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, free of charge.

$5 extra fee required. For further information address as above.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.
The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.
This institution is pleasantly situated in the Western Addition, and is easily accessible by the cars and omnibuses, and by the ferry boats from San Francisco. The course of instruction embraces the English and Spanish languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Painting, Fancy Work, Plain Sewing, Dancing, Calisthenics, and Elocution.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing,	$250 00
Entrance Fee,	10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines,	10 00
Vocation at College,	50 00
Use of Piano,	50 00

Music and Drawing lessons extra charges. For further particulars address
SISTER SUPERIOR.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.
The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.
This institution is pleasantly situated in the Western Addition, often every opportunity to the pupils of acquiring a thorough education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
There will complete the Classical Course must be established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in no short a time as possible.
While proper care is bestowed on every branch of study, the Fine Arts receive special and careful attention. The daily exercises of the students in Drawing, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and marked in the classroom.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing,	$250 00
Entrance Fee,	10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines,	10 00
Vocation at College,	50 00
Use of Piano,	50 00

Music and Drawing lessons extra charges. For further particulars address
SISTER SUPERIOR.

Academy of our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA, - - - CALIFORNIA.
This institution, conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity to parents of young ladies, desiring a refined and intellectual education, combined with the advantages of a home, to secure the same.
The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August, and ends about the 25th of June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and if desired, Drawing, Music and Use of Bedding, $75 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Elocution form extra charge.
Needlework, French and Spanish lessons free.

HALL'S SAFE AND LOCK COMPANY.
Manufacturers of—
Hall's Patent & Fire Burglar Proof Safes,
511 and 513 California Street.
Safes made for church and other uses. Second hand safes always on hand for sale cheap.
SPRING IMPORTATIONS!
JUST RECEIVED!
WM. WALKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
7 Powell St., Opp. Baldwin Hotel.
PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.
JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM.
Orders left at the Brewery.
Amount of Beer sold in 1885 60,000 barrels.
JOB PRINTING.
Any of the Day Theory, Friendship of schools, Society officials or Business men who desire save money by having their Job Printing executed at the Lowest Rates, call find McCormick Bros., 624 Clay street, the most profitable place in the city for patronage. Call and get estimates and be convinced.

DOCKS BOUGHT AND SOLD, BY A. BOURDET 1886 Sacramento-st.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers, offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL Course receive the degree of A. B. the Scientific, B. S. the Commercial, Master's Accounts.
The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in no short a time as possible.
While proper care is bestowed on every branch of study, the Fine Arts receive special and careful attention. The daily exercises of the students in Drawing, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and marked in the classroom.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing,	$250 00
Entrance Fee,	10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines,	10 00
Vocation at College,	50 00
Use of Piano,	50 00

Music and Drawing lessons extra charges. For further particulars address BROTHER BERTELIN, President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
SAN JOSE, - - - CALIFORNIA.
This institution, founded in 1851, by the Sisters of Notre Dame, of the Society of Jesus, and empowered by the State Legislature, under all the rights and privileges of Collegiate Institutions, offering the advantages of a home, to secure the same.
The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August, and ends about the 25th of June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance.
Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and if desired, Drawing, Music and Use of Bedding, $75 00
Washing, per quarter, 15 00
Plaiting in Water Colors, 1 00
Use of Piano, 10 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charge.
For further particulars address
COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
San Jose.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,
RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.
This Academy for young ladies, under the direction of the Sisters of Mercy, is beautifully situated in an embrace in the pleasant and wonderfully healthy town of Rio Vista, commanding the building, yard, and full grounds which are ample for the exercise of the pupils. The Academy is furnished with all the modern conveniences. Pupils of all persuasions will be received. The Academy is provided with all the useful branches of a solid education, and the Sisters will use every exertion to make home, and well regulated Academy.
The scholastic year is divided into two sessions of five months each. Next session commences and ends in June.
Terms per Session, Payable in Advance.
BOARDING PUPILS.

Board and Tuition, use of bedding,	$112 50
Instrumental Music,	15 00
Use of Piano,	10 00
Washing,	15 00
Bedding in sheets, Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, free of charge.

DAY ACADEMY.

Entrance Fee,	$5 00
Tuition, per month,	7 50
Music, per month,	7 50
Music, Piano Instrument, with use of instrument,	10 00
Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, free of charge.

$5 extra fee required. For further information address as above.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.
The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.
This institution is pleasantly situated in the Western Addition, often every opportunity to the pupils of acquiring a thorough education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B. the Scientific, B. S. the Commercial, Master's Accounts.
The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in no short a time as possible.
While proper care is bestowed on every branch of study, the Fine Arts receive special and careful attention. The daily exercises of the students in Drawing, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and marked in the classroom.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing,	$250 00
Entrance Fee,	10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines,	10 00
Vocation at College,	50 00
Use of Piano,	50 00

Music and Drawing lessons extra charges. For further particulars address
SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,
Golden Gate Ave. - - - - - - San Francisco.
CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC.
THE ACADEMY PLEASANTLY SITUATED IN the Western Addition offers every opportunity to the pupils of acquiring a thorough education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
For further particulars address
SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,
Corner Fifth and Jackson Sts., OAKLAND, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
This institution is pleasantly situated in the Western Addition, and is easily accessible by the cars and omnibuses, and by the ferry boats from San Francisco. The course of instruction embraces the English and Spanish languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Painting, Fancy Work, Plain Sewing, Dancing, Calisthenics, and Elocution.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing,	$250 00
Entrance Fee,	10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines,	10 00
Vocation at College,	50 00
Use of Piano,	50 00

Music and Drawing lessons extra charges. For further particulars address BROTHER BERTELIN, President.

Academy of our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA, - - - CALIFORNIA.
This institution, conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity to parents of young ladies, desiring a refined and intellectual education, combined with the advantages of a home, to secure the same.
The scholastic year begins on the first Monday in August, and ends about the 25th of June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and if desired, Drawing, Music and Use of Bedding, $75 00
Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Elocution form extra charge.
Needlework, French and Spanish lessons free.

HALL'S SAFE AND LOCK COMPANY.
Manufacturers of—
Hall's Patent & Fire Burglar Proof Safes,
511 and 513 California Street.
Safes made for church and other uses. Second hand safes always on hand for sale cheap.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS!
JUST RECEIVED!
WM. WALKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
7 Powell St., Opp. Baldwin Hotel.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.
JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM.
Orders left at the Brewery.
Amount of Beer sold in 1885 60,000 barrels.

JOB PRINTING.
Any of the Day Theory, Friendship of schools, Society officials or Business men who desire save money by having their Job Printing executed at the Lowest Rates, call find McCormick Bros., 624 Clay street, the most profitable place in the city for patronage. Call and get estimates and be convinced.

DOCKS BOUGHT AND SOLD, BY A. BOURDET 1886 Sacramento-st.

Our Young Folks.

Short, original contributions of most 400 in a line, will be inserted.

The prize of each set of puzzles will be awarded to the person who sends the greatest number of correct solutions. Solutions should be written on one side of the paper, with your name and address, and be addressed to the Monitor office within ten days of the issue.

Puzzles should be written in the Department and be written on one side of the paper only. All original contributions to the Monitor Mystics, and all solutions to the puzzles in the Monitor, should be taken to pass the proper amount of postage on communications, or they will not reach their destination.

MANTICO NO. 13.

Winter had passed and with it all the annoyances of the school child, who finds in the falling rain and whistling winds a premonitor for keeping indoors. Summer had been the piece of hoary winter, and Nature had contributed her share to a glorious time. Already he had trapped several of the feathered choir, and had picked several baskets of the chicken harvest for his mother. Every day he hurried from school eager for an afternoon's sport. But one day he walked slowly home, and his welcome for his mother's kiss not so hearty as usual.

"What is the matter, George?" asked Mrs. Jones, for mothers are sure to detect few any trouble with their darlings.

"I have to go to Jack Wilson's house because he has been absent from school two weeks; its such a long distance, too, and I'm not going."

"Well, it is certainly a long distance," assented mamma, "but, my dear child, think of Mrs. Wilson, who is going to Calvary. No shoes on his feet, a crown of thorns on his head, and the heavy cross in his bruised and bleeding shoulders, and all this was for you as well as for any one else. Think of this on the way, George, and you will find that the way to reach the house more quickly than you expected.

George could not resist the gentle, loving voice, so taking his hat he started for his school-mate's house. The Wilson residence bore a look of sadness and desolation which continued throughout the house until the last room was reached. Here Grief, sad and tenuous, and, opening the door cautiously, what a spectacle presented itself! On a comfortless bed lay a pale and emaciated form, and beaming beside her was Jack sooping bitterly. Two ragged children, not comprehending the great loss about to befall them, were playing on the floor. Jack was imploring his mother not to leave him, whilst she was replying as best she could.

Not able to control himself any longer George entered the room. What a commotion his presence occasioned! The little children looked thunder-stricken, for no one entered their wretched hovel. Jack looked confused and sorry-faced; and the poor, sick mother cast a piteous look on the intruder. George wanted to say so much that he really forgot half of it. Nevertheless, he succeeded in telling Jack that he would bring his mother and try and do something for them. The excitement that they had no food he promised to provide them with some, which announcement made the eyes of all sparkle with delight, plainly showing that they had been without food for some time.

On reaching home George related to his mother his afternoon adventure, and assured the good dame to prepare quickly a basket of food and medicine. Mrs. Jones and George approached the Wilson residence they saw two little heads at the window, and then the door was open to welcome them. Being a thorough housewife, and other caring for the sick room, Mrs. Jones soon had the house looking better than it ever had been before.

It would seem that Mrs. Wilson's home was endowed on earth and that she would soon reach that glorious home where sorrow and sighing are unknown. A doctor had been provided by Mr. Jones, a man as charitable as his wife. Being visited every day by Mrs. Jones and her husband, under the care of a skillful physician, Mrs. Wilson soon showed signs of recovery. After many weeks of careful nursing the sick woman regained something of her former vigor. Mr. Jones was a wealthy capitalist and gave to the Wilsons a fine piece of land to be used as a farm. George and Jack became fast friends, and so enjoying themselves spring up between the two mothers.

About this time Mr. Jones moved from the country to one of his city residences, and Mrs. Wilson's son was made a responsible secretaryship bought his farm (which did the rest of the family) and now comes to the day when Mr. Jones received home from his office and found George. He made some speculations which turned out to be bad ones, and he made his himself in straightened circumstances. Those who hitherto called themselves his friends, and who were willing to lend him a helping hand when he needed it not, have abandoned him in many a time of need. How many such people there are in the world. Writing to do everything in their power for you when you are prosperous, but when cast upon the sea of adversity, when trials and troubles accompany you, the friends of old are friends no longer; in vain they seem to forget your very existence.

As George Jones and his mother and father sat one evening pondering over their affairs, such suggestions, a loud rap, light tap sounded at the door, and in response to the request a young man, or rather, boy, entered. Six years had changed not a whit Jack Wilson into a tall, finely proportioned lad, so that his former benefactors who had not seen him for many a day, knew him not as he stood in their presence.

"Do you remember," said the stranger, addressing Mr. Jones, "you and your parents once befriended and helped a poor sick woman and her mother, and then set them up in a most profitable business?"

"Yes," replied George. "I remember the incident very well, and seeing how nicely they have gotten along, I never regretted what I helped them."

"Well," continued the still unknown stranger, "they are rich now, for a short time ago a vein of gold was discovered near their residence, and knowing that you have aided in business, Mrs. Wilson sent me to let me know Jack, to see if we can help you."

The three sprang to their feet to welcome their young friend, assuring him that it required but very little to help them out of their dilemma. Needless to state Mr. Jones was soon all right in business, and moved back to the country that he might be near his true friends.

How clearly this story proves that a boy's best friend is his mother. George (some followed his mother's directions on that fatal day ago when she advised him to bring his teacher's message to Jack Wilson) and surely you will agree with me in saying that his obedience was abundantly rewarded. As George watches the beloved form of his mother, sitting in her easy-chair inhaling the fragrance of the flowers, his thoughts carry him back to the memorable day, when, if he had disobeyed her, he might see that aged parent working and when she should be at rest.

If the boys and girls of this state will be good to move cheerful. Let us say the sweet, truthful words once more "A boy's best friend is his mother."

—Chicago is to have a new opera-house in March.

Miss Ella Wilson, the rising young lady of the Monitor Mystics, is a resident of Mount Diablo, Contra Costa County, and is a pupil of the Mount Diablo Academy. She is a very good scholar, and is a great favorite with her teachers and school-mates. We hope to see her name in the Monitor Mystics often. Her solutions to the puzzles in the Monitor are very good, and she is a very good correspondent which have ripened in England and Scotland with flowers and fruit, swept over Ireland with withering and desolation.

CARDINAL MANNING ON HOME RULE.

[DISPATCHED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

WE ARE ASSURED IN THIS NINETEENTH CENTURY to undo the miseries of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but let us not excuse ourselves by alleging the faults of national character. If our Irish brethren have faults they are for the most part what England has made them. Let us remember that if our treatment would have been the same. The root has been blighted in possession of the land on which the people have been born and to which they will return with the love of children for a mother. It is a law of nature, which is the law of God, and they who fight against it must fall at last. It was violated by warfare; it must be revived by wise and peaceful legislation. It may not much, but reparation must be made. Reprisals are always costly and iniquitous, when one innocent of the ancient wrongs in your majestic nation there is a nearer power which binds all your liberties and your lives into one commonwealth. England, Ireland and Scotland meet, in belief all alike, have been rule in affairs not imperial, but there is an august sovereignty of a thousand years the center of a world wide empire standing in the midst of us. England, Ireland and Scotland will be bended ever to no man nor to no movement, neither can they wrong one another nor yet listen on the liberties of any member of our imperial commonwealth. The sovereignty pervades all parts and will ever pervade and promptly redress all excesses of delegated power. I wish I could have written it in a shorter reply, but on a subject so near my heart I hardly know when or where to stop. Believe me always faithfully yours,

HENRY EDWARD,
Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.

Incendiaries in Italy.

THREATENED SUPREMACY OF SOCIALISM.

Anarchist Leaders in Prison.

Interesting Letter from Frank Hugh O'Donnell.

The anticipations of a couple of months back that the Italian Government would soon be obliged to take measures against the Socialist movement among the workers, both in town and country, are being fully confirmed. What a tempest of declamation would have broken out in the Liberal press of Europe if the Pope's Government, for instance, had adopted such sweeping measures against the Socialists as announced from northern Italy. Eight leaders of the workmen's party in Milan are under bolts and bars. Among them are the Parliamentary candidates of the party at the recent elections. The chief of Signor Depretis's cabinet in the meeting place of the workmen's unions in Milan, and similar measures are announced from Leghorn, Genoa, Turin, Venice and Novara. Just a few hours previously, Signor Depretis had to propose the invalidation of the election of convict for triple murder, a peculiar merits had moved the House to suspend proper person to represent the Rose in Parliament. Mr. Bradlaugh, the Union Search of the Anglo-Saxons was notified to the Chair. The gentleman had accepted his tenant's terms and consequently was disqualified. He had been announced to take place of Mr. Bradlaugh and consequently, to say the least, was considered a misnomer. Mr. Bradlaugh was present.

JABRINDRAN WORTHY,

Dublin.—On July 2, the commission of under the Act of last session which is to inquire into the question of the invalidation of the election of

Mr. Jabrindran Worthy, a

Poetry.

IRELAND TO GLADSTONE. 1886.

BY JOHN ANDREW MARTIN, N. Y.

Statesman, and friend, and father, and whole soul!
Title of honor love can filter
Unto either, for the blessing of our land.
The sad years of the unknown centuries,
Go you and on your children's graves, and moan
For your, for us love, pain, and blessing.

How shall our full hearts praise you with words worth of passion moulded into spoken speech
Shall Ireland answer Elizabeth's cruelty
Of England's wisest, broadest with its mean lies
Of genius and of traitor, perfidy, greed
In place of faith, honor, and love, and
In lieu of darkness, hatred, and ignorance
Shall Ireland, poor, ignorant, pauper, bare
With hope of what all man most cherishes
Of free life under ordinance of free law
Let the sate right alone the ancient Brehon,
And Ireland holding out a brother's hand
To England's white Democracy declare
The old strife buried, the red wound healed, the wrong
The rightness wrath of ages made clear by now
Unmarked in this hour of fair treaty
Ireland to England's brother.

Mass-ery
Sits at the mouth of darkness and disease
The glorious phantasms through, shade after shade
Of those who dreamed and struggled, dreamed and died
For Ireland through the ages, the dear dead
Whom grave are in the hearts of Ireland's Statesmans, the dead subdue you; friend, the dead
Touch not their dying hands in benison
Upon your purpose, father, the dead begins
Seven centuries of anguish for your sake
Your enemies are many, hard there not;
What through that thinks Ireland's little island
Which though called in darkness smiles and sings,
What through the legions of Atlantic ocean
Falsehood and fear and faction, heed them not:
Think ye, in your chamber, the second of your life,
Are who are ranged in battle by your side,
Justice, and truth, and freedom and the love
Man bear to man. Ireland's hopes are bottom
To suffer greatly in great enterprise,
Honor and courage and eternal love
And that point patience which the Fates relate,
These are your land's chief, and the dead are
round
They shall not fall, they never yet have failed,
The true man fighting for the truth. Rise on
The legions of freedom, and God speed the right.

Statesman, friend, father, your reward shall be
Ireland's love, the gratitude
Of a people healed of deadly hurt.
Supreme is being conquered by love
And free-dispensing freedom, and besides
A nameless shining name this through the night
Of distant cycles, an abiding place
Within the hearts of every Irish heart
While generation after generation will
The opposition years with life.

You come to us
With message of perfect peace; and where be Between us till Thine's shuttle shall open of
The web of this world's stage? Ireland, Ireland,
Not yesterday but ever Ireland's cause
May be last friends to morrow! Join our hands,
Then from this hour the future telleth
If Freeness linked with freeness in true love
Begin between these islands.

Finis
The glory of wish an hour, and the glory of Ireland's instrument is kaltinur hearts and hands of Ulst and Sun is made "Liberty" Pus. Ire
Honor and love and immortality.

THE END.

PARNELL.

AS ACROSTIC.

P ursuit - round your shelterin gather now
A ll ye who have learned an hour
P ayal son of a noble race,
E ternity is in your debt since
E nglish man he has defied,
L ong ago you fought
L ike a true Nation's pride.

Literary Miscellany.

Poetry Penned on Parchment.

"Dear Cousin—I suppose you have all long ago your minds made I am dead; but
I'm alive, as you see, and coming home.
I'm tired of my uncomfortable, unhappy, and those who have made fortunes know that they need something else in the world. I mean to end my days among my relatives, and,
between you and me, I shall put them to. I want to find out who are really my friends and who count me for other reasons and what I can do for them. I know that all think me a very poor man—quite out of pocket. Blame me. I'm laughing out loud as I write! You should hear me. To make them think that I'm well rich, and yet keep be a charity to ask me to pay them a visit,
and to invite me now and then to dinner,
and all that. I'm sick of it. Again, I say, until the room rings! And in this way I discover my true friends. I shall come to your house first, dressed in character.
I know it is an old joke, and it may be in the plays and novels, but I trust it will succeed.
Your's, very affectionate,

"P. S.—Expect me Thursday. "O. C."

"If that isn't the most amusing thing, said Miss Cousin, "sending home so rich that he is suspicious of his relatives, and afraid of being courted for his money. And a bachelor, too! Dear, dear! Poor Obadiah Corner, you have to be the black sheep of the family, and whom we never believed would come to any good! How everything does change! Who is this world! Life is a checker-board, to be sure! William what's upmost thing it would be for Arabella Moffit.

"What would be a splendid thing for Arabella—a checker board?" asked Mr.
Noakes.

"(Mr. Noakes," cried wife, "don't pretend to be stupid, because you can my dear, and you don't do yourself justice.
I mean Cousin Obadiah."

"Cousin Obadiah would be a good thing for Arabella. Oh—yes, yes—yes—said
Mr. Noakes. Oh, I see—you mean a good match for her. But Arabella Moffit, though a most excellent person, is no longer young and she's never been handsome, my dear."

"That's no reflection!" said Mrs. Noakes.
"Arabella is much younger than Obadiah and by no means so plain as he is. But that is the way with you men. The older and uglier they get, the younger and prettier they think their wives should be. Some twenty sometimes fall in love with women of thirty; but men of sixty never think of any age beyond sixteen when they choose wives."

"Very true, indeed," said Mr. Noakes.
"And very ridiculous," said Mrs. Noakes.
"At all events, I'm an affection for Arabella, and I'll do all I can to further her interests; and don't forget that we may keep Obadiah's secret from the rest of the relatives. I shall call Obadiah a hint of the real state of the case, but not another soul shall know a word beyond what Obadiah has told me to tell them."

"Well, women must be match-makers, I suppose," said Mr. Noakes, as he rose with his last cup of coffee and glanced at the clock; "but don't calculate too much on success in this affair, my dear."

Then he took his hat and coat, and departed for those regions collectively known as "town," where the business folks themselves the best part of the day, and shortly after Mrs. Noakes having arranged herself for the morning, sent out her her purpose using a confidential interview with the Arabella of whom she had spoken to her husband.

Arabella Moffit, a kind-looking lady as little Miss Muffin, was a very small, black-eyed lady of forty-five years old, who lived in a tiny bonnet, and was dressed with specimens of the fancy work that had been fashionable for the last twenty five years.

She had no near relatives and could number none but the grandfather who left her her money, and, consequently, she had lived, but she had connections who took ties with her occasionally, and with whom she dined at times; for she was a cheerful, going, needlework and books occupied her lives.

She opened the door for Mrs. Noakes herself, and, in laying kissed her on both cheeks, escorted her to the bedroom above, where she was busy with a chair-frame.

"Now we can have a cozy chat,"
she. "And you'll stay to lunch, won't you, Martha?"

Martha promised to stay, and, having taken off her cloak and bonnet, sat down chair and produced Obadiah Corner's letter.

"There," said she, "read that, Arabella."

Arabella read it, changing color as she did so.

"Dear me," she said, "how romantic he must be. He never used to be romantic.
I suppose he has changed very much in the fire-and-twenty years. He must be fifty-seven now. And to think of his having made a fortune and wanting to press his friends concerns. Martha, do you think you ought to bring him?"

"Why, I do not," said Martha, "and I shall tell no one but you. I had a notion in telling you, and, as he says in a postscript he will be here on Thursday, I want you to dine with us on Thursday and meet him.

Poor Arabella looked in the glass sadly.

"I'm ill and as dreadfully changed," said she, "but I'll come, Martha."

"I bless you, as all change! You can't help that," said Mrs. Noakes; "you don't worry about it," and then they fell to talking about Obadiah and what he used to do.

"Well, I declare!" said Mrs. Noakes, at the end of the story, "I had found this subject so interesting that they kept it up over the cold chicken, apple cake, etc., that composed their lunch.

When Thursday evening arrived, it found little Miss Muffit in Mrs. Noakes parlor, sitting opposite a burly-looking man, whose nose was rather red, and whose eyes were not honest; cunning eyes they were, rather.
He was dressed very shabbily, to say the least,
and had whispered to Mrs. Noakes in the hall, "Take notice of my coat, ma'am, out the character, doesn't it? I look like a dandy and they who has had it look, don't I?" And he nudged Mr. Noakes with an elbow and Mrs. Noakes with the other, while they mentally agreed that he certainly did look the character more thoroughly than the shabby, it was rather in a pleasant evening, and Arabella and Obadiah got on finely. He promised to have an hour beans in a few days, and saw he knew as man o'clock.

The rest of the connections, not having read Obadiah's letter, were not delighted at his return. They saw him shabbier than ever, and they were very careful to keep him at a distance

Mrs. Noakes often sulked to herself to think what a difference that letter would have made in their conduct, had they known of it, but she wisely held her tongue, and lets a fair field for Arabella. In a little time, Obadiah Corner actually proposed to little Miss Muffit, and was accepted by her.

"Such a splendid thing," said Mrs.
Noakes, "such a wonderful thing for Arabella,
and it shall all come out now

Thereupon Mrs. Noakes called her friends, and it shall all come out now

"But Marguerite was very rude to Cousin Obadiah," said Mrs. Noakes.

"The idea of an old man like that carrying—with relatives he could leave every thing to!"

"But mon dieu! leave anything to relatives who insult him," said Mrs. Noakes.

"Besides, Obadiah is not very old—not old at all. It's just splendid for Arabella, and she was the only one who was civil to him,
you know."

Then she went away, leaving the connections generally envious of Miss Muffit and of Obadiah, who, as she was well wiser in her generation than they.

And Miss Muffit, so happy that she began to grow plump, was making up a parlour full of silk dress, and had sent some parts that had been left to her by her grandfather to the jewelers to be reset, and sat one morning building some middle-age castles in the air, with her feet on the fender of the parlor, when the bell rang, and her elderly lover was shown in.

He was in high glee in the room but that the dear good, and, as she would have let the dog have the room, he stopped her.

"I want to talk a little," he said, "and I like talking in a half-light. Arabella, I've a question to ask, and I want you to answer me truly. I want you to promise solemnly that you'll tell me the truth.

"I will," said little Miss Muffit, in a tone of alarm, "the question is, I'll tell you truth, Obadiah."

"Well, then," said Obadiah, "did you see the letter I wrote to Cousin Noakes?"

The blood rushed to Miss Muffit's face in a crimson tide.

"I—I——. Yes, I saw it," she said.

"I knew you one also by the black shawl
"But you—she showed it to you! Well,
I intended she should. I wrote it to be seen.
I never thought Cousin Noakes could keep a secret, Arabella. Can a poor man and a rascal? I have met with nothing but failure.
You are rich in comparison. You've a home and twelve hundred a year. My letter was only a trap. I wanted every one to think I was poor, and I wanted to see who among my friends with the reputation of being a rich bachelor would be willing to leave behind me. You only saw the letter.
You only were civil, and I offered equal you, omitting to impose on you until we were safely married. I cared very little for you then, Arabella; I wanted a home, that was all."

"Oh," cried little Miss Muffit, as if something had stung her.

"But mine then," said Obadiah looking miserably interrupted, "since then I've found how good you are—how kind to a sneak.
I've come to love you, Arabella, and to feel that I wouldn't play a trick on you. It was intended you should take Obadiah as a rich husband—and then we were great friends as boy and girl. I don't blame you, and I don't cheat you. I think I will break my relatives' hearts. I'm poor, but good-good-by. I've come to say good-by and beg your pardon, poor dear. They'll say you had a lucky escape. So you have. Goodbye."

His arose, but little Miss Muffit arose too.

"Obadiah," she said, "I never thought of—of—marrying you. I'm afraid I'm of me. And do you care for me now?"

"The only thing in the world I love,"
said he.

Then held out her trembling hand.

"Stay, Obadiah," said she.

And he caught her hand and kissed it,
and in the darkness she heard him sob.

So they were married after all, and Obadiah has turned out better than could have been expected, and only Mrs Noakes knows of that bridal eve confession, and she you may be sure, keeps far secret.

THE HISTORY OF BUT-CREAM.

First Discovered in Northern Pennsylvania.

There is considerable difference between what it used to be at the present day and that which would have been eaten by the Pilgrim Fathers, but they had a very small of making the cooling and refreshing dish which is now a surpassing delicacy nearly days of its manufacture. Ice-cream, as the history of it goes, was not an invention of a single person, but many of those things which have fallen to the sea of note, and, strange to say, it was discovered almost simultaneously by the discovery of the great continent, and, strange still, it was made by an Indian woman. Among the Indians in northern Pennsylvania. The aborigines in that part of the State used the milk of the cow elk, and they kept their milk in pots hewn out of stone. The milk frequently frozen and was generally thrown away as useless, but one of the squaws took to eating it and found it good, and she took to freezing it regularly, until her red-skinned lord made a vigorous kick on the subject and made her stop, still the milk, but every time the buck went on a hunting trip she had her frozen milk, which was the only predecessor of ice-cream, and many of the squaws of her tribe followed her example, until it became quite a custom. When sugar was brought among them the Indians took to sweetening their frozen milk. The white settlers took to the new dish, and the dish with which it was consumed led to the regular establishment of it among the trade. The primitive method of making it was by the dodge-dresser of the revolutionary days was easily delivered from the old-fashioned "dasher," and the frozen milk was simply cut, salted and then broken up with a hoe. Then it was found that cream alone made a better dish, and also that an egg or two added to it enhanced body, and that if the air was beaten into it the cream increased nearly twice in quantity. The trade fell entirely into the hands of bakers and confectioners, and the first cream was made in the baker's apparatus put in those days was beating up ice cream with a wooden paddle. The ice-cream soon had no pleasures for him, for he spent his days, frequently his nights, agitating the frozen sweetness with his wooden paddle, while his companions, with their girls and wives, ate the fruit of his labors. As the demand for the delectable dish increased the old paddle matched was found to be slow, and machinery was devised by which the work could be done by steam, water and horse power, and now the bakers retailed the frozen cream from the sides of the vessel. The growth and development of the trade have brought so much machinery into use that upon it depends a vast number of people for a livelihood. Thousands are engaged in the making of the different appliances for its manufacture, thousands more are employed exclusively in the making of ice, and thousands are indirectly engaged with work through it. Even door-to and lawyers are many a few—it is the cause owning them in prescribing for the cold brought on by over indulgence in it, and the layer going, if not sentence, that by means of suits for breach of promise made over the ice conjoining and seductive dish.

A Brave and Just Decision.

Adrien and Lucie Cinoy, brother and sister of middle age and in comfortable circumstances, killed themselves on New Year's one day last week.

The grounds they had made but death indicated that they had deliberately planned putting an end to their existence
a year before, and, if true, before the fatal day.

Yet the coroner pronounced them insane and even gave a certificate that they were so in their right mind when they took pistols and shot themselves to death.

Why did they were Catholics—or, rather, they were Catholics—or, rather, they were Catholics—or, rather, they

THE MONITOR.

EIGHT PAGES FREE OF PURCHASE

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1886.

"The Catholic press is a power for Catholicity, and every Catholic worthy of the name should support it to the end and religiously against the attacks of infidelity, and to establishing it, so, to a certain extent, sustain our religion. Therefore, get a Catholic paper upon your table, read your news and daily lessons, by patronizing it, will become better citizens and better Catholics."—Pastoral Letter, A. D.

A Los Angeles Problem Solved.

Frank Pixley is not only perturbed about "Pujesy" this week, but he is also considerably puzzled to account for the boasted progress of the Catholic Church in America, whilst right here in this State he has proof positive that sectarianism is creeping all before it! The cause of all this concern in fanatical Frank's mind arises from the fact that a Los Angeles correspondent sent him item to the Bulletin:

"Five years ago," says the correspondent, "Los Angeles had six church edifices, and only three of these could be called respectable in appearance. Thirty years ago the Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Universalists, Hebrews, Methodists Episcopal, Presbyterian, Southern Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Methodists, Episcopalians, Episcopalians, Episcopalians

Farm and Home.

HOW HOGS BUTTER IN MADE.

HOGS SEEN BY A MONITOR REPRESENTATIVE.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

A recent issue of the MONITOR ably referred to this most important and interesting subject to the American agriculturist, and—as a matter of fact—to all classes, for I am well aware that the readers of the MONITOR do not well understand what this wretched adulteration of the most important part of the human food consists of, and what it is made from, I ask permission to state what I know of the same through the columns of your worthy paper.

While in New York, after my last visit to Ireland, I called at the slaughter-house on West 47th street, where I saw a number of hogs separating all portions of fat from the entrails of sheep and cattle and stowing it away in rude and useless barrels. I asked if the fat was for soap or candles? When one little fellow made this reply: "No, hom, nothing of the kind; it is to make butter. I made further inquiries, and soon found the factory at the end of the same street. There were several milk cans—or what were once such—outside, and a glance had shown me that some had no bottoms and those that had were moved to water, let alone milk. They were there simply as a pressure or decoy, there being no adhesive to the inside of this important dairy. But as I was on a vacation I resolved to get inside. The next day I crept dressed in a regular tramp costume, and, as it were, I was in search of work. From that day, be it for better or worse, I have never tasted butter in boarding houses or restaurants.

All the fat was heaped up in one corner and the odor from it proved that it was not all fresh, nor, need I say, was the cooking of this pleasing to the sight. Besides, the place, which stood on an old wharf on the banks of the East River, was alive with rats, some of them as large as kittens. In fact I saw them run the same. The floors and vats were no sloenier than any common shanties I have seen, and I can say the smell was worse. This, Mr. Editor, seems to be a poor outline of this hard, and, I must say, deliberately approached dairy which I have seen, and I trust to have my health and eyesight but I'll never see it again.

And this is the Bill that our Democratic representatives mention. O Lord, save us from our friends! Now, sir, when this becomes a law the result will be that disease heretofore unheard of will spring up in our midst. Such is the open verdict of all the prominent doctors and professional men in all the Eastern cities where I have been. When we you and I should say you undersoak it, that this evil has already cost fifty million dollars, what will it cost in twenty years hence when all the land will be infected with it? I hope and pray that the people will cry down this evil.

I am, dear sir, with all due respect, yours,

MARTIN T. WARD,
Late of New York.

Sunny Rooms Make Sunny Lives.

Let us take the airiest, choicest and sunniest room in the house for our living room—the workshop where brain and body are built up and rewarded; and there let us have a bay-window, no matter how plain in structure, through which the good true angels—sunlight and pure air—can freely enter. This room shall be the poem of the house. It shall give freedom and scope to genius, the tender green and changing tints of Spring, the glow of Summer, the pomp of Autumn, the white of Winter, storm and sunshine, glimmer and gloom—all these we can enjoy as we sit in our cushioned room, as the changing years roll on. Book-rooms and museums are good, but they require a sense of enjoyment, of imitation, of power and humors, which is chilling to energy and vigor, but in light is good cheer. Even in a gloomy house, where the walls and furniture are dingy brown, you have but to take down the dingy curtains, open wide the window, hang brackets on either side, set flower-pots on the brackets and ivy in the pots, and let the warm air stream in.

The Raisin Crop.

The raisins produced in this country this season will exceed that of 1885 by at least 100 per cent. The grain crop all shot about the same figures. The wine and brandy product will also be largely in excess of any former year.—Fresno Democrat.

This could give Fresno county a yield of over 200,000 boxes, and it would place that county at the head of the list in number of boxes. Next year's crop of raisins will reach close to 150,000 boxes.—Riverside Press.

Tule Covering.

The tule plant seems to supply the most economical and convenient form of packing material goods to be found on this coast. Fresno will this season be one of the leading manufacturing centers in California, and no doubt much of the wine will be sold by the case, which will necessitate its being bottled and packed. Any one with a capital of $100 or $200 could engage in the industry of cutting the tules which grow in such rank profusion upon the low land in the southwestern portion of the country and manufacture them into bottle covers. The raw material could cost nothing but the labor of gathering it, and the price that could be realized for the bottle covers ($10 to $18 per thousand) would certainly pay good wages for sewing them together. Fresno bottles have a tule depot to supply bottle covers to all who desire them, and the tules would find ready market among storekeepers for packing tender plants, fruit trees, etc.—Fresno Republican.

Life in the Hop Fields.

A strong effort will be made by the Mendocino County hop-growers to keep John Chinaman out of the hop fields this year. In order to do this they must be successful in procuring enough white help to harvest the crop. Several hop-growers have been about town this week engaging pickers, and all seem encouraged by the number of people in this section who have volunteered to go. The labor of hop picking is a light and pleasant task, and the operator is enabled to be gainful by camping and working in the open air, and inhaling the odor of new hops, will draw many people who are comfortably fixed to the hop fields. Conveyances will be furnished free to carry parties to the fields; suitable camping grounds will be located, and large pavilions and marquees have been placed for the benefit of pickers. The large floors of the hopkilns will be cleared twice a week for dancing, and no effort will be spared by the growers to make the hop picking season one of enjoyment and gain to their employes (or rather guests, for they are treated as such).—Cloverdale Review.

Low-Priced Living.

A recent traveler in Germany has contributed to The Million some striking figures about the wages and living of German peasants and mechanics. One man, a hard-working old twig broom-maker, earned about 15 cents a day, and his total yearly income of 66.64 was thus divided: Clothing, $7.20; lodgings, $1.92; food and lodging, 60.52. His daily fare was: bread, 2 cents a day; coffee and sugar, 2 cents; beer, 3 cents; potatoes and meat-fat, 3 cents; all other food, 2 cents.

Family Fun.

Father and Son.

"Yes, sir," said Jones to Smith, "he was grey for age and experience they ed vance in knowledge.

"I don't think so," replied Smith

"Don't think so. That's rather stiggy. The opinion I hold on the subject is the universal opinion."

"It may be, but I have my own opinion, nevertheless, and it is that the younger we are the more we know. When I was a youth I knew twice as much as my father. Now I am aged and I don't know half as much as my son."

They Were With Him.

Colonel Hazard tells a couple of stories of Sherman which are new. He was in the same car with the hero of Georgia on the way home from some stag reunion not long ago. The seat beside the General happened to be vacant for a time, and Colonel Hazard, passing the aisle, stopped and said:

"General, may I share your seat?"

Sherman glanced up through his iron-grey brows and answered somewhat wearily:

"Yes—if you ain't going to say you were with me."

Hazard hadn't more than seen the point of the qualification until a stranger came up, full of enthusiasm, and, reaching out to shake hands, exclaimed:

"General Sherman, how do you do? I know you well, I know you. I was with you General; I was with you when we split the crust of the rebellion in twain.

"I knew it," was all the answer he got, but as soon as he moved away old Uncle Cump broke out emphatically: "They were all with me, and they are all with me yet. By Jove, if I ever had half as many hide-bound men 'with me' as say they were, the war wouldn't have lasted a week."

The Beauty of the Boycott.

"Hello, Smith, what's the matter with you? You have one boot polished and the other looks as if it hadn't seen blacking for a month."

"Yes; my bootblack boycotted me an hour ago."

"What's that for?"

"Well, you see, just as he finished this boot he asked me if I owned any stock in the New Zealand Electric Light Company. When I told him I did he declared that the Australian Association of Amalgamated Bootblacks had boycotted that enterprise and all its patrons, and were sustained in the boycott by the United States American Association of Scarpolishers. Horrible, isn't it?"

No New Discovery.

Bagley—"This is an age of invention, Clara. Have you heard of Dr. Bell's discovery?"

"Mrs. B.—"What did he discover?"

"He discovered that the human voice effects fluids—water, for instance. I don't exactly see the drift of the discovery, but it is very wonderful.

"It is, indeed, and I have discovered just the opposite, that fluid effects the voice—whiskey, for instance. Have you ever noticed that, William?"

Miranda Meant Business.

"Miranda, let's not go in here for soda. They keep it in copper fountains. Lots of people are poisoned in just that way."

"What ought the fountain to be made of, Adolphus?"

"Block tin encased with steel.

"Ah, well, there's one on the other side."

"Now I think of it, Miranda, the soda water in the glass tumblers is a metal specie to the syrup bottles are poisonous."

"Then let's get ice cream."

Try This on Your Best Girl.

Jane wanted to go to the circus and John wanted to go to the theatre any time.

"We can go to the theatre any time," she said, "but the circus is here for only a week, and we have not always the chance of going to it."

"Well, as you like," said John, "but allow me to say this—I will not be responsible for the consequences."

"What consequences?" asked Jane, in surprise.

"These consequences," answered John, gravely. "Suppose one of the lions should break out of his cage while we are there, it's all over with you—

"Let's go to the circus!"

"Certainly. The lions are blind, are they?

"No—but what has that got to do with me?

"Just this. If you look to me to be sweet enough to eat, how will you look to a lion, who can't see you? He will think you a delicious morsel, and you are lost."

"But, John, there will be other girls there besides me!"

"I know it, but you will be sweet to one there."

"Very well, John, dear; I think we'd better go to the theatre.

Too Late.

There was an excitement smile on his face as he walked into the office of a well known politician, and there was a proud ring in his voice as he said:

"For twenty years I have lived from hand to mouth, waiting for something to turn up. It has finally come. I have made a discovery which, if you will back it with a few hundred dollars, will give us both fortunes.

"State your name."

"Well, sir, I have discovered that by mere pedigree can be utilized for all kinds of table jellies. A pack of old pedigrees can be made to bring forth twelve tumblers of the finest current jelly, and the profit is—

"Hold right on there," interrupted the capitalist; "you are just two years too late. A chap in Chicago not only discovered that, but he found a way to work in apple chuks and corns and orange peel, and we don't infringe on his patent."

"But—

"It's no use. I'd like to see you get along, but you must drop that. Don't be discouraged, however. Perhaps you can find a way to make pressed corned beef out of old boot legs. All you need is a machine to run in the stroke of fat."

Little Laughters.

—How to blush unseen—Colored ladies.

—What class of women are most apt to give tone to society? The belles.

—He is a brave man who can stand upon all occasions collect his axis.

—The world moves. It probably finds it cheaper to move than to pay rent.

—Why is a tooth drawn like a thing forgotten? Because it is out of the head.

—"Six feet in his boots!" exclaimed old Mrs. Bowegg, "nonsense! Why, they might as well say that he has six heads in his hat."

—"I should have no objection," said a henpecked husband, "to my wife having the last word, if I could only be assured that it would be the very last."

As the SHIPS come in they are liable to bring

CHOLERA Which attacks people Suddenly and without WARNING.

In such cases no medicine is equal to PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER

In INDIA where the CHOLERA is so terrible the native WORSHIP PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER and call it a MEDICINE sent by the GODS, because it is considered in its house—it is invaluable for CHOLERA, MORBUS Diarrhoea Dysentery and all BOWEL Complaints. Sold by Druggists. Perry Davis & Son, Providence, R.I.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.

(Incorporated under the laws of California.)

This association is conducted on the actual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates issued in amounts of $1,000, $2,000 and $3,000, which are payable in five equal yearly installments during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive on fifth installment taken at the expiration of said ten years members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth installment taken every alternate year; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every six years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 55 every four years; and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members legatee.

No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privileges of being the consultors of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates with full due first no part payment thereof is yet overdue interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $100,000 to members, and paid in death losses $40,000. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The association has present assets of over three thousand, and the average annual loaned to members is nearly $1,000 a month.

Address,

H. H. WARD, Secretary,
Room 28 Platto Building, San Francisco.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
Importers and Dealers in
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTURERS OF
Patent Blackboards Made Paper Bags
512 to 516 Sacramento and 509 Commercial Sts., S. F.

HOOPER'S South End Warehouse,
"Regular" Call-Board Warehouse,
First-Class Fire-Proof Brick Building.
CAPACITY 1,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST.,
Between First and Second, San Francisco.
GEORGE B. LEMMAN, Prop.
Cable tickets from the dock and from the warehouse P. B. McNab, F. S. R. Inc. Storage at current rates.

Advances and Insurance effected at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 327.

LEBENBAUM BROS.
Fine Groceries,
215 SUTTER ST.
AND
Polk Street, Cor. California.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 205 O'FARRELL STREET.

TO THE LADIES!!!
Fine Assortment of Artistic MILLINERY,
at As Most Reasonable Prices as
MRS. S. ROWELL,
In returning thanks for past favors respectfully invites the patronage and the public to call and examine her stock of
SUMMER GOODS,
AT THE STYLE OF
Trimmed Hats and Bonnets.
Corner Sutter and Kearny streets, over Dr. Bunting's Dental Parlors.
MRS. S. ROWELL,
DIRECTOR OF FRENCH MILLINERY,
146 SUTTER ST.
Under the Brunswick Hotel, one of the best.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
1256 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY.
12th St., bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

CYCLORAMA
Battle of Gettysburg.
The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War.
Open Every Afternoon and Evening. Admission, 25 Cents.

D. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.
THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Unequaled as a remedy for Impaired Nutrition, Sleeplessness, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and Nervous Complaints.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
THE LIVER
Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to disease properties of the blood. By its regularity in its action or suspension of its functions, its bile causes the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, costiveness, bilious disorders, a languid, sluggish feeling, and many other distressing symptoms, which are removed by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood purifier.
DYSPEPSIA
Variable appetite; foul, gnawing, burning sensations in the stomach, heartburn, sour stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, are symptoms, general prostration, are some form of disease most prevalent. Dyspepsia is a disease of the blood, caused by an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by vitalizing and purifying the blood, tones up the stomach, liver and bowels, and thus cures the disease.
KIDNEYS
Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through the kidneys flow the waste fluids of the system, leaving behind the impurities, which, if not removed, poison the blood. If the kidneys do not act properly the matter is retained and poisons the blood causing headache, and most pain in the small of back and loins. Rheumatism, gravel, chronic disorders of the stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the kidneys, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organ of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is at once restored.
THE BLOOD
SCROFULA
Is a peculiar morbid condition of the blood, which causes the formation of impurities in the blood or its stagnation in the glands, causing them to become diseased, and giving rise to the system through the blood, or affecting the glands, also causing swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sores, blotchy eruptions on the face, etc. Scrofulous troubles if not checked, lead to a general and cumulative breakdown of the system, and sometimes to a fatal termination. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by purifying the blood and toning up the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.
BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
BULL'S WORM STROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY.
KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.
San Francisco
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
LIQUOR DEALER.
Established 1858.
We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.
Wine per gallon: Mission $1, Angelica $1, Port $1, Sherry $1, Claret $1, Zinfandel $1.
Cognac per gallon: Hennessy $10, Otard Dupuy $10, Martell $10, Pineau $10, Castillon $10, Jas. Pellier $10, Jas. Pellier $10, Jas. Pellier $10, Jas. Pellier $10.
Whiskey per gallon: Bonded Rye $2, Bonded Bourbon $2, Bonded Rye $2, Bonded Bourbon $2, Bonded Rye $2, Bonded Bourbon $2, Bonded Rye $2, Bonded Bourbon $2.
Rum per gallon: Jamaica $2, Jamaica $2, Jamaica $2, Jamaica $2.
Gin per gallon: Holland $2, Holland $2, Holland $2, Holland $2.
Brandy per gallon: Cognac $2, Cognac $2, Cognac $2, Cognac $2.
Port per gallon: Port $1, Port $1, Port $1, Port $1.
Sherry per gallon: Sherry $1, Sherry $1, Sherry $1, Sherry $1.
Claret per gallon: Claret $1, Claret $1, Claret $1, Claret $1.
Zinfandel per gallon: Zinfandel $1, Zinfandel $1, Zinfandel $1, Zinfandel $1.
Angelica per gallon: Angelica $1, Angelica $1, Angelica $1, Angelica $1

Destiny of the Jews.

THEIR POSITION IN ENGLAND AND IN FRANCE

THE ABBE LEMANN'S VIEWS.

The Fearful Doom which the Jews have Brought upon Themselves.

Here is an editorial from the Liverpool Catholic Times based upon a book recently published in France:

POLITICAL RECONCILIATION OF JEWS IN ENGLAND AND IN FRANCE

Perhaps the most remarkable fact in the history of the nineteenth century is dragging its close in the almost unnoticed revolution that has been quietly accomplished in the relations of the Jewish people with Christian society. The elevation to the peerage of Baron De Rothschild by Mr. Gladstone last year may be called the culminating point of the emancipation of the Jews in England. In France, however, the complete entry into society of the parishes of so many centuries is of earlier date, and the transformation that has been wrought in their civil condition has been much more striking. There they occupy to day a commanding position in political circles, and constitute a center of considerable power in social life. The change will appear still more astonishing if we take into consideration not only the comparatively brief period within which it has taken place, but the circumstance that the descendants of the Hebrew race has been practically in proportion to the decline of the Christian population, properly so-called, in whose midst they have the pushed themselves into prominence. Many of those amongst us who regard—and what Christian does not regard?—the more prominent outlines of history as the exhibition in time of the operations of God's will through human agents, will be inclined to look for an explanation of the present position of the Jews in France and elsewhere thus that which would ascribe it to the progress of broader and tolerant views, or to a experience our rest in the tide of social and political events.

THE DOOM WHICH THE JEWS BROUGHT UPON THEMSELVES.

Such an explanation is furnished in the singularly interesting book that has been published in Paris on the destiny of the Jews by a re-converted and credible priest who was once a Jew himself. To the collection of materials for his work, to their study, selection, and arrangement, the Abbe Lemann has devoted twenty years of his life. He has traced the long list of odious and barbarous persecutions which the scattered children of Israel suffered for eighteen hundred years, it is unnecessary to enter. In dwelling upon the details of that terrible record the author's aim has evidently been to excite the pity and sympathy of his readers, and in this he admirably succeeds. But the doom which boldly then had been foretold in part by Moses; and on an ever memorable occasion they invoked upon themselves a fearful aggravation of that into when they cried out "His Blood be upon us and upon our children." Not need we follow the writer in his panoramic and masterly exposition of the course ave step by which the Jews, since the beginning of the present century, when the emancipation of the Catholic Bring Louis XVI., drawn up in 1791 was put into force by the Government of the day, rose to the position to which they have attained in France and in the history of the Jewish race. It will certainly do much to bring into visual range, dim and distant, and unattainable though it be, the realization of the sublime dream which gave of hold, rather of the profound conviction of which it is the result.

CARDINAL NEWMAN AND THE ABBE LEMANN.

Staunich and loyal to the faith to which he had the grace to be converted, the Abbe Lemann entertains for the members of the creed in which he was born that tender solicitude, that loving and helpful sympathy which Cardinal Newman towards the members of the Anglican Establishment. Another point of resemblance to this Eminence is presented in the tone and style of the work, where a diction pure, graceful, and without rigorous, is employed for the expression of feelings of gentleness, charity, and love, and of thoughts deeply philosophical and fervently religious. It may be that the comparison will admit of further extension, and that the Abbe Lemann has been singled out by Providence to do for his children of Israel what the illustrious Oratorian did for the Church of England. If this be so, the fulfilment of the prophecies which he cites will harmonize with the fruition of his ardent hope.

From the Land of the Lepers.

FACTS FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF A CATHOLIC MISSIONARY.

Leprosy Introduced by Chinese Immigrants.

Heroism of Priests Among Two Thousand Victims.

The Rev. Father Theodore Lauter, a missionary priest from Hawaii, one of the lands, passed through this city recently on his way to Rome. Father Lauter is a German who was educated at Louvain, Belgium, and afterwards joined the order of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary—a society of volunteers for missionary labor in heathen lands. He has been with the natives in the Sandwich Islands for sixteen years. To a reporter he said:

"The sight of this big city seems a dream to me of years gone by. How do I like my island home? Well, the voice of duty called me there, and I left my home in my father's land to devote my life to the care of my flock. Themselves and Jesus of Are appeared in a similar capacity amongst the people of France. The history of every other nation will be overlook in vain for counterparts to these warlike heroines.

CHARACTER OF THE ABBE LEMANN'S BOOK.

From these singular parallels the Abbe Lemann draws the conclusion that Christ is the land mysteriously chosen for the achievement of the destiny of the Jew, and that this end will be reached when the Catholic Church is subjected in the supreme tribulation; when she will be humiliated, slandered, persecuted; when the powers of evil will have their last struggle against her; when people cannot longer sons in security." The present preponderance of the Jews is accordingly to be regarded as the prelude to their conversion to Christianity, and the last step towards the closing act of the Divine plan which has been unfolding for nearly nineteen hundred years. Whether or not this conclusion will meet with general acceptance, it must be admitted that the Abbe Lemann has written the most interesting book which the hope French press has given to the world for many years. His task has been, in the highest sense of the term, a labor of love. The order with which he pursues for the solution of the Israelite impasse to several portions of his book and a mystic character which fascinatingly accords with his lofty theme. The work seems likely to mark an epoch of once in the history of

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—The Orange conclave of the Rally mercourt District did not allow their celebration of July 12th to interfere in any degree with the Catholic clergy a "tests of their quality." In the case of one occasion in the past outrageous attacks on St. Matthew's Church and Presbytery were made by the Orangemen, who, it is remembered, confine its operations to the public that church had been attacked on the preceding evening. The mob did not, however, confine its operations to the Church of Ireland. Some of the Orange lodges, after the conclusion of the demonstration, called at the Presbytery and refused for the night, the mob, numbering over two hundred persons, marched up the street and began a fortiori attack on the house. Rev. Father Falvey, C.C., startled by the noise came down to the hall, but by this time the mob were engaged chiefly the window of the dining room and the footlight. The windows of the rooms on the second story front floor were smashed, and but for the pelting down of the Venetian blinds serious damage to property would have resulted. A little cratery on the front floor was attacked also, and one of the wooden panels of the door was an effort, stationed with a great deal of vigilance and skill, the mob then retreated to Nutscrewards in numbers, cursing the Pope and using other opprobrious expressions. A small force of police was on duty close to the Presbytery at the time of the attack but they used no means to suppress the disturbance, as the rioters had therefore a clear field.

Carlow.—Sir Thomas Esquire in Carlow the harvest prospects are most encouraging, warm weather having proved very beneficial. Potatoes and oats are likely to be exceptionally heavy crops. Barley promises well also, and in some districts rain would be of service. New hay is Carlow market is 5s. 6d. per cwt.

Cork.—Mr. J. Crawford Leslie, junr., Cork, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace. Mr. Leslie is exactly the class of man the Lord Lieutenant should select for the county. Nationalists in numbers, casting the Pope aside using other opprobrious expressions. A small force of police was on duty close to the Presbytery at the time of the attack but they used no means to suppress the disturbance, as the rioters had therefore a clear field.

Cashel.—Sir Thomas Esquire in Carlow the harvest prospects are most encouraging, warm weather having proved very beneficial. Potatoes and oats are likely to be exceptionally heavy crops. Barley promises well also, and in some districts rain would be of service. New hay in

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SISTERS.

A CONTRAST.

Roses bound about her hair,
Robe of trailing silk,
Jewels on her brown dark throat,
Gloves as white as milk,
Flushed cheek and bright eye,
As if the Olympic had kissed her,
Then left a tale the heart can't speak,
This is Mary's sister.

Humble gown of cotton still,
Neat, but old with colors faded,
Hands that had have seen work,
Free from every ornament;
Healthful contentment on her cheek lay,
Her soul left a tale the heart can't speak,
This is Ellen's sister.

FRANCIS QUINN.

MARY, MISTRESS OF THE SEA.

Out of the mists of the moonlit ocean
Rises a vision of Purity—
An exquisite shape which from dreamy
Hails as the Mistress of the Sea;
Clad in a robe white flowing glory
Sheds such light on the murky air,
Out shadows back and dusky grey,
Shifter from the office bright and fair.

Let the glitter of the glittering Waters,
Reveals lifting her fancy veil,
Sad eyed sisters, all your daughters,
Light of alike that, look bland, sad,
Her guide's sake to be star-crowd splendor,
Gleam if with the gaiety of the sea-scene,
Or her lot may be not so bright.

The white wing'd wave, like angels, play,
Mother (we cry) O Mother Mary,
Beautiful Tower of Ivory
Guide may mariner and sailor safely
That art the Mistress of the Sea!
Can man be the Queen given
("The sea is hers," and the wealth thereof)
The ocean of crime and sin from Hell
Hath poured its wealth in thy heart of love.

The tides may rave at their wanton fury
The winds may howl in their madness,
Immaculate of the Spirit also and Sea;
Thy Son is the Spirit also and Sea;
Dawning fair on our dark distress,
Lighting with smiles, from every molten
Fill of a virginal benison.

Dance thy hands in those billows glorious
Hand that cradled an infant child;
Wide as the world, O (place victorious)
Fling the drops of His grace abroad;
Stella Maris! no shock can will thee,
Stella Maris! no shock can will thee,
O Moon! O Star! O Spray! as bad Isaac,
Immortal Mother of Our Saviour.

ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

Literary Miscellany.

The Lovers' Quarrel.

How One Rash Expression Led to Years of Misery.

CHAPTER I.

A tall, handsome lady, clad in black, was standing by the mantle-piece, leaning one arm against it and looking into the fire. Presently—White skin, large grayish eyes, serpentine nose and lovely brown hair, beauty, and her companion thought, she had found a lover—a kind, worthy, and devoted lover, who married will the return of his affections, which she warmly and sincerely gave.

And, therefore, was her expression just now so sad.

For they had quarrelled.

It was only yesterday she was awaiting him in this same room. She had been in a disagreeable humor for no particular reason except, perhaps, the weather, (it usually does rain in London,) and her lover, who was that stood on the table near her.

The room was elaborately wrought, and had the figures of two lovers raised on one side. The sculptor completed her creation, and supplied her with a vase of the same time.

A bad omen," she commenced, "my lover" was combined just as you came in. Oh, what nonsense, but it's true, Jack! Are if anybody could care for another without coming, sitting down through. Love is a myth, I tell you, and I wish I had never I've been considering the matter.

"He was not habitually rather conceitedly or jocose, which made her words seem strange.

"Well, I'm surprised to hear you say that, Rose," returned her rather seriously; "I understood that you and I were going to prove to the world that love could do a great deal. It has made me work hard the many years to gain a home for you, and it has enabled you to accompany me to Florida far from home and parents."

"Oh! that I'm not at all sure yet," returned Rose with a disdainful turn of her queenly head. "The fact! I am just thinking that perhaps I could not bring myself to go. Mamma wants me near her, and it should be some thing very strong and powerful—some feeling that I am quite unsentimental with all you to do—that I have to go and be very friends here."

"I am astonish and pain me," answered the young man gravely; and I'm very sorry to hear you speak so. But in my case, love is at present—no such sentiment requisite of you as to accompany me. Is that what you to do? I have found the means of living in Washington on the practice of my own profession, and perhaps it is advantageously as I could in the South. So no need to panic any more about the depth of feeling in your heart, Rose. The affection must not be strong that would induce you to marry me now when I have done away with all thoughts of Florida, mean it!"

Rose was stung for a moment. Then the sorrow flashed upon her that he would never leave her dearly she loved him. Why had she not held her tongue that morning? If only he could understand, she all her preparations were made to accompany him in case he wished, to act the very day of their marriage; that she had resolved the leave-taking would not draw from him a sob or tear; that she had not one tiny speck hesitated in her choice, no matter how it would take her; that her heart was nothing more just now because of her hasty little words; and, above all, that these words were untrue.

Something in her throat was swelling painfully.

"It would have been the same to me whether you went or stayed," she managed to say.

There was a pause.

"Can I believe it in you who are speaking to me? Rose, I cannot understand you. Does Jack longer mean? Then, you will tell me, that whether I go or stay the same my amount of affection is always wanting to induce you to accept of me for life? Is this fair treatment, coming all at once?"

Rose felt angry that he misunderstood her words; she blamed herself for having made this darkness between them; she knew she was to blame, so she was vexed and said coldly:

"Think of it as you will, Mr. Morant—fair or unfair—be as you—"

And turning away with a haughty air, she smiled her down.

Already, too, tears were seeking issue, but it would be too humiliating to show her self so childish before him.

She would remain strong, she determined. They sat down face to face—she fingering to match the broken bits of a vase lying together, he, with a pained face, studying her attentively.

Fully five minutes elapsed.

"Rose, have you nothing also to say to me?" he demanded at last. "Since when did this conviction come over you that you don't really care for me?

"I don't rightly know," answered Rose, still angry with herself, and so revenging it on him. "I'm a serious person generally lately I've been reflecting a great deal."

His rose at once.

"Good-bye, then! Forever in all probability I leave this.

"Where are you going?" she asked in a trembling.

"I sail on the seventeenth just as I intended. I heartily regret our engagement. I never entered upon it with the intention of breaking it off at will.

"Sir!" said Rose, promptly, "I never meant to—

Your reflections were made considerably late at all events," he said. "Good-bye, Miss Delano.

"Good-bye, sir!"

CHAPTER II.

A moment after the street door was closed, and John Moran walked hurriedly away, biting his lips.

"But he's coming back to morrow: (th, he meant! he meant! or my heart will break.

So thought Rose, half-dazed, clasping her hands and sobbing lonely.

How quickly all had taken place. Why did he take her up so short? He might have seen she was only out of sorts. And now she was perfectly miserable. For it was not possible, after all, that he would sail on the seventeenth. Today was the 15th. Oh, there was time yet to effect a reconciliation. Yes, but suppose he—Wouldn't do that! Yet, he might indeed wrong, it is true, but now she is penitent and so anxious.

The day wore tediously away, and after a sleepless night and Mrs. Rose sitting up to wait for a waiting, signs of tears under her heavy eyes. He used to coins almost every day at about 4 o'clock, a morning, on his way to the hospital—would he be late to-day? She watched the time pass anxiously. The hours passed, eleven, half-past, twelve, and he did not come nay later than twelve, as he had business all the afternoon. Twelve o'rock and Rose put down her head on the marble mantel, and wearily gave herself up to despair.

"He's not coming any more," she said.

Just then his voice, speaking in the entry, met her ear. He said a few words hurriedly to the servant, and then paused too. He flew to the door.

"What is it, Mary? Who was here?

"Mr. Moran, Miss. He told me to give you this, and she handed the packet.

"All right, Mary."

She took it and recognized her own handwriting. One letter was placed conspicuous in the top, and this phrase underlined:

"In any case, whether we are fated to live apart or pass our lives together, I will ask to you let me have my letters back, the decision day, as I wish, by putting yours and mine together according to date, to guard the record of this time of my life when we were, although apart, so happy and united in mental intercourse. So don't destroy them, which I know you don't. Is it so?"

She glanced over the lines, and then the air in the room seemed cold, so she looked out of the window, and looking up presently found nothing more. That underlining was small. Life was gone and misery remained.

"Won't you come back, won't you come back, John?" she wailed.

CHAPTER III.

It was too dreadful to resign one's self to give up all. But then if she did not mean to give up she should give in. While she was hesitating the day passed, and then came the news that the "City of Charleston" was to leave Baltimore for Liverpool on the 17th, not on the 17th as originally stated, but on the 15th, so that the mail would be ready. The movement was certainly disagreeable. Immediately Rose decided that failed. From the moment I entered her call and made a commonplace remark to her I knew our acquaintance would not lead to a warm attachment. Somehow I felt constrained and chilled coming in her society from the moment we met until loving friends parted. I tried to break the stale weather and brought me back to consciousness.

Rose's last attempt to make a stage on again until the sign is right. So far the sign has not been right.

Long Distance Telephoning.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York has recently been organized for the purpose of establishing long distance telephone connection between the large cities of the country. The first line to be constructed between New York and Philadelphia, the length of the route adopted being about 100 miles. Four years ago a similar attempt was made to connect New York and Boston, but the wire was strung between the two cities did not prove successful. The present company has employed hard-drawn copper wire, and now has seventy-four of them running the two cities direct. The line is entirely metal, except where waters of some width are crossed, in which case subaerial cables are employed. Between the two cities there are six series of cables, the longest stretch being under the Hudson and Delaware rivers. The cables terminate at the foot of Cedar Street, in New York, and at the foot of Walnut Street, in Philadelphia. The line will probably be open for business within a few weeks, and it is expected that it will prove a great convenience.

Galen on the Treatment of Obesity.

"The best method of getting thinner consists in gradually withdrawing from the body that wherewithal there is superfluity, and in strengthening at the same time those parts which had been expended. Bodily exercise will undoubtedly prove very advantageous, as we see stout women getting thinner by heavy work. Thus, likewise, they will never grow fat who are obliged constantly to toil with hard labor. This, however, requires great precaution. It being certain that fat people frequently are slainer of death when attempting violent bodily exercise." And Galen says: "Relative slow motion, energetic bodily exercise, a moderate life, a diet which, although satisfying, yields but limited nourishment; which explains why Hippocrates ordered lean persons to make a large meal, thus on vegetables cooked with fat, in order that they may become satiated by a small quantity of food.

Always an End.

There always comes some smooth running to every state before all is done. You mean't try to see through the whole skein or to strengthen it all out in a single thread. Then you begin to wind, that makes a small always. There is always an end, and it is what you have got to take hold of.

To Love a Person.

We must have a weak spot or two in a character before we can love it or like it. People who do not laugh or cry or take more of anything than is good for them, or use any thing but dictionary words, are excellent subjects for biographers. But we don't care much for these fine pattern flowers that press best in the herbarium.

The latest freak of fashion on the seashore is for a belle to make a present of her bathing-costume to her lover. It is fitted and stuffed and mounted on a scarf.

THE DEDICATION OF CHILDREN.

A Pious Custom that Ought to be Practised by Christians.

In Catholic countries parents often dedicate or make an offering of their children when infants to the Blessed Mother of God. They are brought to the church for this purpose. The parents and friends of the family are present. It is a feast day for them. The child is taken to the altar of the Blessed Virgin. The parents kneel before the altar and the priest holds the child up, and the priest presenting to her, and to christ for the child from her Divine Son the gift of Jesus, a little image of Jesus until death.

This custom prevails to some extent in the State of Maryland. In Europe, some parents dress the children thus consecrated in blue robes and they are seven years of age. As soon as the child begins to understand what is said to it, these parents tell it how they consecrated it to the Blessed Mother of God. Indeed, friends often say to it, "You are a child of Mary." Parents and friends speak of the time the child is consecrated to the Blessed Mother. The child is taught by its parents and friends to look up to Mary. It is full of the beauty and goodness of its heavenly Mother. These parents often wonder what their lady will do for the child they lendie. It cannot be doubted that the love of parents that the child begins to couple with the Blessed Mother, the Mother of God and Queen of Heaven, to think of Mary, and to love her, is a great advantage to the child. The idea is entirely natural, even when they smile when sleeping in the arms of Mary.

Mary presented the infant Jesus in the temple to His Father. Christ, the Son of Mary, thus consecrating their children to God, through Mary, imitates the Divine Son. They lay their children at the feet of Mary and all about the Infant Jesus. He was dedicated by the Blessed Virgin and offered their every wish by anticipating it. Mary is the Mother of Christ, and of all things. He filled the hearts of Mary and Joseph with joy when He was in His Father. He came to do the will of His Father. How grateful these are His Mother and Joseph! Mary, the Mother of Jesus, it was the will of God, and Mary was the Mother of Christ, and Mary was the Mother of Jesus. Mary, the Mother of God, Holy Ghost breaks forth in the temple with the words, and never did pentecost the heart of Mary and fall of the reception of the offering of Jesus. The Son as well as Mary was plunged into her heart, but she kept those things to herself. Mary was grateful, their children to Mary they reminded her of the presentation that she made of the only offering worthy of the Eternal Father. The Blessed Mother is blessed in the consecration, and when adding her Divine Son for the Divine brought for the children

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF ITS PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1886.

Editorial Notes.

At the special request of the Sovereign Pontiff, the Little Sisters of the Poor have opened a house in Perugia, the birthplace of his Holiness, who has designed to defray all the costs himself.

—The death of Tillion comes upon the world rather suddenly, but at his advanced age life hangs by a very gossamer thread. On the third page will be found an interesting sketch of his life and the last hours of his useful career.

—The Queen-mother of Bavaria has ordered the construction of an expiatory chapel upon the spot where the dead body of her unfortunate son was found. The chapel will be built on piles, and will extend out into the lake on the margin of which the deplorable tragedy took place.

—If the readers of the MONITOR desire to do missionary work among Americans who are not afraid to read Catholic literature, they may help in the conversion of souls by handing their neighbors this number of the MONITOR and asking them to read the lucid and convincing reasons which Father Brandi, S. J., gives in reply to the question: "Why am I a Catholic?"

—It made the hearts of the Irish men and women of this city glamor with pride to notice the tattered flag of Erin among the battle-flags carried by the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic during their parade last week. Irish blood flowed and Irish valor manifested itself on every battle field, and such souvenirs of the civil conflict revive again the grand victory which was won for the integrity of the Union.

—The memory of Frederick Lucas should ever be kept green in the hearts of the whole Irish Catholic people, hence we print a very interesting and instructive sketch of his life and labors in behalf of Catholic faith on the third page this week. Those who would know the valor Lucas evinced in his single-handed fight for the Church and Ireland will learn much valuable information by giving the biographical sketch of that memorable man a careful perusal.

—The rioting and murder at present being indulged in by the Orangemen of Belfast, prove that the old diabolical spirit is still extant among that cowardly class of anti-Irish Irishmen. In contrast with their conduct we are glad to notice that in the Catholic counties of Drogheda, Limerick, Kilkenny and Galway the judges at the recent assizes each received white gloves in token of the fact that there was no criminal business on the calendar.

—The Rev. Father Hecker has lived for the lonely here and hereafter—has achieved new distinction at the hands of the Holy Father who has sent the Catholics his Apostolic Benediction. The Most Rev. Dr. O'Dwyer, Lord Bishop of Limerick, has received a very interesting letter from his Grace, Archbishop Kirby, the substance of which we are enabled to place before our readers. Dr. Kirby relates how he had the pleasure of placing Dr. O'Dwyer's letter before the Pope on the previous day, and at the close of the interview his Holiness "was pleased to send him (Dr. O'Dwyer) his Apostolic Benediction, as well as to his entire flock, adding specially in a marked tone, a particular blessing for the women of Limerick, that they might ever nourish in their hearts the ardent love of their Holy Faith and their country which animated their heroic sisters at the ever-memorable Siege of Limerick." This most interesting communication from the venerated Archbishop is further evidence of the deep interest which the Holy Father takes in his Irish dominions, and shows how familiar he is with their history.

—While the Lord Lieutenant and the Irish Privy Council have been compelled to issue proclamations placing the boroughs of Belfast and Londonderry under the provisions of the Crimes clauses of the Peace Preservation Act of 1881, in consequence of the outrages perpetrated by bloodthirsty and brutal Orangemen, it is deeply gratifying to know that in those portions of Ireland where Catholics are most numerous the government is compelled to close the jails for want of occupants! Thus the prisons of Carlow, Cavan, Ennis, Longford, Roscommon and Trim are to be closed and also the bridewells at Ballymena, Coleraine, Clonakilty, Dungannon, Dungarvan, Killarney, Tuam, Lurgan and Tipperary were discontinued from the first of the present month. This shows how basely false the charges are which assert that the Irish National League encouraged crime and that the Catholic Church condoned it.

A Fraud on our Midst:

Some enlisting scamp with a sanctimonious air, is preaching in this city that profitable employment of pretending to be raising money in order that he may become a priest. He represents himself as he says were blessed at Knock by Father Kavanagh, and he also sells all who purchase anything from him. All such characters are frauds, and the best thing to give them when they visit any Catholic home is the hard end of a broom handle. No worthy young man need ever paddle beads and scapulars in order to obtain his education for the priesthood, and yet Catholics are fooled every day by just such flimsy and fraudulent pretences, notwithstanding the repeated warnings published in this Catholic press. Honest men should keep a bottle of hot water constantly ready in order to receive such scamps in a manner that will break them off their bad habits.

Saturday next, the fifth, inst. will be the Vigil of the Assumption and a fast day.

Masonic Opposition to Christian Burial.

The recent decree issued by the Vicar of Christ, in which the faithful are directed to continue the custom of Christian burial, and neither to practice nor to encourage the Pagan method of cremation in the disposal of the dead, seems to have aroused the ire of all the Masonic organs from the Reforma of Rome down to the stinging little Bee of Sacramento. The Reforma is an open foe of the Church and as such it gives publication to this paragraph:

"The R——— Lodge La Banner, of Milan, showing the deliberative votum of the Holy Roman Inquisition, which condemns and prohibits cremation, knowing it highly favorable to Freemasonry that the Pontiff should attribute to the influence a work of hygiene and civilization (?) to the Grand Orient of Italy is one of the plaques to insignificant, everywhere, sacrifices for cremation, and to erect cremating temples, and further, to revoke cremation as obligatory Masonic law."

This is manly, straightforward and an open challenge to the Church of God for a struggle as to whether the pagan rite of cremation or the Christian mode of burial shall in future be followed by civilized nations throughout the world. The Italian Freemasons have thrown down the gage of battle and thus proved themselves to be the determined foes of God's Church and the diehard enemies of Christianity which several of the Vicars of Christ have denominated them.

The Sacramento Bee, on the other hand, comes out of its way in order to scurrilously insult its Catholic readers and to hang continually upon the Church of God. In this way the Sacramento Bee is a dangerous guest in every Catholic home where it is received, for the reason that without pause or a newspaper, it purposely inserts in its editorial columns calumnies against the Church which are read by Catholic children and which are detrimental alike to faith and morals. In this way the Sacramento Bee exercises a destructive influence which should be warded off by every Catholic parent who has the responsibility of souls resting upon his or her conscience.

What must our Catholic youth think when they read in the Sacramento Bee such a slanderous attack upon their Pope, their faith and their Church as contained in the extract printed from the Rome Reforma? Or what must our Catholic youth think of the Sacramento Bee—will continue to be practiced until the end of time. No matter how often the Bee may stir the souls of Catholics by attacking their Church, by falsifying history, or by injecting Masonic calumnies into its editorial columns, the mode of burial prescribed by man's only reliable spiritual guide on earth, will still continue to be pursued—regardless alike of the direct malignant assaults of Masonry or the insidious attacks of the bigoted Bee of Sacramento.

The Bee alludes to fickles in the customary manner usual with all half-educated historians when they undertake to assail the Church, but there is sufficient evidence now extant to prove the untruth of the Bee's sting when it says that "in the days of Gallic barbarism, when Clovis, the thumb-screw, the wheel and the stake to drive back the people from the path of educated reform in material, scientific and sanitary matters." The Church never had recourse to any such means, and we challenge the Bee to prove its assertion.

"Cremation," says the Sacramento Bee, "is sure to become the popular mode of disposing of the dead," and then it goes on to insult the Bride of Christ by telling Catholics how the Church will ask "its members to fall in with the people who adopt the Pagan mode of cooking corpses about to be buried and the Catholic method is to make a Christian rite.

Well, if popularity is to be a test of merit, the Bee should go in for the essential embalmation of Christianity in the world! Herod was far more "popular" than the Prince of Peace whose death he decreed. Nero was far more popular then sacerdotal, hence, according to the Sacramento Bee, every man should sin regularly and often. The world worships at the feet of Cleopatra, but it cares nothing for St. Cecelia—hence every woman should study to surpass Cleopatra in "popularity" and to avoid the "shortcomings" of a Saint whose greatest delight was in singing the praises of God! The saloon and the gamey table are more "popular" than the Church and the cloister, hence let the people of this "enlightened" age encourage the former and suppress the latter! This is precisely the condition to which the Sacramento Bee's proposition would lead the world! In the Bee's imagination Queen Elizabeth of England is a more fitting model for Catholic maidens than St. Elizabeth of Hungary. Diana is "popular," Lazarus is only a despised pauper. But which of them were nearest and dearest to the Sacred Heart of the Son of God!

From the animus of the Bee's stings, therefore, we very naturally conclude that it is only a drone in the hive of Christianity, and whilst it may delight in defiling its columns with detraction concerning Catholic affairs, it will discover that Catholics will not meekly submit to have insult and obloquy heaped upon their Church and themselves without finding a way to right the wrong thus perpetrated against them by those newspapers who lack an opportunity page to create prejudice against Catholic faith by having recourse to falsehood.

Masonic War on the Symbol of Christianity.

The Masonic infidels who at present manage State affairs in France, never had a better opportunity to exhibit their enmity to the Catholic Church than that presented by the death of the gifted Prelate Cardinal Guibert, and they have made the most of it. As the Paris correspondent of the Liverpool Catholic Times truly observes:

"It is an evil sign of the times when the Government of a people who are pre-eminent in their respect for the dead deliberately insults the remains of the chief representative of the Faith, the piety, and the virtue of the nation. In its zeal, Pride of Freemasonry or Fear, the French Republic has shown off the law of the dogmas which had previously blocked its anti-Christian character from the eyes of the multitude. For the present rulers of France, the law which enjoined that the honors of the State be rendered to the body of the principal ecclesiastical dignitary of the realm, a Prince of the world, and a Government functionary of exalted rank, is null and void of effect. The civic and military honors due to his position were withheld from the obsequies of the late Cardinal Guibert, and the clergy and faithful were not permitted to confer them by the ceremonial pomp which in any other country but France, would have marked the funeral of the head of the National Church. Not even a solitary cross, the emblem of the salvation of humanity, was allowed to be borne in the sad procession. Freethinkers, atheists, revolutionists and anarchists, the most dangerous enemies of law and order, may inter their dead with whatever fantastic rites they think fit to adopt, and the Red Flag and the Masonic apron and insignia may be ostentatiously flaunted in the face of the living, but the living children of the Church of God are peremptorily forbidden to pay their living homage to the memory of their departed chief. This is the state of things which prevails under a Republic which has the impudent audacity to write the words "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," upon every official document and upon the walls of every public building in the land."

Michael Davitt Coming to California.

From a correspondent in New York we learn that Michael Davitt was expected to arrive in that city from Ireland on yesterday. He will be in Chicago until the 20th inst., and he will then start for San Francisco on his lecturing tour, as it is by this means alone that he supports himself and his family. Every city on the Pacific slope should invite Michael Davitt to address the friends of Ireland on the Irish Question, and any such reports sent to the Monitor will be duly attended to and dates published soon after Mr. Davitt's arrival here.

We may in Ireland or out of it deserve a more cordial and enthusiastic reception at the hands of the Irish people than Michael Davitt, hence we hope to see him received in every place of any consequence on this coast with a general Cead mille faithha!

The Pacific says that a prominent lawyer of this city, who is an active deacon in one of the largest churches of this State, says he will prove by the records of the police court of San Francisco that one hundred of the youth of this city are ruined by contact with Chinese where there is one conversion. And yet, notwithstanding this well known fact, almost all the sectarian preachers of San Francisco favor the Chinese staying here and thus corrupting the youth of California.

The opinion on Papal Infallibility advanced by Professor Proctor is based upon a false premise. Proctor says: "Let us at the outset crush the unfortunate fiction that there is a race of infallible, irreligious, and of sinless men and women." Infallibility is not a race, it is a gift, a prerogative of God, and it is not a fiction, it is a fact. It would be impossible to recount the proofs of the infallible, irreligious, and of sinless men and women, but we will cite a few instances. Pius IX. is an infallible man, and he is not irreligious, he is a devout Catholic, and he is not sinless, he has confessed his sins to God and to his representatives, and he has received absolution and has been refreshed, he has received the Bread of Life, and he has been strengthened and invigorated by the sacrament of Extreme Unction, and he has received the Apostolic Benediction, and he has received the Papal Indulgence, and he has received the Plenary Indulgence, and he has received the Papal Benediction, and he has received the Papal Indulgence, and he has received the Papal Benediction, and he has received the Papal Indulgence, and he has received the Papal Benediction, and he has received the Papal

Farm and Home.

To Grow Old Together.

The marriage state is entered too hastily many, entered before the judgment has ripened.

Contracts of this kind should be made to last forever.

There is a toothing little story in the Apocrypha about a young man and woman who were just married and ready to start together on their united career, and this young man said to Sarah, "Come, let us be up and doing, and let the wedding guests bid goes, and they left were alone in their shanker.

"Marvellously certain that we may grow old together.

If all young married folk would utter such a prayer, and strive to render its fulfillment possible, would not life be sweeter for many!

Audubon, the great naturalist, married a good, sweet woman; and when she began to find him out, she found he would wander off a thousand miles in quest of a bird.

She said: "Amos:" and went with him, camped in the woods, lived in log huts and shanties on the frontier; anywhere to be with him.

She entered into his enthusiasm, shared his labor, and counted all things but drost for the excellency of the glory of being Audubon's wife.

When the children began to come to them, he had to wander off alone; but his heart didn't stay in a valley and deep or a wilderness so distant that the light would not shine on him out of their windows.

He knew exactly where his wife had her, and how she would look; for while, as Ruskin reminds us, the clouds are never twice alike, the sun is always familiar, and the true sunshine he saw when he locked homeward.

She understood what it meant to "grow aged together."

Is there not a lesson for wives in this!

Grapes in Sonoma.

We had a talk with J. J. Henderson, a reliable and well informed fruit and vine raiser of Sonoma, and are sorry to learn the prospect for the vine yield is not so good as heretofore reported. It is no doubt a fact that the San Francisco winemakers are sending out reports of immense crops of wine grapes in every direction for selfish purposes. They want to make it appear that there are more grapes than can be handled, so as to depress the price and enable them to make all the money. Mr. Henderson is a firm believer, from trial and observation, in the system of grafting upon resistant stock in districts affected with phylloxera. Sonoma being one of the oldest vine regions was among the first to suffer from this pest—which, in time, will spread to all the old vines—and was also the first to demonstrate the value of resistant vines. Every year the grape hoppers of San Francisco—and a few in other places—raise the cry that the grapes are not good, that there is not enough sugar in them, or that there are more than can be handled, and at the same time make all the contracts they can at a low figure. Mr. Henderson has no doubt that wine grapes will bring a good price this year, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.—Petaluma Argus.

Oranges and Lemons.

Recently we were shown a basket of light as fine lemons as ever grown! the dust of an horticulturist. One of the lot measured twelve by fourteen inches in circumference, and the others were almost as large. They came from the little grove of Judge Murphy of this city. We will take it to place on exhibition, and we have no fear on account of their competition with fruit from the famed citrus groves of the south. Mr. Murphy will also have some fine oranges on exhibition; these will probably average ten inches in circumference.—Marysville Democrat.

Filling a Fruit Car.

Few people are aware, till they make the estimate, how easy a thing it would be to fill a car with fruit. A carload in ten tons. This would be only 600 fifty-pound boxes. Ten cords more from a full-bearing tree is not an unusual yield. Consequently, the product of forty such trees would fill a car; an acre of orchard would fill several cars. Five or six acres of fruit would fill a train of fifteen cars. Of course, our estimate is rough, and would have to be varied according to the kinds of fruit raised. But it is sufficiently accurate to show that there need be no trouble at all in filling one enough to make a fruit train of the required number every day in the season, and probably a good deal more than enough.

The Value of Example.

People may counsel, and the world will listen; but profit comes by example. A parent inculcates gentleness in his children by many moral precepts; but they see him speak and act if only to a dumb animal in a harsh manner, and, in consequence, his instructions are worse than lost, for they are neither heeded nor respected. His example as a gentle and humane man would have been sufficient for his children without one word of command.

Sure Cure for Croup.

Boil pigs' feet in water without salt, and let in stand over night. In the morning take off the fat (which will be forward in a cake on top), put it in a tin pan, boil until all water is evaporated. Bottle and keep for use. Give a teaspoonful every fifteen minutes on the appearance of the first symptoms, and apply freely to the chest and throat, rubbing well. A celebrated physician says that a child cannot have croup if pigs' foot fat oil is administered at the first symptoms.

Wait and Work.

Every man must patiently bide his time. He must wait—not in listless idleness—but in constant, steady, cheerful endeavor, always willing and fulfilling and accomplishing his task, that when the occasion comes, he may be equal to the occasion.

Fruit as a Medicine.

Fresh, ripe, perfect raw fruit is safe and healthful at all seasons of the year, and said the tongue of disease, whether epidemic, endemic or sporadic, general, special or local. Under proper restrictions as to quantity, such fruits as named will cure a diarrhoea, aid in removing a cold, ague, fever or any other disease whose treatment requires the bowels to be kept freely open; for this effect fresh ripe fruit is scarcely edged to hurry; but to be used advantageously in health and disease, the following rules are imperative.

1. Fruit should be eaten ripe, raw, fresh and perfect.

2. It should be eaten in moderation.

3. It should be eaten not later than 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

4. No water or food of any description should be swallowed within an hour after eating fruit.

5. To have its full beneficial effect, nothing else should be eaten at the time fruit is taken.

It is to the neglect of these observances that erroneous impressions prevail in many families, and to an extent, too, in some instances, that the most innocuous pears or apple or bunch of grapes is regarded as that unit' unbodied vipers and death.

Family Fun.

A Puzzled Pair.

There was an old couple at the Hotel Stout, the other day who had been to Niagara Falls and were waiting for a train to take them in the interior of the State. They just felt that they had accomplished a big thing and were consequently quite elated. They had scarcely taken seats in the waiting room before the old man turned to a stranger and said

"Say we came up on back from Niagara Falls Yesterday night, then Falls are. Hain't really like them Falls in this hail country.

"Never heard of 'em," gruffly replied the man.

"You didn't! Lor' bless me, but that's astonishing! Never heard of Niagry Falls!"

"Never. What is it, anyhow?"

"Why, it's the biggest lot of water you ever saw, falling over the awfullest precipice you ever heard of. Why, I reckon a fifty shiner to look at it."

"Singular that none of the papers have ever mentioned it."

"They haven't. Why, them Falls has been there for thousands of years."

"Wasn't it a freshet or a dam broke loose or something of that sort."

"No, sirree! That water keeps a pourin' and roarin' and boomin' all the time."

"Must have been some trick about it," cautiously observed the cynic. "If it was a real thing there'd be some excitement about it. You don't think I'm a fool."

"Ma drink! I've never drank a drop in my life."

"Well, it's too bad. Anyone who will swindle an old man like you ought to be horse whipped."

"Swindled! Do you parland there hain't no Niagry Falls?"

"Never heard of any such thing," replied the man as he got up and left.

"Say, Hanner," said the old man, as he turned to his wife after a while, "did you hear that!"

"Every word."

"Say, when we git home we'll keep mum until I see Stebbins and keel round and see if there is a Niagry Falls. I'll wait to fooled we don't want to be laffed at; if it's all right we kin do our bloomin' when it's safe and will count. Don't say Goat island nor Horse Shoe Falls nor Bridal Veil to no livin' soul until we find out whether that ranger aim flew to our header, or the show was all right and with the money.

Dennis Reagan's Racket.

Dennis Reagan lives in a flat which overlooks the Lackawanna tracks, in Buffalo. N. Y. Across the street lives an Italian nobleman in reduced circumstances, who takes out his poor existence with the aid of a poor monkey and a worse hand-organ. To Garibaldi come Dennis one evening, and after passing the time of day, warms up to the subject in hand.

"Are ya plaze, Miether Garrabaldy," says Dennis, "and ya hare say objections to loanin' me yer monkey for an hour or two very mornin'?"

"Whaka for you want-a monk! inquired the count.

"Never ye mind," replied Dennis. "What wud ya charge-a mornin' for the use of him?"

The count suggested that ten cents an hour would be the proper figure, after raising attempting to find out what Dennis was going to do with the monkey. Dennis closed the bargain.

Everything went beautifully for a few days. The money was paid promptly and the monkey was returned regularly in time not to interfere with the requirements of the organ grinder. Dennis was in high glee over his bargain. Finally, however, the Italian's curiosity was aroused by his avarice and he followed Dennis that the monkey would not be loaned any more. This announcement was most depressing effect on Dennis. But he thought of a scheme.

"Garrabaldy," said Dennis, "ya pull promise to set square and not give the racket away, I'll be after takin' ya into partnership and give ya half the profits for the use of the monkey."

"All-a right," said the Italian. "Me shewah-a you how to make-a money."

Dennis put his arm through the Italian's and together they sauntered over to the back yard of the apartment house where Dennis lived.

"D'ye see that poles, Garrabaldy?" inquired Dennis, pointing to a pole some 15 feet high, surmounted by a cross piece.

"Yes, I-a see-a."

"D'ye know what there is beyant the same?" said Dennis. "Twin is the railroad tracks. Now this, Garrabaldy, this is the scap. Early in the mornin' when the cattle train begins to come in, I put the monkey on the pole. The breakmen is all out on the cars ridiky to go up the thrisles. Every blooter-a-mind shine from two or three dozens of coal at the monkey. I'm laid into tons away in the cellar and divil a wan-a think but the monkey pitz."

As He was saying.

At one of the theatres the other evening a man who had a seat between his wife and daughter left it at the close of an act to go down stairs. When he returned he found a vacant seat two rows back between two women, and dropped into it with the remark

"As I was saying when I went out, it's a great pity that people will come to a play late."

Because none one else makes a fool of herself by wearing cotton stockings in the winter, it doesn't follow that you must do the same.

"Sir!" came forth from both sides of him at once, and the way he vacated that seat made the ushers of his boots red-hot.

Little Laughlets.

—"What is that big iron thing left of holes?" asked Isaac. "Locomotive boiler," said Tom. Laura looked thoughtful. After a moment's silence, she asked: "Why do they boil locomotives?" Tom and Isaac roared. "To make 'em tender," he said slowly.

—A little city maiden, on a visit to her uncle's farm, saw a threshing machine in operation for the first time. "O, mamma!" cried she, rushing into the house out of breath, "there's something out in Uncle Joe's barn with two horses in it, and they keep turning and going, and never get any where."

—It was a Maine girl of whom the story is told that she refused to marry a most devoted lover until he should have thrashed a fortune of $10,000. After some reputation he accepted the decree and went to work. About three months after this the scarlatina young lady, meeting her lover, asked: "Well, Charlie, how are you thrashing along?" "O, very well, indeed," Charlie returned, cheerfully. "I've got $10 earn!" The young lady blushed, looked down at the toes of her walking boots, and stabbed the inoffensive earth with the point of her parasol. "I guess," said she faintly "I guess, Charlie, that's about near enough."

—A hail-storm in Benton County, Indiana, drove a hen from her nest in the grass and scared the eggs. The hen went back as soon as the storm was over and began trying to hatch the hailstones that filled the nest. She didn't find out her mistake until her feet were very cold and her feathers very wet.

Cholera Cramps Colic

all Summer Complaints and all Bowel Troubles are cured by

Perry Davis' Pain Killer

All druggists sell it.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
— Importers and Dealers in —
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING
PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
— MANUFACTURERS OF —
Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.
512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OR STROP for the same time than any man IN THE WORLD
My own make guaranteed $2 50
My Guard Razor warranted not to cut the finest white shaving 3 50
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50
Razor Oil 25 cts. a new vial.
M. PRICE
415 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing

G. ORSI,
HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger.
DEALER IN PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, VARNISHES, Turpentine, Brushes, Glue, Paper Hangings, etc. 38 Montgomery Avenue, bet. Jackson and Pacific Sts., San Francisco. Orders promptly attended to. Graining and Marbling. Sitting on glass. Kalsomining. American, French and English paper hangings.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.
The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.
Incorporated under the laws of California.
This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $2,000, $3,000 and $10,000, which are payable in five equal yearly dividends, after the death of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 18 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of each ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every nine years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members heirs.
No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the consolidation of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members who have certificates will fall due first on part payment thereof at 8 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The association has loaned to date, $104,000 to members, and paid in death losses $40,000 to members or their families.
Address,
W. H. WARD, Secretary,
Room 28 Phelan Building, San Francisco.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
BRANCH,
1356 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY.
12th St. bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

CYCLORAMA
Battle of Gettysburg.
The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War.
Opening and Rooting. Our Marvelous 360 x 50 Canvas
ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

LEBENBAUM BROS.
Fine Groceries,
215 SUTTER ST.
AND—
Polk Street, Cor. California.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Splendid set of Teeth, only $8.
A TRIE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. HOLTON, 961 Market street.

TO THE LADIES!!!
Fine Assortment of Artistic MILLINERY,
at Most Reasonable Prices.
MRS. S. ROWELL,
Is returning thanks for past favors respectfully intends her patrons and the public that she has received her mark of FUNCTIONABLE GOODS.
ALL THE LATEST STYLES OF
Trimmed Hats and Bonnets.
Ladies' Hats Bleached and Pressed and renovated with despatch.
MRS. S. ROWELL,
Between Powell and Mason Streets.
146 SIXTH ST.
Under the Brunswick Hotel, one of Blanket.

Dr. HENLEY'S CELERY BEEF & IRON.
THE GREAT NERVE TONIC.—Unequaled as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Nervous Prostration, Loss of Vitality, Impotence, Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers.
BEWARE OF INITIATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.
THE LIVER
Secretes the bile and pets life a litter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By improperly in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, sour eyes, blood diarrhoea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood renovator.
DYSPEPSIA
Furnishes appetite; food, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, offensive breath, but treats in about how spirits, general prostration. These are a few of disease more prominent than dyspepsia, and it uses all cases be traced to an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and makes a perfect cure.
THE BLOOD
BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is a powerful blood purifier, and by its use all impurities, eruptions, pimples, blotches, boils, tumors, and all other diseases of the blood are cured.
KIDNEYS
Are the great secretory organs of the body. Acts and through the Kidneys flow the waste products, containing poisonous matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing headache, and many pains throughout the body and joints. Fevers, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is at once restored.
SCROFULA
Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficient nourishment functions to nourish through the blood. Its effects, affecting glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sores, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Erysipelas is also a disease, caused by impure blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA purifying the blood and toning up the system, forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through its natural channels.
BULL'S SARSAPARILLA
BULL'S WORM DESTROYER.
BULL'S SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.
THE POPULAR REMEDIES OF THE DAY
KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.,
San Francisco.
—WHOLESALE—
LIQUOR DEALER.
We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.
Table Wines ... 50c, 60c, 75c, 85c, 1 00
Assortion Wines ... $1, $1.25 and $1.50
Sweet Vineyard ... 75c, 1 00 and 1 25
Old Port or Sherry ... $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $2
Kentucky Whiskey ... $1.50, $2, $2.50 and $3
Bourbon Whiskey ... $1.50, $1.75 and $2
Rum, Brandy, Gin, Ale, $1 per qt. and upwards
Other Wines and Liquors at low rates.

SOMETHING NEW
FOR THE LADIES!
This most Invention and perfect Corset, Roman and Modesty Bustle for Ladies are now obtainable at the
NEW HAMMAM BATHS,
218 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.
Ladies attended from 9 A. M. to 8 P. M. 2467
THE BEST AND CHEAPEST!
THE CATHOLIC NATIONAL.
A Family Newspaper.
Readers and Bible History.
By Rt. Rev. Rich. Gilmour, D.D., Protestant Bishop of Lahore.
Cheapest and Most Popular School Books.
The Primer, stiff covers ... 4 cts.
The First Reader, illustrated ... 8 cts.
The Second Reader, " ... 10 cts.
The Third Reader, " ... 15 cts.
The Fourth Reader, " ... 20 cts.
The Fifth Reader, " ... 25 cts.
The Sixth Reader, " ... 50 cts.
The Primary Speller, containing Spelling and Reading Lessons ... 15 cts.
The Speller and Word-Book, containing Spelling, Defining, Word-Building, Synonyms, Prefixes, Roots, Compositions, Dictation Exercises, Rules for Spelling, Etymology, Etc. ... 25 cts.
English Grammar, compact and comprehensive, with Analysis "Although to simplify English Grammar" ... 25 cts.
The Catechism of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, Illustrated Edition. Published by the Fathers of the Council. Approved and Recommended by the Council. ... 25 cts.
A Catechism of Christian Doctrine, Revised by the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore. Approved and Published by the Council. Large Type Edition ... 10 cts.
Catechism, Diocesan Edition ... 5 cts.
Catechism, Diocesan Edition, Interlined ... 10 cts.
Abridged Catechism ... 3 cts.
Catechism, Large Type ... 15 cts.
Kathleisker Katechismus, Large Type Edition ... 15 cts.
Katechismus der Katholischen Religion ... 15 cts.
Catechisme, Prepared by the Catechetical Congress, Paper ... 15 cts.
Catechisme Abreviate, Paper ... 15 cts.
Catechisme, Large Type, Paper ... 15 cts.
Catechisme, Large Type, Cloth ... 25 cts.
All Sunday prices net at 1 cent.
BENZIGER BROS.,
Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,
NEW YORK:
CINCINNATI: 36 & 38 Barclay St. ... 178 Madison St.
ST. LOUIS: 206 S. Fourth St.

NEW MUSIC.
J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.
A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St.
San Francisco.
PACIFIC COAST AGENT.
Waltz in Love, Mr. Adjutant, Sweetness and Love, Ivy Leaf, Ivy Leaf Quadrille, Ivy Leaf Polka, Ivy Leaf Polka Mazurka, Ivy Leaf Polka Mazurka, Ivy Leaf Polka Mazur

WHY AM I A CATHOLIC?

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

close," he says, "in Christian antiquity, that is a shame for Protestants! It is from that it has been denied by Protestants" ("Memoirs," London, 1750). It will either, then, to cite a few testimonies from the early doctors of the Church. Thus St. Cyprian calls the Roman See the "Chair of Peter" (Ep. 55, n. 44). St. Jerome calls Pope Damasus "the Successor of the Fisherman," and his chair "the chair of Peter" (Ep. 15, n. 2). And St. Augustine, Leone, the Roman Bishop, "the Successor of St. Peter" (Sp. 95, n. 5).

A careful examination, moreover, of the doctrines of the Catholic Church will prove clearly to any unprejudiced mind, that she teaches whole and entire the very same doctrines that were taught by the Apostles. This I find to be admitted by Protestants themselves, at least as far as it concerns those points, which they call "fundamental" or "the original substance of the Gospel." See e. g. Hodge "Systematic Theology" (p. 3, c. 17, § 2), and Hopkins, "End of Controversy Controverted," (Letter 19). What they try in vain to prove is, that the Catholic Church, together with those doctrines, has taught many errors, that she has added many new points of doctrine to the original deposit of faith. I have diligently examined each and every one of these points, and the result of that study has been to convince me the more, that the so-called additions are not new articles of faith, but only authoritative declarations of the teaching Church that the doctrines in question had been revealed to the Apostles, and had been given in its either by Scripture or Tradition."

THE LAST CONTENTION REDUCED TO ONE.

The Apostolic Church is an Apostolic ministry, that is, ministers who derive their powers from the Apostles, and are in communion with the center of unity which Christ established, and from which they derive their mission. The necessity of this communion with the center of unity is evident from the few words in the already made proof of unity of the Church. In confirmation of this, it will be enough to quote here two of the many authorities I have examined on the subject. St. Ignatius speaking of "the chair of Rome, in which St. Peter sat," tells us that "in communion with this chair unity is to be possessed by all." And that great saint and doctor of the Church, St. Jerome, thus addresses the Bishop of Rome, Pope Damasus: "I speak with the Successor of the Fisherman, and the Disciple of the Cross. Following no chief but Christ, I am joined in communion with your beatitude, that is, with the chair of Peter. On that rock I know that the Church was built. Whosoever shall eat the lamb outside that house is profane. Whosoever does not gather with you scatters abroad" (Ep. 15, n. 2).

It is an historical fact, which no scholar has ever denied, that the priests and bishops of the Catholic Church can trace their lineage back to an apostolic origin. This is clearly demonstrated by following the succession of Pontiffs from St. Peter to Leo XIII., in the chairs of the Bishop of Rome, with which center of unity no other priesthood but that of the Catholic Church is in communion. I may add, also, that those Ecclesiastics who have ordained ministers to the ministry of orders, or, for instance, the Church of England, and its daughter, the Episcopal Church in the United States, found "their claim on the ground of having received these orders from bishops that had been in communion with the Roman Catholic Church. Again, therefore, I say, St. Augustine, I answer that I am a Catholic because" "In the Catholic Church there is the succession of priests from the See itself of the Apostle Peter, to which it was committed by Christ, the Lord, (present) episcopate, holds me" (Contr. Ep. Man. n. 5).

BUT, ONCE MORE, IF I CONSIDER

the system with and purpose of Christ in establishing His Church on earth, I find that she shall continue to the end of time, unchanged in her internal and external constitution, and possessing all the very same signs, marks, etc., with which she was endowed by her Divine Founder. For the mission of the Church is the mission of Christ, "as new souls." She must last, therefore, as long as there are souls to save. She is built on a rock, and "the gates of hell shall never prevail against her." It is impossible for her ever to become corrupt in her faith, in her sacraments, or in her government. For the moment she should fall in any of these, that moment the gates of hell would have prevailed against her. To assert that at any time the Church of Christ failed in to deny the truth of Christ's promise to His Church, "I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world," is to say, "There are none," St. Augustine tells us, "who say: she that was a Church of all nations, is already lost, or more; she has perished. This my they who are not in her. The impudent assertion." (Ps. 101, sermn. 2 n. 8) If, therefore, the Church cannot fail or become corrupt, there can be no reason for any reformation in her faith, her sacraments, or her government. Every attempt at such reformation is an explicit denial of her indefectibility.

BUT THERE STILL REMAINS OUR CHURCH

was to last the same "all days" even to the end of the world, then it has always been in existence, from the days of the apostles to our own. It existed, therefore, when Luther and Calvin and Henry VIII. raised the standard of revolt against the Catholic Church, in which they were baptized and confirmed; it existed when each established a separate and independent Church of his own. For it is a fact that, at the time, there existed no other Church distinct from her, and recognized by the Reformers as the true Church of Christ.

It is evident, therefore, that the "Reformers," and consequently those who have followed in their footsteps, have no divine authority to preach, to administer sacraments, and to govern Christ's spiritual body. They certainly did not receive it from the Catholic Church, from which they were separated, and by which they were condemned. Luther was a priest, but never a bishop. Calvin was a simple clerk, and never received the order of priesthood. Henry VIII., "the spiritual head" of the Church of England, was a layman. By whom, then, were they ordained? And "how can they preach, unless they be sent?" (Rom. x. 15). Did they receive an extraordinary mission from God himself? No matter of them has ever come to light. And it seems quite enough to me, at least, that they all could not have been sent by the same God to preach contradictory doctrines and teachings. Did Henry VIII. wrote against Luther, Luther against Calvin, and Calvin against both.

As this subject of vital importance, I will consider my position and reasons above from another point of view, briefly touching on a point of doctrine characteristic of the Catholic Church.

BY REASON FOR BEING A CATHOLIC

is drawn from the fact that the Catholic Church, i. e., the Church in communion with the Successor of St. Peter, the Bishop of Rome, is the true Church of Christ. This I briefly proved, by showing that she possesses all the marks which must, according to the intention of Christ, characterize His Church, and distinguish it from every other society. I now add, that since I am obliged to be a Christian in order to be saved, and since the choice is only between Catholicity and Protestantism, if I were not a Christian Catholic, I ought to be a Christian Protestant. Now is it proved that Christian Protestants constitute the Church of Christ? This should be one in faith and government; its members should be so united as to be "member of member" and constitute one body, one spiritual kingdom, one fold. In vain do I look for this unity among Protestants. They do not constitute one church, but many independent churches. They have not "one faith" or creed, but many creeds. And no wonder, for there no unity of faith can be found where the only principle of this unity is denied, and a principle is set up in its place which necessarily causes dissension. This false principle is their rule of faith. As long as they are told that every man has the right and duty to interpret the Scriptures for himself, as long as the private interpretation of the Bible is to settle all religious controversies, so long will religious division be perpetuated, not only among different denominations, but even among the members of the same denomination. If Washington and his colleagues in promulgating the Constitution of this Republic had said: "Let each citizen of the Constitution for himself, explain it for himself, and follow out in practice his own interpretation of it," we certainly should not be "known and read of all men" as one united nation. In lie stand, we should have had a thousand different political systems and petty governments. How did these great statesmen guard against this danger? They framed the Constitution, and at the same time established a supreme tribunal, and an administrative power, which should interpret its meaning ultimately and definitely, by whose decisions all, without exception, from the President to the beggar, are bound to abide.

THE VERY SPIRIT OF CHRIST

is the living and infallible authority of the Church of Christ. This, and no other, is the supreme tribunal, and the supreme judge in matters of faith. This is the source and safeguard of unity. I have already shown that Christ, our Lord, established in His Church an authority to whom teaching the faithful must submit. While on earth, He said to His Apostles and to Christ gave to His Apostles, who then constituted the Church, a mission to teach, and first it expressly stated in the last verses of St. Matthew's Gospel that He committed to His Church the mission of teaching all nations. We know also that He made submission to this teaching a condition of salvation (Mark xvi. 16), asserting to that he who hears the Church hears His. Hence He is always with His teaching Church, and the Spirit of truth, in Pentecostal, abides with her forever (John xiv. 16). How could Christ make obedience to this teaching authority a condition for salvation, and declare that in hearing the Church, I should hear Him; that the gates of hell should never prevail against it; that the Spirit of truth is the Spirit of the Church, if that Church had no divine authority to teach, or were fallible in teaching?

THOSE WHO SENT THIS AUTHORITATIVE and infallible teaching of the Church, consistent, must give up all divine faith. "If should not believe the Gospel," says St. Augustine, "unless the authority of the Church moved me thereto" (C. Ep. Fund.). The Bible, without this living and infallible authority, leaves man necessarily in a state of doubt. For how can he believe any article of faith, on the sole authority of the Bible as the word of God, if they must first be infallibly sure that the book in which they find that article is the word of God, and not the word of man; just as before we accept any statement as an article of the Constitution of our country we ratify the Constitution of the United States. How can Protestants reply to this question? i. e., how can they, without the authority of the Catholic Church, be infallibly certain that the Bible is the word of God? This fact, that the Bible is containing so many books, and chapters, and verses, is a work of inspiration? This evidence is not found in the Bible itself, and even if it were there, the question would still remain, how do you know that this evidence is infallibly true? Do you know that this assertion is of God? They may believe that book to be the word of God, because they think so, or because they think that the Spirit bears witness within them, or because the opinion of learned men, or even because their communion tells them so. But are they infallibly sure that they are correct? All those learned men are fallible; they acknowledge it themselves; their own denomination or Church pretends to be fallible, and consequently to be liable to err.

SECONDLY, THIS FALLIBLE AUTHORITY

is human authority. Will they believe on human fallible authority that the Bible is the word of God? They may, if they choose, but then it then be logical, and consistent, to believe in the Bible on the same authority—in other words, let them give up divine faith. "Prove to me," says Salmeron, "the necessity of authority in religion, and to morrow I will be a Catholic." That this authority is absolutely necessary is evident from the fact that without it the unity of the Church of Christ can no a nubiar; without it the Church of Christ is a purely human institution, and truth in religion we are lost in doubt. Take divine and infallible authority I find in the Catholic Church, and authority outside of it; for the different denominations that have sprung up since the time of Luther and Calvin "positively reject it.

Then, then, are some of the reasons "why I am a Catholic." I remain in the Church to which I belong, because, as St. Augustine's words, "This is the Holy Church, the One Church, the True Church, the Catholic Church, which fights against all heresies. She may be attacked, but cannot be overcome. All errors have sprung from her. . . . . but she remains unscarred from her own root, to be with Christ in her own charity. The gates of hell shall not prevail against her" ("De Symbolo," n. 14).

S. M. HEADD, S. J.

A VENERABLE NUN.

Brazil Can Boast of the Oldest Sister of Charity in the World.

The Messageries Maritimes ocean steamer, which left Marseilles recently for Brazil, brought among the passengers eight Sisters of Charity, who are accompanied by the Lazarist Fathers. One of the Sisters is the Visitress of the Order for the province of Rio, Brazil, etc. This venerable nun entered her sheltath year last month. The voyage which she has undertaken at her age (Ninth which she has made to South America since 1848, when she introduced the Sisters of Charity into Brazil for the first time. She has accomplished nearly forty years of her life in that country. Reverend Mother Dubost is a native of Paris. She entered the Sisters of Charity at the age of thirteen, she has now been professed for 77 years. She was a novice when the revolution of 1830 broke out, and passage for abandoned girls at Vaucelles and then at Paris, she was entrusted with the task untiringly to orphanages and to hospitals in the San Francisco, having left her native country five times to make, to the brother home in Brazil, the Retreats prescribed by the rule of her Order. During the visit to her native land, which has just ended, Mother Dubost is still hale and vigorous, and on her arrival in Brazil she intends to visit the houses of the Order in three provinces before she settles down at her usual residence in Rio Janeiro.

—Very Rev. Father Fidelis and Father Leon, Passionists, have left Buenos Ayres for Valparaiso. They intend to establish a branch house of their congregation on the West Coast.

THE "NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW" FOR AUGUST.

With the August number the North American Review completes its twenty-second year of continuous publication.

The August number opens with an article on Bismarck, by ex-Minister John A. Kasson, who is a great personal acquaintance with the great German Chancellor.

The series of religious articles by representative divines is continued by an article entitled "Why am I a Catholic?" by Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, presenting the leading reasons for his conversion, which we take great pleasure in presenting to our readers this week.

The literature of Arkansas narrates the process of that State (which is as rapid as to be pronounced Arkansas) since the close of the civil war.

Elmer Walcott's last article of Life Insurance, written just before his death, is published in this number.

Gen. Joe Johnston, the old antagonist of Sherman, gives a history of the Army of Tennessee, which is an article entitled "Operations with Sherman in Georgia." This article is plain, unpretentious, and straightforward narrative of the operations that led to the surrender of the last great armed force of the Confederacy. In the course of it he contradicts certain statements which he attributes to the layer of memory on the part of Gen. Sherman; and his reference to Sherman's letter shows that there was no love lost between the great soldier and his former civil antagonist.

Henri Rochefort contributes a very timely and interesting article, written with his usual clearness and brightness of style, on "Radicalism in France."

Twice in the series of important articles in the month's issue, it will probably be regarded as the work of Harry Stevens, of Lake in Pennsylvania. Mr George was commissioned by the Government of Mexico to make personal investigations into the reliability of rail and Ashe in the interior regions of Peruvian; and his first report discloses a condition of affairs with respect to the property of the chocolate of her father, and not many of Christian Mexicans, which is a very interesting and exciting one. The body was recently discovered in Mexico.

Mr. Gorey, who has visited the seat of Irish troubles, reports the condition of the country in Ireland, and the feeling of the land with that of the Irish peasantry. This article is sure to excite much comment.

The Review of Reviews and Comments is a brief response by Dr. Decker to the criticisms of Arthur Brisbane, of the Boston Herald, and a remarkable letter article by Gideon J. Tucker, on the Constitutional Law of Nations, in view of the approaching Constitutional Centenaire.

SACRED HEART PARISH.

The Ladies Who Will Have Charge of the Tables at the Coming Fair.

The members of the Parish of the Sacred Heart, Mission Dolores, have been in busy activity for months past, preparing for the Parish Fair, which is to commence the arrangements for the coming Church Fair. The names of the ladies who volunteered their services, and will have charge of the different tables, are as follows:

Fancy table, No. 1—Mrs. T. D. Sullivan, assisted by Miss Mary Kane.

Candy stand—Miss Julia Gallant, assisted by Miss Lily Dwyer.

The refreshment room will be presided over by Mrs. F. Brophy, assisted by Mrs. Hook and Miss Gray.

A number of valuable articles will be raffled off, and the tickets are now on sale. Mrs. J. D. Mulligan has contributed a lot on Forty-first avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. Ashton and Mr. Father Sorde has contributed the sum of $25 in gold coin. The Ladies of the Sacred Heart have been put at the top of twenty fra cents, and the members of St. Joseph's Ladies' Aid Society are to be the keepers. The exact date of holding the fair has not been fixed upon, but it will probably be held in the latter part of next month.

The fair is under the direct supervision of the Pastor, Father Prendergast, who is taking a very active interest in the matter. The proceeds from the fair will be devoted to the completion of the most monumental work ever held in the parish. The new church will be a magnificent structure, and when completed will be the finest edifice in the school, while the number of girls is much larger.

SPANISH CHURCH FAIR.

Nearly $1,000 Realized at the Booth.

The fair in behalf of the Spanish Church, on Broadway, near Mason street, was brought to a successful termination on Saturday evening by Rev. Father Gastelu, about $1,000 being realized as the result. The ladies, who had charge of the various stands, have generously entered their esteemed pastor throughout the fair were as follows:

Fancy table, No. 1—Mrs. V. Andreu, Table No. 2—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table No. 3—Mrs. Hogan.

"The Mission Buntamatic. Floral table: Mrs. Pacheco. Table "The Mission Jewelry" Mrs. Louise Acosta. Table No. 4—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table No. 5—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 6—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table "Flora" on the opposite side. Table No. 7—Mrs. Pacheco. Table No. 8—Mrs. Hogan. Table No. 9—Mrs. Pacheco.

Table No. 10—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table No. 11—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 12—Mrs. Pacheco. Table No. 13—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 14—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table No. 15—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 16—Mrs. Pacheco. Table No. 17—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 18—Mrs. Ignacio Martinez, Table No. 19—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No. 20—Mrs. Pacheco. Table No. 21—Mrs. Hogan.

Table No.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

FOR IRELAND, FOR FREEDOM and GOD.

(Respectfully inscribed to Young Ireland Parliamentary Club of San Francisco, Cal., by C. Antonio Doyle.)

A trone to the fears of a coward,
Nor mind the weak voice of a slave;
But a hand to the hopeless and valiant
And a wreath for the brow of the brave!
For the sword and the pen have failure
For the sword and the pen have failure
But whoever the Maker of Freedom
Hath blessed with the Mace of Reason
From fighting our Apostle shown.
Let us heed thy the wild land Darkness,
Let us long the black chain of Freedom,
Let us gain the broad light of Freedom,
Or God be that chasm a tomb.
Stand firm! Sons of Erin! Stand ready!
Break away from most Tyranny's rod,
And relentlessly dash on the Saxon
For Ireland, for Freedom, and God!

A trone to the fears of a coward,
Nor mind the weak voice of a slave;
But a hand to the hopeful and valiant
And a wreath for the brow of the brave!
There's a God in high Heaven above us
Who will sanction our bloodless affray.
There's a legion of sanctified martyrs
Who bless us and cheer us on to the fray!
There are millions of suffering at home
Scattered out o'er the oceans of earth,
Who are waiting the coming of Freedom,
To rush back to the land of their birth.
Let us follow the path Emmet trod,
And, if needs be, like him mount the scaffold—
For Ireland, for Freedom, and God!

A trone to the fears of a coward,
Nor mind the weak voice of a slave;
But a hand to the hope of the hopeless
Let us gain the glorious Freedom shown
Who manifestly hatched for Ireland, our year
Now, now
In the struggle for Freedom and Light,
We have force breaking wrongs to be righted,
And Vengeance now watchfully cries
That the red-handed Saxon Oppression
May no longer pollute Erin's skies.
Then, Sons of Erin! Stand ready
The isle of your ever Emerald rest,
Stand ready with Musket and Money—
For Ireland, for Freedom and God!

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

RUMBLINGS OF A BIG WAR.

THE RIVER SIT.

(John Bull Inquirer.)
While I wish to remark,
That the marriage is plain,
"And the outlook is dark
On the land and the main;
For the French and the Germans are snarling,
And the Russians are at it again.

Annexation's the game,
And I will not deny
In regard to that same;
That I never was shy;
But then 'twas my duty, Russian mission
To plunder Tooah every sky.

'Twas the Germans began
In their leisurely way,
While in the Pacific
I was widening my sway;
Of course in that latter pacific Mahdi
That set all my plottings astray.

Which my troopers had failed
To subdue and to slay
When the Russians assailed
With that Turkish surprise,
And they physic'd that dervish the Afghans
And me to a way I despise.

Which we had a few words
Of the kind not so pleasant
And, unshamming my word,
I spoke stiff to the Bear;
But his remarks laughed at my blunder
And mocked at my made-believe air.

Their disputation were stocked
In a way that I grieve,
And my feelings were shocked
While they laughed in their sleeve—
Which they reckoned my tactics correctly,
Knowing me as they do!
And my exercise grew,
For to pay an old debt
Monsieur France is not slow;
And Canada, too, is in trouble
About Bonfield's remonstrance, you know.

And that cursed Irish isle,
With its nuisance and bale—
Though its lackeys may smile
And its Overgrown pride—
Is ready to spring on my soldiers,
And I tremble to think of their fate.

Which is why I remain,
And my language is plain,
Of the land and the main
On the land and the main;
For the French and the Germans are snarling,
And the Russians are at it again.

Jackson, Cal.

AT THE GOLDEN GATE.

I am sinking, sister, sinking—dying as my youth is flying,
I can see your form but dimly, as you bend by my side,
For my eyes are glassy growing, and my feet are cold and icy,
While my frame is racked with fever and a pain wooth leave behind.

When the wind of springs were sighing I was happy of heart and strong!
But the summer leaves lie dying and I hear the angel sound,
When the primrose pale was springing, all my thoughts were of this earth!
Now such shortening day is bringing dreams of my mortal bliss.

I have sighed for love and pleasure in the days now passed away;
But the joys of earth seem hollow as I think of them to-day,
And multitudes of I were given strength to live my life again,
I would train myself for Heaven, lay from all the hatred of man.

Yet I know not; God is ruler; and 'twould not be just to deem
That the world of love and labor is a false and fruitless dream,
In that world, as in the oblivion, burns the fire of love divine,
Both are noble in their children, both are part of God's design.

And the life of noble emotion that is filled with grief and pain,
May be shaken to another with the world's keen rare to rue,
I will only pray, my sister, that when you are left behind,
You may win your crown of glory in the life for you designed.

Walking onward meekly, purely, like a pilgrim through the land,
Gathering flowers of holy fragrance to be placed by the God's own hand!
I am weary now, so weary I can speak but little more
Pray! oh, pray for me, dear sister, till this last long night is over.

Raise my aching head a little, let me gaze with those poor eyes
On the whitening dawn! hand demanding from you strangely shining skies.
See them now! they come to meet me! Hear the wondrous music swell,
Kiss me once again, dear sister, kiss me once, and now farewell!

Life is sweet, but death is sweeter, when it leads to life divine—
Angels, bear me gently onward! King of Angels, I am thine!

GERMAN HILL.

Reduction in Money Orders.

Recent instructions from the Postal Department at Washington announce the following reduction in the rates charged for transmitting money through postal orders: For sums not exceeding $10, cents; $10 to $20, 5 cents; $20 to $30, 10 cents; $30 to $40, 15 cents; $40 to $50, 20 cents; $50 to $60, 25 cents; $60 to $70, 30 cents; $70 to $80, 35 cents; $80 to $90, 40 cents; $90 to $100, 45 cents. This is a reduction in fees, as the present fees for a money order not exceeding $5 is eight cents, and the larger amounts, as above designated, in the same proportion. The above schedule will take effect last week.

—The Sisters will hold a fair at St. Gertrude's Academy, Rio Vista, on the 19th of September, in order to raise funds to make class repairs about Rio Vista.

Literary Miscellany.

"Pity is Akin to Love."

How Wilhelm Was a Poacher Victory.

It was the evening of a long, but summer day. The Bavarian Village of Wandorf was on fire. Flags were flying; a brass band was playing in the Lion Station the loudest and the merriest. In full harmony with the gay sights and sounds were the hearts of the villagers. The war, which was united Bavarians, Saxons, and Prussians in a great band of brotherhood against a common enemy, had been brought to a triumphant close. Sedan had crowned the long series of Teutonic victories, and peace was secured at last. Even little Wendorf had had its share in the struggle, had given its blood and its tears to the sacred cause, and had earned its right to share in the joy, which was the outcome of sacrifice. Only the day before any story opens two Wandorfers had returned from the war, and one of them had made for himself a name in whose radiated glory his friends and neighbors found no small cause for exultation.

Within a low, dark frill-shop, an old dame, in a short blue stuff petticoat and a loose dark jacket, and with a gay colored cotton handkerchief tied over her sandy locks, sat, briskly knitting. She had a yellow, wrinkled face, and her sunken, dark eyes looked keenly out over a pair of broad-rimmed spectacles.

In a room opening out from the shop, a young Bavarian soldier was carried by a pillow; one arm hung useless by his side; a look of utter exhaustion was in his eyes. Wilhelm Hasar was grandson of the old dame, who tended the Wandorf frill-shop. His father had died early, the mother quickly followed her husband. Wilhelm, at a tender age, passed into his grandmother's keeping. A quiet, good-humored little lad, he soon learned to make himself useful in the shop and to gain the favor alike of its proprietress and patrons. At school he attained decided aptitude for learning; he had a good voice, too, and presently became a member of the church choir. Father Andreas took a fancy to the boy, gave him lessons in organ playing and in literature, his only favorite pursuits, and spoke of him as a youth with a perception and love of the harmonies of music and poetry. As time wore on, Wilhelm, grown into a young man, took upon himself the duties of sexton. He sang the church half-pastoly Mass, for vespers and benediction; he swept and cleaned the church and sacristy at least once in every week; when no acolyte was present he assisted the celebrant in the Mass, his responsive voice sounding out clear and swee in the incense-laden air. The quiet old church had a great charm for him; he knew every dim corner, every spot upon the parement which caught the morning and evening sunlight streaming through the colored windows; all the pictures were his familiar friends. Early in life Wilhelm met the fate inevitable to a man of a fervent poetical temperament; he fell in love. The object of his affection was Gretchen Kellner, daughter of Hans Kellner, who kept the Favorit Bakery.

Gretchen was the belle of Weindorf, a charming maiden, with a graceful little figure, a bewitchingly bright face, and a mass of gloriously, uncompromisingly red hair. The English artist had not long established himself in the village before he made acquaintance with Gretchen and conceived for her an impersonal painter's passion. He spare itself to paint her, and in due time he secured her services as model at a modest rate of remuneration. She had figured in the neighbor that in the great picture artist, hitherto hardly in London a bull-length portrait of the girl, represented as presiding over a Bavar-stall, would shortly appear. Gretchen Kellner had many admirers, subsequently Wilhelm had many rivals. Among these rival claimants for her hand was Franz Muller, an unpolished lacteum, but decidedly good-looking and capable young farmer, who raised a few acres within a mile of Wiendorf. Franz did not shine in social society, but in his working-day clothes, and with his working day manner, he cut an admirable figure, with his tall, active form, his erect head, his handsome unburnt face, his soil-marked hands, and his manliness of bearing. Then, too, he was well off, and had an exceptionally comfortable home to offer a wife.

Gretchen was a coquiste; she shrank from resigning her freedom and entering her train of adorers by definite acceptance of any one among her numerous suitors. First one admirer, then another, would be singled out for marks of favor, but when the question of marriage was propounded, the girl became coldness. "I love dat man, jet," she said airily, "she had not made up her mind.

The uneasiness of his position was all but unendurable to Wilhelm. His love was an over-mastering passion; Gretchen—her beauty and her tantalizing, enslaving coquetry—was never out of his mind.

At last came the war between France and Germany; Wilhelm Hasar and Franz Muller, who had both served in the army the three years demanded by the State of every German, volunteered for service under Loro for Gerehrer, no less than five of the national armies, was Wilhelm's enlisting motive for action. He courted danger gladly, for the sake of the distinction which he hoped to gain thereby, by at his darling's feet. Gretchen was a woman who would not, Wilhelm, told himself, refuse to share his name when he had made it famous.

The young man's high hopes were doomed to disappointment. Very early in the day of his first engagement, before any opportunity presented itself for proving the valor that was in him, young Hasar was carried, insensible and severely wounded from the field. Long weeks followed of fever in the hospital—fever which, though a fatal issue at one time seemed imminent, was at last subdued, but from which the patient awoke weak and weakened to the dreary knowledge that the use of one of his limbs—an arm—had gone from him forever. He had won no vestige of the renown for which he yearned; it was a cripple, and not a hero, that his most return to Gretchen and home. His injured member had been the storm of laughter unnerved him. Franz had covered himself with glory. By a deed of grand coolness he had earned the title of commanding officer; distinctions were showered upon him; he had received an officer's commission, and had risen from the ranks.

At first, when he thought of his love, Gretchen and on her probable reception of the news of Franz's exploits and honors, Wilhelm listened with a pang of deep jealousy; but when he had heard the whole tale of his comrade's valor, tears of generous admiration started to his eyes. Franz had richly deserved his rewards, thought himself, his achievements, and therefore his deservings, were nil. His must have the disappointment and the obscurity of his lot silently and patiently as he was able.

But now, when Wiandorf was astir with holiday makers—now, when he lay, unwonted and alone, in the dewy-cooling twilight, Wilhelm's heart was very sore. He tried to look into the future with steady eye, but it lay very dark and desolate before him. That morning he had written, with his one useful hand—happily his right hand—a letter to Gretchen, and he had ventured to hope to win her as his wife. She must not link her bright life with that of a cripple.

One or two occasions on which he had seen Gretchen stood out more prominently than others in the young man's memory. He recalled one day—how long ago it seemed—when he had discovered the painting on the steps leading to the Englishman's studio, and waiting her hand in marry fervent to the artist within. The sun had caught her red hair, which seemed like an aureole round her lovely face. Wilhelm had stood motionless in the great grown street to watch her. He remembered, too, a Sunday evening in autumn, when he had accompanied her and her father to the Lion Station. The old man had been speedily captured by some friends, and the two young people had wandered off by themselves in which the sun set over a distant ridge of hills. Wilhelm had spoken to Gretchen—not without a touch of native poetry—of his love and longing, he had addressed her boldly as "Herzlieben," and held her hand unpressed in his own, a proceedings which he had only been few and faint. And now it was all over the darling's hand was gone, perhaps, because no one knows and no one praises. But I say, speaking with a foreign accent, A comment had entered the shop, and Wilhelm sprang to his feet to receive him. It was the Englishman from over the way, who, now that his day's work was over, was anxious for some recreation in a humanizing, like, energetic fashion, characteristic of his countrymen. The Lion Harris, with its inducement for lilting, had little charm for him. He preferred brushing away certain mental cobwebs, which his sedentary occupation sometimes allowed to gather, by a long, quick walk into the country. He would sup at some wayside inn, he thought, and return to Wandorf by moonlight. The forest at Frau Bauer's attracted his painter-eye, and he filling his pockets with pence and green figs to eat on the way.

The Englishman was a long limbed, vigorous fellow, with a plain intellectual face, full of animation and vitality. In his hasty approach, gray eyes, fair hair, and a long brown beard. "Hallo!" he exclaimed, lapsing into his own language as the young soldier met his eye in place of the old woman whom he had expected. Then, as thought struck him, he went on—this time in his accomplished German—"Are you the Weindorf hero of whom I have heard so much these last few days?

Wilhelm colored. The Englishman had not long been an inhabitant of Weindorf and, as a stranger, his ignorance concerning individual villagers could readily be excused.

"No, sir, I have done nothing heroic; nothing at all. The Weindorf hero, as you call him, is Franz Muller.

"Yes, that is the name; I heard it from Frederick Kellner. Wilhelm, my lad, I have heard to praise these at thy true worth. Thy letter of recommendation from your mother, I am here to answer it in person. I hope you have any special reason for your shyness?—Gretchen's voice sank to a whisper—is there?

Wilhelm understood now. The blood mounted to his face, his lips trembled. "Hilda, tremblen, he said, in a strange, uneasy voice. "I cannot! accept the sacrifice. I must not let thy pity blind thee.

"Pity—who dares pity thee! I am not pitiful, but proud—proud of thy fortitude and thy patience. But if thou dost not love me, and for my sake—if thou cared not for Gretchen's voice broke. Wilhelm's arm stole round her, her head rested against his shoulder, he felt her tears upon his face, and her soft hair tickled his cheek. Gretchen, he said, in a strange, uneasy voice. "I cannot! accept the sacrifice. I must not let thy pity blind thee.

"Pity—who dares pity thee! I am not pitiful, but proud—proud of thy fortitude and thy patience. But if thou dost not love me, and for my sake—if thou cared not for Gretchen's voice broke. Wilhelm's arm stole round her, her head rested against his shoulder, he felt her tears upon his face, and her soft hair tickled his cheek. Gretchen, the lovers consumed in traversing the few yards or how many words they found time to exchange, I know not. I know the joy of this hitherto in rapture. As they were standing together in the threshold of Herr Kellner's shop the Englishman came up and with swinging pace. The visitor's words had not proved fruitful consolation, but the kindness of their intention was manifest of any one among her numerous suitors.

"It was Gretchen who told the Englishman about Franz." Wilhelm reflected as he made his way through the shop to his sitting-room.

A shadow came between him and the light. Lifting his eyes he saw Franz standing before him, with a difficient look on his handsome, bronzed face.

Wilhelm gazed on the new-come a military salute. "You here, Herr Lieutenant!

"Yes, sir—Franz Muller, I hope you remembered to call you by your title. I fear lest it should be difficult to remember at first.

"Why? I want you to remember," reproached Franz.

"At least, I can't forget—no one who knew you will ever forget how you won your title. You must let me thank you, Herr Lieutenant, for remembering me. Wilhelm did not recall it—"for the honor thereby you have brought upon the regiment."

The young officer responded briefly. He had come here for a tribute of thanks or praise; its reception troubled him. He looked down on his comrade's face—blanched and sadded by illness and imprisonment, and words in which to convey his sympathy were difficult to be found. "His emotions—as an American author has stated in a recent publication, a chamber of his heart, remote from the portals of speech"—he feared now to appear impertinent or patronizing.

"What—what are you going to do with your future? he blurted out at last. His bluntness went straighter to his companion's heart than any elaborate expression of sympathy could have gone.

"There will be no great chance. Father Andreas was here this morning; he says that I am to keep my old position as sacristan, with a boy to do the heavy work. My wages will be reduced, but an army pension is to be given me, and will make up the deficiency. And when granny gives up the business—she talks of retiring soon—I am to succeed to the stock-in-trade.

At first, when Franz came, he had seated himself, but his conversational fluency did not increase. "How familiar the place looks! One forgets that one has been away," he said at length, glancing round the little room, with its well-worn table and chairs, with the print of the Madonna, with the high-backed settle and rack for supper on the old armoire.

"Yes—no, one forgets—sometimes." The response was not sympathetic. "Will you smoke, Herr Lieutenant?"

"No, thanks. I must"—rising, with a start, betokening self reminder—"be going home. Wilhelm, I want you to-day is expecting me; I only looked in for a little moment on my way. Good-evening.

"Good-evening. Thank you for your visit."

"Ich bitte."

When Franz was gone Wilhelm flung himself upon his bench and buried his face in the cushions. Himself-compassion had been perfect while his rather was present, but now that he was alone, the contrast between his own lot and that of Franz occurred to him with a fresh sense of pain. He was tired and weak; and the sadlessness of the interview had unnerved him. The sound of sacred music and of singing rose was having in upon him from the church, above his head lying the pictured, compassionate face of the Mother of Sorrows. Late he had stood motionless in the great grown street to watch her. He remembered, too, a Sunday evening in autumn, when he had accompanied her and her father to the Lion Harris. The old man had been speedily captured by some friends, and the two young people had wandered off by themselves in which the sun set over a distant ridge of hills. Wilhelm had spoken to Gretchen—not without a touch of native poetry—of his love and longing, he had addressed her boldly as "Herzlieben," and held her hand unpressed in his own, a proceedings which he had only been few and faint. And now it was all over the darling's hand was gone, perhaps, because no one knows and no one praises. But I say, speaking with a foreign accent, A comment had entered the shop, and Wilhelm sprang to his feet to receive him. It was the Englishman from over the way, who, now that his day's work was over, was anxious for some recreation in a humanizing, like, energetic fashion, characteristic of his countrymen. The Lion Harris, with its inducement for lilting, had little charm for him. He preferred brushing away certain mental cobwebs, which his sedentary occupation sometimes allowed to gather, by a long, quick walk into the country. He would sup at some wayside inn, he thought, and return to Wandorf by moonlight. The forest at Frau Bauer's attracted his painter-eye, and he filling his pockets with pence and green figs to eat on the way.

The Englishman was a long limbed, vigorous fellow, with a plain intellectual face, full of animation and vitality. In his hasty approach, gray eyes, fair hair, and a long brown beard. "Hallo!" he exclaimed, lapsing into his own language as the young soldier met his eye in place of the old woman whom he had expected. Then, as thought struck him, he went on—this time in his accomplished German—"Are you the Weindorf hero of whom I have heard so much these last few days?

Wilhelm colored. The Englishman had not long been an inhabitant of Weindorf and, as a stranger, his ignorance concerning individual villagers could readily be excused.

"No, sir, I have done nothing heroic; nothing at all. The Weindorf hero, as you call him, is Franz Muller.

"Yes, that is the name; I heard it from Frederick Kellner. Wilhelm, my lad, I have heard to praise these at thy true worth. Thy letter of recommendation from your mother, I am here to answer it in person. I hope you have any special reason for your shyness?—Gretchen's voice sank to a whisper—is there?

Wilhelm understood now. The blood mounted to his face, his lips trembled. "Hilda, tremblen, he said, in a strange, uneasy voice. "I cannot! accept the sacrifice. I must not let thy pity blind thee.

"Pity—who dares pity thee! I am not pitiful, but proud—proud of thy fortitude and thy patience. But if thou dost not love me, and for my sake—if thou cared not for Gretchen's voice broke. Wilhelm's arm stole round her, her head rested against his shoulder, he felt her tears upon his face, and her soft hair tickled his cheek. Gretchen, the lovers consumed in traversing the few yards or how many words they found time to exchange, I know not. I know the joy of this hitherto in rapture. As they were standing together in the threshold of Herr Kellner's shop the Englishman came up and with swinging pace. The visitor's words had not proved fruitful consolation, but the kindness of their intention was manifest of any one among her numerous suitors.

"It was Gretchen who told the Englishman about Franz." Wilhelm reflected as he made his way through the shop to his sitting-room.

A shadow came between him and the light. Lifting his eyes he saw Franz standing before him, with a difficient look on his handsome, bronzed face.

Wilhelm gazed on the new-come a military salute. "You here, Herr Lieutenant!

"Yes, sir—Franz Muller, I hope you remembered to call you by your title. I fear lest it should be difficult to remember at first.

"Why? I want you to remember," reproached Franz.

"At least, I can't forget—no one who know you will ever forget how you won your title. You must let me thank you, Herr Lieutenant, for remembering me. Wilhelm did not recall it—"for the honor thereby you have brought upon the regiment."

The young officer responded briefly. He had come here for a tribute of thanks or praise; its reception troubled him. He looked down on his comrade's face—blanched and sadded by illness and imprisonment, and words in which to convey his sympathy were difficult to be found. "His emotions—as an American author has stated in a recent publication, a chamber of his heart, remote from the portals of speech"—he feared now to appear impertinent or patronizing.

"What—what are you going to do with your future? he blurted out at last. His bluntness went straighter to his companion's heart than any elaborate expression of sympathy could have gone.

"There will be no great chance. Father Andreas was here this morning; he says that I am to keep my old position as sacristan, with a boy to do the heavy work. My wages will be reduced, but an army pension is to be given me, and will make up the deficiency. And when granny gives up the business—she talks of retiring soon—I am to succeed to the stock-in-trade.

At first, when Franz came, he had seated himself, but his conversational fluency did not increase. "How familiar the place looks! One forgets that one has been away," he said at length, glancing round the little room, with its well-worn table and chairs, with the print of the Madonna, with the high-backed settle and rack for supper on the old armoire.

"Yes—no, one forgets—sometimes." The response was not sympathetic. "Will you smoke, Herr Lieutenant?"

"No, thanks. I must"—rising, with a start, betokening self reminder—"be going home. Wilhelm, I want you to-day is expecting me; I only looked in for a little moment on my way. Good-evening.

"Good-evening. Thank you for your visit."

"Ich bitte."

When Franz was gone Wilhelm flung himself upon his bench and buried his face in the cushions. Himself-compassion had been perfect while his rather was present, but now that he was alone, the contrast between

"STOOD UP" ON THE STANISLAUS.

An Episode of Californate Mining Life.

In 1850, which was before the days of the first Pacific Railroad, the writer of this was Architect-in-Chief to Noah Flannan, who, in spite of his bookish of the Sierra Nevada. Six or six, who, when, after hunting, and taking things pretty easy for July weather, strolled a large cabin which had been built and deserted some time before. From this central point small parties of men, or single men, would go out for one day or more at a time, and if scarcely ever happened that a day did not see some party or other come in. We had no trouble with any thing or anybody, until one day we had occupied the place seventeen or eighteen days, a bad spell of weather came on and drove all the detached partisans for shelter. We were well behind in the matter of provisions, and had to make some shifts to keep from starvation. Fortunately, we had a few pounds of flour, and a little bacon, which we had brought with us, and had brought from the regular army after long service.

One morning, it long the third day of the bad weather, and the rain was falling, like, or rather, went down to the foldout the Stanislaus to meet a canoe which we knew was due, and found, on the door of the cabin was about, and there was a bottle of rum, or brandy, I forget which, and there were nodding bottles, and over which a bottle of rum was nodding, and, on the floor, of the gang were playing cards, and a third of the gang was sitting on a bench with a general spectatorship. In this state of affairs the door softly opened, and in walked a young man about 22 years of age. He was smooth faced, red-cheeked, and had such a look on his face that the sight of him would have set any one to grunting. He walked up to the table, and I felt pleased sure that all were pressed, and then stepped back and opened the door and called:

"Come in, William, they are all at home!

A short, stout, ugly fellow came in, pushed his way to, shut the door, and stood with his back to it. That he was a hard pill to one could tell after their name in the face, that he meant business was apparent from his having a revolver in either hand. Had some one yelled "Indians!" I think the act of his coming would have caused it about, would have been cut-down in twenty seconds. Here we all sat, as dumb as oysters and as helpless as asnes, for we realized that it was "stand up."

"Now, gents, said the young man, showing his white teeth as he smiled, "I was to come for some boarders, and I have started to prove these at thy true worth. Thy letter of recommendation from your mother, I am here to answer it in person. I hope you have any special reason for your shyness?—Gretchen's voice sank to a whisper—is there?

Wilhelm understood now. The blood mounted to his face, his lips trembled. "Hilda, tremblen, he said, in a strange, uneasy voice. "I cannot! accept the sacrifice. I must not let thy pity blind thee.

"Pity—who dares pity thee! I am not pitiful, but proud—proud of thy fortitude and thy patience. But if thou dost not love me, and for my sake—if thou cared not for Gretchen's voice broke. Wilhelm's arm stole round her, her head rested against his shoulder, he felt her tears upon his face, and her soft hair tickled his cheek. Gretchen, the lovers consumed in traversing the few yards or how many words they found time to exchange, I know not. I know the joy of this hitherto in rapture. As they were standing together in the threshold of Herr Kellner's shop the Englishman came up and with swinging pace. The visitor's words had not proved fruitful consolation, but the kindness of their intention was manifest of any one among her numerous suitors.

"It was Gretchen who told the Englishman about Franz." Wilhelm reflected as he made his way through the shop to his sitting-room.

A shadow came between him and the light. Lifting his eyes he saw Franz standing before him, with a difficient look on his handsome, bronzed face.

Wilhelm gazed on the new-come a military salute. "You here, Herr Lieutenant!

"Yes, sir—Franz Muller, I hope you remembered to call you by your title. I fear lest it should be difficult to remember at first.

"Why? I want you to remember," reproached Franz.

"At least, I can't forget—no one who know you will ever forget how you won your title. You must let me thank you, Herr Lieutenant, for remembering me. Wilhelm did not recall it—"for the honor thereby you have brought upon the regiment."

The young officer responded briefly. He had come here for a tribute of thanks or praise; its reception troubled him. He looked down on his comrade's face—blanched and sadded by illness and imprisonment, and words in which to convey his sympathy were difficult to be found. "His emotions—as an American author has stated in a recent publication, a chamber of his heart, remote from the portals of speech"—he feared now to appear impertinent or patronizing.

"What—what are you going to do with your future? he blurted out at last. His bluntness went straighter to his companion's heart than any elaborate expression of sympathy could have gone.

"There will be no great chance. Father Andreas was here this morning; he says that I am to keep my old position as sacristan, with a boy to do the heavy work. My wages will be reduced, but an army pension is to be given me, and will make up the deficiency. And when granny gives up the business—she talks of retiring soon—I am to succeed to the stock-in-trade.

At first, when Franz came, he had seated himself, but his conversational fluency did not increase. "How familiar the place looks! One forgets that one has been away," he said at length, glancing round the little room, with its well-worn table and chairs, with the print of the Madonna, with the high-backed settle and rack for supper on the old armoire.

"Yes—no, one forgets—sometimes." The response was not sympathetic. "Will you smoke, Herr Lieutenant?"

"No, thanks. I must"—rising, with a start, betokening self reminder—"be going home. Wilhelm, I want you to-day is expecting me; I only looked in for a little moment on my way. Good-evening.

"Good-evening. Thank you for your visit."

"Ich bitte."

When Franz was gone Wilhelm flung himself upon his bench and buried his face in the cushions. Himself-compassion had been perfect while his rather was present, but now that he was alone, the contrast between

CARDINAL GUIBERT'S OBSEQUIES.

Great Crowds View Honor to His Remains.

The procession—numbering more than fifty thousand people—who went from the Archiepiscopal Palace to Notre Dame, was, in spite of the hot weather, quite orderly. The dead prelate, clothed in his robes of office, was borne on the shoulders of the priests, who, in the long procession, walked bareheaded, allowed to lower the deceased prelate. Passing along the streets and the quays, before reaching the church, I observed the immense crowds assembled to witness the procession, and I overheard a few remarks among. Having had special permission, I was enabled to witness the ceremony from the arrival of the hearse, which is the same that was used for Cardinal Morlot and for Mgr. Darboy, and later for M. Thiers, to the interment of the remains of the interior of the tomb and chapel, where so many illustrious prelates have been laid by Pius Alexander III., in 1132, and by Pius Alexander III., in 1162, and history of the celebrations, circumstances, funerals, down to the 27th of the Julian of Reason, in the revolution, would fill an interesting volume. Never, perhaps, was a more touching scene enacted there, for over, that, the one I remember, presented the church as it covered up to the long, gallery in black, and the immense pillars of the nave, with the black, and the remains of the saintly Cardinal, was solemnly commended, and as was also and crowd with wreaths of fresh flowers. A little before the procession left the palace, people who had tickets took their places. There were about 1,000 seats in the choir, and 17,000 could be received into it. In the side chapels, on the right, the clergy, Grand Seminary, and the religious communities (women), took their places, and in the left were the lay colleges, schools, &c. The entire nave received for the clergy, Grand Seminary, and other public bodies.

Before the procession, the members of those different corps arrived and took their places near the catafalque. Among the first were the Marquis de Dreux Brezé, wearing his badge of grand officer of the Legion of Honor, several admirals, and senators and the Minister of Public Instruction. There were also Archbishops in their robes and their pontifical caps, and bishops, and an immense number of priests from every part of France. Mgr. Rotelle, the Papal Nuncio, was in the Place of Honor. At ten, precisely, the great gate was opened, and the archpriests, Abbe Petit, went with the clergy in the sanctuary, preceding the celebrants, Abbe Petit was a secretary of Mgr. Darboy, and was one of the victims of the "Commune." When the prelate was murdered, the Archbishop of Paris, who escaped was a monseigneur one, and due to the arrival of the troops into the city.

The office was carried by the celebrants, Cardinal Bonjean, Archbishop of Toulouse, and Cardinal Guibert, Archbishop of Tours, who came from Rome to celebrate High Mass. The clear voices of the choir, accompanied by the grand organ, the immense, and the thousands of lighted tapers, and the solemn ceremonies, and the multitude of the people present, and the resting-place of the good deeds of the noble prelate, all combined to make the ceremony of religious and profound admiration. For the occasion, the Cardinal Guibert, the most eminent of the prelates that occupied the Chair of Archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Darboy, bishop of Paris.

After the benedictions given by each of the cardinals, and the last prayers read by Cardinal Bonjean, the people left the church slowly, and deeply affected by the brilliant ceremony. It was 1 o'clock after the bells of Notre Dame, and among them the Emperor, whose acquaintance I had over the city, announced the final scene. At about this moment, some officers on the Place de Mars, the Place de Mars, the barrels on a line, fired.

The remains of Cardinal Morlot could not be taken out into the vault the cardinal's tomb, which is in the chapel, on the side, on account of the church, where it will remain, and, as I said, the remains of Cardinal Bonjean, who came from Rome, Mgr. Darboy was not a cardinal, and Cardinal Guibert was not made a cardinal, but from going to Rome.

The archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Richard, is a most saintly and charitable prelate.

He has already spent a great part of his fortune in charity, and his means are now considerable. The rest will soon be disposed of, and he is likely to die poor, like his predecessor, Cardinal Morlot.

A deputation of the Ist Lebanon of the Pope, Mgr. Bonjean, followed immediately after the hearse. The rest of the deputations, with the Pontifical Zouaves, in superior rank. There is only real sorrow in Paris for the venerated and venerable cardinal.

J. P. L.

The Religious Impostor.

Not a small fraction of the large army of impostors who infest the country in the fall do not stick to any particular line of deception, but travel from place to place, as the requirements of time and place. Many begging impostors because they are fitted for the business, by a certain amount of cause habit and taste have fitted them to the character. The religious impostor is a part that pays as well as any. There is a field for such, and, as a rule, a cardinal scheme, or rather series of schemes in this line, is not difficult to find, and, as a rule, people who had tickets took their places. There are about 1,000 Catholics in the church, and 17,000 could be received into it. In the side chapels, on the right, the clergy, Grand Seminary, and the religious communities (women), took their places, and in the left were the lay colleges, schools, &c. The entire nave received for the clergy, Grand Seminary, and other public bodies.

Before the procession, the members of those different corps arrived and took their places near the catafalque. Among the first were the Marquis de Dreux Brezé, wearing his badge of grand officer of the Legion of Honor, several admirals, and senators and the Minister of Public Instruction. There were also Archbishops in their robes and their pontifical caps, and bishops, and an immense number of priests from every part of France. Mgr. Rotelle, the Papal Nuncio, was in the Place of Honor. At ten, precisely, the great gate was opened, and the archpriests, Abbe Petit, went with the clergy in the sanctuary, preceding the celebrants, Abbe Petit was a secretary of Mgr. Darboy, and was one of the victims of the "Commune." When the prelate was murdered, the Archbishop of Paris, who escaped was a monseigneur one, and due to the arrival of the troops into the city.

The office was carried by the celebrants, Cardinal Bonjean, Archbishop of Toulouse, and Cardinal Guibert, Archbishop of Tours, who came from Rome to celebrate High Mass. The clear voices of the choir, accompanied by the grand organ, the immense, and the thousands of lighted tapers, and the solemn ceremonies, and the multitude of the people present, and the resting-place of the good deeds of the noble prelate, all combined to make the ceremony of religious and profound admiration. For the occasion, the Cardinal Guibert, the most eminent of the prelates that occupied the Chair of Archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Darboy, bishop of Paris.

After the benedictions given by each of the cardinals, and the last prayers read by Cardinal Bonjean, the people left the church slowly, and deeply affected by the brilliant ceremony. It was 1 o'clock after the bells of Notre Dame, and among them the Emperor, whose acquaintance I had over the city, announced the final scene. At about this moment, some officers on the Place de Mars, the Place de Mars, the barrels on a line, fired.

The remains of Cardinal Morlot could not be taken out into the vault the cardinal's tomb, which is in the chapel, on the side, on account of the church, where it will remain, and, as I said, the remains of Cardinal Bonjean, who came from Rome, Mgr. Darboy was not a cardinal, and Cardinal Guibert was not made a cardinal, but from going to Rome.

The archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Richard, is a most saintly and charitable prelate.

He has already spent a great part of his fortune in charity, and his means are now considerable. The rest will soon be disposed of, and he is likely to die poor, like his predecessor, Cardinal Morlot.

A deputation of the 1st Lebanon of the Pope, Mgr. Bonjean, followed immediately after the hearse. The rest of the deputations, with the Pontifical Zouaves, in superior rank. There is only real sorrow in Paris for the venerated and venerable cardinal.

J. P. L.

The Religious Impostor.

Not a small fraction of the large army of impostors who infest the country in the fall do not stick to any particular line of deception, but travel from place to place, as the requirements of time and place. Many begging impostors because they are fitted for the business, by a certain amount of cause habit and taste have fitted them to the character. The religious impostor is a part that pays as well as any. There is a field for such, and, as a rule, a cardinal scheme, or rather series of schemes in this line, is not difficult to find, and, as a rule, people who had tickets took their places. There are about 1,000 Catholics in the church, and 17,000 could be received into it. In the side chapels, on the right, the clergy, Grand Seminary, and the religious communities (women), took their places, and in the left were the lay colleges, schools, &c. The entire nave received for the clergy, Grand Seminary, and other public bodies.

Before the procession, the members of those different corps arrived and took their places near the catafalque. Among the first were the Marquis de Dreux Brezé, wearing his badge of grand officer of the Legion of Honor, several admirals, and senators and the Minister of Public Instruction. There were also Archbishops in their robes and their pontifical caps, and bishops, and an immense number of priests from every part of France. Mgr. Rotelle, the Papal Nuncio, was in the Place of Honor. At ten, precisely, the great gate was opened, and the archpriests, Abbe Petit, went with the clergy in the sanctuary, preceding the celebrants, Abbe Petit was a secretary of Mgr. Darboy, and was one of the victims of the "Commune." When the prelate was murdered, the Archbishop of Paris, who escaped was a monseigneur one, and due to the arrival of the troops into the city.

The office was carried by the celebrants, Cardinal Bonjean, Archbishop of Toulouse, and Cardinal Guibert, Archbishop of Tours, who came from Rome to celebrate High Mass. The clear voices of the choir, accompanied by the grand organ, the immense, and the thousands of lighted tapers, and the solemn ceremonies, and the multitude of the people present, and the resting-place of the good deeds of the noble prelate, all combined to make the ceremony of religious and profound admiration. For the occasion, the Cardinal Guibert, the most eminent of the prelates that occupied the Chair of Archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Darboy, bishop of Paris.

After the benedictions given by each of the cardinals, and the last prayers read by Cardinal Bonjean, the people left the church slowly, and deeply affected by the brilliant ceremony. It was 1 o'clock after the bells of Notre Dame, and among them the Emperor, whose acquaintance I had over the city, announced the final scene. At about this moment, some officers on the Place de Mars, the Place de Mars, the barrels on a line, fired.

The remains of Cardinal Morlot could not be taken out into the vault the cardinal's tomb, which is in the chapel, on the side, on account of the church, where it will remain, and, as I said, the remains of Cardinal Bonjean, who came from Rome, Mgr. Darboy was not a cardinal, and Cardinal Guibert was not made a cardinal, but from going to Rome.

The archbishop of Paris, Mgr. Richard, is a most saintly and charitable prelate.

He has already spent a great part of his fortune in charity, and his means are now considerable. The rest will soon be disposed of, and he is likely to die poor, like his predecessor, Cardinal Morlot.

A deputation of the 1st Lebanon of the Pope, Mgr. Bonjean, followed immediately after the hearse. The rest of the deputations, with the Pontifical Zouaves, in superior rank. There is only real sorrow in Paris for the venerated and venerable cardinal.

J. P. L.

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1886.

"The Catholic press is a power in Catholicity, and every Catholic worthy of the name I will support it, to defend our religion against the attacks of infidelity, and by extending it, so as to counteract evil with our religion. Therefore, good Catholic people, read, and even more and deeper, by reading it, will become better citizens and better Catholics."—Pastoral Letter, Archbishop Alemany, D. D.

Editorial Notes.

—The Grand Duke of Baden has sent to the Pope a letter and a golden jubilee medal.

—The inhabitants of Valencia, Spain, intend to present to his Holiness, on the occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee, a stole set with as many precious stones as there are parishes in Valencia.

—A meeting of Nationalists was held at Carrick, Ireland, last week, for the purpose of raising £5,000 for the erection of a monument over the grave of Charles J. Kickham, the poet and novelist.

—The Government of the Netherlands intends to propose to all the other civilized governments an international treaty against the Anarchists. It is strange that the European Governments will in a very short time agree on some treaty aiming at the annihilation of Anarchism.

—A meeting of prominent Catholics took place recently at Coblenz. Dr. Windthorst, the leader of the Austrian party, made a speech in which he said that the Catholicism of to-day is as finished, and that the Catholics should act in harmony and stop provoking the Government. It is doubtful, however, whether the Germania, the leading Catholic newspaper in Berlin, will follow this advice.

—Bible publishing firms are up with the times. All the recent quarto editions of the Revised Bible have nice Family Registers in them, one page of which is devoted to "Marriages," at page 8, to "Divorces," and one page to "Elopements." No mention made of "Births" or "Deaths," as babies have gone out of fashion, and Death is not a permissable subject of conversation in polite society.

—The Earl of Aberdeen—late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—left that land with the love of the people and demonstrated his good wishes in his last farewell words. Replying to a eulogistic resolution presented by the Sligo Board of Guardians, he said: "I hope that out of the recent deep attention given to Ireland and the ardent discussion of its affairs some practical result will arise tending to increase the peace and prosperity of the country."

—A Louisville subscriber sends us a copy of a disreputable paper published in Dermottsville, Ky., entitled "Sparks upon the Catholic Church." The edamons are far too filthy for us to notice. Their very nastiness is a sufficient proof of their naturth. When a man sinks so degrade as to use such trash a vile sheet as the one before us, it only demonstrates the fact that "hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

—The New York Sun tells the solid truth when it says that the true sons of America are those who perform their duties as men and as citizens to the best of their intelligence and ability, who love their country whether they were born on this side of the sea or not, and who have public spirit. To restrict immigration from any immigration is one thing; seriously to propose to discriminate against foreign-born citizens is a very different thing, and, happily, now impossible. There will be no more Know-Nothingism, and it seems almost incredible there ever should have been.

—The several subtexgrams from Belfast that we—which we publish on the fifth page—will give our readers some faint idea of Orange brutality. Even the London Times is forced to admit that the Protestant element are to blame for their murderous course in originating and continuing these riots for the purpose of keeping burning inflammable and unarmed Catholic men, women and children. The conduct of the Ulster Orangemen during the past two weeks proves them to be the worst foes of Ireland's peace and the determined enemies of her prosperity.

—Of the fourteen Catholic candidates who recently contested English and Scotch constituencies, five have been returned, viz., Mr. Henry Matthews, Q. C. (Birmingham), and Mr. Edwin de Lisle (Loughborough Division of Leicestershire), who are Conservatives; and the Attorney-General, Sir Charles Russell, Q. C. (South Hackney), and Mr. J. Austin Hopwood (Division of Yorkshire) Liberals; and Mr. T. P. O'Connor (Scotland Division of Liverpool), Nationalist. This is the largest number returned to the House of Commons since 1852, there being now not fewer than eighty-five Catholics in the Parliament, an increase of thirty-three within the last ten years. As was to be expected, Ireland of course contributes the major portion, seventy-seven.

—It is amusing into what extraordinary manifestations religious bigotry drives some people. Dr. Kenny, the Protestant Primate of Armagh, was so overjoyed as the result of the general election that he composed a special prayer to be recited in the churches of his diocese for some consecutive Sundays, giving thanks to Providence for the "merciful deliverance" of himself and co-religionists from "the great danger" which threatened the welfare of their entire land and "the free exercise of their Protestant faith." By the great danger of course is meant the imminence of Home Rule, and an insuuuo is conveyed that not only do the Nationalists seek self-government but the overthrow of the Protestant religion in Ireland. When it is remembered that Protestantism has given to Irish nationality many of its bravest soldiers and ablest leaders in the past and present, the silliness as well as the venomousness of this option becomes painfully evident.

—The back drivers of Philadelphia, backed by the Undertakers and Funeral Directors' Association and the Sabbath Association, are working for the abolition of Sunday funerals. This shows their progress. In the first Sunday in June there were forty-six funerals in Philadelphia, twenty-two on the first Sunday in July, and only three on August 1. Efforts are being made by the hackmen to have the cemeteries closed on Sundays.

—A correspondent of one of our prominent journals, writing from England, says: "I saw recently twenty women standing at a bar, all drinking. I have seen drunk an women clinging to lamp posts, and cursing drunk at full length in Hyde Park. The half-holiday system which prevails quite generally is proving a curse. To obtain Saturday afternoon for recreation, the working people begin labor at six o'clock, an hour earlier than Americans. So great is the debauch of Saturday and Sunday that few works are started in full till Tuesday morning."

—Elsewhere we print the official decision of the Sacred Congregation concerning Dreaming, as will as a very interesting article on that pagan mode of disposing of the dead. There is no disguising the fact that Cremation is looked upon by the enemies of the Church as another weapon by which they can annihilate Christianity in the world by drawing away souls from the Church. Signor Castellazzo, a prominent Italian Freemason, recently epitomized the programme of the enemies of the Church when he asserted that "civil marriage deprives the Church of the family; secular education will soon take away from the Church the rising generation; and civil funerals and cremation will abolish the class of the Church to the bodies of the dead and do away with requiem masses and consecrated cemeteries." This, therefore, is the trinue platform of pagan-ring principles proclaimed by those enemies of God against whose wiles the Holy Father has warned the whole Catholic world.

—Commenting on a certain class of Catholics who imagine they know more about the proper manner of conducting Church affairs than the whole College of Cardinals combined, the New Orleans Morning Star says of them: "There is a certain class of the faithful who are prone to criticize their ecclesiastical superiors. If they were mentally capable of, or had the data for forming a judgment, their criticism might possibly not be an evil but a purifying influence. But they have not, and, from the nature of the case, cannot have such data. They are, moreover, unsuspectingly ignorant, with a certain variety of politeness and refinement that makes their pretentious ignorance all the more despicable. They will spend twenty five dollars in the front hallway of a house they never intend to pay. They will ride in a carriage to the church to have a baby baptized and give the priest a centuagge of sandy for his trouble. The sooner these critics understand their position the better it will be for the religion of which they are such ornaments." Ornaments! is a pet name for this class of Catholics who are always far more ornamental than useful.

—How the Brothers Wesley would turn up the whites of their eyes if they could come back to this world and learn that Methodist preachers carried the book of the gospels in one pocket and a death-dealing revolver in the other! What a parody upon the preaching of peace and good-will among Christian people! Last week in Sacramento a Methodist preacher killed a fellow creature by means of a pistol which he habitually carried even when he was preaching in the pulpit. And these men are called "ministers of the gospel," "teachers in Israel," "the Lord's elect," and other equally absurd expressions in order to show their superiority over far better men among their misguided flocks. Ave Tempus is found to admit that the Protestant element are to blame for their murderous course in originating and continuing these riots for the purpose of keeping burning inflammable and unarmed Catholic men, women and children. The conduct of the Ulster Orangemen during the past two weeks proves them to be the worst foes of Ireland's peace and the determined enemies of her prosperity.

—Of the fourteen Catholic candidates who recently contested English and Scotch constituencies, five have been returned, viz., Mr. Henry Matthews, Q. C. (Birmingham), and Mr. Edwin de Lisle (Loughborough Division of Leicestershire), who are Conservatives; and the Attorney-General, Sir Charles Russell, Q. C. (South Hackney), and Mr. J. Austin Hopwood (Division of Yorkshire) Liberals; and Mr. T. P. O'Connor (Scotland Division of Liverpool), Nationalist. This is the largest number returned to the House of Commons since 1852, there being now not fewer than eighty-five Catholics in the Parliament, an increase of thirty-three within the last ten years. As was to be expected, Ireland of course contributes the major portion, seventy-seven.

—It is amusing into what extraordinary manifestations religious bigotry drives some people. Dr. Kenny, the Protestant Primate of Armagh, was so overjoyed as the result of the general election that he composed a special prayer to be recited in the churches of his diocese for some consecutive Sundays, giving thanks to Providence for the "merciful deliverance" of himself and co-religionists from "the great danger" which threatened the welfare of their entire land and "the free exercise of their Protestant faith." By the great danger of course is meant the imminence of Home Rule, and an insuuuo is conveyed that not only do the Nationalists seek self-government but the overthrow of the Protestant religion in Ireland. When it is remembered that Protestantism has given to Irish nationality many of its bravest

The Catholic Press of the United States.

An article appeared in the New York Independent recently, which—although written by a Catholic is so misleading in its conclusions and so unreliable in its statistics as to demand notice in the articles to which we allude the writer credits the United States with having "about 80 Catholic papers and journals, of which twenty were forty-six funerals in Philadelphia, twenty three on the first Sunday in July, and only three on August 1. Efforts are being made by the hackmen to have the cemeteries closed on Sundays.

—A correspondent of one of our prominent journals, writing from England, says: "I saw recently twenty women standing at a bar, all drinking. I have seen drunk an women clinging to lamp posts, and cursing drunk at full length in Hyde Park. The half-holiday system which prevails quite generally is proving a curse. To obtain Saturday afternoon for recreation, the working people begin labor at six o'clock, an hour earlier than Americans. So great is the debauch of Saturday and Sunday that few works are started in full till Tuesday morning."

—Elsewhere we print the official decision of the Sacred Congregation concerning Dreaming, as will as a very interesting article on that pagan mode of disposing of the dead. There is no disguising the fact that Cremation is looked upon by the enemies of the Church as another weapon by which they can annihilate Christianity in the world by drawing away souls from the Church. Signor Castellazzo, a prominent Italian Freemason, recently epitomized the programme of the enemies of the Church when he asserted that "civil marriage deprives the Church of the family; secular education will soon take away from the Church the rising generation; and civil funerals and cremation will abolish the class of the Church to the bodies of the dead and do away with requiem masses and consecrated cemeteries." This, therefore, is the trinue platform of pagan-ring principles proclaimed by those enemies of God against whose wiles the Holy Father has warned the whole Catholic world.

—Commenting on a certain class of Catholics who imagine they know more about the proper manner of conducting Church affairs than the whole College of Cardinals combined, the New Orleans Morning Star says of them: "There is a certain class of the faithful who are prone to criticize their ecclesiastical superiors. If they were mentally capable of, or had the data for forming a judgment, their criticism might possibly not be an evil but a purifying influence. But they have not, and, from the nature of the case, cannot have such data. They are, moreover, unsuspectingly ignorant, with a certain variety of politeness and refinement that makes their pretentious ignorance all the more despicable. They will spend twenty five dollars in the front hallway of a house they never intend to pay. They will ride in a carriage to the church to have a baby baptized and give the priest a centuagge of sandy for his trouble. The sooner these critics understand their position the better it will be for the religion of which they are such ornaments." Ornaments! is a pet name for this class of Catholics who are always far more ornamental than useful.

—How the Brothers Wesley would turn up the whites of their eyes if they could come back to this world and learn that Methodist preachers carried the book of the gospels in one pocket and a death-dealing revolver in the other! What a parody upon the preaching of peace and good-will among Christian people! Last week in Sacramento a Methodist preacher killed a fellow creature by means of a pistol which he habitually carried even when he was preaching in the pulpit. And these men are called "ministers of the gospel," "teachers in Israel," "the Lord's elect," and other equally absurd expressions in order to show their superiority over far better men among their misguided flocks. Ave Tempus is found to admit that the Protestant element are to blame for their murderous course in originating and continuing these riots for the purpose of keeping burning inflammable and unarmed Catholic men, women and children. The conduct of the Ulster Orangemen during the past two weeks proves them to be the worst foes of Ireland's peace and the determined enemies of her prosperity.

—Of the fourteen Catholic candidates who recently contested English and Scotch constituencies, five have been returned, viz., Mr. Henry Matthews, Q. C. (Birmingham), and Mr. Edwin de Lisle (Loughborough Division of Leicestershire), who are Conservatives; and the Attorney-General, Sir Charles Russell, Q. C. (South Hackney), and Mr. J. Austin Hopwood (Division of Yorkshire) Liberals; and Mr. T. P. O'Connor (Scotland Division of Liverpool), Nationalist. This is the largest number returned to the House of Commons since 1852, there being now not fewer than eighty-five Catholics in the Parliament, an increase of thirty-three within the last ten years. As was to be expected, Ireland of course contributes the major portion, seventy-seven.

—It is amusing into what extraordinary manifestations religious bigotry drives some people. Dr. Kenny, the Protestant Primate of Armagh, was so overjoyed as the result of the general election that he composed a special prayer to be recited in the churches of his diocese for some consecutive Sundays, giving thanks to Providence for the "merciful deliverance" of himself and co-religionists from "the great danger" which threatened the welfare of their entire land and "the free exercise of their Protestant faith." By the great danger of course is meant the imminence of Home Rule, and an insuuuo is conveyed that not only do the Nationalists seek self-government but the overthrow of the Protestant religion in Ireland. When it is remembered that Protestantism has given to Irish nationality many of its bravest

Preparatory School for Catholic Teachers

The rapid increase in the number of parochial schools in every Diocese on this coast, will create an urgent demand for Catholic teachers, and with this object in view the Fathers of the Society have recently enlarged their Novitiate at Martinez so as to accommodate such young boys as may apply for admission to a full course to become sons of the saintly La Salle.

Martinez is one of the most suitable locations in California for just such a novitiate as the Christian Brothers have established. In point of health it cannot be surpassed, and the location of the Novitiate building is on a gently rising elevation from which can be seen a variety of marine and landscape views that charm and delight every thoughtful beholder. The building itself is large, airy, cheerful and pleasant, and is surrounded with gardens, vineyards, orchards and a twenty acres of well cultivated land interspersed with walks which lead to pretty grottos, an clever observatory at the summit of a hill around which winds a very prolific vineyard, and to other romantic spots suitable for study and meditation.

It is to this charming spot, located thirty-five miles by rail from San Francisco, that the Christian Brothers send the Catholic youth of every section of the country west of the Rocky Mountains, desirous to enter upon the highly useful, honorable and exalted vocation of imparting Christian education to the rising generation. The Brothers will take Catholic boys from the age of thirteen and train them up in all the studies necessary to form them into first-class through teachers. There are no vacations. The youth they have remained years to the Novitiate, nor will the pupils be expected to return to the Novitiate unless they find themselves blessed with a vocation to be the sons of La Salle in accomplishing for Almighty God and His Church—the great work of imparting Christian education to future generations.

There ought to be—in the States and territories comprising the Pacific dioceses at least a hundred good, pious, virtuous young men who would gladly avail themselves of such an institution as that now opened for them by the Christian Brothers. Their services are sadly needed in the cause of Christian education, and that God in whose cause they will be enlisted has promised that they who instruct many to justice "shall shine like stars for all eternity."

We earnestly hope, therefore, that if there lies faith under the vision of such a noble institution, the Christian Brothers have provided this beautiful home for, that they will write or cause to Rev. Brother Hatthew, St. Mary's College, this city, who will be most happy to give them full particulars concerning the rules of the Novitiate and other information pertaining to the particular qualifications candidates must possess in order to be qualified for admission.

Future spiritual soldiers of the Cross as brave and as brilliant as those missionary soldiers who form the army of the Allies in the spiritual conquest of Holy Orders in Infinteis vocations have not been many on this coast, but this has been owing more to the want of Christian education, and that God in whose cause they will be enlisted will be pleased to reward them for its absence by a very abundant harvest of blessings. The elder Catholics who have provided this beautiful home for, that they will write or cause to Rev. Brother Hatthew, St. Mary's College, this city, who will be most happy to give them full particulars concerning the rules of the Novitiate and other information pertaining to the particular qualifications candidates must possess in order to be qualified for admission.

Future spiritual soldiers of the Cross as brave and as brilliant as those missionary soldiers who form the army of the Allies in the spiritual conquest of Holy Orders in Infinteis vocations have not been many on this coast, but this has been owing more to the want of Christian education, and that God in whose cause they will be enlisted will be pleased to reward them for its absence by a very abundant harvest of blessings. The elder Catholics who have provided this beautiful home for, that they

THE FRUITS, MIRACLES AND VICTORIES OF THE ROSARY.

SECOND ARTICLE.

We have already referred to the conversion of the Albigenses, Waldo, or the Poor of Lyons, now we will explain how it was effected. Christianity was introduced there about the middle of the century, but its progress was remarkably slow. Some time after the Bishop of Lyons, the Abbot Ponce, and the Bishop of Maux, who had been sent by Pope Innocent III. to preach against the Albigenses, had spent many years in the province, the Bishop of Lyons was obliged to return to his instructions and to become a simple monk. The work was entirely left to the Abbot Ponce, who had been sent by the Pope to his assistance and to become the superior of the Albigenses. The Abbot Ponce was a man of great learning and great piety, and was the most learned and most eloquent man of his time. He was a great preacher, and was the most celebrated in that age. Some time after the Bishop of Maux, the Abbot Ponce, and the Bishop of Lyons had been sent to the Albigenses, the Bishop of Maux, who had spent many years in the province,

Farm and Home.

Peculiarities of County Assessments.

The annual returns of the various County Assessors have been made out and are now being published in the different papers. Some of the facts contained therein are of peculiar interest to farmers as illustrating the remarkable difference in value of property of exactly similar description in various localities. For instance, a story of one horse shows that in San Bernardino thoroughbred horses are valued at $270 each, while just across the line in San Diego county their value suffers the remarkable depreciation to only $123 each. In Solano county the same details are valued at $925 each, in Yolo county at $600, in Tulare county at $340, in Napa at $347, and in San Mateo county at $446.

With mules, an equally wide divergence in values is seen. In San Bernardino they are worth $45 apiece, in San Diego $36, in Yolo $92, in Solano $51, in Tulare $56, in Napa $16, and in San Mateo $40.

Cows, if thoroughbred, are worth $100 apiece in San Bernardino, $28 in San Diego, $40 in San Mateo, $68 in Napa, $70 in Tulare, and $66 in Solano.

American cows are held in San Bernardino at about $25 a head, in San Diego at $37, in Napa some whatever are returned, in Tulare they are valued at $1 70, and in Solano at $3.

There are 6,210 stands of bees in San Bernardino county, valued at $1 apiece; in San Diego there are 22,525 worth about $1 20 apiece; in San Mateo they are worth $1 50 each; and in Tulare $1 60.

Fances in San Bernardino are valued at $130 each, in San Mateo at $90, in Napa at $152, while San Diego has none returned at any value.

Of lumber, San Diego returns 861,000 feet, of a total value of $26,000, while San Bernardino has 500,000 feet, worth only $17,000.

San Diego has 5,070 gallons of wine, valued at about 30 cents a gallon; San Bernardino has 43,129 gallons, worth but 16 cents a gallon; Napa has 1,966,252 gallons worth 17 cents; Tulare has 7,100 gallons, worth 33 cents; Yolo has 21,200 gallons, worth 25 cents, and Solano has 30,000 gallons worth 20 cents.

A Singular Flower.

A novel flower has been found on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Central America. This floral chameleon has the faculty of changing its colors during the day. In the morning it is white; when the sun is at its zenith it is red and at night it is blue. This red white and blue flower grows on a tree about the size of the guava tree, and another peculiarity of this flower is that only at noon does it give out any perfume.

A General Purpose Cow.

Wanted, a general purpose cow. She must be a small eater and give a large quantity of very rich milk. Besides furnishing a large milk supply uniformly throughout the year, even during the winter, when she is given a meagre supply of poor hay with cornstalks as she can find on the frozen ground, she must build up a large robust body so as to make a good supply of beef at the proper time. She must be insensible to bad treatment and be able to stand the rigors of winter in a dilapidated barn or an open shed. In short, she must be a combination of all natural laws by producing something from nothing. Such a cow is "wanted," and many thousands are eager shall be pleased to make an official announcement of the same.

An Intelligent Horse.

John Fletcher, of Virginia City, was awakened the other night by his mare, which had been running in a pasture with her colt, coming to the window and pawed and neighed. Fletcher tried to drive her away, but she wouldn't go. At length he noticed that the colt was not with her, and he followed the mare. She ran on ahead of him, continually turning to see if he was coming, and thus led him to an old prospect hole into which the colt had fallen. With the help of neighbors the colt was rescued, and the mother, hitherto very shy, was almost frantic with delight. She followed Fletcher about rubbing her nose against his shoulder, and gave unmistakable signs of gratitude.

Profit in Almonds.

"The product of the almond orchards in this vicinity," says the Los Gatos News, "appears to be greater than was estimated before the harvest began, and will generally prove quite remunerative to owners. It is now thought that the large orchard of Mrs. Gardner will turn off forty tons more, and this not, perhaps, above the average for this region. The tract embraces ninety acres of land and the trees are ten years old. The above estimate places the average yield per acre at 1,000 pounds. The crop is supposed to have sold for 11 cents per pound, the current wholesale price at this place being from 10 to 11 cents. At this figure the returns will amount to $110 per acre. The expense of harvesting 1,000 pounds and preparing the same for market is about $25, leaving a net return of $85 per acre. The expense of cultivating such an orchard is light, and any farmer can figure the net profit. The principal objection to almonds has been the uncertainty of the crop. We understand that the amount realized last year by Mrs. Gardner was only $800, but the year before the crop was large and the price 13 cents per pound, amounting to about $10,000. From these figures it would seem that, notwithstanding occasionally a light crop, the almond is not a bad thing to invest in. They are easily handled, will keep indefinitely, and be simply shipped and there is no danger of the business being overdone.

Counting Cattle.

Coming from St. Louis on the sleeping-car I fell in with a couple of men from the cowboy region down by the Indian Territory. They owned ranches there and were talking about the cattle business. One was an Englishman and was on his way back to the old country "for a short visit." He was saying: "I counted 765 cattle in a field this side of Kansas City." He then took from his vest pocket a thing something like a silver watch. "This is a cattle counter," he explained. "You see there are three figures on the side. Now, as often as you press that little button here a figure changes for the next one higher. That's how it works, and he pressed the knob rapidly and the figures changed at every pressure. "With this I can count up to 999 as easy as I can jump past me. In a field I have just to commence at one end and look at the cattle one by one, pressing this button all the time, and won't make a mistake once in 100 times."

"I never go in for those new fangled arrangements," said the American ranch man. "I have a notion that I can have a hundred buttons on a string. He can count cattle as fast as they run with that string. He has another string around his neck, and at every 100 counted he slips a button on the next string. He can count 10,000 cattle with his strings as easily as you can go 999 on that thing, and do it as correctly too."

—Maple of Hamilton will find it to their interest before purchasing elsewhere to call at the Art and Tobacco one door above Sansome, 411 Market St. They have every style and quality to suit and at all prices.

Family Fun.

How Pat made Converts.

Some people who are not acquainted with priests have an idea that they are solemn, stern men who can't appreciate a joke and never think of telling one. The other day it was the good fortune of a reporter of the paper to meet a priest who is frequently called to the Charity Hospital and who has accomplished much good in reforming the unfortunate people so often found in that institution. During the conversation the reverend father told numerous amusing episodes of his personal experiences and wound up a very pleasing evening by telling a funny story about a priest in Ireland who was laboring to get a number of converts to join the Catholic Church. It seems that seven men were sentenced to be transported and among them was an Irishman convicted of counterfeiting. According to the custom of the country the convicts were allowed to chose any religion they desired to adopt, and the Irishman made up his mind that they should all become Catholics. Accordingly when they assembled in the prison yard the subject of religion was brought up by the Irishman, who said: "Boys, we have all been bad together, we have made lots of money and spent it, and now we are to have to join the church there is no reason why we should be separated. I now propose that we toss a ha'penny and shape out our course on the result. If I win, I hope some up we will be Catholics, and if a spoon shows up on top we will be Protestants."

"Agreed," ran the cowies, and Pat tossed the ha'penny and the ha'penny won. Accordingly they all became Catholics; and just before their departure the parish priest approached Pat and asked how he managed to convert his fellow-country men. "O, easy enough," replied Pat, and he then told the story of the ha'penny.

"Did you risk your immortal soul on the turning of a penny?" exclaimed the priest in holy horror.

"Indeed, I did not," replied Pat; "that ha'penny had a harp on both sides. I made it myself."

Her Schmall Pox.

"Mr. Schmidt," said a German gentleman, yesterday, as he entered a merchant's office. "Mr. Schmidt, I hef der schmall pox—"

"My goodness; Mr. Schneider!" was the hurried reply, "don't come here," and the clerks rapidly disappeared in various directions.

"Vot's der madder mit you fellows, anyhow?" pursued Schneider. "I hef der schmall pox full of bister and in mine vagon, vot der Mrs. Schmidt ordered last vack albaby."

He Would Know Later.

Smith—I saw you carrying home a couple of nice looking watermelons last night, Brown. How much did they cost you?

Brown—I don't know yet. The doctor is up at the house now.

Getting Her Waked Up.

She—"Not another word, Mr. Nicefellow. Hush, I implore you. I had no idea you were going to ask such a question. I shall never marry."

He—"Why, pray tell me?"

"I love no one."

"If you are determined there is nothing for me to do but go back to my first love, Miss Peache.

"Miss Peache! O, how I detest that name! She is the ugliest, most ceaseless, most—

"Stop, I will be your wife."

A Successful Diagnosis.

A young physician while diagnosing a case fired a number of questions at his patient which flew wide of the mark. He was finally successful, however.

"Pain—or—sometimes have a—or—third feeling come over you, which—"

"No," interrupted the patient, "I feel it now. I'm tired, very tired."

"Just as I thought," said the young physicing, "I am seldom mistaken in my diagnosis of a case."

Justly Celebrated.

"Do you know why we celebrate Washington's Birthday?" asked Mr. Hendricks of his son Bobby; "why his birthday is honored more than—than mine, for instance?"

"Oh, yes," responded the boy, promptly: "George Washington never told a lie."

The Trials of Farming.

"I can't imagine what the trouble is with that cow," said a New Yorker who is giving his attention to amateur farming this season. "She looks all right," commented a neighbor.

"Yes, she looks all right," agreed the New Yorker, "but the doctor's entire visit cost me half a dollar. When I bought her a month ago she gave twenty-four quarts a day; now I all lucky to get a pint. And it isn't because she doesn't get milked often enough," added the puzzled amateur. "Not a day passes I don't milk that cow half a dozen times at least."

New and Fresh.

Reporter (looking for items)—Anything new or fresh this morning in the railroad line?

Railroad Official (thoughtfully)—Hum—let me see—yes, that paint you are leaning against is new and fresh. It was only put on this morning.

No Copy Wanted.

Office boy (to editor)—There is a man outside who says that he has a bill he wants to present.

Editor—Say to him that his manuscript is respectfully declined.

Just her Size.

"I think I wear wear," she stuttered to the shoemaker; "I don't no?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the honest dealer, "you wear two." Then under his breath: "One on each foot."

Familiar with the Subject.

Teacher—Now, Tommy, if a carpenter wants to lay a floor thirty-six feet long by twenty-two broad with boards a foot wide and two inches thick, how many boards will he want?

Tommy—Six.

Teacher—Nonsense.

Tommy—Five hundred!

Teacher—Don't guess, Tommy. Johnny, can you say?

Teacher—There, Tommy, do you see how quickly Johnny told how many boards were wanted?—and he isn't as old as you.

Tommy—I know he ain't, but his father is a carpenter.

A Close Student.

"Is your son studying the languages?" inquired the visitor of Mrs. Hently, whose son George is at college.

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Hently replied, "it was only yesterday that he writ home for money to buy a German student lamp and a French clock."

46 Years experience Proves Perry Davis' Pain-Killer the CURE for CHOLERA Cholera-Morbus, Diarrhœa Dysentery, Summer Complaints, and all Diseases of the Bowels.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.
The Occidental Self-Endowment Association.
(Incorporated under the laws of California.)
This association is conducted on the mutual assessment plan and furnishes endowment insurance at actual cost. Certificates are issued in amounts of $5,000, $3,000 and $1000, which are payable to five equal parts during the life of the member according to the age at time of joining, as follows: members between 16 and 25 years of age receive one-fifth of the certificate taken at the expiration of flash ten years; members between 25 and 30 years of age receive one-fifth every elen years; 30 to 35 every eight years; 35 to 40 every seven years; 40 to 45 every six years; 45 to 50 every five years; 50 to 60 every four years, and in case of death before the certificate matures, one-fifth of certificate is paid to the members legatee.
No large premiums are required in advance, and members enjoy the privilege of being the custodians of their own funds until actually needed to pay death losses and provide funds for the payment of certificates. Four-fifths of all collections of assessments are loaned to those members whose certificates will fall due first so great payment thereof at 6 per cent interest, and the remaining fifth applied to the payment of death losses. The mortality has proved to date, losses $12,000.00. All claims are paid promptly and in full. The membership at present exceeds three thousand, and the average amount loaned to members monthly exceeds $6,000.
Agents wanted in every county.
Address,
W. H. WARD, Secretary,
Room 28, Phelan Building, San Francisco.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
BRANCH,
1156 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY,
19th St., bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal.

CYCLORAMA
Battle of Gettysburg.
The Decisive Struggle of the Great Civil War.
Open Day and Evening. Cor. Market and Seventh Sts. Hall
ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

HOOPER'S
SOUTH END
Grain Warehouse,
First-Class First-Proof Brick-Building.
CAPACITY 10,000 TONS.
TOWNSEND ST.
Between First and Second, San Francisco
GEORGE H. LEMMAN, Prop.

Gentle taken from the dock and from the cars of the C. P. R. R. and S. P. R. R. free of charge. Storage at current rates.
Advances and insurance effected at lowest rates.
Telephone No. 267.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
EPPS'S COCOA
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to withstand every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half-pound tins, by grocers labelled thus:
JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists
London, England.

THE GREAT NERVE TONIC—Unequaled as a remedy for General Debility, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and Nervous Complaints. Sold by all Druggists and Country Dealers. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. TAKE ONLY DR. HENLEY'S.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
Dealers and Dealers in—
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING
PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTURERS OF—
Patent Machine Made Paper Bags.
510 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HOSE OF them in the same time they can make IN THE WORLD.
My razors make guaranteed $7 50
My Hanel Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving 5 00
Good English Razors 3 00
Best English Razors 1 50
Sent C. O. D. or by mail.
M. PRICE
415 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.

G. ORSI,
HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger.
DEALER IN PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, VARNISHES, Fine Gilding, Fresco, Plain Painting and Wallpaper for sale. Orders for the above promptly attended to. Graining and marbling work a specialty. Shop adjoining Jackson Theatre and Wallpaper Warehouse, 1017 Dupont St.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.
Splendid Set of Teeth, only $6.
AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. ROLTON, 205 Montgomery Street.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE FAIR
TWENTY-FIRST EXPOSITION.
SAN FRANCISCO, 1888. August 25th Closes September 15th
Immense Pavilion on Larkin St.
Natural and Manufactured Products of the Pacific Coast.
Including a Magnificent Collection of Oil and Wines, Fruit Growing, Art Work, Machinery, Machine Tools, Mining Machinery, Mining Stocks, Ores, Minerals, Fish, Game and Vegetables, Electrical Apparatus and Appliances, and a Comprehensive Natural Curiosity Department.
Prizes of Admission:
Double Season Ticket $1 00
Single Season Ticket 50
Children's Season Ticket 25
Admission Ticket 10
Members of the Institute, and of Scientific Societies, Free.
Pass to Association Rooms on application to the Assistant Secretary, Mechanics' Institute.
W. P. STONE, President.
W. H. LEE, Treasurer.
H. H. HILDEBRANDT, Assistant Secretary.

An Extraordinary Razor
HAS BEEN INVENTED BY THE QUEEN'S CUTLER, and patented. This razor will shave in 10 and FINGERLESS NEVER TO REQUIRE GRINDING. Guaranteed to shave 1000 times. Price $1 50. Sent post paid. Address, THE QUEEN'S CUTLER, 1 Ludgate Circus, LONDON. A GREAT EXCITEMENT in Chicago, Sheffield, Birmingham, Paris, Berlin, Vienna. Two dollars in Gold offered. It is true. Every razor warranted. Agents wanted. Address, THE QUEEN'S CUTLER, 1 Ludgate Circus, LONDON. Mention this paper.

The Queen's Own Company, having enlarged their beauty, are now making PEARL and FRENCH CARVING KNIVES, TABLE and POCKET KNIVES, SCISSORS, RAZORS and SHAVING STRAPS, of the same, equal to any in the world. Wholesale of Hardware.

ROBERT F. HAY,
TINTYPE GALLERY
921 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.

T. HOVENDEN,
(Formerly Van Hoevenden Schultz.)
Real Estate Agent,
INCORPORATED AUCTIONEER, OFFICE FOR LOAN AND INVESTMENT, offering facilities to both purchasers and owners of property. Office, 1017 Market St., S. F.
MONEY TO LOAN.
Eastern Insurance Company, Insurance Agency, Insurance Brokerage, Real Estate Agents, Land Agents, Loan Brokers, Auctioneers, Notary Public, Commissioner of Deeds, Office, 1 & 3, Sn Kearny St., cor Montgomery, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

MISCELLANEOUS.
JULIUS H. MEDAU,
968 and 970 Folsom St.,
Near Ninth. ..... San Francisco
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
LIQUOR DEALER.
Established 1876.
We are selling Cheap for Cash and guarantee our goods.
The following has proved well on trial, you will find it to your interest to try it.
Table Wines ..... 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1.
Angelica Wine ..... $1, $1.25 and $1.50
Mount Vineyard, 1877 vs. 1878 Wine ..... $1.
Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.50 and $2.
Kentucky Whiskies ..... $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $4.
Bourbon Whiskey ..... $1.50, $1.75 and $2.
Rum, Brandy, Gin, etc., $2 per gal. and upwards.
Orders filled with Liquors at retail value.

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE LADIES!
The most luxurious and popular Turkish, Russian and Medicated Baths for Ladies or Gents obtainable at the
NEW HAMMAM BATHS,
214 Post St., bet. Dupont and Stockton, S. F.
Open Day and Evening. Ladies Hours: M. Tues. F. M. daily.

JUST PUBLISHED.
A SUPERB
Oleograph Portrait OF HIS EMINENCE
CARDINAL GIBBONS,
Archbishop of Baltimore.
Size of Cardinal's Hat.
A PERFECT LIKENESS
AND
AN ARTISTIC PICTURE.
Size, 16 inches wide, by 12 inches high.
Sent free by mail, on receipt of 60 cents

LEBENBAUM BROS.
Fine Groceries,
215 SUTTER ST.
AND—
Polk Street, Cor. California.

Reliable Agents Wanted.
HENZIGER BROS., Publishers,
Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,
NEW YORK:
CINCINNATI: 36 & 38 Barclay St. ST. LOUIS: 311 Main St. Near N. Fourth St.

NEW MUSIC.
J. FISCHER & BRO., New York.
A. WALDTEUFEL, 737 Market St.
PACIFIC COAST AGENT.
Main to Inc. W. Alphonse, for unprepared and, to Bonnetti 60c
Mine for Inst. Arr. Sonneck, Jr. Jr. Jr. 60c
Lady Nina, arrangement of Sonneck,

PAPAL CONDEMNATION OF CREMATION.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

would always be liable to the insults of the coarser raiders. Whatever the explanation, cremation, accompanied by many different forms and ceremonies, was almost universal before the Christian era. The three great exceptions which stand out in contrast to the otherwise universal custom were Egypt, Judea, and China. The Chinese seem always to have practised interment; in Judea the dead were buried in sepulchres, while in Egypt, where the dryness of the climate made the process of embalming specially easy, the dead were preserved as mummies. In the earliest days of Rome both cremation and interment were used, and we find one of the Twelve Tables, saying, "Hominem mortuum in urbe ne sepelito, neve urito." But from the end of the Republic to the close of the fourth Christian century burning upon the pyre or the urn was the prevailing custom. In Greece only children and unbethched children and persons struck by lightning were denied the right of the pyre. With Christianity, as we have seen, came the great change, and the funeral urn and the repositorium became the symbols of the dying paganism. In the heathen parts of the world, especially in Asia, and, at least until recently, among the Indians of North America, cremation is still extensively practised.

AND TO-DAY, EVEN IN THE CIVILIZED LANDS, we are threatened with a revival of the banished custom, partly because cremation is supposed to be specially obnoxious to the spirit of Christianity, and partly in the name of an improved sanitation. With those who, like the Manchester societies of Italy, openly avow that the value of cremation to them is its symbolic denial of a good, Christian truth, it is not necessary to deal, but it may be well to say a word about the position of those who, with Sir Henry Thompson at their head, regard cremation only in the light of sanitation based on offering the simplest solution to the problem which they have thus defined: "Given a dead body, to resolve it into carbonic acid, water and ammonia, rapidly, safely, and not unpleasantly."

In the first place we should be very sorry to accept that statement of the problem as final. It overlooks a question which, quite apart from the pagan associations of cremation, we believe will be held fatal to its introduction into this country. The instant resolution of the dead body into its constituent elements, for the sake of the protection of the living is in no way desirable. The present certainly has the trance of any of the multiple poisons can be found in the body long after death, is a most wholesome check upon one terrible form of crime. The practice of cremation would have shrouded in concealment and safety some of the most celebrated murder cases of recent times. But, apart from this fatal defect, what is to be urged in favor of cremation? Much has been written of the evil resulting from those pitiful attempts to defeat nature and retard the universal law of decay by means of lead coffins and brick-vaulted graves, and other elaborate contrivances to keep of the inevitable hour when dust must go back to dust, and assuredly we have no word in their defence. We are not concerned with the disease of interment.

THE EARTH IS THE MOST POTENT DISINFECTANT known, and all that is required for rational burial is that the vanity of man should not intervene, and by foolish and artificial methods try to check the gentle and beneficent processes of decay. The difference in the results of the two systems is graphically illustrated by the following account of a visit paid by Dr. Hadon to the old burial ground of St. Andrews, Holborn, then in course of removal to make way for the new viaduct. "The ground about the church had become raised fifteen feet or eighteen feet above its original level, and the accumulated human dust had been made in it, here and there, from its surface to a depth varying from ten feet to thirty feet or more. The face of these sections represented the interments of three centuries and a half. All the bones, except those in the vault, had lost their shape, and were in the condition of a fine mould, in which, with the exception of a few fragments of coffins, there was no trace of anything specially offensive. The bones were quite dry, and, on being touched, they crumbled into a fine powder. The entire mass, with the exception of a few fragments of coffins, was so free from offensive smell that it was difficult to believe that it was the resting place of the dead." Such is the effect of the earth in the most potent disinfectant known, and all that is required for rational burial is that the vanity of man should not intervene, and by foolish and artificial methods try to check the gentle and beneficent processes of decay. The difference in the results of the two systems is graphically illustrated by the following account of a visit paid by Dr. Hadon to the old burial ground of St. Andrews, Holborn, then in course of removal to make way for the new viaduct. "The ground about the church had become raised fifteen feet or eighteen feet above its original level, and accumulation of

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

A SOUL'S LONGING

With lowly hope and a throbbing heart,
In the night time I come to thee—
Searching for rest with a world's art,
Asking that secrets tree.
Asore work for me in the world's great mart!
Tell, ye! I long to know,
Straight to the task I'll go,
If there is, be me, in this world a part.

Imprisoned in by the walls of home,
Where I sit with the lonely,
Longing my life to be free from
Solitude—my life—the lonely.
Will you whisper, oh, stars, from your aura
Where I can be free?
Whisper, oh, stars, to me
"Instant be deep in God's heart!"

Is mine the gift with a magic hand
To inspire Nature's tide,
Catching the pleasure on the sunset strand
Flashing in amber glide,
Or is mine the gift of the poet grand,
Hand to the world—
Wait ye the time—the time—
Oh, is mine the poet or artist's hand?

Are mine the hands that shall soothe to rest
With a warm and gentle touch,
Clasping the babes in my mature breast,
Loving and suffering much,
Will you whisper, stars, from the glowing west,
Whisper the thinks I ask?
Tell me my life-long hope
Ere you steal away to your distant rest.

Within my heart there's a wild desire
For Paradise bright divine,
Pulsing my soul with its burning fire,
Hastening as ancient wine.
On the hills there rings from the godly choir
Voices that eager call—
"Come! Leander! Come!
Shall my life be here or on mountains higher?

"Thy longing come, oh, thou earth-born child,
And obey the Heal-divine,
Climbing ever on through the world so wild,
Straight to the gates that shine,
Thy spiritual tasks are scarcely idled,
Close to thy hands all day.
Thy soul shall have no cares or troubles
To thy fond desires: 'Tis the Heart of God so, Selfed.

M. L.

THE CELT'S MOTHERLAND.

Where is the Celt's great Motherland?
Is it where the Israelites wave the sand
With sandals like wreaths of salad leaves?
Where bands of attlas weighing loads?
Or yet more east and far more grand
Must be proclaimed our Motherland?

How call man, then, the Celtic Land?
Is it Ireland? Is it Albion?
Girt round with God's great zenith wave,
A home in the ocean?
The policeman scanned his face critically
While he was speaking and noted the grief-worn lines on his honest face. He was an experienced man and could tell a rogue from an honest man at a glance. One of those rascals was capable of kindness now when
Where Freedom's fane are chained and banned
Or, no! not there—not Motherland!

Where, therefore, lies our Motherland?
Begot in that great, that ancient Land!
Where nearly books, proud and bold,
Tell us of our Motherland!
Where shall we set her creations planted?
Ah! She is not our Motherland!

Say, then, where lies our Motherland?
Rage in that green, that glorious Land?
Where, whence gleaming tribute
Its trophies once ye Europe bow
When few her fear ye scaled and stream!
Can she is not our Motherland!

Where, therefore, lies our Motherland?
Name now at last that mighty Land!
Where ye, rumoring that Gaelic tongue,
Where hymns to God are hourly sung—
Where shattered shake nods are flung—
There, gallant brother, take thy stand!
That is the Celt's wide Motherland.

M. J. MICHALL.

THE REDEMPTORIST FATHERS.

Blessing a Parish School in St. Joseph, Missouri.

On last Sunday afternoon quite a number of men in uniform were seen in the vicinity of the new parish school. The little chapel looked fresh and bright with its new coat of paint.

At five o'clock the Rev. Father Dunn, C.S.S.R., assisted by other clergymen, blessed the new school. Soon after the choir had sung the Veni Creator, Father Dunn, C.S.S.R., of St. Louis, commenced his sermon from the text, "Suffer
little children to come unto Me." A patriarch last stepped him, and a procession of white robed girls assisted in their place led by a band of orphan children. After the meeting some had meant to see the new school, but the Cook dissted upon his test in his usual shadow—"Lady."

Father Sanders, aged seventy, was the first to arrive. The Rev. Father was entrusted with Father Cook from Baltimore, Father
Dunn, Father Sanders, and Father, there is
been a half-paternal constitution has accepted
the answer to the preacher's earnest appeal should have been. Father Dunn, Benedictine of the Blessed Sacrament followed, the Rev. Father
Provincial of the Order of Redemptorists.

The procession was then formed and moved through the whole Kathleen neighborhood and
home where the prayers of blessing were said.
Father James McLaughlin made an address delivering the ceremonies. The sodgeon of the evening the sermon and Dunn and the ex-refined appearance and enthroned in the Kathleen neighborhood. Kathleen, with which his elegant, dignified, and refined, the Redemptorists, in their tasteful robes, to the group of sentiment in the many of them spry
clergymen, whose diversed hands intervened upon the marks of the grace given to them, and effuse nobility. These surplices priests had an ecclesiastic bearing and dignity which never approach. Sacrifice and prayer have brought them to the Kathleen Parish—Catholic Telegraph.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS OF AMERICA.

Important Letter from Rt. Rev. Bishop Janssens.

Our Supreme Spiritual Director, the Rt. Rev.
F. Janssens, of Natchez, has addressed the following letter to the clergy of the U. S.

To the Reverend Clergy of the United States:

Though the principal aim of the Church is the sanctification and salvation of souls, it is by no means unfortunate that it should be a benefit Christianity for the welfare of society, the family, or the individual, and very much also for temporal interests.

The Church of Christ has blessed and fostered the tendency of man to associate together for various purposes, that thus they might feel strong in union and
Catholic Knights of Holy Father, Leo XIII.,
in a late letter to Church and State, and
was likewise to their two last Plenary Councils, strongly approved of organizations, which gives union with the Church, aim so natural and improvement, and have encouraged, by adopting its aim and a bold and brave profession of faith, upheld the honor of our Holy Mother
Church. If the part of the U. S. of America, guarantee for the future, we may hope for expect great good from the organization for individual Catholic and for the increase in Church and Country. Many have already been benefited, and have reflected much to into matter
in the front, and have reflected much to into matter
Knights by the Church and her officials,
while her children looked on, observing, if not
with, but without raising either voice or arm in
her defense.

Thanks to God, the laity commence to awake
and their duty better all the world over, and
are willing manfully to co-operate with the clergy
in defense of the Church and Country.

Such organizations as the C. K. of A., which require protection of religion and honor, and
as a test for membership, are bound, to greatly strengthen the Church and to bring honor upon her.

Some few of our Catholics, giving as an example the temperance cause, like instances, hid their secret societies, which if not forbidden by Church, are by no means to be encouraged, as they can no longer control the cause, as the
C. K. of A. offer the very same advantages, and vantages which are not not only in doubt, but which make themselves a public fact, and Uniting religiously, economy, and industry in the parish.

Undoubtedly the Rev. Clergy aware of all these advantages, and their zeal be reflected general, and particularly for the welfare of their congregations to their care, and
be unto will as in the Church and Country.

I wish, therefore, to inform the Rev. Clergy and to forward, if possible, a copy of the Catholic Knights.

Yours in Christ,
F. J. Janssens,
Bishop of Natchez.
R. E. D. C. K. of A.

Literary Miscellany.

"Shule Agra."

How the Dear Old Irish Song Helped to Re-unite a Scattered Family

CHAPTER I

It was an evening in the month of June and the hot days of London season. Carriages were rolling up and down in every direction, filled with gaily dressed ladies, and it required a little thought and skill to steer one's way across any of the great thoroughfares.

Sohmer Park, Hyde Park, Bond Street, Rotten
Row, which is narrow and yet very much favored by carriages, and for some unknown reason, a man had been standing on the steps of the street waiting a chance to go to the grateful shade opposite. A great shaft set hollow he was—now all hot and dusty, and oh! so tired. He had an honest face and of which looked a pair of deep blue eyes that had in them a look of pain that one seen more often in the eyes of dumb things.
He looked bewildered as he gazed on the stream of carriages rolling by, and ever and anon he started and strained his gaze away only after one or another, as if he saw thought he saw some well-known face. It was evident from his hesitation to cross the road that he was not a Londoner, but at last he took heart of grace and found himself safe in the shade and then went his way
Many a one stopped to look after him as he passed along, neither looking to the right nor left, while the pained, anxious look seemed to deepen with every footfall. Some people thought he could give a passer by a sixpenny piece, but some would look scared and hurry on, as if they thought he was crazed, while others would laugh at they answered. He had gone a long way for some time without asking any direct question, and now found himself Hammersmith, Broadway. He paused to look on one side a policeman walking leisurely on some yards in advance, and when he got near enough to speak to him he asked again:

"Is this London, sir?

"Well, Lardy, my man, replied the officer, then seeing the weary, tired worn look of the man, he asked kindly:

"Tell me what part of London you wish to go to; perhaps I can assist you?

"Well, indeed, sir, and that's what I hardly know myself, said he in dejected tones, and his voice broke slightly as he continued, "I'm looking for my wife and child that I haven't seen three sixteen years."

The policeman scanned his face critically
while he was speaking and noted the grief-worn lines on his honest face. He was an experienced man and could tell a rogue from an honest man at a glance. One of those rascals was capable of kindness now when
Where Freedom's fane are chained and banned
Or, no! not there—not Motherland!

Where, therefore, lies our Motherland?
Begot in that great, that ancient Land!
Where nearly books, proud and bold,
Tell us of our Motherland!
Where shall we set her creations planted?
Ah! She is not our Motherland!

Say, then, where lies our Motherland?
Rage in that green, that glorious Land?
Where, whence gleaming tribute
Its trophies once ye Europe bow
When few her fear ye scaled and stream!
Can she is not our Motherland!

Where, therefore, lies our Motherland?
Name now at last that mighty Land!
Where ye, rumoring that Gaelic tongue,
Where hymns to God are hourly sung—
Where shattered shake nods are flung—
There, gallant brother, take thy stand!
That is the Celt's wide Motherland.

M. J. MICHALL.

THE REDEMPTORIST FATHERS.

Blessing a Parish School in St. Joseph, Missouri.

On last Sunday afternoon quite a number of men in uniform were seen in the vicinity of the new parish school. The little chapel looked fresh and bright with its new coat of paint.

At five o'clock the Rev. Father Dunn, C.S.S.R., assisted by other clergymen, blessed the new school. Soon after the choir had sung the Veni Creator, Father Dunn, C.S.S.R., of St. Louis, commenced his sermon from the text, "Suffer
little children to come unto Me." A patriarch
last stepped him, and a procession of white
robed girls assisted in their place led by a band of orphan children. After the meeting some had meant to see the new school, but the Cook dissted upon his test in his usual shadow—"Lady."

Father Sanders, aged seventy, was the first to arrive. The Rev. Father was entrusted with Father Cook from Baltimore, Father
Dunn, Father Sanders, and Father, there is
been a half-paternal constitution has accepted
the answer to the preacher's earnest appeal should have been. Father Dunn, Benedictine of the Blessed Sacrament followed, the Rev. Father
Provincial of the Order of Redemptorists.

The procession was then formed and moved
through the whole Kathleen neighborhood and
home where the prayers of blessing were said.
Father James McLaughlin made an address
delivering the ceremonies. The sodgeon of the evening the sermon and Dunn and the
ex-refined appearance and enthroned in the Kathleen neighborhood. Kathleen, with which his elegant, dignified, and refined, the Redemptorists, in their tasteful robes, to the group of sentiment in the many of them spry
clergymen, whose diversed hands intervened upon
the marks of the grace given to them, and effuse nobility. These surplices priests had an ecclesiastic bearing and dignity which never approach. Sacrifice and prayer have brought them to the Kathleen Parish—Catholic Telegraph.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS OF AMERICA.

Important Letter from Rt. Rev. Bishop Janssens.

Our Supreme Spiritual Director, the Rt. Rev.
F. Janssens, of Natchez, has addressed the following letter to the clergy of the U. S.

To the Reverend Clergy of the United States:

Though the principal aim of the Church is the sanctification and salvation of souls, it is by no means unfortunate that it should be a benefit Christianity for the welfare of society, the family, or the individual, and very much also also for temporal interests.

The Church of Christ has blessed and fostered the tendency of man to associate
together for various purposes, that thus they might feel strong in union and
Catholic Knights of Holy Father, Leo XIII.,
in a late letter to Church and State, and
was likewise to their two last Plenary Councils, strongly approved of organizations, which gives union with the Church, aim so natural
and improvement, and have encouraged, by adopting its aim and a bold and brave profession of faith, upheld the honor of our Holy Mother
Church. If the part of the U. S. of America, guarantee for the future, we may hope for expect great good from the organization for individual Catholic and for the increase in Church and Country. Many have already been benefited, and have reflected much to into matter
in the front, and have reflected much to into matter
Knights by the Church and her officials,
while her children looked on, observing, if not
with, but without raising either voice or arm in
her defense.

Thanks to God, the laity commence to awake
and their duty better all the world over, and
are willing manfully to co-operate with the clergy
in defense of the Church and Country.

Such organizations as the C. K. of A., which require protection of religion and honor, and
as a test for membership, are bound, to greatly strengthen the Church and to bring honor upon
her.

Some few of our Catholics, giving as an example the temperance cause, like instances, hid
their secret societies, which if not forbidden by Church, are by no means to be encouraged, as they can no longer control the cause, as the
C. K. of A. offer the very same advantages, and
vantages which are not not only in doubt, but which make themselves a public fact, and Uniting religiously, economy, and industry in the parish.

Undoubtedly the Rev. Clergy aware of all these advantages, and their zeal be reflected general, and particularly for the welfare of
their congregations to their care, and
be unto will as in the Church and Country.

I wish, therefore, to inform the Rev. Clergy and
to forward, if possible, a copy of the Catholic Knights.

Yours in Christ,
F. J. Janssens,
Bishop of Natchez.
R. E. D. C. K. of A.

PERE ANTOINE'S PALM TREE.

A Historic Tree Connected with the History of the Church to the Last Century.

These dead lies month the oldest inhabitant of Quelle Orleans. It did not require Aldolph's story of "Pere Antoine's Palm" to make known the tall, strange-looking shaft, for several centuries at least, has stood in the centre of New Orleans, at the point where Bourbon and streets. More than one merchant has made a fortune in the place, Mr. Hussey has seen a pretty story so and it, Mr. Lalies the Hernandez, and so on, but the old gives the many stories and traditions that ing around this tree. No book has ever been written of New Orleans but Pere Antonio's palm has figured in it, no stranger ever visited the Crescent City but he has been taken through the notice Cathedral. It is going to cut this tree whose age is not known, where he had some success, one of the nurses there remembering him, and from this woman he learned his story. He had been discharged cured, and that some ladies had taken an interest in her and promised to assist her to earn her bread. The nurse had kept up intro-course with her for about a year or more but illness in her own family had obliged her to go into the country for several months, and when she returned she went to see "Mrs. Pinky," and was her surprise found that she had left, and her landlady did not know where she had gone. Every also that he had seen given to Hermit policeman made a note of, and having given the nurse a sum of money, left the promise his search, and promising to give her a call and be cured, they parted for that night.

CHAPTER II.

It was now the fifth day after Hermit meeting with the kind policeman, and he had been prosecuting his search systematically, but up to the present he seemed as far from his goal as ever, yet he did not despair. In to his search he had come across one or two persons who had seen a woman with Kathleen been at some time or other, and their encouragement was not without its effect.
Then he had his deep faith as well to help him, and over and over again, he prayed for the safety of his lost treasure; he had to himself that Mary, "The Star of the Sea," would as surely guide him to them as she had protected him through all the pitfalls of the tempest. Then quiet fine nights were never to be forgotten, when, wearied out with tramping all day, he sought some quiet place by the river side, far from din and turmoil of the busy London world, as he watched the gai-stars gleam out, one by one, and listened to the river rushing by, humming his grief because so poignant that hope seemed to die; but as he looked up to the heavens and lift his head with a reverent prayer, and feel instinct for doubting, the living rate and watchfulness of Mary, "Star of the Sea." None can know, save those who have experienced it, the strength of a quiet in London, especially if it be for some poor world-forgotten creature.

Dermot had a particularly hard day trudging all through Whitechapel, and he felt very tired and sick at heart because of disappointment, for he had learnt that old and well loved song would have led him to Mary Kathleen, but he dared not for moment, and he put it away and prepared to hear the same old disappointment.
Meanwhile they had been walking in the direction as the singer and his little companion.

"Well, your name, Mr. Ferguson," asked Dermot.

"It's good name, and a little bad name,
Dermot; but I think I'd not tell you more than that they are found."

"Are they where are they? Let me go to them at once.

"No, no. Hush, that girl is singing again! Come near and listen to her," and Dermot yielded passively for this song, and the man's hand on his shoulder. They had drawn near to the girl, and the street lamp was shining full on her face, and, Dermot gazed on her with all his heart in his eyes, for the features were familiar, but where was the eyes?

Dermot shook all over as he looked at the unconscious girl, and he grasped his companion's arm in a way that made him wince,
as he asked in a low, hoarse voice:

"Is she found, Dick? Dick said tell me!

"Yes, but not by a man, and he thank fulness she is living.

"Hush, my Kathleen child! I know it was she. And then he heard her sweet lisp clicks.

"Come now, let us follow her. She is going home. And as they went along,
Ferguson told the tale he had learnt from the mother was thought to be a committed invalid, but able to earn a living by great plaiting, and her Katy, the child, gifted to her as their's a meager earnings by singing, but this she did unknown to her mother.

as she opened up this field of labor to her blind child, by teaching her all the sweet songs of her native land, and Katy's voice and her ear combined gave to a compensation for the loss of her sight.

There is no more to tell. Dermot pulse fast at "castles in the air" after offerings he never claimed as, the greatest of which was the knowledge of the suffering that this unknown and lonely woman had to bear as they had returned to their own well loved home and their own loved ones, yet for Dermot was a rich man, and like many others in his station, he showed little or no ostentatious generosity, and he thought of the blessed Virgin and sisters of this kind,
The Catholic knocked down before a picture of Our Lady, and prayed to her in the church, and at home, too. Why does he do this?

THE CHRISTMAS WAKE IN PARTS.

It is the evening up of our months and hearts for the Christmas Eve, and the Christmas for Big Bertie's and big Bertie's two facing. In the Christmas Eve, Bertie speaking to our fellow man, we pay attention to what we are saying. It is not necessary to exert our attention when we speak to it." The end of the Christmas Eve, we remember, is the world we are uttering, second, to the sense or meaning of the Christmas Eve, and "God of all holy things. It is very difficult to hold the attention of a person who is speaking to an object and the two become any. It has happened to me, and I am sure it has said. It requires high keep it rivetted upon one thought. In mathematical problems, it is necessary to be very ligly to concentrate the mind upon the work. The mind wanders, and the different figures and signs come to the mind helps to confuse the reasoning. If

THE CHRISTMAS WAKE AT THE PARTS.

where which been knowing which at prayers and it helps him to keep his mind from division. Bertie, the hero of our tale, had the scene it represents fills his mind with and it seems to him as if he can sustains him in prayer. If it be the Christmas Eve, he is dazed and before his mind what the grace of God can effect in your mortals like himself. And during these holy prayers of Christmas the mind the loss of the holy Christmas Eve, and the loss of the in a characteristic manner. For as in every and Christmas Eve, the mind is after prominent all the rest, so in the Christmas Eve, the mind is the its practice is prominently peculiar to the life of each one. This mind is peculiar to of his or her life is displayed forth in the picture of a vision. This by enumerating the Christmas Eve, and the which adorn the interior of Catholic
Christmas Eve, and the Christmas Eve
amples of the virtues that distinguish the Christmas Eve, and the Christmas Eve and the unbelieved. What are all these things but a mere pleasure? Yes, they are, but they are pleasures of a lady—a lady for charity," and another lady the treasure of the Eve.

GREENLANDS ICY MOUNTAINS.

Some Interesting Statistical Reading of Books and Bows.

"No you want to know something about Greenland and a warm corner in your place. "Use hard there! I expound your conundrum. I am easy to answer
Why, as easy as it is to get from here to Greenland. Let's see, I've got some and so you do when you go to England, the fact remains is not right about all the same. I was up in duty, and analyzing this as easy enough then, though I only touched at the settlements on the West coast. But I have been pretty well up in the matter since, and I know what I know.

Greenland is a country of some time-long three again, if I had another, or two other staunch vessels with me.
Thats the way to carry on Arctic exploration. Let a little dest grow, and not send a little fifteen ship there all by herself.
That's the way the Greeks got wrecked up the Gough Smith's Sound. After you get that far you might as well run round and come home again unless you are anxious to be frozen up and have to stay there and bring up against no that's simply impossible Thing is, I've let her thick, and you need may be moped for the entire winter.
Whalers are often frozen in. But if you want to amount, and delay by to go to the fancy barnacles, I think you would enjoy the trip. Well, I'm not sure. The scenery is fine, grand, sometimes. There are some fine glaciers, and some fine mountains. Greenland is a country of the sheer, cities two nearly perpendicular and rising up in the sea, and so orders they take on at the light of the midnight sun—a kind of continual sunset, are the mountains of Greenland, and fad I said to thet the same that Greenland is a country of some of the royal place, in high-shaped holds, may, in the Greenland, Greenland, Greenland and Greenland. Well, I picked those in my mind, and I'm sure I'm right in part other. Horses grow there, and dwarf willows. In summer from a thousand miles of Greenland, and in the
there are valleys sparing into the mountains, and the sheep feed on the
CITY OF GREEN SEA.

Magnificent Greenland, and the the temperature not tired, but dressed as the Greenlanders, and living in mighty fine houses or already shaped vessels, they don't know they never freak and than we do, and that will course of it, though we grant that as the pace of that, here or there, makes the difference. Greenland is a country of sensation in action, secular manner, and in the Greenlanders, and have seemed to influence the Church's secular and temporal affairs, and they know
I can only say that, taking man as he is, it is a fair and good system, and I can other element from her history. Consider what it is to be left to yourself and once Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and what we do, which is at times the case with Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and portunities of nature, and then cast the first stone at Greenlanders, and Greenlanders their freedom from control or independence of Greenlanders.

With such considerations before me, I not wonder that those scandals take place in Greenlanders, and Greenlanders proportion as the field on which they are Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and shocking in proportion as the Greenlanders scarcity number which they exhibit themselves as more prominent. What religious Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and extent? There are crimes enough to be found in the members of all denominations.
Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and of which do not occur in Wesleyanism, or Independency, or the other religions of the day, recollect there have been no Anabaptist Pontiffs, no Methodist kings, no
Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and violations. Let the tenets of living or Sanding Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and the world, and we should see if said the Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and
Greenlanders, and Greenlanders, and their position more steadily than Catholics have done.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

What a Novena did for a Drunkard.

While this region round about is being visited by a wave of intemperance and ruin, it may not be inappropriate to relate how one man became a total abstainer. He was a man who had fallen into the depths the demon of drink, and no persuasion of friends, no appeals to his better nature effect in reclaiming him. One day I went to him, and I spoke to him earnestly and and kind. In four days, I spent $250 for liquor of all kinds, and at the expiration of that period my basement was so better imagined than described. Suddenly on the fifth day, where still raging under the madness caused by alcohol, I experienced the inspiration to propose to him a novena was born to me to lead a different life. As I proposed it, he was in a fit of madness and yet determined, from my bed, setting up a loud and terrible cursing, and continuing the fury foul, and vanished there.
Amid this uncanny wreck I rescued my hand and prayed the novena alone. For three days, I would never touch another drop of liquor, and I would say, "Well, I'm parched upon it. I gave so all that a doctor would do, and I would not take it." He said I would die. I would not take it." He said I would die.
I would not take it." He said I would die.
I would not take it." He said I would die.
I

THE MONITOR.

PUBLIC NOTICE TAKEN OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1886.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Catalogue page 376, lot 10, has 1000 current counterfeits of this inestimable journal, that upon one, single, isolated, blank page, contains the entire contents of the genuine, whether or not the Catholic press is to accomplish the great work which Providence and the Church expect of it at this critical period of the world's history, has been decided, not by the prelates, but by Catholic writers, who are well known, for a short space, to have quoted and reported every word, that—so far as the world knows—has been published in the Catholic press of this coast—For all this will be made more evident, as time goes on, to be beyond honest doubt perhaps and doubt prejudice to such honest doubt. If the head of each Catholic family will recognize it as his prerogative and his duty to read the Catholic journal, which is thoroughly Catholic, instructive and edifying, and has been so long established in name or presence, as amenable to none and spurn, disrespectful to Catholic authority, or being and uniformly under its Catholic Bishops—Pastoral Letters or the Vatican Decrees.

Editorial Notes.

—The threatened war with Mexico has been averted by the release of Cutting, the American incarcerated for libeling a Mexican official. Cutting's release took place on Monday and he was immediately escorted to American soil from whence he intends to keep up a libeling fusillade upon the Mexican authorities who were the agents of his imprisonment.

—Three years ago the Ohio Western Reserve, of which Cleveland is the metropolis, was the most bigoted section in the country, with Catholicity weak and unknown. To-day the Catholics are counted among the most liberal and occupy a rank in all the callings of life with large and handsome churches, schools, colleges, asylums, etc.

—Notwithstanding all the predictions of the enemies of the Irish National League, that there would be a regular "split" in the Chicago Convention, we are glad to observe the fact that the proceedings were marked with far more harmony and decorum than usually marks gathering of a political character among other nationalities. The Irish people have learned by experience that "Union is strength," and they mean to profit thereby.

—A cablegram from Dublin, dated Saturday last, contains the following important advice from Archbishop Croke. "His Grace, replying to an address at Mitchelstown, Mallow to dogs, while advising moderation, said the Irish people should exhibit sufficient firmness to show the Government that if war was made upon them they would resist. He cautioned them to avoid crime, but exhorted them to continue the necessary agitation until the rights of Ireland were restored."

—Notwithstanding all the antagonism evinced against him, Patrick Egan deserves the gratitude of the Irish people for his patriotism. We are glad, therefore, to chronicle the fact that on Saturday last, during the progress of a meeting addressed by Dantit at the Artillery Armory in Chicago, a handsome gold medal, 200 leading Irishmen, and a beautiful service of solid silver, were presented to the late President of the Irish National League of America.

—A correspondent who signs himself "A Friend of the Accused" says that we were mistaken in asserting that Rev. Mr. McWhorter, the Methodist preacher who shot a man in Sacramento a couple of weeks ago, "was in the habit of carrying his revolver into the pulpit." As the unfortunate man is now under charge of manslaughter and as we would not throw even a shadow in his way to prevent him from proving his innocence, we give Mr. McWhorter the full benefit of his friend's allegation, even though it comes to us anonymously. We have no animus towards Methodist preachers as individuals, although we despise the system of sectarianism which they represent.

—The Legislature has adjourned in order to give the tools of the Water Monopoly an opportunity to return to their never at constituencies and to manipulate the political conventions so as to favor the election of more tools of Monopolists. A friend residing in Kern county, writes that the Republicans carried everything before them in that county, and unless the agricultural and horticultural elements of the State unite and vote against any man who is in favor of Water Monopoly, they will bind themselves with the shackles of a slavery which it will take years of time and millions of money to shake off.

—Michael Davitt's speech on the proper agitation by which Ireland's independence may be secured, will strike every reader of the MONITOR as eminently Catholic and conservative. His response to the inflammatory remarks of Mr. Finerty will have the effect of showing the world that the Irish National League will not countenance any system of agitation not consonant with Christian morality. Neither destructive dynamite nor the wild spirit of revenge have any place in the programme of Davitt, and Mr. Davitt's utterances on this point are worthy of the serious heed of every Celt who desires to see Ireland's cause progress upon the line of Christian principles.

—Commenting upon the numerous condemnation of the Knights of Labor by Cardinal Taschereau of Quebec, and the friendly attitude assumed by Cardinal Gibbons towards the same organization, the Chicago Inter Ocean says that it is "due to the information of our local contemporary we can answer in one word—both. It is the right of any Bishop to condemn any society in his diocese that he may deem antagonistic to faith and morals—such condemnation being called forth by local causes. Another Bishop of an adjacent diocese may have branches of the same society within his See, yet he may not find any cause for censure. This, we presume, is the case in the present instance, although we have not seen any reference to Cardinal Taschereau's condemnation of the Knights of Labor in any recent issues of our Catholic Canadian exchanges.

Ireland's Illustrious Patriot.

We know that the Monitor will receive the hearty thanks of thousands of its readers for the spirited portrait of Michael Davitt which we present them with in this issue. The recent biographical sketch which we gave of the illustrious Founder of the Irish Land League, obviate any necessity for giving any further particulars concerning this stirring patriot, but in order that the readers of the Monitor may fully realize the high virtues in which Michael Davitt is held in the opinion of Americans we append the following concerning him from the Chicago Tribune:

"Mr. Davitt is one of the most conspicuous men of the day, if not of his race. He is Celtic in appearance, in courage, in rapidity of thought, action and expression. His life has been a busy and romantic one.

When a mere child his family were evicted from their little farm, and one of the earliest of his recollections is the scene witnessed by him from the roadside when the crowbar brigade was leveling to the ground the humble cottage which had been the family shelter. The family removed to England, and, while yet a lad of tender years, Michael went to work in a factory and in the support of his school master. The English machinery was as cruel to the lad as the Irish landlord had been. His arm was mangled in a hand loom the catch, it seemed pale, as he said he had suffered profound, with lessons. He was remarkably intelligent and student, and was here to be an educator and a leader. He grew up with the English of the wrongs of his countrymen was, and soon drifted naturally into Fenderism. It was claimed that arms were found in his possession for distribution among the Fenian circles. He and his friends have always maintained that his conviction was unjust, and was secured by the resort to perjury which so uniformly characterized Fenian trials. He was sentenced to imprisonment, dressed in the convict's garb, and compelled with his single hand to pick a ton of oakum every day. Imprisonment could not achieve the public sentiment which this treatment aroused, and Davitt was released "on a ticket of leave." During the exciting Land League days when Parnell and his colleagues were imprisoned as "suspects," the Government was so daunted as to seize upon and imprison Davitt again as though he were a common thief who had broken the sense of his conditional release.

All this neither broke him down physically, nor embittered his mentality, nor embittered his heart against the English people. He was as free in advance of his countrymen on the subject. He hated the English system which depopulated and impoverished his country. But he believed in a brotherhood of the democracies, and urged that all the common people of all countries and of all creeds in the British Empire should unite in resisting and endeavoring to overthrow the unjust land system which crushed and oppressed all. He has lived to see the "Old Man Eloquent" of England hail a caucus in Irish Home Rule. He has lived to see Englishmen by the hundreds of thousands march to the polls side by side with his own countrymen, determined to vote against the Government that if war was made upon them they would resist. He continued them to avoid crime, but exhorted them to continue the necessary agitation until the rights of Ireland were restored."

—Notwithstanding all the antagonism evinced against him, Patrick Egan deserves the gratitude of the Irish people for his patriotism. We are glad, therefore, to chronicle the fact that on Saturday last, during the progress of a meeting addressed by Davitt at the Artillery Armory in Chicago, a handsome gold medal, 200 leading Irishmen, and a beautiful service of solid silver, were presented to the late President of the Irish National League of America.

—A correspondent who signs himself "A Friend of the Accused" says that we were mistaken in asserting that Rev. Mr. McWhorter, the Methodist preacher who shot a man in Sacramento a couple of weeks ago, "was in the habit of carrying his revolver into the pulpit." As the unfortunate man is now under charge of manslaughter and as we would not throw even a shadow in his way to prevent him from proving his innocence, we give Mr. McWhorter the full benefit of his friend's allegation, even though it comes to us anonymously. We have no animus towards Methodist preachers as individuals, although we despise the system of sectarianism which they represent.

Editorial Notes.

